SABRIDGEWORTH, county of HERTFORD.—See SAWBRIDGEWORTH.

SACOMB, a parish in the hundred of BROADWATER, county of HERTFORD, 4 miles (N. by W.) from Ware, containing 341 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Huntingdon, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £10. 3. 4. Samuel Smyth, Esq. was patron in 1807. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is situated upon an eminence on the north side of the Ware and Wotton road; it has a tower on the south side of the nave, formerly embattled; and, in the chancel, two stone stalls, and a piscina under trefoil arches, with memorials of the Rolt family. There is a bequest of £5 per annum by the Rev. John Meriton, late rector, for apprenticing one poor child.

SADBERGE, a chapelry in that part of the parish of HAUGHTON le SKERNE which is in the south-western division of STOCKTON ward, county palatine of DURHAM, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. N. E.) from Darlington, containing 315 inhabitants. The chapel is dedicated to St. Andrew: around the base of the hill upon which it stands are traces of an ancient intrenchment. This was formerly a place of great importance, and the capital of a district, or county, of the same name, having had its gaol, sheriff, coroner, and other civil officers. A school is supported by small annual subscriptions. The Stockton and Darlington railway passes in the vicinity.

SADDINGTON, a parish in the hundred of GARTREE, county of LEICESTER, 6 miles (N. W. by W.) from Market-Harborough, containing 232 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Leicester, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £19. 2. 6., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. Helen. The Union canal passes through a tunnel partly in this parish and partly in that of Kibworth-Harcourt.

SADDLEWOOD, a tything in the parish of HAWKESBURY, upper division of the hundred of GRUMBALDS-ASH, county of GLOUCESTER, 5 miles (W. S. W.) from Tetbury. The population is returned with Hillesley.

SADDLEWORTH, a chapelry in that part of the parish of ROCHDALE which is in the upper division of the wapentake of AGRIGG, West riding of the county of YORK, 12 miles (S. W. by W.) from Huddersfield, containing, with Quick, 13,902 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chester, endowed with £200 private benefaction, £200 royal bounty, and £1200 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Vicar of Rochdale. The chapel is dedicated to St. Chad. There are five places of worship for dissenters. A free school was founded in 1729, by Ralph Hawkyard, who endowed it with £280, and, in augmentation of the master's salary, John Walker, in 1755, bequeathed £200; the income arising from these sums is applied to teaching poor children of the parish, and supplying them with books. The Huddersfield canal passes through the parish, and the manufacture of woollen and cotton goods is carried on to a very great extent; the number of looms employed in the former exceeding three thousand five hundred, and in the latter four hundred; there are more than one hundred mills on the river Tame and its tributary streams. A few coal mines are worked, and excellent freestone abounds within the chapelry. It is in contemplation to establish a market, and to revive a fair formerly held at the village. There are some interesting natural curiosities at Greenfield, consisting of huge caverns, rocks, and a stupendous rocking-stone, with many Druidical remains. Castle Shaw is said to have been a fortress of the Britons, round beads, similar to those contained in the barrows on Salisbury plain, and a brazen celt, having been discovered near it.

SAFFRON-WALDEN, county of ESSEX.—See WALDEN (SAFFRON).

SAHAM-TONEY, a parish in the hundred of WAYLAND, county of NORFOLK, $1\frac{3}{4}$ mile (N. W.) from Watton, containing 925 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £21. 19. 4½., and in the patronage of the Warden and Fellows of New College, Oxford. The church is dedicated to St. George: the tower, erected about 1480, has upon it a representation of St. George and the Dragon, carved in stone. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. Edward Goffe, in 1611, bequeathed a house and land for a free school, to which another benefactor subsequently left other houses and land.

SAIGHTON, a township in that part of the parish of ST. OSWALD, CHESTER, which is in the lower division of the hundred of BROXTON, county palatine of CHESTER, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S.E.) from Chester, containing 291 inhabitants.

SAINTBURY, a parish in the upper division of the hundred of KIFTSGATE, county of GLOUCESTER, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (W.) from Chipping-Campden, containing 156 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Gloucester, rated in the king's books at £19. 9. $4\frac{1}{2}$, and in the patronage of James Roberts West, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, has undergone various alterations, but there is still a Norman door remaining. Castle Bank, an ancient camp in this parish, is ascribed to the Danes, and supposed to have been dependent upon a larger one upon the summit of the same hill in the adjoining parish.

SALCOMBE, a chapelry in the parish of MALBOROUGH, hundred of STANBOROUGH, county of DEVON, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S.) from Kingsbridge. The population is returned with the parish. A chapel existed here so early as 1401; it was rebuilt in 1801, chiefly through the exertions of Mr. Yates, and is served by a curate appointed by the vicar of West Allington. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. Salcombe, which is situated on the western side of the entrance to Kingsbridge harbour, is the principal station for that port, and contains several shipwrights' yards. A pleasure fair is held here at Whitsuntide.

SALCOMBE (REGIS), a parish in the eastern division of the hundred of BUDLEIGH, county of DEVON, 2 miles (E.N.E.) from Sidmouth, containing 436 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £14. 12. 8., endowed with £1000 royal bounty. The church is dedicated to St. Peter and St. Mary. There was formerly a chapel, dedicated to St. Clement and St. Mary Magdalene. The parish is bounded on the south by the English channel, and was anciently held in royal demesne. Courts leet and baron are occasionally held. Gypsum and chalk for lime are obtained here.

SALCOTT, a parish in the hundred of WINSTREE, county of ESSEX, $8\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S.S.W.) from Colchester, containing 138 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, with Great Wigborough, in the archdeaconry of Colchester, and diocese of London, endowed with £400 private benefaction, and £1200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Bishop of London. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

SALDEN, a hamlet in the parish of MURSLEY, hundred of COTTESLOE, county of BUCKINGHAM, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E.N.E.) from Winslow. The population is returned with the parish.

SALE, a township in the parish of ASHTON upon MERSEY, though locally in that of Great Budworth, hundred of BUCKLOW, county palatine of CHESTER, 2 miles from Ashton upon Mersey, containing 1049 inhabitants. The Duke of Bridgewater's canal passes through the township.

SALEBY, a parish in the Wold division of the hundred of CALCEWORTH, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (N. by E.) from Alford, containing, with Thoresthorpe, 235 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £4, and in the patronage of the Trustees of Alford school. The church is dedicated to St. Margaret.

SALEHURST, a parish in the hundred of HENHURST, rape of HASTINGS, county of SUSSEX, $\frac{3}{4}$ of a mile (N.E.) from Robertsbridge, containing, with Robertsbridge, 2121 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Lewes, and diocese of Chichester, rated in the king's books at £14, and in the patronage of S. B. P. Micklethwaite, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, exhibits portions in the early and later styles of English architecture. The river Rother runs through the parish, and is here crossed by a bridge. John Cooper, in 1699, devised land for the establishment of a free school, which, by the returns made to parliament in 1786, was of the annual value of £45, but the donor's directions have never been complied with.

SALESBURY, a chapelry in the parish and lower division of the hundred of BLACKBURN, county palatine of LANCASTER, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.) from Blackburn, containing 427 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chester, endowed with £400 private benefaction, £600 royal bounty, and £600 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of R. B. W. Bulkeley, Esq.

SALFORD, a parish in the hundred of MANSHEAD, county of BEDFORD, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by W.) from Woburn, containing 312 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, united, in 1750, to the rectory of Holcutt, in the archdeaconry of Bedford, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £7. 16. 3. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

SALFORD, county palatine of LANCASTER. — See MANCHESTER.

SALFORD, a parish in the hundred of CHADLINGTON, county of OXFORD, 2 miles (W. N. W.) from Chipping-Norton, containing 293 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, rated in the king's books at £9. 11. 3., and in the patronage of the Rev. R. J. Skillicorne. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

SALFORD, a parish in the Stratford division of the hundred of BARLICHWAY, county of WARWICK, $5\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. by W.) from Alcester, containing 813 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Worcester, rated in the king's books at £9, endowed with £800 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of Lady Skipwith. The church is dedicated to St. Matthew. The river Avon and its tributary stream, the Arrow, run through the parish. William Perkins, in 1656, gave £232 for the support of a free grammar school; the annual income, now upwards of £40, is applied to instructing, in English, the children of parishioners; the classics were formerly taught, but they have of late years been discontinued. An ancient mansion, the property of Mr. Berkeley, is now occupied as a nunnery, the society consisting of an abbess, sixteen professed nuns, and a school for young ladies, noviciates.

SALHOUSE, a parish in the hundred of TAVERHAM, county of NORFOLK, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E. by S.) from Coltishall, containing 475 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, with that of Wroxham, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Norwich. The Rev. D. Collyer was patron in 1801. The church is dedicated to All Saints. There is a place of worship for Baptists.

SALING (BARDFIELD), county of Essex. — See BARDFIELD-SALING.

SALING (GREAT), a parish in the hundred of HINCKFORD, county of Essex, 5 miles (N. W. by W.) from Braintree, containing 326 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the jurisdiction of the Commissary of Essex and Herts, concurrently with the Consistorial Court of the Bishop of London, rated in the king's books at £7, endowed with £200 royal bounty. B. Goodrich, Esq. was patron in 1816. The church is dedicated to St. James.

SALISBURY, a city having separate civil jurisdiction, locally in the hundred of Underditch, county of Wilts, 82 miles (S. W. by W.) from London, containing 8763 inhabitants. This city owes its origin to the ruin of Old Sarum, where the bishops of the diocese of Wiltshire had fixed their seat; which place being very inconvenient, from its exposed situation on an eminence, want of water, and from its military tenants, who not only levied contributions on their property, but insulted the priests in the exercise of their devotions, they solicited permission to transfer the see to a more appropriate situation. Bishop Poore having obtained license from Pope Honorius, selected the site of the present city, which lies in a pleasant vale, about two miles from the remains of Old Sarum, and laid the foundation of the present magnificent cathedral in the year 1220. The completion of that edifice was soon followed by the removal not only of the members of the establishment, but also of the inhabitants, who gradually deserting the old town, and building houses near the new cathedral church, Salisbury soon increased in extent, and grew into importance. Its progress was much accelerated by a charter of Henry III., constituting the new establishment a free city, and conferring on the inhabitants the same privileges and immunities as were enjoyed by the inhabitants of Winchester. This monarch also empowered the bishop to surround the city and the cathedral close with walls and ditches, to repair the roads and bridges, and to levy tallage for the completion of the walls. Disputes, however, arising between the bishop and the citizens respecting these aids, in the reign of Edward I., both parties appealed to the king in council, and that monarch, deciding in favour of the bishop, deprived the citizens of their charter, which was subsequently restored to them upon an amicable arrangement of the dispute by the parties themselves. About this period, Bishop Bridport built a bridge at Harnham, and thus changing the direction of the great western road, which formerly passed through Old Sarum, that place was completely deserted, and Salisbury became one of the most flourishing cities in the kingdom.

Edward I. assembled a parliament there, to deliberate upon measures for recovering the province of Gascoigne, which had been seized upon by Philip of France; at which parliament none of the clergy assisted, the king having suspended them from the exercise of their secular functions for having refused him aid. In the reign of Edward III., a second parliament, for enquiring into the state of the kingdom, was held at Salisbury, at which Mortimer, Earl of March, and his partisans, were attended by their followers in arms: the Earls of Kent, Norfolk, and Lancaster, who, on being summoned to attend this parliament, were prohibited by Mortimer from appearing with an armed force, finding, on their arrival, that his own partisans were armed, retreated for the purpose of assembling their retainers, and, returning with an army, were about to take vengeance on Mortimer, when the quarrel was compromised through the intervention of the clergy. From the time of Edward I., the bishops and the citizens appear to have lived in a state of mutual harmony, till the reign of Richard II., when the prelate requiring the corporation to concur with him in his efforts to suppress the meetings of the Lollards, who assembled here in great numbers, the latter refused, and the bishop, appealing to the king, obtained an order in council compelling them to assist him in that object. In the reign of Richard III., the Duke of Buckingham, who had headed an unsuccessful insurrection against him, was taken prisoner in his retreat, and, being brought hither, was immediately executed, in 1483, without any trial. No event of historical importance appears, in connection with this city, till after the close of the parliamentary war, when, during the interregnum, Col. Wyndham, with other gentlemen of this county, marched into Salisbury with two hundred armed men, and proclaimed Charles II. king; but they were not supported by the inhabitants of the surrounding country.

The city is pleasantly situated in a spacious valley, near the confluence of the rivers Nadder and Willey with the Avon, and consists of several principal streets regularly formed, and intersected at right angles by smaller ones, dividing the town into a number of squares, called Chequers, which derive their form from the original grant of the bishops of a certain number of perches in front and in depth allotted for building; the areas, round which the houses have been erected, are laid out in gardens. Most of the houses are built of brick, and of modern erection, many of them being of handsome appearance, but there are some of a more ancient date, constructed of timber and brick-work plastered over, of irregular form and size. The waters of the rivers run through most of the streets of the city, in canals lined with brick, and contribute greatly to their cleanliness, and to the health of the inhabitants. The city is connected, by two stone bridges of six arches each, with the suburb of Fisherton, including which it occupies an area nearly three quarters of a mile square, and, with the suburb of East Harnham, by an ancient bridge of ten arches: this bridge is divided into two parts by a small islet, on which was formerly a chapel, dedicated to St. John, where three chaplains were appointed to say mass, and to receive the contributions of passengers towards the keeping of it in repair. Some improvement has lately taken place in paving and lighting the town, which is amply supplied with water. The Salisbury and Wiltshire library and news-room was established in 1819: the library amounts to more than two thousand volumes, in the various departments of literature, and annexed to it is a small museum, containing a collection of various fossils peculiar to this neighbourhood: this institution is supported by a proprietary and by annual subscriptions. A small neat theatre is opened for some months in the winter, and assemblies and concerts are held during the same season, in rooms well adapted to the purpose, though, as public buildings, not entitled to architectural notice. Races take place annually in August, and are in general well attended. The environs are pleasant, containing, in addition to several villas with which they are ornamented, the seat of Wadham Wyndham, Esq., on the north-east; and, on the bank of the Avon, Longford castle, the seat of the Earl of Radnor, originally built in the reign of James I., and subsequently enlarged and considerably improved. Salisbury was formerly celebrated for its manufactures of flannels, druggets, and the cloths called Salisbury Whites; but these branches of trade are now almost extinct, and what remains is confined to a very inconsiderable number of persons: the town is still noted for its manufacture of the more select articles of cutlery of superior quality, but the sale is very limited. The Salisbury canal, joining with the Andover canal near Romsey, was originally intended to be continued westward to Bath and Bristol, connecting the Bristol and English channels, but the design has been abandoned, barges at present proceeding no further in this direction than Romsey, though it has a communication with Southampton and the English channel. The market days are Tuesday and Saturday; the former for corn, of which there is an abundant supply, and the latter for cheese and all kinds of provisions; there is also a large cattle market every alternate Tuesday. The fairs, which are falling into disuse, are on the Tuesday after January 6th for cattle, Tuesday after the 25th of March for cloth, Whit-Monday and Tuesday for horses and pedlary, and October 20th for butter and cheese. The poultry cross, which appears to have been built in the reign of Edw. III., and of which only the lower part is remaining, where butter, eggs, and poultry are sold, is situated without the south-west corner of the market-place: this is an extensive quadrilateral area, well arranged for the general uses of the market.

The government of the city, by charter of incorporation granted in the reign of Henry III., and confirmed by successive sovereigns till that of Anne, is vested in a mayor, recorder, deputy recorder, twenty-four aldermen, and thirty common council-men, assisted by a town clerk and two chamberlains, with three serjeants at mace, and other subordinate officers. The mayor is elected annually by the corporation at large, and sworn into office by the bishop, at his court, or, in his absence, by the late mayor, recorder, and aldermen. The high steward and the recorder are usually noblemen possessing influence in the county, and hold their offices for life. The mayor, recorder, late mayor, and ten of the aldermen, are justices of the peace within the city, and hold quarterly courts of session for all offences: the corporation, by their charter, have the power to try for capital offences, but generally transfer prisoners charged with such crimes to the judge travelling the western circuit. On the part of the bishop are a bailiff and deputy bailiff, who are empowered to hold a court of record, for the recovery of debts to any amount, on the first Saturday in every month, the jurisdiction of which extends over the city and the cathedral close: they also hold a court leet for the bishop, as lord of the manor. The bailiff and deputy bailiff are both appointed by the bishop, and, by charter, are chosen for the same offices on behalf of the corporation: their powers resemble those of the sheriff of the county, and it is their duty to summon the juries for the sessions held in the city. The Close of Sarum is a corporation, consisting of the bishop, the recorder, and the canons residentiary, who are justices; they may hold sessions of the peace for the liberty of the Close, either in the guildhall of the city, or the Close itself, at the pleasure of the bishop. The bishop is not entitled to a place in the chapter when it consists of the dean and the residentiary canons only, that is, a common chapter; in an extraordinary, or what is commonly called a general, chapter, which is composed of all the members, the bishop is entitled to a seat, as prebendary of Pottern. The assizes and the Lent quarter sessions for the county are regularly held here. The council-house, erected in 1795 (the former building having been destroyed by fire) under the provisions of an act of parliament, at the expense of the late Earl of Radnor, on the site of the ancient guildhall, is a substantial and handsome building of white brick, ornamented with rustic quoins and cornices of stone, and consisting of two wings, connected by a central vestibule, to which is an entrance through a receding portico of four Doric columns, supporting an entablature enriched with triglyphs, and surmounted by an open balustrade, with a tablet in the centre, inscribed with the name of the founder, and the date of its erection. The right wing is occupied entirely by the council-chamber and other offices, in which the business of the corporation is transacted, and the public entertainments are held: the council-chamber is seventy-five feet in length, twenty-four in breadth, and twenty-four feet in height, and is ornamented with a whole-length picture of Queen Anne, by Dahl; and half-length portraits of the Earl of Radnor, and William Hussey, Esq., one of the members for the city, by Hopner. The left wing comprises the court-rooms, in which are held the sessions for the city, the assizes and sessions for the county, and the bishop's court; above is a grand jury room, and other offices: the grand jury room is decorated with portraits of James I.; John, Duke of Somerset; Seth Ward, Bishop of the diocese; Sir Robert Hyde, Chief Justice of England; Sir Samuel Eyre, also Chief Justice; and several other distinguished characters. The building at first erected, being found too small for holding the assizes, has been enlarged by public subscription. The county gaol and bridewell, a substantial and spacious edifice, erected in 1818, at the western extremity of Fisherton-Anger, at an expense of about £30,000, comprises ten wards, ten day-rooms, and ten airing-yards, for the classification of prisoners, who are employed in cultivating the land within the boundary wall of the gaol, and receive a certain sum of money on their discharge: the buildings contain apartments for the governor, a chapel, and two infirmaries, and the regulations are judicious and humane. The city exercised the elective franchise in the 23rd of Edward I., since which time it has regularly returned two members to parliament: the right of election is vested in the mayor and corporation: the mayor is the returning officer.

The seat of the diocese was originally established at Wilton, in this county, about the beginning of the tenth century, where it remained under the superintendence of eleven successive bishops, of whom Hermannus, the last, having been appointed to the see of Sherborne, annexed that bishoprick to Wilton, and founded, for the united sees, a cathedral church at Old Sarum, which was afterwards completed by Osmund, who, having accompanied William the Conqueror into England, was, by that monarch, appointed bishop. The see remained at Old Sarum till the year 1217, when Richard le Poore transferred the episcopal chair to Salisbury in 1220, where it has ever since remained. The establishment consists of a bishop, dean, precentor, chancellor, treasurer, six canons residentiary, who are also prebendaries, three archdeacons (for Berks, Sarum, and Wilts), subdean, succentor, thirty-eight prebendaries, four priest vicars, six singing men, eight choristers, organist, and other officers. The cathedral, dedicated to the Blessed Virgin Mary, begun by Richard le Poore in 1220, and completed in 1258, is one of the most magnificent and interesting ecclesiastical edifices in the kingdom. It is in the form of a double cross, with a highly enriched tower and lofty spire rising from the intersection of the nave and larger transepts, to the height of four hundred feet from the pavement, being the highest in England: the whole building, with the exception only of the upper part of the tower, and the spire, which are of a later date, are in the purest style of early English architecture. The west front is divided into five compartments by buttresses ornamented with canopied niches filled with statues: between the two central buttresses is the principal entrance through a richly-moulded arch of spacious dimensions, with a smaller on each side: above the entrance is a large and beautiful window, and at the angles of the front are square embattled towers beautifully enriched, and crowned with angular pinnacles surmounted by spires. The north front is of considerable beauty, and the end fronts of the transepts, projecting boldly from the sides of the main building, and displaying, in successive series of arches, a pleasing variety of composition, corresponding with the general style, are a fine relief to the exterior. The interior, of which the perspective is impressively striking, is exquisitely beautiful, from the loftiness of its elevation and the delicacy and lightness of its construction: the nave is separated from the aisles by a handsome range of ten clustered columns and finely-pointed arches; the roof, which is plainly groined, is eighty-four feet high, and the space above the columns is occupied by a triforium of elegant design, and a range of clerestory windows of three lights, of which the central is higher than the rest, and which is continued round the whole extent of the building; the larger transepts, of the same character with the nave, consist of three arches of similar arrangement, and the smaller of two arches. The choir, separated from the nave by a screen of modern workmanship supporting the organ, which was the gift of his Majesty George III., consists of seven arches, and, by the removal of the altar-screen, has been connected with the Lady chapel, of which the roof, being lower than that of the choir, in a great degree destroys the effect: the bishop's throne, the pulpit, and the prebendal stalls, are of finely-executed tabernacle-work, and harmonise with the prevailing character of the building: the floor is of black and white marble; the east window is embellished with a painting of the Resurrection, by Eginton, from a design by Sir Joshua Reynolds; the choir is also ornamented with a painting of the Elevation of the Brazen Serpent in the Wilderness, from a design by Mortimer, executed by Pearson, the gift of the late Earl of Radnor; and many of the other windows are painted in Mosaic. The cathedral was repaired, under the superintendence of Mr. Wyatt, at an expense of £26,000. The chapels in the transepts have been removed, and their principal ornaments have been distributed in various parts of the building. In the nave, choir, and transepts are numerous monuments to the bishops of the see, among which are those of Bishops Joceline and Roger, the latter being perhaps the earliest specimen of monumental sculpture extant; also of a chorister bishop, one of the children of the choir, who died while personating the character of a bishop, according to custom, during the festival of St. Nicholas; exclusively of several to the Earls of Salisbury, and the neighbouring nobility and gentry. The length of the cathedral, from east to west, is four hundred and fifty feet within the walls; and the breadth, along the greater transept, two hundred and five feet. The cloisters are the largest and most magnificent of any in the kingdom, and the cathedral close has some entrance gateways of ancient character and of beautiful design. The chapter-house, of an octagonal form, of which the roof is supported by one central clustered column, is a beautiful building lighted by lofty windows; the frieze is ornamented with subjects from the sacred writings in bas relief, which are in tolerable preservation. The episcopal palace is the work of different times, and combines various styles of architecture; a considerable portion was added by the late Dr. Shute Barrington: it contains portraits of nearly all the modern prelates of the see.

The city comprises the parishes of St. Edmund, St. Martin, and St. Thomas, in the jurisdiction of the Subdean, and diocese, of Salisbury: the Cathedral Close is extra-parochial, and under the jurisdiction of the Dean. The living of St. Edmund's is a rectory not in charge, endowed with £1600 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Bishop: the church, formerly collegiate, is a handsome structure, in the later style of English architecture, with a tower, which, having fallen down in 1653, was rebuilt in a style of appropriate character: the interior is neatly arranged, but the chancel has been modernised: at the east end is a beautiful painted window of the Ascension, by Eginton, the gift of the late Samuel Whitchurch, Esq.: the churchyard, which contains many monuments, is finely planted with lime-trees, which, interweaving their branches, form avenues of great beauty. The living of St. Martin's is a discharged rectory, rated in the king's books at £11.3.1½., endowed with £1000 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of Mr. Wyndham: the church is a spacious structure, combining different styles of architecture, with a tower surmounted by a spire; the chancel is in the early English, and other parts in the decorated and later styles of English architecture. The living of St. Thomas' is a perpetual curacy, endowed with £1200 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter: the church is a spacious and handsome structure, in the later style of English architecture, with a tower on the south side of the south aisle; the nave is lighted with a handsome range of clerestory windows; the chancel and other parts are specimens of considerable merit: among the monuments is one supposed to be that of the Duke of Buckingham, who was executed here, in the reign of Richard III. There are two places of worship for Independents, and one each for Baptists, Wesleyan Methodists, Unitarians, and Roman Catholics. The grammar school, in the Close, for the education of the choristers, is under the superintendence of the Dean and Chapter: among the scholars educated in it was Addison, the poet and essayist, who was a native of Milston, near Amesbury, in this county, of which parish his father was rector. The city grammar school was founded by Queen Elizabeth, for the education of the sons of citizens, and is under the control of the mayor and commonalty. A school, in which eight orphan females are maintained and educated, was founded by a member of the Godolphin family: a school is also supported by the bishop, in which twenty boys and twenty girls are clothed and educated; and National and Sunday schools are supported by subscription.

The infirmary, a spacious and commodious brick building, near Fisherton bridge, is more adapted to its use than calculated for ornament: it owes its origin to Lord Feversham, who bequeathed £500 to the first institution of the kind which should be established in the county; it is further liberally supported by contributions. The College of Matrons was founded for the maintenance of the widows of ten poor clergymen, by Seth Ward, Bishop of the diocese, who endowed it with property producing £200 per annum; the income has been much augmented by the increased value of the original property and subsequent donations: the buildings are within the Close, and the establishment is under the direction of the Bishop and the Dean and Chapter, who elect the matrons, to each of whom a handsome pension is allowed. Bishop Richard le Poore founded, near Harnham bridge, an hospital for a master, eight aged men, and four women, which was completed by his successor, Bishop Bingham: it is occupied by a master, six aged men, and six women, among whom the income arising from the endowment is divided. Trinity hospital, founded in the reign of Richard II., still maintains twelve aged brethren; the mayor and commonalty exercise the office of master. Among other similar establishments are Bricket's hospital, in Exeter-street, founded in 1519, for six aged widows, who receive each three shillings and sixpence per week; Eyre's hospital, founded in 1617, for six men and their wives, who also receive each three shillings and sixpence per week; Blechynden's hospital, founded in 1683, for six aged women, who receive two shillings and sixpence each per week; Taylor's hospital, founded in 1698, for six aged men nominated by the corporation, and who have a weekly allowance of three shillings and sixpence each; and Frowd's hospital, in Bedwin-street, founded in 1750, for six aged men and six women, who have each four shillings and sixpence per week. There are also several unendowed almshouses for the residence of poor people, of which the principal are three in St. Ann's-street, the bequest of Mrs. Sutton; six in Culver-street, supposed to be the donation of Bishop Poore; twenty in Bedwin-street, the gift of Mrs. Marks; and thirteen in Castle-street, presented to the corporation by William Hussey, Esq., M.P., for the use of the poor: these last were subsequently endowed by the will of the donor, and are occupied by men and their wives, who receive three shillings and sixpence per week. There are various charitable bequests for apprenticing poor children, and for distribution among the poor: the principal is the charity of Joan Popple, who gave to the mayor and commonalty, for the use of the poor, considerable property in Basinghall-street London, producing, at present, a rental of nearly £400: she was interred in St. Thomas's church, in this city, in 1572, and the mayor and commonalty have lately erected a monument to her memory. John, Duke of Somerset, who died in 1671, gave to the mayor and commonalty a considerable sum for the purchase of an estate, the rental of which is applied to the apprenticing of poor children of the city. A college was founded here by Egidius de Bridport, in 1260, in which many of the students who had retired from Oxford, in consequence of their quarrel with Otho, the pope's legate, in 1238, afterwards continued their studies: and there were formerly remains of a monastery of Grey friars, founded by the Bishop of Salisbury, in the reign of Henry III., on a site of ground given by that monarch; a convent of Black friars, to which Edward I., if not the founder, was at least a considerable benefactor; and of the hospital of St. Michael, and the college of St. Erith. The neighbourhood abounds with flints found in the alluvial soil, and in strata of chalk; these flints, both the nodular from the chalk, and the fractured found in the gravel, yield a variety of organic remains of the spongia and alcyonia genera; several valuable collections have been formed in the neighbourhood, and it has been reckoned that there are not less than twelve distinct species of that submarine substance. Among the eminent natives of this city were, Walter Winterton, Cardinal of St. Sabrie; William Herman, author of several works in prose and verse; John Thornborough, Bishop of Worcester; George Coryate, author of "The Crudities;" Michael Muschant, an able civilian and poet; Sir Toby Matthews, a celebrated Jesuit and politician; Dr. Thomas Bennet, a noted divine and writer; Thomas Chubb and John Eden, distinguished controversial writers; John Greenhill, a celebrated portrait-painter; William and Henry Lawes, musicians and composers; Dr. Harris, an eminent historian and biographer; James Harris, author of "Hermes;" and John Tobin, author of "The Honeymoon," and other dramatic works. Salisbury gives the title of marquis to the family of Cecil.

SALKELD (GREAT), a parish in LEATH ward, county of CUMBERLAND, 3 miles (S. by W.) from Kirk-Oswald, containing 403 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, held with the archdeaconry of Carlisle, in the diocese of Carlisle, rated in the king's books at £22.10.10., and endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £600 royal bounty. The church is dedicated to St. Cuthbert: the tower, which appears to have contained four rooms above each other, was formerly resorted to as a place of security; under it is a dungeon. There are places of worship for Presbyterians and Primitive Methodists. The parish is intersected by the river Eden, which is crossed by a bridge of singular construction, having elliptical, semicircular, and pointed arches; it was partly built with the materials of an old bridge taken down about fifty years ago: the remains of a pier belonging to a still more ancient structure, demolished by a great flood in 1360, are still visible in the stream of the Eden. A school-house, erected by subscription in 1686, is endowed with about £3 per annum. In the neighbourhood are vestiges of an ancient encampment, the ramparts of which are twelve feet high; and on the common is a chalybeate spring. Among the several eminent natives of this parish were, Dr. George Benson, a nonconformist divine and biblical critic, born in 1699; the late Lord Ellenborough, Lord Chief Justice of the King's Bench; and Rowland Wetherall, the celebrated mathematician and astronomer, born in the middle of the last century.

SALKELD (LITTLE), a township in the parish of ADDINGHAM, LEATH ward, county of CUMBERLAND, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S.) from Kirk-Oswald, containing 111 inhabitants. Here was anciently a chapel.

SALL, a parish in the hundred of EYNSFORD, county of NORFOLK, $1\frac{3}{4}$ mile (N. N.E.) from Reepham, containing 245 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £12.19.7., and in the patronage of the Master and Fellows of Pembroke Hall, Cambridge. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is a stately cruciform structure, principally in the later style of English architecture, with a western tower of elegant proportions.

SALMONBY, a parish in the hundred of HILL, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E. N.E.) from Horncastle, containing 89 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £5.10.2½. The Rev. John Hall was patron in 1812. The church is dedicated to St. Margaret. Edward Richardson, in 1714, bequeathed land for teaching poor children of the parishes of Salmonby and Thetford.

SALPERTON, a parish in the hundred of BRADLEY, county of GLOUCESTER, 5 miles (N.W. by N.) from North Leach, containing 173 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Gloucester, endowed with £600 private benefaction, £600 royal bounty, and £600 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of John Browne, Esq.

SALT, a joint township with Enson, in that part of the parish of St. Mary, Lichfield, which is in the southern division of the hundred of PIREHILL, county of STAFFORD, 4 miles (N.E. by N.) from Stafford, containing 439 inhabitants. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

SALTASH, a borough, market town, and chapelry, in the parish of St. Stephen, having separate jurisdiction, though locally in the southern division of the hundred of East, county of CORNWALL, 21 miles (S.S.E.) from Launceston, and 220 (W.S.W.) from London, containing 1548 inhabitants. This is a place of considerable antiquity, the county assizes having been held here so early as 1393. In the civil commotions between Charles I. and the parliament, its local importance was evinced in the repeated contests for possession by both the conflicting parties, which terminated in its final abandonment by the royalists in 1646; during this collision the town was fortified. It is pleasantly situated on a steep rocky elevation rising from the western bank of the river Tamar, and consists principally of three narrow streets irregularly formed; the houses in general are of ancient appearance. The market is on Saturday; and fairs are held on Candlemas-day, and July 25th, for cattle; there are likewise four quarterly shows for cattle. The inhabitants are, for the greater part, fishermen, or persons connected with the docks of Devonport. The first charter of incorporation was granted in the reign of Henry III., which was confirmed by Richard II., and renewed, with additional privileges, by Charles II., in 1682, under the provisions of which the municipal body consists of a mayor and six aldermen, styled "the council of the borough," with an indefinite number of free burgesses, assisted by a recorder and other officers. The mayor is chosen annually from among the aldermen, by the aldermen and free burgesses; the aldermen out of the free burgesses, and the town clerk by the aldermen. The property of the oyster-fishery, to the mouth of the Tamar, except between Candlemas and Easter, with river dues for anchorage, buoyage, and salvage, and a right of ferry, are vested in the corporation, and their coroner sits upon all bodies found drowned in the river. Holding the manor under the duchy of Cornwall, they are empowered, by the charter, to hold a court of admiralty for the borough, and liberty of the river Tamar. A court of record, established by charter of the 35th of George III., for the recovery of debts to any amount, is held every week, at which the mayor and aldermen, or any two of them, preside. Sessions for the division are held quarterly in the guildhall: the assizes have not been held here for many years. Saltash first returned members to parliament in the reign of Edward VI.: the elective franchise is in the freeholders of the borough possessing burgage tenements, about seventy in number: the mayor is the returning officer. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Cornwall, and diocese of Exeter, and in the patronage of the Mayor and Corporation. The chapel, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is an ancient structure, with a fine massive tower: in the interior is a magnificent monument to the memory of three brothers who were drowned. There is a place of worship for Baptists. Here are endowments of uncertain date; one by John Francis Buller, to the amount of £15 per annum, for the instruction of poor children at the National school, and the other by the Crown, of £6. 17. 2. per annum, in aid of the grammar school.

SALTBY, a parish in the hundred of FRAMLAND, county of LEICESTER, $8\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N.E.) from Melton-Mowbray, containing 234 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, consolidated with that of Sproxton, in the archdeaconry of Leicester, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £7. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. The small river Eye has its source in this parish.

SALTER, an extra-parochial district, in ALLERDALE ward above Darwent, county of CUMBERLAND, 8 miles (E. by S.) from Whitehaven, containing, with Eskat, 37 inhabitants.

SALTERFORTH, a township in the parish of BAR-NOLDWICK, eastern division of the wapentake of STAIN-CLIFFE and EWCROSS, West riding of the county of YORK, $8\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. W. by W) from Skipton, containing 686 inhabitants.

SALTERSFORD, a chapelry in the parish of PREST-BURY, hundred of MACCLESFIELD, county palatine of CHESTER, 6 miles (E. N. E.) from Macclesfield. The population is returned with the parish. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chester, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £800 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Vicar of Prestbury. Saltersford gives the inferior title of baron to the family of Stanhope, Earls of Courtown.

SALTFLEET-HAVEN, a hamlet (formerly a market town) in the parish of SKIDBROOK, Marsh division of the hundred of LOUTH-ESKE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 38 miles (N. E. by E.) from Lincoln. The population is returned with the parish. This was a town of some importance about half a century ago, but it is now decayed: the old town is said to have been destroyed by an inundation of the sea. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. A fair is held on October 3rd, and is celebrated for the show of good foals. Here is a very fine bed of oysters.

SALTFLEETBY (ALL SAINTS), a parish in the Marsh division of the hundred of LOUTH-ESKE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $10\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E. by N.) from Louth, containing 218 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £12. 19. 4½., and in the patronage of the President and Fellows of Magdalene College, Oxford. The church is dedicated to All Saints.

SALTFLEETBY (ST. CLEMENT'S), a parish in the Marsh division of the hundred of LOUTH-ESKE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $10\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. N. E.) from Louth, containing 126 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £7. 0. 1., and in the patronage of Earl Brownlow. The church is dedicated to St. Clement.

SALTFLEETBY (ST. PETER'S), a parish in the Marsh division of the hundred of LOUTH-ESKE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $8\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by N.) from Louth, containing 185 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £5, and in the patronage of the Provost and Fellows of Oriel College, Oxford. The church is dedicated to St. Peter.

SALTFORD, a parish in the hundred of KEYNSHAM, county of SOMERSET, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (W. N. W.) from Bath, containing 327 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Bath, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £10. 5. 10., and in the patronage of the Duke of Buckingham. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. The parish is bounded on the east and on the north by the river Avon, on the banks of which there are extensive brass works.

SALT-HILL, a village partly in the parish of FARNHAM-ROYAL, hundred of BURNHAM, and partly in the parish of UPTON, hundred of STOKE, county of BUCKINGHAM, 2 miles (N.) from Eton. The population is returned with the parishes. This village, which is situated on the road to Bath, is distinguished by two exceedingly large and splendid inns, and is further noted as being connected with the triennial ceremony of the Eton scholars, termed the Montem, the procession repairing hither to a tumulus on the south side of the road, which probably acquired the name Salt-hill from the money collected by the boys being called "Salt Money."

SALTHOUSE, a parish in the hundred of HOLT, county of NORFOLK, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E.) from Clay, containing 281 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, annexed to that of Kelling, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £20. The church is dedicated to St. Nicholas.

SALTMARSH, a township in the parish of HOWDEN, wapentake of HOWDENSHERE, East riding of the county of YORK, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E.) from Howden, containing 179 inhabitants. Three poor children are educated for £1 a year, the gift of Richard Jewitt, in 1735.

SALTON, a parish in the liberty of St. PETER of YORK, East riding, though locally in the wapentake of Ryedale, North riding, of the county of YORK, comprising the townships of Brawby and Salton, and containing 336 inhabitants, of which number, 148 are in the township of Salton, $6\frac{3}{4}$ miles (W. S. W.) from Pickering. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Impropriator, rated in the king's books at £4. 10. 10., and in the patronage of G. W. Dowker, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. John of Beverley.

SALTWICK, a township in the northern division of the parish of STANNINGTON, western division of CASTLE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, 5 miles (S. S. W.) from Morpeth. The population is returned with the parish.

SALTWOOD, a parish in the hundred of HAYNE, lathe of SHEPWAY, county of KENT, $\frac{3}{4}$ of a mile (N. by W.) from Hythe, containing 570 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, with the perpetual curacy of Hythe, in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury, rated in the king's books at £34. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is principally in the decorated style of English architecture. Saltwood was distinguished at an early period for its castle, which is said to have been first built by the son of Hengist, the Saxon, in 448, and, in the reign of John, to have become one of the palaces of the Archbishops of Canterbury. The remains, which are so considerable as to create some idea of its former magnificence, are situated on Saltwood Green, commanding a fine view of the sea, which it is supposed formerly came up to this place,

SALKELD (GREAT), a parish in LEATH ward, county of CUMBERLAND, 3 miles (S. by W.) from Kirk-Oswald, containing 403 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, held with the archdeaconry of Carlisle, in the diocese of Carlisle, rated in the king's books at £22.10.10., and endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £600 royal bounty. The church is dedicated to St. Cuthbert: the tower, which appears to have contained four rooms above each other, was formerly resorted to as a place of security; under it is a dungeon. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Bath, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £10. 5. 10., and in the patronage of the Duke of Buckingham. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. The parish is bounded on the east and on the north by the river Avon, on the banks of which there are extensive brass works.

SALT-HILL, a village partly in the parish of FARN-HAM-ROYAL, hundred of BURNHAM, and partly in the parish of UPTON, hundred of STOKE, county of BUCK-INGHAM, 2 miles (N.) from Eton. The population is returned with the parishes. This village, which is situated on the road to Bath, is distinguished by two exceedingly large and splendid inns, and is further noted as being connected with the triennial ceremony of the Eton scholars, termed the Montem, the procession repairing hither to a tumulus on the south side of the road, which probably acquired the name Salt-hill from the money collected by the boys being called "Salt Money."

SALTHOUSE, a parish in the hundred of HOLT, county of NORFOLK, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E.) from Clay, containing 281 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, annexed to that of Kelling, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £20. The church is dedicated to St. Nicholas.

SALTMARSH, a township in the parish of HOW-DEN, wapentake of HOWDENSHERE, East riding of the county of YORK, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E.) from Howden, containing 179 inhabitants. Three poor children are educated for £1 a year, the gift of Richard Jewitt, in 1735.

SALTON, a parish in the liberty of ST. PETER of YORK, East riding, though locally in the wapentake of Ryedale, North riding, of the county of YORK, comprising the townships of Brawby and Salton, and containing 336 inhabitants, of which number, 148 are in the township of Salton, $6\frac{3}{4}$ miles (W. S. W.) from Pickering. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Impropiator, rated in the king's books at £4. 10. 10., and in the patronage of G. W. Dowker, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. John of Beverley.

SALTWICK, a township in the northern division of the parish of STANNINGTON, western division of CASTLE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, 5 miles (S. S. W.) from Morpeth. The population is returned with the parish.

SALTWOOD, a parish in the hundred of HAYNE, lathe of SHEPWAY, county of KENT, $\frac{3}{4}$ of a mile (N. by W.) from Hythe, containing 570 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, with the perpetual curacy of Hythe, in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury, rated in the king's books at £34. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is principally in the decorated style of English architecture. Saltwood was distinguished at an early period for its castle, which is said to have been first built by the son of Hengist, the Saxon, in 448, and, in the reign of John, to have become one of the palaces of the Archbishops of Canterbury. The remains, which are so considerable as to create some idea of its former magnificence, are situated on Saltwood Green, commanding a fine view of the sea, which it is supposed formerly came up to this place, an anchor having been dug up near the spot. The Rev. George Barnesley, in 1723, bequeathed a rent-charge of £5. 5. for teaching poor children.

SALWARPE, a parish in the upper division of the hundred of HALFSHIRE, county of WORCESTER, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. S. W.) from Droitwich, containing 462 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Worcester, rated in the king's books at £14. 14. 7. The Rev. J. V. Vashon was patron in 1808. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, exhibits portions in the Norman, and in the decorated and later styles of English architecture. The Droitwich canal passes through the parish. Thomas Trimmell bequeathed £24 per annum for teaching poor children, and repairing the church; but the charity commissioners report it as lost. A small Benedictine priory, a cell to the abbey of Fontevrault, was founded here in the reign of Richard II., the site of which is occupied by an old mansion erected in the time of Henry VIII. Richard Beauchamp, the celebrated Earl of Warwick, was born here, in 1351.

SAMBOURN, a hamlet in the parish of COUGH-TON, Alcester division of the hundred of BARLICHWAY, county of WARWICK, $3\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. W. by N.) from Alcester, containing 653 inhabitants.

SAMLESBURY, a chapelry in the parish and lower division of the hundred of BLACKBURN, county palatine of LANCASTER, 4 miles (E. by N.) from Preston, containing 1979 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chester, endowed with £600 private benefaction, £400 royal bounty, and £700 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Vicar of Blackburn. The chapel is dedicated to St. Leonard. Six poor children are educated for £8 a year by a master, who occupies the school-house rent-free.

SAMPFORD (GREAT), a parish in the hundred of FRESHWELL, county of ESSEX, $3\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. E. by N.) from Thaxted, containing 756 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, with the perpetual curacy of Hempstead, in the jurisdiction of the Commissary of Essex and Herts, concurrently with the Consistorial Court of the Bishop of London, rated in the king's books at £18. E. Hervey, Esq. was patron in 1801. The church is dedicated to St. Michael. There is a place of worship for Baptists.

SAMPFORD (LITTLE), a parish in the hundred of FRESHWELL, county of ESSEX, $3\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. E. by E.) from Thaxted, containing 365 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the jurisdiction of the Commissary of Essex and Herts, concurrently with the Consistorial Court of the Bishop of London, rated in the king's books at £11, and in the patronage of the Warden and Fellows of New College, Oxford. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

SAMPFORD-ARUNDEL, a parish in the hundred of MILVERTON, county of SOMERSET, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. W.) from Wellington, containing 376 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Taunton, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £6. 3. $1\frac{1}{2}$., endowed with £800 royal bounty, and in the patronage of W. Bellet, Esq. The church is dedicated to the Holy Cross.

SAMPFORD-BRETT, a parish in the hundred of WILLITON and FREEMANNERS, county of SOMERSET, $7\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E. S. E.) from Dunster, containing 194 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Taunton, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £7. 19. 7., and in the patronage of — Tanner, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. George.

SAMPFORD-COURTENAY, a parish in the hundred of BLACK TORRINGTON, county of DEVON, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. E. by N.) from Oakhampton, containing 1017 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Totness, and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £47. 12. 1., and in the patronage of the Provost and Fellows of King's College, Cambridge. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew. At Sticklepath, which in the time of Henry V. was a separate parish, is a chapel, wherein service is occasionally performed. Near it a mine of copper was opened a few years ago, but with so little success that it is now closed. It was here that a serious commotion, owing to the alteration in the church service, broke out in 1549. At Brightley, in this parish, a monastery of Cistercians was founded, in 1136, by Richard Fitz-Baldwin de Brioniis, Baron of Oakhampton, which was afterwards removed to Ford; but the ruins of a chapel, supposed to have belonged to it, are still remaining.

SAMPFORD-PEVERELL, a parish in the hundred of HALBERTON, county of DEVON, 5 miles (E. by N.) from Tiverton, containing 739 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £23. 8. $11\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of J. Sillifant and T. Hugo, Esqrs. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, has some elegant screen-work; one of the aisles is said to have been built by Margaret, Countess of Richmond, mother of Henry VII. The manor-house, in which she resided, afterwards belonged to Sir Amias Paulett, who had custody of Mary, Queen of Scots, at the time of her execution. It was a castellated building, erected about 1337, and taken down in 1775. Sampford-Peverell was anciently a borough, and had a considerable woollen manufactory. The Grand Western canal passes through the parish. There are a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists, and an endowed school.

SAMPFORD-SPINEY, a parish in the hundred of ROBOROUGH, county of DEVON, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E. by S.) from Tavistock, containing 333 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, with that of Shaugh, in the archdeaconry of Totness, and diocese of Exeter, endowed with £400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Dean and Canons of Windsor. The church has lately received an addition of thirty-two free sittings, the Incorporated Society for the enlargement of churches and chapels having granted £15 towards defraying the expense. The parish is situated on the verge of Dartmoor, and is intersected by the Plymouth railway. In the vicinity is a mine where cobalt and silver have been found.

SAMPSON'S (ST.), a parish in the eastern division of the hundred of POWDER, county of CORNWALL, 4 miles (S. S. E.) from Lostwithiel, containing 248 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the vicarage of Tywardreth, in the archdeaconry of Cornwall, and diocese of Exeter, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £600 royal bounty. W. Rashleigh, Esq. was patron in 1815. The river Fowey is navigable on the east of this parish. Here was anciently a castle of the Earls of Salisbury, the site of which is called Castle-Dore.

SANCREED, a parish in the hundred of PENWITH county of CORNWALL, 4 miles (W. by S.) from Penzance, containing 1001 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Cornwall, and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £8, and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Exeter. Besides the church, here were three ancient chapels, of which there are still some remains. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

SANCTON, a parish in the Hunsley-Beacon division of the wapentake of HARTHILL, East riding of the county of YORK, comprising the townships of North Cliff, and Sancton with Houghton, and containing 423 inhabitants, of which number, 334 are in the township of Sancton with Houghton, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E.) from Market-Weighton. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of the East riding, and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £6. 1. 10 $\frac{1}{2}$., endowed with £600 royal bounty, and in the patronage of J. Broadley, Esq. The church is dedicated to All Saints. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. A free school is endowed with a rent-charge of £20, which is paid for teaching about thirty boys.

SANDALL (GREAT), a parish in the lower division of the wapentake of AGBRIGG, West riding of the county of YORK, comprising the townships of Crigglestone, Great Sandall, Walton, and part of that of West Bretton, and containing 2692 inhabitants, of which number, 888 are in the township of Great Sandall, 2 miles (S. by E.) from Wakefield. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £13. 7. 8., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. Helen. Richard Taylor, in 1686, bequeathed certain houses in Wakefield, producing an annual income of £18, of which sum, £10 is paid for teaching eight poor children, and £6 to two widows in almshouses founded by the same individual. There are two other almshouses for poor women, founded by George Grice, and rebuilt in 1823. A castle was built here, about 1320, by John Plantagenet, the last Earl of Warren, for his favourite mistress, Maude, the wife of Thomas, Earl of Lancaster. It was occupied by Edward Baliol in the reign of Edward III., during the preparations for placing him on the Scottish throne. It subsequently became the residence of Richard Plantagenet, Duke of York, and lastly of the Duke of Gloucester, afterwards Richard III. During the great civil war it was held for Charles I., till surrendered in 1645, and in 1646 it was completely demolished, insomuch that there are now only a few very inconsiderable fragments.

SANDALL (KIRK), a parish in the southern division of the wapentake of STRAFFORTH and TICKHILL, West riding of the county of YORK, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. E. by N.) from Doncaster, containing 192 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £9. 0. 2 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church, dedicated to St. Oswald, is a cruciform structure, with a tower rising from the intersection: it contains a curious monument to the memory of John Rokeby, a native of this place, and Archbishop of Dublin, who directed his body to be buried here, and his heart and bowels at Halifax. A free school was founded, in 1626, by Robert Wood, and endowed with a messuage and land, of the annual value of £60, which is enjoyed by the master, who at his own cost has lately rebuilt the school-house: he receives annually £15 from another source, and educates about forty children.

SANDALL (LONG), a joint township with Wheatley, in that part of the parish of DONCASTER which is in the soke of DONCASTER, West riding of the county of YORK, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E. by N.) from Doncaster, containing, with Wheatley, 160 inhabitants.

SANDBACH, a parish comprising the market town of Sandbach, the chapelries of Church-Hulme, and Goostrey with Barnshaw, and the townships of Arclid, Blackden, Bradwell, Cotton, Cranage, Leese, Twemlow, Wheelock, and a small portion of Rudheath, in the hundred of NORTHWICH, and the townships of Bechton and Hassall, in that of NANTWICH, county palatine of CHESTER, and containing 6369 inhabitants, of which number, 2905 are in the town of Sandbach, 26 miles (E. by S.) from Chester, and 162 (N. W.) from London. This town occupies a pleasant eminence near the small river Wheelock, which falls into the Dane, in the midst of a fertile tract, and commands, from certain points, extensive views of a rich landscape, embracing the Vale Royal, the hills of Staffordshire and Derbyshire, and the distant mountains of Wales. The worsted trade, and the manufacture of shoes, formerly prevailed; but they have been succeeded by the throwing of silk, and the manufacture of this article, in its various branches, by which the town has considerably advanced in importance and prosperity within the last twenty years: the malt trade, which was formerly carried on, has also declined: here are some brine springs. The Grand Trunk canal passes through the parish. A charter for a market was obtained in the seventeenth century; it is held on Thursday; and fairs are on Easter Tuesday and Wednesday, the first Thursday after the 11th of September, and a statute and pleasure fair on December 27th, for cattle and wearing apparel: in the market-place are some ancient crosses, which were repaired in 1816. A court is held occasionally by the lord of the manor, and two constables are appointed at the petty sessions of the county magistrates.

The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chester, rated in the king's books at £15. 10. 2 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Rev. Mr. Armitstead. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is principally in the later English style. There are places of worship for Independents, and Primitive and Wesleyan Methodists. Some small benefactions have been made at different periods for the instruction of poor children, the principal of which are, a school-house, erected in 1694, at the expense of Francis Wells; and a bequest of £200, for teaching three boys in it, and preparing them for the University; also £420 as an endowment for the school, which is under the superintendence of trustees, for the instruction of twenty children of this parish in the rudiments of an English education. A National school is supported by voluntary contributions.

SANDERINHAM, a parish in the Lynn division of the hundred of FREEBRIDGE, county of NORFOLK, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. E.) from Castle-Rising, containing 72 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, with that of Babingley annexed, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £5. 6. 8., and in the patronage of H. H. Henley, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

SANDERSTEAD, a parish in the first division of the hundred of WALLINGTON, county of SURREY, 3 miles (S. S. E.) from Croydon, containing 189 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Surrey, and diocese of Winchester, rated in the king's books at £7, and in the patronage of the Rev. A. W. Wigsell. The church is dedicated to All Saints. Purley, in this parish, is memorable as having been the residence of the late John Horne Tooke, and the place where he wrote his work on English grammar, fancifully entitled "The Diversions of Purley."

SANDFORD, a chapelry in that part of the parish of St. HELEN'S, ABINGDON, which is in the hundred of HORMER, county of BERKS, 3 miles (N. W. by N.) from Abingdon, containing 92 inhabitants.

SANDFORD, a joint township with Woodley, in that part of the parish of SONNING which is in the hundred of SONNING, county of BERKS, 5½ miles (E.) from Reading, containing, with Woodley, 759 inhabitants.

SANDFORD, a parish in the hundred of CREDITON, county of DEVON, 2 miles (N. by W.) from Crediton, containing 1906 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Bishop of Exeter, and in the patronage of the Governors of the Crediton Charity. The church, dedicated to St. Swithin, was formerly a chapel of ease to that of Crediton. Sir John Davie, Bart., in 1677, bequeathed a rent-charge of £16 for teaching and clothing twenty children; the Rev. Robert Ham, in 1730, gave £3 a year for the instruction of ten, and Mary Lock, in 1773, a similar sum for teaching six, poor children, all which charities are applied according to the directions of the donors.

SANDFORD, a parish in the hundred of BULLINGTON, county of OXFORD, 3¼ miles (S. S. E.) from Oxford, containing 193 inhabitants. The living is a donative, in the patronage of the Duke of Marlborough. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew. The parish is bounded on the west by the river Isis, on which there is an extensive paper-mill. Here was a preceptory of Knights Templars, founded by Queen Maud, Consort of Stephen, the preceptor and brethren of which had the management of most of the estates belonging to that order in the neighbouring counties.

SANDFORD, a parish in the hundred of WOOTTON, county of OXFORD, 3¾ miles (E. N. E.) from Neat-Enstone, containing, with the hamlets of Grove-Ash and Ledwell, 489 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, rated in the king's books at £7. 0. 5., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of William Taylor, Esq. for two turns, and the Duke of Marlborough for one. The church is dedicated to St. Martin. Fifteen children are educated for six guineas a year, the bequest of Henry Meads, in 1750.

SANDFORD, a township in the parish of PREES, Whitechurch division of the hundred of BRADFORD (North), county of SALOP, 5½ miles (N. E.) from Wem, containing, with the hamlets of Darleston, Fauls, and Mickley, 561 inhabitants.

SANDFORD, a hamlet in the parish of WARCOF, EAST ward, county of WESTMORLAND, 4¼ miles (W.

N. W.) from Brough, containing 163 inhabitants. There are several ancient intrenchments and tumuli in the vicinity: the largest of the latter was opened in 1766, and found to contain calcined human bones and some military weapons; near them was formerly a circle of stones about fifty yards in diameter.

SANDFORD-ORCAS, a parish in the hundred of HORETHORNE, county of SOMERSET, 6 miles (N. E.) from Yeovil, containing 332 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Wells, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £11.9. 9½. John Hutchins, Esq. was patron in 1816. The church is dedicated to St. Nicholas. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

SANDGATE, a chapelry partly within the liberty of the town of FOLKESTONE, and partly in the parish of CHERITON, hundred of FOLKESTONE, lathe of SHEPWAY, county of KENT, 1¼ mile (W. by S.) from Folkestone. The name of this village is a contraction of Sandygate, and is derived from its situation in one of those openings from the sea between the hills, formerly called gates, and the sandy nature of the soil on which it stands: it emerged from obscurity and insignificance about fifty years ago, when two yards were established here for ship-building, and six twenty-eight gun frigates, of about eight hundred tons' each, were built. A castle, similar to those at Deal and Walmer, was erected by Henry VIII., in 1539, on the site, as it is supposed, of a more ancient one which stood here in the reign of Richard II., and was formerly an object of much curiosity, but has undergone considerable alterations of late years, the large circular tower forming the centre having been converted into a martello tower: it is within the jurisdiction of the lord-warden of the cinque-ports. During the late war with France there was a summer camp on Shorn-cliff, a hill at the north side of the village; where also, about thirty years since, some extensive barracks were erected. At the bottom of the hill commences the New Military canal, cut about twenty years ago, which extends in a straight line along the coast, passes Hythe, where it crosses the Romney road, and, following the course of the hills for twenty-three miles, terminates at Cliff End in Sussex; it is about thirty yards wide, and six in depth. The situation of the village is in the highest degree salubrious and pleasant: it lies along the shore, with hills rising immediately behind it, consists of good modern buildings, which are rapidly increasing, possesses bathing-machines, and every requisite for hot and cold bathing, with a circulating library and reading-rooms, and is rising into estimation as a watering-place. A fair is held on the 23rd of July.

The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Canterbury, endowed with £300 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Earl of Darnley, who erected a neat chapel in 1822: it contains six hundred sittings, of which two hundred are free, the Incorporated Society for building and enlarging churches and chapels having contributed £150 towards defraying the expense. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. A National school for one hundred boys and fifty girls is supported by voluntary contributions. On the summit of a hill in this neighbourhood is an ancient camp, of elliptic form, comprising nearly two acres: the north and west sides are defended by a triple ditch, the south by a single one very steep, and the east by a double one; its formation is attributed to King Ethelbert.

SANDHOE, a township in the parish of ST. JOHN LEE, southern division of TINDALE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E.N.E.) from Hexham, containing 180 inhabitants. This township contains some fine mansions, commanding prospects of a richly diversified country; and near the gardens of Beaufront is a Roman Catholic chapel, now in disuse.

SANDHOLME, a joint township with Stockhill, in that part of the parish of ST. JOHN which is within the liberties of the borough of BEVERLEY, East riding of the county of YORK. The population is returned with Stockhill. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

SANDHURST, a parish in the hundred of SONNING, county of BERKS, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. by E.) from Wokingham, containing 771 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the Dean of Salisbury, endowed with £600 royal bounty, and £1600 parliamentary grant. The church is dedicated to St. Michael. John Moseley, in 1773, bequeathed a trifling annuity for teaching six children. In this parish is the Royal Military College, for the scientific instruction of cadets intended for the army, and of officers already possessing military commissions. The two branches of this national institution were first temporarily placed at High Wycombe, in 1799, and removed to Great Marlow, in 1802, by their founder, His Royal Highness the late Duke of York, on a plan furnished by Major-General J. G. Le Marchant, who fell gallantly fighting at the battle of Salamanca. In 1812, the establishment at Marlow was removed to the present magnificent structure, which had been erected at the national expense, and where, since the year 1820, both branches of the institution have been concentrated. The senior department, as it is called, is a school for the staff, where officers of all ranks already in the service are admitted to study: the junior department is appropriated to the professional education of young gentlemen intended for the cavalry and infantry. Since its foundation the college has afforded instruction to above three thousand young gentlemen for the service, besides qualifying above four hundred and fifty other officers for the staff. Its affairs are under the control of a board of commissioners, under the presidency of the Commander in Chief, consisting of the Secretary at War, the Master General of the Ordnance, and the principal general officers on the home staff of the army. The institution, however, is immediately governed by a general, having under him a colonel, as lieutenant-governor, with other officers. The instruction, both of the senior students and the gentlemen cadets, is conducted under the superintendence of the military authorities of the college, by professors and masters in the various branches of study; of which the chief are mathematics, practical astronomy, the theory of fortification and actual construction of field works, military drawing and surveying, the principal modern languages, the Latin classics, and general history: the young gentlemen are also regularly instructed in military exercises and riding.

The college stands in the midst of extensive and picturesque grounds, with a fine sheet of water in front of it, and surrounded by many thriving and beautiful plantations. The edifice, which has a fine Doric portico of eight columns, is of a simple and majestic character: it is calculated for the reception of four hundred gentlemen cadets, and thirty students of the senior department; the length of the main building being four hundred and thirty-four feet, and that of the whole principal façade no less than nine hundred. The house of the governor stands detached in its own grounds; that of the lieutenant-governor closes the western extremity of the front range; and the quarters of the officers of the establishment form, with the main building, a square in its rear; while the masters' houses, at the distance of about a quarter of a mile in front, are built on a terrace overlooking the high western road. A well-situated observatory, and a spacious riding-house, one hundred and ten feet by fifty, are among the detached buildings; and the principal edifice, besides the halls of study, the dining-halls, and dormitories of the gentlemen cadets, and servants' offices, contains a handsome octagonal room, in which the public examinations are held, and a very neat and chastely decorated chapel.

SANDHURST, a parish in the upper division of the hundred of DUDSTONE and KING'S BARTON, county of GLOUCESTER, 3 miles (N.) from Gloucester, containing 473 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Gloucester, endowed with £400 private benefaction, and £400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Bishop of Bristol. The church is dedicated to St. Lawrence. The navigable river Severn bounds the parish on the east and north.

SANDHURST, a parish in the hundred of SELBRITTENDEN, lathe of SCRAY, county of KENT, 7 miles (S.W. by W.) from Tenterden, containing 1182 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Canterbury, rated in the king's books at £20, and in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is principally in the later style of English architecture. There are places of worship for Baptists and Wesleyan Methodists. A National school has been recently established. A fair for cattle and pedlary is held on May 25th. The river Kennet separates this extensive parish from the county of Sussex.

SANDIACRE, a parish in the hundred of MORLESTON and LITCHURCH, county of DERBY, $9\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E.) from Derby, containing 587 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the Prebendary of Sandiacre in the Cathedral Church of Lichfield, endowed with £400 royal bounty, and £1000 parliamentary grant. The church, dedicated to St. Giles, exhibits an admixture of the various styles of English architecture, from the Norman downwards, though the decorated predominates, with some slight remains of stained glass in the windows, and in the chancel three elegant stone stalls. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. The Erewash and Derby canals form a junction near the village, at which a market and a fair were formerly held.

SANDON, a parish in the hundred of CHELMSFORD, county of ESSEX, 2 miles (W. by S.) from Danbury, containing 488 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Essex, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £13. 6. 8., and in the patronage of the President and Fellows of Queen's College, Cambridge. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew. The Chelmer and Blackwater navigation passes along part of the boundary of this parish.

SANDON, a parish in the hundred of ODSEY, county of HERTFORD, $4\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. W. by N.) from Buntingford, containing 646 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Huntingdon, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £9, and in the patronage of the Dean of St. Paul's, London. The church is dedicated to All Saints.

SANDON, a parish in the southern division of the hundred of PIREHILL, county of STAFFORD, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. E.) from Stafford, containing 513 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Stafford, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, rated in the king's books at £7. 10., and in the patronage of the Earl of Harrowby. The church, dedicated to All Saints, contains an elegant monument to the memory of the well-known genealogist and antiquary, Sampson, the last of the Eardwicks, formerly proprietors of the manor, who was born here, and died in 1603; the site of their ancient mansion, encompassed by a moat, is still distinguishable. In the grounds of the hall, a noble stone structure belonging to the Earl of Harrowby, is an obelisk, erected to the memory of the late Rt. Hon. William Pitt, which bears date 1806, and is encircled with iron palisades. The stone with which this mansion and pillar are built was obtained in a quarry on the spot. The Grand Trunk canal passes through the parish, in a line parallel with the Trent. Sandon is in the honour of Tutbury, duchy of Lancaster, and within the jurisdiction of a court of pleas held at Tutbury every third Tuesday, for the recovery of debts under 40s. Sandon confers the inferior title of viscount on the family of Ryder, Earls of Harrowby.

SANDON-FEE, a tything in the parish of HUNGERFORD, hundred of KINTBURY-EAGLE, county of BERKS, $1\frac{3}{4}$ mile (S. W. by S.) from Hungerford, containing 474 inhabitants.

SANDRIDGE, a parish in the hundred of CASHIO, or liberty of St. ALBANS, county of HERTFORD, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. E.) from St. Albans, containing 823 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of St. Albans, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £8, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of Earl Spencer. The church is dedicated to St. Leonard. A National school was erected by subscription in 1824, on ground given by Earl Spencer, and is supported by voluntary contributions.

nensis, derived its Saxon name Sondwic, signifying a town on the sands, from its situation on a point of land which had been gained from the sea, on its retiring from that ancient port. It is by most antiquaries supposed to have been also the Lunden-wic, noticed in the Saxon chronicle as the principal place of resort for merchants trading with the port of London, and to have been at a very early period a place of considerable importance. In 851, Athelstan defeated a large party of the Danes, who had landed on this part of the coast, and destroyed nine of their ships; soon after which an army of those invaders landed from three hundred and fifty ships, and plundered this town and Canterbury; and in 993, Anlaf, another Danish chieftain, arrived with a fleet of ninety sail, and laid waste the town. In 1011, a Danish fleet having landed at Sandwich, ravaged the coasts of Kent and Sussex, besieged Canterbury, massacred the inhabitants, and set fire to that city. In 1014, Canute, on leaving England, touched at this port, and set on shore his English hostages, whom he had barbarously mutilated; and subsequently, after being established on the throne of England, granted the port of Sandwich, and all its revenues, to Christ Church, Canterbury, for the support of the monks, and partly rebuilt the town, which from this time began to flourish, and had attained such eminence as to be made one of the principal cinque-ports of the kingdom, by Edward the Confessor, who resided for some time in it, and, in 1052, fitted out a fleet to oppose Earl Godwin and his sons, who in the same year entered this harbour, whence they sailed for London. In the Norman survey Sandwich is described as a borough, held by the Archbishop of Canterbury, and as a fort rendering to the king the same services as Dover, yielding then a rent of £50, and forty thousand herrings for the monks' food. In the reign of Henry III., the French having effected a landing, burnt the town, which, from the opulence of the inhabitants, was soon rebuilt in a more substantial manner, and obtained from that monarch the grant of a weekly market and other privileges. Edward I. fixed the staple of wool here for a short time; and in the same reign, the monks of Canterbury, in exchange for other lands in Kent, surrendered to the king all their rights and customs in the town, with the exception only of their houses and quays, a free passage across the ferry, and the privilege of buying and selling in the market free of toll, which reservations were afterwards abandoned in exchange for lands in Essex, in the reign of Edward III. At this time Sandwich contributed to the armament destined for the invasion of France, twenty-two ships and five hundred and four mariners, and was the general place of rendezvous for the fleets of Edward, who usually embarked here on his several expeditions against that country. Richard II., in the seventh year of his reign, issued an order for enclosing and fortifying the town, which, from its naval importance, had become a principal object of attack with the French, who, preparing to invade England, had constructed a wall of wood, three thousand paces in length, and twenty feet in height, with towers at short intervals, to protect their troops from the English archers, which it was their intention to fix up on the coast after they had effected a landing; parts of this wall being found on board of two large ships which were taken in the following year, were used in strengthening the fortifications of the town. In 1416, Henry V., while waiting to embark for Calais, took up his residence in the monastery of the Carmelite friars. In the 16th and 35th of Henry VI., the French plundered the greater part of the town; which, however, in the reign of Edward IV., was in a very prosperous state, its trade having greatly increased. In 1456, the French made another attempt on the town; and in the following year, Marshal De Bréze landed a force of five thousand men, and, after a sanguinary battle, succeeded in obtaining possession of the town, which they plundered, and after setting it on fire, returned to their ships and escaped: it was soon afterwards pillaged by the Earl of Warwick, in his insurrection against the king. To guard against similar assaults, Edward IV. fortified the town with a wall strengthened with bastions, and surrounded it with a fosse, appropriating £100 per annum of the custom-house dues towards its restoration, which, together with the advantages of its haven, soon enabled it to regain its former prosperity; and its trade so much increased, that the net amount of the customs was £16,000 per annum, and there were ninety-five vessels belonging to the port, furnishing employment to one thousand five hundred seamen. The harbour soon after this began to decay, from the quantity of light sand which was washed into it by the sea; and this detriment was further increased by the sinking of a large vessel at its mouth. In 1493, a mole was constructed, and many attempts were made, during the reigns of Henry VIII. and Elizabeth, to remove the obstructions and improve the harbour, but they were not attended with success; and so much had the trade declined in consequence, that in the eighth year of the reign of Elizabeth, there were only sixty-two seamen belonging to the port. The persecutions on account of religious tenets in the Netherlands drove away many artisans, who, with their families, sought an asylum in England; and Elizabeth encouraged the refugees, of whom not less than four hundred were settled here by letters patent, dated at Greenwich in 1561, to whom she granted two weekly markets for the sale of their manufactures. They introduced the weaving of silk, and the manufacture of baizes and flannels, bringing them in a short time to a great degree of perfection; and, by their industry and good conduct, they soon became a flourishing and opulent community. Among them were some gardeners, who, finding the ground favourable for the production of esculent plants, employed themselves in their cultivation, to the great benefit of the landholders; they also introduced the cultivation of flax, teasel, and canary seed, which are at present grown here in greater abundance than in any other part of Kent; and, shortly after their introduction, were propagated with success in every part of the island. The settlement of the Flemings tended greatly to compensate for the decay of the harbour, and sustained the prosperity and importance of the town. Elizabeth paid it a visit in 1573, and was hospitably entertained by the corporation for three days. In the reign of James I., the trade of the port had revived in some degree, and the amount of the customs was £3000 per annum: the descendants of the Flemish refugees had laid aside their original employment, and were intermingled with the rest of the inhabitants in the general occupations of the town.

The town is situated on the navigable river Stour, about two miles from its influx with the sea, near the commencement of the Roman Watling-street, and is surrounded on all sides by a considerable extent of low ground; the houses, many of which are of very ancient appearance, are irregularly built; the streets are narrow, though some improvements have been effected under the provisions of an act passed in 1787, by which the town is paved, and lighted with oil: the inhabitants are amply supplied with water from the river Stour, and from a small stream which rises near the village of Eastry, the water of which is conveyed to the town by a canal, nearly three miles in length, called the Delf, which was constructed under letters patent granted in the 13th of Edward I. Considerable portions of the walls are still remaining, and till the year 1784 five of the ancient gates were entire, the only one now standing being Fisher's Gate, a plain ancient structure, facing the quay. A bridge of two arches, in the centre of which is a swing-bridge, to admit vessels to pass without lowering their masts, connects the town with Stonar and the Isle of Thanet. The port extends from the North Foreland, in a north-easterly direction, to eleven fathoms of water, six miles distant from the shore, and in a southerly direction to the head of the Goodwin sands, along which it continues for five miles to Sandown castle; in a south-westerly direction up the haven, and thence in a southerly direction to the quay at the mouth of the Gestling; including within its jurisdiction as a cinque-port, the ports of Fordwich, Sarre, Ramsgate, Deal, Walmer, and Stonar. The harbour is at present so much choked up with sand that only vessels of small burden can enter it with safety. The foreign trade is principally with Norway, Sweden, and the Baltic, for timber and iron; and the home trade with Wales and Scotland, in which corn, flour, seeds, hops, malt, fruit, &c., are shipped. The custom-house is a branch of that of Ramsgate, though the trade of this port is more considerable than that of the latter. Ship-building and rope-making are carried on to a limited extent, but there are no vestiges of the ancient manufactories. The market days are Wednesday and Saturday, the former for corn, with which it is abundantly supplied: a large cattle market is held every alternate Monday, and an annual fair on the 4th of December, which generally continues a week.

By a succession of charters, of which the last was granted by Charles II., in the thirty-sixth year of his reign, the government is vested in a mayor, high steward, recorder, twelve jurats, and twenty-four common council-men, assisted by a town clerk and other officers. The mayor is annually chosen by the resident freemen; the recorder, who holds his office for life, is appointed by the mayor and jurats; and the common council consists of such of the freemen as have served the office of treasurer. The mayor and the jurats are justices of the peace within the town and liberties, and additional cinque-port magistrates are appointed, by act of parliament, for the several members of the port. Since 1437, the town has consisted of twelve wards, each of which is under the jurisdiction of a jurat, who appoints a constable and deputy constable. The freedom of the borough is inherited by birth, or obtained by marriage with the daughter of a freeman, by servitude, gift, or by the purchase of a frank tenement of the yearly value of £5. Among the numerous privileges enjoyed by Sandwich, as a cinque-port, is that of sending three barons to assist in supporting the canopy over the king at coronations; and when a queen consort is crowned, six are sent, who enjoy the favour of dining at the coronation feast, at a table placed on the right of their Majesties. The corporation hold courts of session, three times a year, for all offences within the borough, and have the power of inflicting capital punishment, which formerly was by drowning, a document being extant, of the date of 1315, in which a complaint is preferred against the prior of Christchurch, "for that he had diverted the course of a certain stream, called the Gestling, so that the felons could not be executed for want of water." The corporation also hold a court of record, for the recovery of debts to any amount; and a court of requests, for the recovery of debts not exceeding £5, is held by commissioners appointed under an act passed in the 47th of George III. The guildhall, usually called the court-hall, was erected in 1579, and contains, on the basement story, the several rooms for holding the courts, and on the first story, the council-chamber, and offices in which the public business of the corporation is transacted; in the upper story are kept the ancient cucking-stool and wooden mortar, for the punishment of scolds, and arms for the train bands. All municipal elections, decrees, and ordinances, are made by the whole corporate body in a general assembly, held twice in the year at the guildhall, and convened, according to ancient usage, by the sound of a brass horn. The borough gaol and house of correction, a small and inconvenient building, having been found inadequate for the classification of prisoners, a larger and more handsome edifice is now being erected, which will afford the necessary convenience for this arrangement, and will contain a house for the gaoler, &c. This borough first exercised the elective franchise in the 42nd of Edward III., since which time it has regularly returned two members to parliament, who are styled barons: the right of election is vested in the mayor, jurats, and freemen, resident and non-resident, not receiving alms, of whom the number is about nine hundred: the mayor is the returning officer.

The town comprises the parishes of St. Clement, St. Mary the Virgin, and St. Peter the Apostle, all in the archdeaconry and diocese of Canterbury, and the extra-parochial liberty of the hospital of St. Bartholomew. The living of St. Clement's is a vicarage, rated in the king's books at £13. 16. 10½, and in the patronage of the Archdeacon of Canterbury: the church is an ancient and spacious structure, combining various styles of architecture, with a massive central tower of Norman character, enriched with several series of arches of very fine composition; the interior has portions in the early and later styles of English architecture, and contains several monuments, and an octagonal font. The living of St. Mary's is a discharged vicarage, rated in the king's books at £8. 1., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Archdeacon of Canterbury: the church, an ancient building, consists of a nave, north aisle, and chancel, in which are some interesting remains of the early style; the south aisle has been destroyed. The living of St. Peter's is a discharged rectory, rated in the king's books at £8, endowed with £800 private benefaction, £200 royal bounty, and £1500 parliamentary grant, and in the alternate patronage of the Crown, and of the Mayor and Corporation: the church appears to have been originally in the Norman style of architecture, but, from frequent alterations, its original character is nearly lost among the additions which have been made of Kentish ragstone and flint: the south aisle was destroyed by the fall of the steeple, in 1661, but the latter was rebuilt with the materials of the former as high as the nave, and finished with bricks made from the mud in the harbour. There was formerly a chapel, dedicated to St. James, the cemetery of which is still used as a burial-place. There are places of worship for Independents and Wesleyan Methodists.

The free grammar school was founded by subscription among the inhabitants, in the reign of Elizabeth, and in 1563, endowed with lands for its support by Sir Roger Manwood, then recorder of the borough, and subsequently Chief Baron of the Exchequer, who appointed the mayor and corporation governors: the revenue is about £37. 19. per annum, which is paid to the master, who resides in the school-house. Mrs. Joan Trapps, of London, in 1568, founded four scholarships in Lincoln College, Oxford, of which two are in the appointment of the Governors of this school, and two in that of the Rector and Fellows of the college, without any distinction of place: these scholarships were afterwards augmented with £3 per annum, by Mrs. Joyce Frankland. Sir Roger Manwood, in 1581, founded four scholarships in Caius College, Cambridge, in the alternate nomination of the Governors of the school, and the Master and Fellows of the college. A charity school, established by subscription, in 1711, and principally supported by the same means, is under the direction of the mayor and three trustees chosen from each parish: the rents for its support amount to £25 per annum, besides some bequests made in 1811 and 1817: eighty boys and sixty girls are instructed in this establishment on the National system. St. Thomas' hospital was founded, about the year 1392, by Mr. Thomas Ellis, a wealthy draper of this town, who endowed it for eight aged men and four women, each of whom, from the improved state of the funds, receives an allowance of £25 per annum. St. Bartholomew's was founded prior to the year 1244, when Sir Henry de Sandwich made a considerable addition to its original endowment; sixteen aged men and women, appointed by the mayor and jurats, receive a considerable annual pension, which, during the last lease, amounted to £52 per annum each, but is at present rather less. The buildings occupy a spacious triangular area, and afford healthy and pleasant dwellings for the inmates. The site is extra-parochial; and there is a small neat chapel attached to the charity, the mayor and jurats appointing the chaplain. St. John's hospital, supposed to have been founded about the year 1287, has been taken down, and six small houses have been erected on its site, for the reception of six aged men and women, who are appointed by the mayor, and receive each an annual sum of £20. Sir John Manwood, Chief Baron of the Exchequer, and author of the "Forest Laws;" and Mr. Richard Knolles, master of the grammar school, and author of the "History of the Turkish Empire," were natives of this place. Sandwich gives the title of earl to the family of Montague.

SANDWITH, a township in the parish of ST. BEES, ALLERDALE ward above Darwent, county of CUMBERLAND, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. by W.) from Whitehaven, containing 358 inhabitants. It extends to St. Bees' Head, where there is a lighthouse; and upon the cliffs adjacent grows an abundance of samphire.

SANDY, a parish partly in the hundred of WIXAM-TREE, but chiefly in that of BIGGLESWADE, county of BEDFORD, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. by W.) from Biggleswade, containing, with the hamlets of Beeston and Gritford, 1392 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Bedford, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £32. 2. 11., and in the patronage of F. Pym, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Swithin. The river Ivel runs through the parish, and is crossed by a bridge at Gritford. Galley hill is the site of the ancient Roman station Salina, which commanded another at Chesterfield, a piece of ground, still so called, near the village, through which passed the great road from Baldock in Herts, across this county, into Cambridgeshire. The ramparts, which enclose an area of thirty acres, are surrounded by a deep fosse, and in the centre is a mount, probably thrown up for the prætorium. At some distance, on the other side of the valley, are the remains of Cæsar's camp. Several Roman urns, coins, and fragments of a beautiful red pottery, have been discovered at Chesterfield; the latter, which was ornamented with figures, has been deemed the ancient Samian ware. Owing to the sandy nature of the soil, cucumbers are cultivated in the open air in such abundance, that Covent-Garden market, London, is almost wholly supplied with that vegetable from this place.

SANKEY (GREAT), a chapelry in the parish of PRESCOT, hundred of WEST DERBY, county palatine of LANCASTER, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (W.) from Warrington, containing 551 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chester, endowed with £1000 private benefaction, £600 royal bounty, and £600 parliamentary grant. R. Gwillim, Esq. was patron in 1814. The first canal navigation in modern times originated here, in 1755.

SANTON, a joint township with Melthwaite, in the parish of IRTON, ALLERDALE ward above Darwent, county of CUMBERLAND, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. E.) from Ravenglass, containing, with Melthwaite, 297 inhabitants.

SANTON, a parish in the hundred of GRIMSHOE, county of NORFOLK, 4 miles (N. W. by N.) from Thetford, containing 21 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, and in the patronage of the Mayor and Corporation of Thetford. The church is dedicated to St. Helen.

SAPCOTE, a parish in the hundred of SPARKENHOE, county of LEICESTER, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E. by S.) from Hinckley, containing 797 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Leicester, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £10. 11. $10\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of John Frewen Turner, Esq. The church is dedicated to All Saints. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. The river Saor runs through the parish, in which upwards of two hundred frames are employed in the manufacture of hosiery. A house of industry, also a common mill for grinding corn, were built by subscription in 1806, the expense of each amounting to £1300; and in the same year handsome bathing rooms were erected, at an expense of £600, defrayed by J. F. Turner, Esq., over a spring called Golden Well, the water of which is serviceable in nervous, consumptive, scorbutic, and scrophulous disorders. A school for the instruction of poor children was endowed by the Rev. Mr. Burroughs, formerly rector of this parish, and is further supported by J. F. Turner, Esq. There are vestiges of a mount and moat of an ancient castle, which once occupied the site of the family mansion of the Bassetts. In a field called Black Piece, a curious tessellated pavement was discovered, in 1770.

SAPEY (UPPER), a parish in the hundred of BROXASH, county of HEREFORD, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. E.) from Bromyard, containing 323 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Hereford, rated in the king's books at £9. 5. $7\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of Sir T. Winnington, Bart. The church is dedicated to St. Michael. A charity school, founded by Mr. Addingbroke, is endowed with about £10 per annum. In the neighbourhood are the remains of a single-intrenched Roman camp.

SAPEY-PRITCHARD, a parish in the upper division of the hundred of DODDINGTREE, county of WORCESTER, $5\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. E. by N.) from Bromyard, containing 200 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Salop, and diocese of Hereford, rated in the king's books at £4. 4. 2., and in the patronage of P. Rufford, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Bartholomew. A court leet is annually held here.

SAPISTON, a parish in the hundred of BLACKBOURN, county of SUFFOLK, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. by W.) from Ixworth, containing 242 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Suffolk, and diocese of Norwich, endowed with £1200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Duke of Grafton. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew.

SAPLEY, an extra-parochial district, in the hundred of HURSTINGSTONE, county of HUNTINGDON, 2 miles (E.) from Huntingdon.

SAPPERTON, a township in the parish of CHURCH-BROUGHTON, hundred of APPLETREE, county of DERBY, 12 miles (W.) from Derby. The population is returned with the parish.

SAPPERTON, a parish in the hundred of BISLEY, county of GLOUCESTER, comprising the tythings of Frampton-Marshall and Sapperton, and containing 476 inhabitants, of which number, 295 are in the tything of Sapperton, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (W. N. W.) from Cirencester. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Gloucester, rated in the king's books at £17, and in the patronage of Earl Bathurst. The church is dedicated to St. Kenelm. The Thames and Severn canal, in its course through this parish, is conducted, by a tunnel four thousand one hundred and eighty feet long, underneath Hagley wood. At Frampton, two urns filled with denarii and copper coins, were discovered, in 1759, by the sinking of a wagon-wheel, near which spot are vestiges of an ancient camp, and south-east of it there was a beacon.

SAPPERTON, a parish in the soke of GRANTHAM, parts of KESTEVEN, county of LINCOLN, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W.) from Falkingham, containing 55 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £5. 9. 9 $\frac{1}{2}$., endowed with £600 private benefaction, and £400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of Sir W. E. Welby, Bart. The church is dedicated to St. Nicholas.

SAREDON (GREAT and LITTLE), a township in the parish of SHARESHELL, eastern division of the hundred of CUTTLESTONE, county of STAFFORD, 7 miles (N. N. E.) from Wolverhampton, containing 297 inhabitants.

SARNESFIELD, a parish in the hundred of WOLPHY, county of HEREFORD, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by S.) from Weobley, containing 102 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Hereford, rated in the king's books at £5. 6. 8., and in the patronage of Thomas Monnington, Esq. The church is dedicated to All Saints. A court leet is occasionally held here.

SARR, a ville in the cinque-port liberty of SANDWICH, though locally in the hundred of Ringslow, or Isle of Thanet, lathe of ST. AUGUSTINE, county of KENT, $8\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. E.) from Canterbury, containing 191 inhabitants.

SARRATT, a parish in the hundred of CASHIO, or liberty of ST. ALBANS, county of HERTFORD, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by N.) from Rickmansworth, containing 397 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of St. Albans, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £9, and in the patronage of Mrs. Harriet Gordon. The church is dedicated to the Holy Cross: it is a cruciform structure, consisting of a nave, chancel, transepts, and a square tower, being built of a mixture of brick, stone, and flints: it contains a piscina beneath an embattled cornice ornamented with roses, and two stone seats. The village is situated on a ridge of land forming the western boundary of a vale watered by a small river, commonly called the Sarret stream.

SARSDEN, a parish in the hundred of CHADLINGTON, county of OXFORD, $3\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. W. by S.) from Chipping-Norton, containing 128 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, rated in the king's books at £8. 18. 1 $\frac{1}{2}$.. J. H. Langston, Esq. was patron in 1817. Ann Walker, in 1705, gave £600, now producing an annual income of £52. 10., for which twenty-four girls are educated.

SARSON, a tything in the parish of AMPORT, hundred of ANDOVER, Andover division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON. The population is returned with the parish.

SARUM (OLD), an ancient borough in the parish of STRATFORD under the CASTLE, hundred of UNDERDITCH, VOL. IV.

county of WILTS, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (N.) from Salisbury. The population is returned with the parish. This place was originally a British settlement of some importance previous to the time of the Romans, who, on their establishment in the island, fixed here their station Sorbiadunum, situated on the Via Iceniana, or Ikniel-street. By the Saxons, who, under their leader Kenric, son of Cerdic, second king of Wessex, took this town from the Britons in 552, it was called Searesbyrig, from the dryness of its situation, and continued to be a residence of the West Saxon kings till the union of the Octarchy under Egbert, after which time it still continued to be a royal castle. Alfred issued an order to the sheriff of Wiltshire to fortify this place with a trench and palisades, which order is given by Ledwiche, in his "Antiquitates Sarisburienses," and the remains of the present fortifications are evidently of Saxon character. In 960, Edgar convoked a wittenagemote, or great council of the state here, the especial object of which was to deliberate upon the best mode of defending the northern counties against the incursions of the Danes, by whom this part of the kingdom was particularly infested. In 1003, Sweyn, King of Denmark, having landed on the western coast, to retaliate the massacre of his countrymen in the reign of Ethelred, pillaged the town and burnt the castle. Soon after the Norman Conquest, pursuant to a decree of a synod held in St. Paul's cathedral, in 1076, for removing episcopal sees from obscure villages into fortified cities, the seat of the bishoprick of Wiltshire was, by Bishop Herman, removed from Sherborne (which had fallen into decay) to this place, where he laid the foundation of a cathedral church, which was completed by his successor, Bishop Osmund, in 1092. On the completion of the Norman survey, in 1086, William the Conqueror summoned all the bishops, abbots, barons, and knights of the kingdom, to attend him at Sarum, and do homage for the lands which they held by feudal tenure. In 1095, or 1096, William Rufus assembled a great council here, in which William, Count of Eu, was impeached of high treason against the king, in conspiring to raise Stephen, Earl of Albemarle, to the throne. Henry I. held his court here several months during the year 1100, where he received Archbishop Anselm, on his arrival in England, whom he required to do homage, and swear fealty to him, and to receive from his hands the investiture of his see. This demand gave rise to a dispute between the king and the pope, which was at length compromised, the pope allowing the prelates to do homage to the king, and reserving to himself alone the right of investiture, which was the first attempt to establish papal supremacy in the island. This monarch again fixed his residence here in 1106, and in 1116 assembled the prelates and barons of the realm, to swear allegiance and do homage to his son William, as his successor on the English throne, previously to his embarkation for Normandy, on his return from which place that prince was unfortunately drowned. In the reign of Stephen, Bishop Roger held the castle for the king; and soon after the instalment of his successor, Joceline, in 1142, the partisans of the Empress Matilda took possession of the town, which, in the course of the contest, was alternately occupied by both parties. On the accession of Henry II., in 1154, the castle was found to be in a dismantled state, and a considerable sum was expended in putting it into repair. From the time of Stephen, disputes had arisen between the castellans and the clergy, which became so violent, that in the reign of Richard I., Herbert, then bishop, induced by these annoyances, and other inconveniences attending the situation of his church, among which was the difficulty of obtaining water, which could not be accomplished, except by permission of the governor, obtained license from the king to remove the see, and to erect a new church in the valley, at the distance of nearly two miles from the castle. This design was carried into execution by his successor, who having obtained a special indulgence from the pope, laid the foundation of the present cathedral of New Sarum, or Salisbury, to which place the episcopal chair was transferred. From that period the town of Old Sarum began to decay, and was gradually deserted by its inhabitants, who established themselves in the more immediate vicinity of the new cathedral church. Of the old town there is scarcely a single vestige, except a few fragments of foundation walls of some of the houses, on the declivity of an eminence rising from the western side of a valley, and forming the extremity of a ridge which extends towards the east. The vast ditches and ramparts of the ancient city, and the site of the castle, may be traced, and, while they constitute the only visible remains of this once flourishing city, are among the most interesting objects of antiquarian research: there were houses remaining down to the time of Henry VIII., and service was performed in the old chapel of the cathedral until nearly the same period. Old Sarum is a borough by prescription, and first exercised the elective franchise in the 23d of Edward I., but made no other return till the 34th of Edward III., since which time it has continued to send two members to parliament: the right of election is vested in the burgage freeholders, of whom the number is seven: the bailiff is the returning officer. A temporary house is erected under a large tree for holding the election. John of Salisbury, one of the most eminent scholars of his time, and celebrated as an historian and biographer, was born at Old Sarum, in the early part of the twelfth century.

tion of it occurs in the Norman survey, attributable to its having been one of those towns which, in the sanguinary conflicts between the Saxons and the Danes, were laid desolate, or to its having shared in the devastation that marked the progress of the Conqueror. The earliest authentic record is a charter of Henry II., conferring certain privileges on the inhabitants; and in the reign of Henry III., a charter was granted for making a new pier at Scardeburgh, as it was then called. Prior to the construction of the pier, the town began to rise into importance, and was defended by walls and a fosse, of which some vestiges may still be traced. In the reign of Stephen, a castle had been erected by William le Gros, Earl of Albemarle and Holderness, which that nobleman was compelled to surrender to Henry II., who made considerable additions to it. In this castle Piers Gaveston took refuge from the attacks of the confederate barons, and for a considerable time maintained it against their assaults, till a scarcity of provisions obliged him to surrender. In this reign the town was burnt by the Scottish forces, who, headed by Robert Bruce, their king, made an irruption into England. Robert Aske, the leader of the insurrection called the Pilgrimage of Grace, made an unsuccessful attempt to gain possession of the castle, in 1536; and during Wyatt's rebellion, in 1553, it was surprised and taken by a party headed by Thomas, second son of Lord Stafford, who, disguising themselves as peasants, obtained possession of it: but it was soon retaken by the Earl of Westmorland, and Stafford and three of his accomplices being made prisoners, were sent to London, and executed for high treason.

During the civil war in the reign of Charles I., the parliamentary forces, commanded by Sir John Meldrum, besieged the castle, which held out under its brave governor, Sir Hugh Cholmley, for more than twelve months, and after the death of their leader, who fell in the assault, the command devolved upon Sir Matthew Boynton, to whom the fortress was surrendered, in 1645, upon honourable terms, after the exhaustion of its military stores. Col. Boynton, who succeeded Sir Matthew in the command of the castle, having declared for the king, it came again into the possession of the royalists; but the garrison mutinying, he was obliged to capitulate, and it was finally surrendered to the parliament in 1648, and soon afterwards dismantled. George Fox, founder of the Society of Friends, was confined in it in 1665. During the rebellion in 1745, the castle was put into a state of temporary repair; and since that time three batteries have been erected for the protection of the town and harbour, of which two are on the south and one on the north side of the castle-yard, and within the enclosure are barracks for the accommodation of one hundred and twenty men. This once formidable fortress comprised within the boundary walls an area of more than nineteen acres, and occupied the summit of an eminence three hundred feet above the level of the sea, which surrounds it on all sides except on the west, by which it is connected with the town, and on the north, east, and south, is a vast range of perpendicular rocks; the entrance is through an arched gateway, on the summit of a narrow isthmus, flanked by bastions, and defended by a draw-bridge within the gates, and a deep fosse. The principal parts now remaining are the keep, a square tower, the walls of which are twelve feet thick, and some portions of the semicircular towers which defended the ramparts, now falling rapidly to decay; some slight remains of the chapel are still discernible within the walls: the castle and its precincts are extra-parochial.

The town is beautifully and romantically situated in the recess of a fine open bay, on the coast of the North sea, and consists of several spacious streets of handsome well-built houses, rising in successive tiers from the shore, in the form of an amphitheatre: the beach, of firm and smooth sand, slopes gradually towards the sea, and affords at all times safe and commodious sea-bathing, for which the town is celebrated. On the cliffs are many new and handsome houses for private residence, and numerous lodging-houses have been erected for the accommodation of visitors, who repair hither, either for the convenience of sea-bathing, for which the water of the bay, unimpaired in its quality by the influx of any stream of fresh water, is peculiarly favourable; or for the benefit of the mineral springs, the efficacy of which, in numerous diseases, has been for more than two centuries in the highest repute. These springs, which are saline chalybeates, varying in the proportions of their several ingredients, were for some time lost by the sinking of a large mass of the cliff, in 1737, but were recovered after a diligent search. The principal are the south and the north wells, situated at the base of the cliff, south of the town, near the sea-shore, where a convenient and handsome building has been erected for the accommodation of visitors. The water of the south well contains ninety-eight ounces, and that of the north well one hundred ounces, of carbonic acid gas in a gallon; the former is purgative, and the latter tonic. A fine terrace, one hundred feet above the level of the sands, forms a pleasant marine promenade. A handsome iron bridge of four arches on stone pillars, connecting the dis severed cliffs, in the chasm between which runs the stream called Millbeck, and affording facility of access to the spas, was erected in 1827: it is four hundred and fourteen feet in length, and seventy-five in height, and constitutes one of the principal ornaments of the town. Adjacent to the bridge is the museum, an elegant circular building with a dome, erected by subscription in 1829, for the investigation and illustration of the natural history of the district, and already displaying many most valuable specimens. There are five separate bathing establishments, where warm sea-water baths may be obtained at any time: three of them are situated on the cliff, and the others near the pier; they are under the superintendence of medical practitioners residing in the town. There is also a general sea-bathing infirmary, supported by subscription, for the use of poor invalids, who, on the plan of the infirmary at Margate, are boarded and lodged upon very moderate terms, and during their residence in it, have the gratuitous use of the waters. The theatre, a commodious and well-arranged building, is open during the season; and assemblies are held occasionally under the superintendence of a master of the ceremonies, in a handsome suite of rooms elegantly fitted up for that purpose. A Scientific Institution is forming, to support which a considerable sum has been subscribed: the situation selected for the museum to be attached is on the cliffs near the bridge. The environs are beautifully diversified with hill and dale, and include much picturesque and romantic scenery; Olivers' mount, about a mile from the town, approached by a gradual ascent, forms a magnificent natural marine terrace, five hundred feet above the level of the sea, commanding an interesting view of the Castle hill, with its venerable ruins, the town, the harbour, and the piers on one side, and an extensive view of the ocean on the other. The rides are pleasant; and the salubrity of the air, and the numerous objects of interest with which the neighbourhood abounds, have rendered Scarborough a favourite place of fashionable resort. The town is supplied with fresh water by means of a reservoir, capable of containing four thousand hogsheads.

The port is a member of the port of Hull, and its limits extend from the most easterly part of Flamborough Head, in a direction northward, to Peaseholme Beck, including all the sea-coast to fourteen fathoms of water, at low water mark. The foreign trade is principally with Portugal, Holland, and the Baltic, from which places it imports wine, brandy, geneva, timber, deals, hemp, flax, and iron: it carries on also a considerable coasting trade in corn, butter, bacon, and salt-fish, with Newcastle, Sunderland, and other places on the coast, and with the port of London for groceries. There are one hundred and seventy-three ships belonging to the port, averaging a burden of one hundred and sixty-four tons. The harbour, though confined at the entrance, is easy of access, and safe and commodious within: it is protected by two piers, of which the one was considerably enlarged by act of parliament obtained in the 5th of Geo. II.; it is one thousand two hundred feet in length, and forty-two feet broad at the extremity, and in the intermediate line varies from thirteen to eighteen feet in breadth. This pier having been found insufficient to prevent the accumulation of sand in the harbour, an act was obtained for the construction of a new pier, of which the breadth at the foundation is sixty feet, and at the curvature, where it is most subject to the action of the waves, sixty-three feet; it is forty feet high, forty-two feet in breadth at the top, and one thousand two hundred feet in length, and was designed by Smeaton, the celebrated engineer. To defray the expense of this undertaking, a duty of one halfpenny per chaldron was granted on all coal brought from Newcastle, with other duties on shipping frequenting the port. The custom-house, a neat building on the sand side, is under the superintendence of the usual officers; and three steam-packets touch at this port twice every week, on their passage between London and Edinburgh. The fishery was formerly carried on to a considerable extent, and was a source of great profit to the town, but has of late greatly declined. There are some establishments for ship-building, and several manufactories for cordage and sail-cloth. An attempt was made, in 1794, to form a canal, but it was never accomplished. The market days are Thursday and Saturday, the former for corn; the fish market is held on the sands near the harbour: the fairs are on Holy Thursday and November 22nd, chiefly for cattle. The borough received a charter of incorporation from Henry II., under which, ratified and extended by succeeding monarchs, the government is vested in two bailiffs, two coroners, four chamberlains, and thirty-six common council-men, assisted by a town clerk, a recorder, and subordinate officers. The bailiffs are annually chosen by the common council, and are justices of the peace within the borough. The corporation hold quarterly courts of session, for all offences not capital, and a manorial court every month, for the recovery of debts to any amount. The town hall is a spacious and commodious building, in which the several courts are held, and the public business of the corporation is transacted. The borough gaol and the house of correction, distinct buildings, are but ill adapted for the classification of prisoners; the former, chiefly for debtors, contains four rooms, and the latter only three, without airing-yards. The borough first exercised the elective franchise in the 23rd of Edward I., since which time it has regularly returned two members to parliament: the right of election is vested in the bailiffs and corporation: the bailiffs are the returning officers.

The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of the East riding, and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £13. 6. 8., endowed with £1800 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of Lord Hotham. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, was anciently the conventual church of the Cistercian monastery, and was formerly a spacious and magnificent cruciform structure, with three noble towers: it sustained considerable damage during the siege of the castle, in the time of the parliamentary war, and retains but few portions of its ancient character: the present steeple stands at the eastern end. Christ-church, a handsome edifice in the later style of English architecture, with a square embattled tower crowned with pinnacles, and containing one thousand two hundred sittings, of which six hundred are free, was erected in 1828, at an expense of £5000, by grant from the parliamentary commissioners, exclusively of a local subscription of £3000, and the stone, which was the gift of Sir John V. B. Johnstone, Bart. There are places of worship for Baptists, the Society of Friends, Independents, and Wesleyan Methodists, and a Roman Catholic chapel. The grammar school is of very obscure origin; in 1648 the corporation ordered a part of St. Mary's church to be fitted up and appropriated to its use, the expense of which was defrayed by the sale of the old school-house; the income, arising from donations of land and money, is about £12 per annum; gratuitous instruction is afforded to four scholars only. A society, consisting of about two hundred members, was established in 1729, under the patronage of Robert North, Esq., for clothing and educating the poor children of the town, which is, to a considerable extent, accomplished by weekly contributions of its members, and general subscription. The spinning school was established, in 1788, under the patronage of the ladies of Scarborough, for the clothing and education of girls, who are also instructed in useful domestic occupations; a Lancasterian school is supported by subscription, and there are Sunday schools in connexion with the established church, and the dissenting congregations. The Seamen's hospital was erected, in 1752, by the ship-owners of the town, for the maintenance and support of aged seamen, their widows, and children: it is supported by a contribution of sixpence per month from the owner of every vessel belonging to the port, for each person on board during the time the vessel is at sea, or in actual service, and is under the superintendence of a president and trustees, annually elected: the income of this hospital, arising from donations, is about £200 per annum. St. Thomas' hospital was founded by the corporation, for aged and infirm persons, and is under the direction of the bailiffs and common council; the buildings are low and of ancient appearance. There are also several amicable societies, and various charitable bequests for distribution among the poor. To the north of St. Sepulchre's street are the remains of a Franciscan convent, supposed to have been founded about the 29th of Henry III., and now used as a workshop. Among other monastic establishments anciently existing here were, a monastery of Dominicans, founded in the reign of Edward I., by Adam Say, Knt., or by Henry Percy, Earl of Northumberland; and a house of Carmelite friars, founded by Edward II., in 1319. Scarborough gives the title of earl to the family of Lumley.

SCARCLIFF, a parish in the hundred of SCARSDALE, county of DERBY, 6 miles (N. N. W.) from Mansfield, containing 494 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Derby, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, rated in the king's books at £5, endowed with £1000 royal bounty, and £200 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Duke of Devonshire. The church, dedicated to St. Leonard, contains a monument of the 11th century, representing a lady in robes, with a coronet on her head, and an infant on her left arm: the inscription, in Lombardic capitals, has become illegible from time and mutilation. Ten poor children are instructed for an annuity of £6 bequeathed by Kithe Vaughan, in 1813, and another of 10s. by Elizabeth Saxton, in 1815.

SCARCROFT, a township in the parish of THORNER, lower division of the wapentake of SKYRACK, West riding of the county of YORK, 6½ miles (S. S. W.) from Wetherby, containing 105 inhabitants.

SCARGILL, a township in the parish of BARNINGHAM, western division of the wapentake of GILLING, North riding of the county of YORK, 3½ miles (S. W. by W.) from Greta-Bridge, containing 136 inhabitants.

SCARISBRICK, a township in the parish of ORMSKIRK, hundred of WEST DERBY, county palatine of LANCASTER, 2 miles (N. W.) from Ormskirk, containing 1584 inhabitants.

SCARLE (NORTH), a parish in the lower division of the wapentake of BOOTHBY-GRAFFO, parts of KESTEVEN, county of LINCOLN, 10 miles (W. S. W.) from Lincoln, containing 434 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £4. 17. 3½, and in the patronage of Lord Egremont. The church is dedicated to All Saints. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. The river Trent forms a boundary of this parish.

SCARLE (SOUTH), a parish in the northern division of the wapentake of NEWARK, county of NOTTINGHAM, 7½ miles (N. E. by N.) from Newark, containing, with the chapelry of Besthorpe, 422 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Nottingham, and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £5. 2. 5., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Prebendary of South Scarle in the Cathedral Church of Lincoln. The church is dedicated to St. Helen.

SCARNING, a parish in the hundred of LAUNDITCH, county of NORFOLK, 2 miles (W. S. W.) from East Dereham, containing 498 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £9. 19. Sir John Lombe, Bart. was patron in 1808. The church is dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul. A free school was founded here and liberally endowed by William Secker, in 1604.

SCARRINGTON, a parish in the northern division of the wapentake of BINGHAM, county of NOTTINGHAM, 12½ miles (E. by N.) from Nottingham, containing 171 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the vicarage of Orston, in the archdeaconry of Nottingham, and diocese of York. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. Scarrington is in the honour of Tutbury, duchy of Lancaster, and within the jurisdiction of a court of pleas held at Tutbury every third Tuesday, for the recovery of debts under 40s.

SCARTHINGWELL, a joint township with Saxton, in the parish of SAXTON, upper division of the wapentake of BARKSTONE-ASH, West riding of the county of YORK, 4¾ miles (S. by E.) from Tadcaster. The population is returned with Saxton.

SCARTH, a parish in the wapentake of BRADLEY-HAVERSTOE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 2¼ miles (S.) from Great Grimsby, containing 148 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £8. 10. 10., and in the patronage of the Principal and Fellows of Jesus College, Oxford. The church is dedicated to St. Giles.

SCATHWAITERIGG-HAY, a joint township with Hutton i' th' Hay, in that part of the parish of KENDAL which is in KENDAL ward, county of WESTMORLAND, 2 miles (N. E.) from Kendal, containing 348 inhabitants.

SCAWBY, a parish in the eastern division of the wapentake of MANLEY, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 2¼ miles (W. S. W.) from Glandford-Bridge, containing, with the township of Sturton, 838 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Stow, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £7, and in the patronage of Sir H. Nelthorpe, Bart. The church is dedicated to St. Hibald. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. A free school, founded in 1705, by Richard Nelthorpe, is endowed with land now let for £30 a year, for the instruction of the children of the Nelthorpe tenantry.

SCAWTON, a parish in the wapentake of RYEDALE, North riding of the county of YORK, 5 miles (W.) from Helmsley, containing 154 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Cleveland, and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £2. 19. 2., and in the patronage of — Worsley, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is in the early style of English architecture.

SCHOLES, a joint township with Morwick, in the parish of BARWICK in ELMETT, lower division of the wapentake of SKYRACK, West riding of the county of YORK, 7 miles (E. N. E.) from Leeds. The population is returned with Morwick. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

SCILLY ISLANDS. These islands, of which there are seventeen, varying in extent from one thousand six hundred and forty acres to ten, besides twenty-two smaller islets, and numerous naked rocks, form a cluster lying off the south-west coast of Cornwall, about 17 leagues due west from the Lizard point, and 10 leagues nearly west by south from the Land's End. By the Greeks they were called Hesperides and Cassiterides; by the Romans Sellinæ and Siluræ Insulæ: their present name of Scilly, anciently written Sully, or Sulley, appears to be British, and they are reported to take it from a small island, containing only one acre, which is called Scilly Island. Except what relates to their trading intercourse with the Phœnicians and the Romans, and the circumstance of their having been occasionally appropriated by the latter as a place of banishment for state criminals, the first mention we find of them in history is in the tenth century, when they were subdued by King Athelstan. After this there is no record of any remarkable historical event respecting them until the reign of Charles I., when they became of considerable importance as a military post. In 1645, they afforded a temporary asylum to Prince Charles and his friends, Lords Hopton and Capel. In 1649, Sir John Grenville being governor of the Scilly Islands, fortified and held them for Charles II. The parliament finding their trading vessels much annoyed by his frigates, fitted out an expedition for the reduction of the islands, under the command of Admiral Blake and Sir George Ascue, who first took possession of those of Trescaw and Bryer, and threw up fortifications for the purpose of attacking Sir John Grenville, at St. Mary's. The Dutch Admiral, Van Tromp, is said to have made insidious, but ineffectual, proposals to the governor to take the islands under his protection. Resistance being found vain, they were delivered up to the parliament, in the beginning of June of the same year, this having been one of the last rallying points for the royalists: the garrison consisted of eight hundred soldiers, with numerous commissioned officers.

The total surface of the islands is about four thousand seven hundred acres, and the number of inhabitants from two to three thousand. The extent of St. Mary's Island, the largest, including the garrison, which is joined to it by an isthmus, is one thousand six hundred and forty acres, and its population is from 1200 to 1500. The principal town, called Hugh-town, or Heugh-town, was much damaged by inundation during the great storm in 1744. The pier was finished in 1750, having been constructed at the expense of Lord Godolphin; vessels of one hundred and fifty tons' burden may ride here in safety. Near this town are the ruins of an old fortress, with a mount, and the remains of several block-houses and batteries, supposed to have been constructed in the civil war. About two furlongs to the eastward is a bay, called Pomellin, or Porthmellin, where a fine white sand, composed of crystals and talc, much esteemed as a writing sand, and for other purposes, is procured in abundance. About a mile from Hugh-town is the Church-town, consisting of a few houses and the church, in the chancel of which are interred Sir John Narborough, Bart., son of the celebrated admiral of that name; Henry Trelawney, son of a Bishop of Winchester; and Captain Edmund Loades, of the Association man of war, all of whom shared the fate of Rear-Admiral Sir Cloudesley Shovel, who was lost on the Gilston rock, October 22nd, 1707. Two furlongs further, bordering on the sea, is Old-town, formerly the principal town of the island. On a promontory, called the Giant's Castle, are traces of an ancient fortress, supposed to be of remote origin. On the west side of the island are St. Mary's garrison, with the barracks and several batteries, and Star castle; the latter was built by Sir Francis Godolphin, in 1593. The island next in magnitude is Trescaw, anciently called Iniscaw, and St. Nicholas, which contains eight hundred and eighty acres, and about 500 inhabitants. In it are some remains of the conventual church of St. Nicholas, the ruins of Old-castle, and Oliver's Battery. Old-castle, which appears to have been built in or about the reign of Henry VIII., is spoken of by Leland as "a little pile, or fortress:" it appears to have been afterwards enlarged, as its ruins shew it to have been a considerable building. Oliver's castle, as it is called, from its having been built by the parliamentarians, was repaired in 1740; but is described by Borlase, in 1756, as being then already much decayed. St. Martin's island, though next in size to St. Mary's and Trescaw, containing seven hundred and twenty acres, was uninhabited until the reign of Charles II.; it now contains about 250 inhabitants. Mr. Ekins, in 1683, built a tower on this island, as a land-mark, twenty feet high, with a spire upon it of the same height. On St. Agnes' island, which contains 250 inhabitants, is a lighthouse. Bryer, or Brehar, contains three hundred and thirty acres, and about 120 inhabitants.

The principal employment and trade of the islanders consist in fishing and making kelp: about one hundred boats are used for fishing, piloting, &c.: the quantity of kelp annually made varies from one to two hundred tons. Tin is found in several of the islands, and in some, lead and copper; but no mines are now worked. Some of them produce grain, chiefly barley, peas, and oats, with a small portion of wheat; a few acres are sown with the pillis, or naked oat: potatoes are cultivated in great quantities in St. Mary's. Cattle are fed on most of them, and though not very abundant, are sometimes sold to masters of vessels. Samphire, for pickling, is collected in abundance in the isle of Trescaw. The tamarisk and lavatera arborea grow plentifully in that of St. Mary.

The property and temporal jurisdiction of these islands were anciently attached to the earldom, as they now are to the duchy, of Cornwall (excepting those of Trescaw), St. Sampson, St. Elid, St. Teon, and Nullo, and some lands in other islands, which were given, in or before the reign of Edward the Confessor, to certain monks, or hermits, who had their abode in the island of St. Nicholas (now Trescaw), and were subsequently granted by King Henry I. to the abbot of Tavistock. The present lessee of the whole is the Duke of Leeds, the representative of the Godolphin family, to whom they appear to have been first leased in the 13th of Elizabeth; the duke holds them at a rent of £40, for thirty-one years, from 1800, so that the lease is now about to expire. The government of them appears to have been vested, at least since the Reformation, uniformly in the proprietors, except in the instances of Sir John Grenville and Joseph Hunkin, Esq., during the interregnum, and Major Bennet, previously to the year 1733. Before the Reformation, it appears that the proprietor kept the peace of the islands, with the assistance of twelve armed men; and that there were frequent feuds between them and the king's coroner, who came hither to hold assizes for the trial of prisoners accused of greater offences. It is most probable that all minor offences were cognizable, as they now are, by a court delegated by the lord proprietor, whose authority for exercising the civil jurisdiction is derived from a patent of the 10th of King William. The lord proprietor appoints a court, or council of twelve, consisting of some of the principal inhabitants, among whom are generally the military commandant, steward, chaplain, and commissary of musters. Vacancies are supplied by election; but the whole may be dissolved, and a fresh appointment made, at any time, by the lord proprietor. After the death of a lord proprietor, a new council is necessarily appointed. The court generally sits monthly, for the trial of plaints, suits, &c., between the islanders, excepting such causes as affect life and limb, and such as are cognizable by the court of Admiralty. Persons charged with transportable offences are tried here, such as receiving stolen goods, &c.; but the punishment is only fines, or whipping, and sometimes imprisonment. Those accused of murder, burglaries, &c., are conveyed before the nearest Cornish magistrate, and sent to be tried at the assizes for the county of Cornwall.

These islands have always been deemed to be under the spiritual jurisdiction of the Bishop of Cornwall, or Exeter, and to have formed part of the archdeaconry of Cornwall; but there is no record of any ecclesiastical jurisdiction having been exercised, except in proving wills. In early times the abbot of Tavistock held the tithes of the whole, and certain lands, by the title of finding two monks to reside there, and to provide for the spiritual wants of the inhabitants. Since the Reformation the tithes have been vested in the lord proprietor, who is patron of the donative, and pays the minister an optional salary. The minister receives neither institution nor induction, nor is he licensed by the bishop; and neither he nor the churchwardens are cited to visitations: the latter are sworn in at the lord's council court, where cognizance is taken of all offences usually brought before spiritual courts. It was formerly customary to punish such offenders by ducking in salt water at the quay head. Until of late years the minister of St. Mary's was the only clergyman in the islands, officiating constantly at St. Mary's, where a register of baptisms and marriages was kept for all the islands; at Trescaw, only on the Sunday after Easter; and at St. Martin's, on Trinity Sunday: the chapels of the other islands were served by laymen, or, as they were called, island clerks, usually fishermen. The Society for promoting Christian Knowledge now employs two missionaries, who officiate at what are called the Off-islands. There are chapels at Trescaw, St. Martin's, St. Agnes', Bryer, and St. Sampson's, for the most part built by the Godolphin family, since the Reformation; that of Bryer, about 1746: that of St. Agnes' was built at the expense of the Society for promoting Christian Knowledge, which also gave £400 towards erecting a house for the missionary, at Trescaw. The Wesleyan Methodists have four places of worship in these islands. The Earl of Godolphin, in 1747, established a school for instructing twelve boys in reading, writing, and arithmetic. The Rev. Richard Corbet Hartshorne, rector of Broseley in Shropshire, about the year 1753, gave the sum of £250 towards the support either of a minister or schoolmaster at Trescaw, under the direction of the Society for promoting Christian Knowledge. The only considerable benefaction which the society has received towards the religious instruction of the islanders, since that time, is the sum of £500, given by Charles Etty, Esq. About £300 per annum is expended by the society, on the missions and schools, chiefly out of their general funds. On St. Helen's island, now uninhabited, are the ruins of houses, and of an ancient chapel.

SCOLE, otherwise OSMONDISTON, a parish in the hundred of DISS, county of NORFOLK, $19\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. S. W.) from Norwich, containing 468 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £9, and in the patronage of Sir E. Kerrison, Bart. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew. The village is a great thoroughfare on the high road from Ipswich to Norwich and Yarmouth, and contains a very good inn, built in the seventeenth century by a merchant of London, at the expense of £1500.

SCOPWICK, a parish in the second division of the wapentake of LANGOE, parts of KESTIVEN, county of LINCOLN, $8\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N.) from Sleaford, containing 232 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £8, endowed with £400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to the Holy Cross.

SCORBROUGH, a parish in the Bainton-Beacon division of the wapentake of HARTHILL, East riding of the county of YORK, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. W.) from Beverley, containing 88 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of the East riding, and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £7, and in the patronage of the Earl of Egremont. The church is dedicated to St. Leonard.

SCOREBY, a joint township with West Stamford-Bridge, in that part of the parish of CATTON which is in the wapentake of OUZE and DERWENT, East riding of the county of YORK, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by N.) from York. The population is returned with West Stamford-Bridge.

SCORTON, a township in that part of the parish of CATTERICK which is in the eastern division of the wapentake of GILLING, North riding of the county of YORK, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. E.) from Catterick, containing 496 inhabitants. A free grammar school here is endowed with £200 a year, the bequest of Leonard Robinson, Esq. The school-house, erected in 1760, stands on the north side of a spacious green, around which the village, which is well built, is situated. The buildings on the east side are occupied by a religious community of thirty nuns, of the order of St. Clair, who emigrated to this country from Normandy, in 1795. There are also about twenty boarders, and they have a neat chapel belonging to the establishment. Within the parish is a spring, called St. Cuthbert's well, the water of which is efficacious in cutaneous and rheumatic disorders.

SCOSTHORPE, a township in that part of the parish of KIRKBY in MALHAM-DALE which is in the western division of the wapentake of STAINCLIFFE and EWCROSS, West riding of the county of YORK, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E. by E.) from Settle, containing 102 inhabitants.

SCOTBY, a township in that part of the parish of WETHERAL which is in CUMBERLAND ward, county of CUMBERLAND, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by S.) from Carlisle, containing 318 inhabitants. There is a meeting-house, with a burial-ground, for the Society of Friends. A rail-road from Carlisle to Newcastle passes through the township. A school is endowed with land, now producing £14 a year, for teaching poor children, who pay each a small quarterage.

SCOTFORTH, a township in that part of the parish of LANCASTER which is in the hundred of LONSDALE, south of the sands, county palatine of LANCASTER, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (S.) from Lancaster, containing 579 inhabitants. Eight poor children are instructed for £2. 5. a year, the interest of a legacy by John Taylor, in 1799.

SCOTHERN, a parish in the wapentake of LAWRESS, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. E. by N.) from Lincoln, containing 366 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Stow, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £4. 5. $2\frac{1}{2}$., endowed with £800 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Earl of Scarborough. The church is dedicated to St. German.

SCOTTER, a parish in the wapentake of CORRINGHAM, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $9\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. E. by N.) from Gainsborough, containing 938 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Stow, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £22. 4. 2., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Peterborough. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. The river Eau runs through the parish, and falls into the Trent, which forms its north-west boundary. A charter for a market on Thursday, and a fair on July 10th, was granted by Richard I., but the former has been discontinued. There is a fair for horses and cattle on July 6th, called Scotter shew.

SCREVETON, a parish in the northern division of the wapentake of BINGHAM, county of NOTTINGHAM, $8\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W. by S.) from Newark, containing 292 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Nottingham, and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £6. 19. 1., and in the patronage of Col. Hildyard. The church, dedicated to St. Winifred, contains an altar-tomb and effigy to the memory of Gen. Whalley, the supposed executioner of Charles I., who commanded under Cromwell: figures of his three wives and twenty-two children are represented on the same monument: he died in 1683. A small river, called the Car Dyke, runs through the parish, which is in the honour of Tutbury, duchy of Lancaster, and within the jurisdiction of a court of pleas held at Tutbury every third Tuesday, for the recovery of debts under 40s. Dr. Thoroton, the antiquary and topographer, was born in an ancient mansion here belonging to his family.

SCRIVELSBY, a parish in the southern division of the wapentake of GARTREE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S.) from Horncastle, containing 153 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, united, in 1731, with that of Dalderby, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £12. 17. 6. The church is dedicated to St. Benedict. The Dymokes hold the manor of Scrivelsby, by inheritance from the Marmions, by "the service of grand serjeantry, that, whenever any king of England is to be crowned, the lord of this manor for the time being, or, in case of sickness, some one for him, shall come well armed for battle, on a good horse, into the presence of our lord the king, at his coronation, and make proclamation that, if any one will say that our said lord the king has not a title to his kingdom and crown, he shall be ready and prepared to defend the right of the king and his kingdom, and the dignity of his crown, in his own person, against him and any other whatsoever." The small river Bane runs through the parish.

SCRIVEN, a joint township with Tentergate, in that part of the parish of KNARESBOROUGH which is in the lower division of the wapentake of CLARO, West riding of the county of YORK, 1 mile (N. by W.) from Knaresborough, containing, with Tentergate, 1373 inhabitants. It is within the peculiar jurisdiction of the court of the honour of Knaresborough.

SCROOBY, a parish within the liberty of SOUTHWELL and SCROOBY, though locally in the wapentake of Bassetlaw, county of NOTTINGHAM, $1\frac{3}{4}$ mile (S.) from Bawtry, containing 269 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, with that of Sutton, in the archdeaconry of Nottingham, and diocese of York. The church is dedicated to St. Wilfred. In this parish are some remains of an ancient palace of the Archbishops of York, converted into a farm-house; in the garden is a mulberry-tree, said to have been planted by Cardinal Wolsey.

SCROPTON, a parish in the hundred of APPLETREE, county of DERBY, $11\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. S. W.) from Derby, containing, with Foston, 510 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Derby, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, and in the patronage of J. Broadhurst, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Paul. The river Dove runs through the parish.

SCRUTON, a parish in the eastern division of the wapentake of HANG, North riding of the county of YORK, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. E. by N.) from Bedale, containing 411 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Richmond, and diocese of Chester, rated in the king's books at £14. 0. 5., and in the patronage of Henry Gale, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Radegund.

SCULCOATES, a parish in the Hunsley-Beacon division of the wapentake of HARTHILL, East riding of the county of YORK, $1\frac{1}{4}$ mile (N.) from Kingston upon Hull, containing 10,449 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of the East riding, and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £5. 6. 8., endowed with £600 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Crown. The parish church, dedicated to St. Mary, was rebuilt in 1760. An act was obtained, in 1814, for the erection of an additional church, called Christ-church, which was consecrated in 1822: it is a handsome structure of white brick and Roche abbey stone, and cost upwards of £7000, part of which has been defrayed by subscription. By the same act the presentation was vested in subscribers of £100, and their survivors, till the number be reduced to eight, vacancies in which are to be filled up by the pew-holders, and these eight trustees, together with the vicar of Sculcoates, are to possess the patronage. The population of Sculcoates, less than a century ago, did not exceed one hundred, but the southern part of the parish, since the construction of its dock on the western bank of the river Hull, in 1774, has been extensively built upon, and now forms a large and populous part of the environs of Hull. The petty sessions for the division are held in a hall recently erected. This place is noticed in Domesday-book as one of the lordships granted to Ralph de Mortimer, a follower of the Conqueror.

SCULTHORPE, a parish in the hundred of GALLOW, county of NORFOLK, 2 miles (N. W.) from Fakenham, containing 466 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £16. Mrs. Jones was patroness in 1811. The church, dedicated to All Saints, was erected by Sir Robert Knollys, K. G., who, from a common soldier, rose to rank and eminence as a commander under Edward III., acquired an immense fortune, and, for his good services in subduing Wat Tyler's rebellion, received the freedom of the city of London. He died at the manor-house here in the 92nd year of his age, and was buried in the church of the Carmelites, Fleet-street, London.

SCUNTHORPE, a township in the parish of FRODINGHAM, eastern division of the wapentake of MANLEY, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $8\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. N. W.) from Glandford-Bridge, containing 210 inhabitants. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

SEA-BOROUGH, a parish in the hundred of CREWKERNE, county of SOMERSET, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. by W.) from Crewkerne, containing 92 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Taunton, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £6. 15. Sir James Mansfield, Bart. was patron in 1806.

SEABRIDGE, a township partly in the parish of SWINNERTON, but chiefly in that of STOKE upon TRENT, northern division of the hundred of PIREHILL, county of STAFFORD, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (S. by W.) from Newcastle under Lyne, containing 140 inhabitants.

SEABROOK, a joint hamlet with Horton, in the parish of IVINGHOE, hundred of COTTESLOE, county of BUCKINGHAM, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (W. N. W.) from Ivinghoe. The population is returned with Horton.

SEACOMB, a joint township with Poulton, in the parish of WALLAZEY, lower division of the hundred of WIRRAL, county palatine of CHESTER, $11\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. N. E.) from Great Neston. The population is returned with Poulton. There is a place of worship for Independents.

SEACOURT, a hamlet in the parish of WYTHAM, hundred of HORMER, county of BERKS, containing 29 inhabitants.

SEACROFT, a township in the parish of WHITKIRK, lower division of the wapentake of SKYRACK, West riding of the county of YORK, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. N. E.) from Leeds, containing 886 inhabitants. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

SEAFORD, a cinque-port, borough, and parish (formerly a market town), locally in the hundred of Flexborough, rape of Pevensey, county of SUSSEX, 42 miles (E. by S.) from Chichester, and $59\frac{1}{4}$ (S. S. E.) from London, containing 1047 inhabitants. This was formerly a considerable town, and had four churches and chapels, until burnt by the enemy; but it has greatly declined, being only resorted to for sea-bathing: it is defended by a small fort. Prawns of a large size and good flavour are caught here. The river Ouse, the æstuary of which formerly constituted its harbour, now empties itself into the sea at Newhaven, about three miles westward. The market, which was on Saturday, is disused: fairs are held on March 15th and July 25th. Seaford was originally a member of the port of Hastings, but was made a port of itself by charter of Henry VIII., who incorporated the inhabitants, under the style of "the bailiffs, jurats, and commonalty of the town, parish, and borough of Seaford:" the bailiff, and other officers, are chosen annually on the 29th of September; the jurats are twelve in number. The borough first sent barons to parliament in the 26th of Edward I., and continued to the 21st of Richard II., from which time a suspension took place until the reign of Edward IV., when the privilege was restored: the right of election was formerly exercised by the freemen only, in number about five; but, by a decision of the House of Commons in 1792, it is vested in the inhabitant housekeepers paying scot and lot: the bailiff is the returning officer. The living is a discharged vicarage, with that of Sutton annexed, in the archdeaconry of Lewes, and diocese of Chichester, rated in the king's books at £11. 15., and in the alternate patronage of the Prebendaries of Seaford and Sutton in the Cathedral Church of Chichester. The church, dedicated to St. Leonard, is in the decorated style of English architecture. A National school, in which about one hundred boys and fifty girls are instructed, is supported by the representatives of the borough. Seaford gives title of baron to the family of Ellis, conferred on the present lord by patent, dated July 15th, 1826.

SEAGRAVE, a parish in the eastern division of the hundred of GOSCOTE, county of LEICESTER, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. E. by E) from Mountsorrel, containing 424 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Leicester, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £19. 8. 11½., and in the patronage of the President and Fellows of Queen's College, Cambridge. The church is dedicated to All Saints.

SEAGRY (LOWER and UPPER), a parish in the hundred of MALMESBURY, county of WILTS, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. S. E.) from Malmesbury, containing 215 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Wilts, and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £7. 13. 1½., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Earl of Carnarvon. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

SEAHAM, a parish in the northern division of EASINGTON ward, county palatine of DURHAM, comprising the townships of Seaham, and Seaton with Slingley, and containing 198 inhabitants, of which number, 103 are in the township of Seaham, $4\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. by E.) from Sunderland. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Durham, rated in the king's books at £5. 0. 5., and in the patronage of A. J. C. Baker, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a small plain structure, principally in the Norman style.

SEAL, a parish in the hundred of CODSHEATH, lathe of SUTTON at HONE, county of KENT, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. E.) from Seven-Oaks, containing 1320 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the vicarage of Kemsing, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Rochester. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. A school for eight girls is endowed with certain lands, bequeathed by John Porter, in 1678, and Francis Bickerstaff, in 1731.

SEAL, a parish in the hundred of FARNHAM, county of SURREY, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by N.) from Farnham, containing, with the hamlet of Tongham, 364 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Surrey, and diocese of Winchester, endowed with £600 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Archdeacon of Surrey.

SEAL (NETHER and OVER), a parish in the western division of the hundred of GOSCOTE, county of LEICESTER, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. W. by W.) from Ashby de la Zouch, containing, exclusively of a portion of the hamlet of Donisthorpe which is in this parish, 1160 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Leicester, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £17. 8. 11½., and in the patronage of the Rev. William Gresley. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. This parish is in the honour of Tutbury, duchy of Lancaster, and within the jurisdiction of a court of pleas held at Tutbury every third Tuesday, for the recovery of debts under 40s.

SEAMER, a parish in the western division of the liberty of LANGBAURGH, North riding of the county of YORK, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. W. by W.) from Stokesley, containing 226 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Cleveland, and diocese of York, endowed with £600 royal bounty, and £200 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of R. G. Russell, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Martin. John Coulson, in 1679, bequeathed a rent-charge of £8 for the education of ten boys at the village of Newby. In the neighbourhood is a remarkable tumulus, and on the acclivity of a hill adjoining are vestiges of an ancient intrenchment, in the valley beneath which many human bones and warlike weapons have been discovered, conjectured to be relics of the great battle of Baden-hill, in which Prince Arthur overthrew the Saxons, in 492.

SEAMER, a parish in PICKERING lythe, North riding of the county of YORK, comprising the chapelry of East Ayton, and the townships of Irton and Seamer, and containing 1034 inhabitants, of which number, 596 are in the township of Seamer, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W. by S.) from Scarborough. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of the East riding, and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £18. 16. $5\frac{1}{2}$, and in the patronage of W. J. Denison, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. Martin, is a handsome structure, in the cathedral form. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. A noted fair is held annually on July 15th, and a market on the first Monday in every month, for cattle and sheep. Schools for children of both sexes, with a dwelling-house for the master, were built and liberally endowed by the lord of the manor, in 1814. An insurrection, headed by the parish clerk and two others, broke out here in the reign of Edward VI., in 1549, which had for its objects the restoration of the Roman Catholic religion, the abolition of monarchy, and the equalization of all ranks. The rebels, to the number of three thousand, after committing great excesses, laid down their arms upon being offered the king's pardon; but the ringleaders were taken and executed at York, in September of the same year.

SEARBY, a joint parish with Owmby, in the southern division of the wapentake of YARBOROUGH, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $4\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. W.) from Caistor, containing, with Owmby, 247 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, with the vicarage of Owmby annexed, in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £8. The church is dedicated to St. Nicholas.

SEASALTER (LIBERTY), a parish in the hundred of WHITSTABLE, lathe of ST. AUGUSTINE, county of KENT, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. W. by N.) from Canterbury, containing 654 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Canterbury, rated in the king's books at £11, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury. The church is dedicated to St. Alphage. Mrs. Frances Fagg, in 1794, bequeathed £800 three per cents. for the support of a school, built by subscription, in which seventeen children are educated. On the sea-shore is an extensive oyster bed, called the Pollard, belonging to the Dean and Chapter of Canterbury, who let it to a certain number of dredger-men, parishioners. Four annual fairs were held here, but they have been long discontinued.

SEASONCOTE, a parish in the upper division of the hundred of KIFTSGATE, county of GLOUCESTER, 2 miles (W. by S.) from Moreton in the Marsh, containing 86 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, united with the vicarage of Longborough, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Gloucester, rated in the king's books at £9. 12. 11., and endowed with £400 royal bounty.

SEATHWAITE, a chapelry in the parish of KIRKBY-IRELETH, hundred of LONSDALE, north of the sands, county palatine of LANCASTER, 8 miles (W. by N.) from Hawkeshead, containing 208 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Dean and Chapter of York, endowed with £400 private benefaction, and £600 royal bounty, and in the patronage of William Penny, Esq.

SEATON, a township in the parish of CAMMERTON, ALLERDALE ward below Darwent, county of CUMBERLAND, $1\frac{3}{4}$ mile (N. E.) from Workington, containing 620 inhabitants. Here are extensive collieries and iron-works, near which the Derwent is crossed by a stone bridge, opposite to Workington.

SEATON, a parish in the hundred of COLYTON, county of DEVON, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S.) from Colyton, containing, with the chapelry of Beer, 1745 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £17. 0. $7\frac{1}{2}$, and in the patronage of Lord Rolle. The church is dedicated to St. Gregory. There are places of worship for Wesleyan Methodists and Unitarians. Seaton is situated on the sea coast, and is supposed to have been the Moridunum of Antoninus, and a landing-place of the Danes. Leland speaks of it as having "a notable haven," and of the unsuccessful attempts of the inhabitants "to make a waul within the haven." In 1820, commissioners were appointed, under an act of parliament, to improve the harbour, and the lord of the manor was authorised to take dues. The town has been much improved of late years, and is now a well-frequented bathing-place: a pleasure fair is held on Whit-Tuesday.

SEATON, a joint township with Slingley, in the parish of SEAHAM, northern division of EASINGTON ward, county palatine of DURHAM, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. by W.) from Sunderland, containing, with Slingley, 95 inhabitants.

SEATON, a parish in the hundred of WRANDIKE, county of RUTLAND, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by S.) from Uppingham, containing, with the hamlet of Thorpe by Water, 457 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Northampton, and diocese of Peterborough, rated in the king's books at £20. 7. 6., and in the patronage of the Hon. J. Monckton. The church is dedicated to All Saints.

SEATON, a township in the parish of SIGGLES-THORNE, northern division of the wapentake of HOLDERNESS, East riding of the county of YORK, $10\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E. by E.) from Beverley, containing 301 inhabitants. A place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists was erected by subscription, in 1810.

SEATON (NORTH), a township in the parish of WOODHORN, eastern division of MORPETH ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, $6\frac{3}{4}$ miles (E.) from Morpeth, containing 159 inhabitants.

SEATON-CAREW, a township in the parish of STRANTON, north-eastern division of STOCKTON ward county palatine of DURHAM, $10\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E. by N.) from Stockton upon Tees, containing 312 inhabitants. Here was a chapel, dedicated to St. Thomas à Becket, but it has been long since demolished, there being no traces of it. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. The village is considerably resorted to during the bathing-season, and contains respectable public, as well as private, accommodation for the visitors. The beach is smooth, and the sands firm and level to an extent of several miles, so that the convenience for bathing machines is exceedingly good. A priory of Gilbertine canons, subordinate to that of Sempringham, founded here by Alan de Wilton, was valued, at the dissolution, at £11. 2. 8. per annum.

SEATON-DELAVAL, a township in the parish of EARSdon, eastern division of CASTLE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, $6\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. by W.) from North Shields, containing 240 inhabitants. Here are the ruins of one of the most magnificent mansions in the north of England; it was erected from a design by Sir John Vanburgh, in 1707, by Admiral Delaval, and was destroyed by fire on January 3rd, 1822. Near it is the site of the ancient castle of Seaton-Delaval, of which little remains, except the chapel, which is a fine specimen of Norman architecture, containing monuments of a Knight Templar and his lady, and ornamented with numerous escutcheons, banners, and pieces of ancient armour: divine service is still performed in it every Sunday. At a short distance from the chapel is a handsome mausoleum, erected by the late Lord Delaval, in memory of his son, the interior of which is fitted up as a chapel, having arched catacombs underneath for the reception of the dead.

SEATON-HOUSE, a joint township with Boulmer, in the parish of LONG HOUGHTON, southern division of BAMBROUGH ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, 6 miles (E.) from Alnwick. The population is returned with Boulmer.

SEATON-ROSS, a parish in the Holme-Beacon division of the wapentake of HARTHILL, East riding of the county of YORK, $7\frac{1}{4}$ miles (W. by S.) from Market-Weighton, containing 477 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of the East riding, and diocese of York, endowed with £1200 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of W. C. Maxwell, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Edmund. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

SEATON-SLUICE, or HARTLEY-PANS, a small sea-port in the township of HARTLEY, parish of EARSdon, eastern division of CASTLE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, 6 miles (N.) from North Shields. The population is returned with Hartley. It is situated at the mouth of a rivulet, called Seaton-burn, where the late Sir Ralph Delaval, with great difficulty and expense, formed a new haven, and to prevent its being choked with sand, constructed an immense sluice upon the brook, with flood-gates to retain the water, from the flow of the tide till the ebb, when a sufficient body is collected every twelve hours, to cleanse the bed of the harbour, and remove from it every impediment to its navigation. Considerable improvements upon the original plan were subsequently made by Lord Delaval, who also formed a second entrance, which is crossed by a draw-bridge nine hundred feet in length. From twelve to fifteen vessels, of three hundred tons' burden each, can now ride in safety at this port, and sail in or out with any wind. Coal is shipped here for the London and other markets, in very large quantities, from the neighbouring collieries. There are extensive glass-bottle works, malt-kilns, and a brewery, and there were formerly considerable manufactories for salt and copperas. The Presbyterians have a place of worship here. A blockhouse and battery were erected during the late war, for the defence of the port, which is subordinate to that of Newcastle. A whale, upwards of fifty feet long, was taken on this coast, in 1766.

SEAVINGTON (ST. MARY), a parish in the southern division of the hundred of PETHERTON, county of SOMERSET, 3 miles (E.) from Ilminster, containing 319 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Taunton, and diocese of Bath and Wells, endowed with £600 royal bounty, and £200 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of Earl Poulett.

SEAVINGTON (ST. MICHAEL), a parish in the southern division of the hundred of PETHERTON, county of SOMERSET, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E.) from Ilminster, containing, with the chapelry of Dinnington, 420 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Taunton, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £6. 15., and in the patronage of Earl Poulett.

SEBERGHAM, a parish in the ward and county of CUMBERLAND, comprising the townships of Church, or Low Sebergham, and Castle, or High, Sebergham, and containing 903 inhabitants, of which number, 338 are in the township of Church-Sebergham, $8\frac{3}{4}$ miles, and 565 in that of Castle-Sebergham, $6\frac{1}{4}$ miles, (S. E. by E.) from Wigton. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Carlisle, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Carlisle. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, occupies the site of an ancient hermitage; it was repaired in 1774, and again in 1785. In this parish a considerable quantity of limestone is quarried and burned; there are also extensive mines of coal, and a powerful mineral spring. Near the church, the river Caldew is crossed by a bridge, erected in 1689, by Alexander Denton, one of the justices of the common pleas; and about a mile below it is Bell bridge, a structure of one arch, built in 1772, near the site of an ancient one demolished by a great flood in 1771.

SECKINGTON, a parish in the Tamworth division of the hundred of HEMLINGFORD, county of WARWICK, $3\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. E. by E.) from Tamworth, containing 126 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Coventry, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, rated in the king's books at £5. 16. 0½., and in the patronage of Sir Francis Burdett, Bart. The church is dedicated to All Saints: near it are vestiges of a large ancient encampment. In the neighbourhood is the site of a small priory, founded by William Burdett, in the reign of Henry II.

SEDBERGH, a parish in the western division of the wapentake of STAINCLIFFE and EWCROSS, West riding of the county of YORK, comprising the market town of Sedbergh, and the chapelries of Dent and Garsdale, and containing 4483 inhabitants, of which number, 2022 are in the town of Sedbergh, 77 miles (W. N. W.) from York, and 260 (N. W. by N.) from London. This town is situated in a secluded vale, in a mountainous district, and contains two cotton mills, in which several persons are employed. Coal is obtained from a mine rather more than two miles distant, near which the river Rother passes. The market, now almost disused, is on Wednesday; and fairs are held on March 20th, the Wednesday in Whitsun-week, and October 29th, chiefly for live stock. A constable is annually elected by the ley payers, and a court for the recovery of small debts has been recently instituted. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Richmond, and diocese of Chester, rated in the king's books at £12. 8., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Master and Fellows of Trinity College, Cambridge. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew. There are places of worship for the Society of Friends, Independents, and Wesleyan Methodists. The free grammar school was founded and endowed by Roger Lupton, D.D., Provost of Eton College, in the 5th of Edward VI., for all boys duly qualified to enter upon a course of classical instruction, without restriction: by his Majesty's letters patent it was ordained, that there should be one master and one usher, and twelve of the inhabitants of Sedbergh were incorporated governors: his Majesty likewise endowed the school with the rectory and church of Weston, and various messuages and lands, now producing a rental of £500, which sum is paid to the master, who allows the usher £100 per annum: the appointment to the mastership is vested in the Master and Fellows of St. John's College, Cambridge, who are visitors: from thirty to forty boys are educated. Exhibitions to two fellowships and eight scholarships in St. John's College, Cambridge, were founded in favour of this school, by Dr. Lupton; one fellowship and two scholarships, in the same college, were also founded for boys from this school, by Henry Hebblethwayte, citizen and draper of London; and a further exhibition for one of the scholars, being a native of Sedbergh, to either of the Universities, is given by the governors, as the appropriation of three bequests at their disposal. A small annual sum, the interest of various bequests, is applied towards the instruction of poor children. At Howgill, in this parish, is a school, erected near the chapel, and endowed with land by John Robinson, the income of which is £26 per annum: about sixty children are instructed.

SEDGEBERROW, a parish in the middle division of the hundred of OSWALDSLOW, county of WORCESTER, 4 miles (S. S. W.) from Evesham, containing 250 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Worcester, rated in the king's books at £13. 15. 7½., and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Worcester. The church has a small octagonal tower, surmounted by a spire, and exhibits portions in the decorated and later English styles of architecture.

SEDGEBROOK, a parish in the wapentake of WINNIBRIGGS and THREE, parts of KESTIVEN, county of LINCOLN, 4 miles (W. N. W.) from Grantham, containing 230 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in mediocres, one rated in the king's books at £7. 18. 9., and the other at £7. 4. 7., and both in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. Lawrence. Lady Margaret Thorold, in 1718, gave land, directing that £15 of the income arising therefrom should be applied for teaching fifteen poor children, £5 for apprenticing one boy, and £5 to the poor.

SEDGEFIELD, a parish in the north-eastern division of STOCKTON ward, county palatine of DURHAM, comprising the market town of Sedgefield, and the townships of Bradbury, Butterwick, Embleton, Fishburn, Foxton with Shotton, and Mordon, and containing 1955 inhabitants, of which number, 1268 are in the town of Sedgefield, 11 miles (S. E. by S.) from Durham, and 255½ (N. by W.) from London. The town, which rather presents the appearance of a large genteel village, occupying a gentle eminence commanding an extensive prospect to the south and south-east, is remarkable for the peculiar salubrity of its atmosphere, and the longevity of its inhabitants, attributable, in a great degree, to the openness of its situation, and the fine gravel soil on which it stands: the inhabitants are supplied with water from springs. The centre of the town forms a spacious square, where the market is held, on Fridays, which was granted in 1312, by the charter of Bishop Kellaw, and is well supplied with provisions: a large fair, provincially called the Month-day, is held on the first Friday in every month, for the sale of hogs, and there are fairs for cattle on the first Fridays in April and October. A parochial lending library, on the plan of those recommended by the Society for the promotion of Christian Knowledge, has been established, under the patronage of Lord Barrington. This parish is a member of the great episcopal manor at Middleham, and is divided into seven constaberies; that of Sedgefield includes the town itself, Hardwick, and Layton. A halmote court is held here, once in eighteen months, in rotation with those at Cornforth and Middleham, for the recovery of debts under 40s., at which the bishop's steward presides. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Durham, rated in the king's books at £73. 18. 1½., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Durham. The church, which is dedicated to St. Edmund, is a handsome cruciform structure, combining the early and later styles of English architecture; the windows are principally in the decorated style: the nave is separated from the aisles by a row of pillars supporting pointed arches, and from the chancel by an oak screen of rich tabernacle-work; in the latter are some canopied stalls: the font is an octagonal structure of black marble; the tower, at the west end, is embattled and pinnacled; and the interior of the church contains several brasses and mural tablets. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. A free grammar school, of unknown foundation and endowment, has an income of about £50 per annum, for which six poor children are instructed; six are also educated and clothed from a benefaction of £400 three per cent. Bank Annuities, by Richard Wright, Esq., in the year 1790: the master is appointed by the rector and the vestry. In 1782, John Lowther, Esq. bequeathed £600 three per cent. Bank Annuities, for the instruction and clothing of six poor girls. An almshouse for five poor men, and five poor women, inhabitants of this town, was founded and endowed with £44 per annum, arising from land, by Thomas Cooper: additional benefactions were made by William Wrightson, Esq. and Thomas Foster, the latter of whom bequeathed the interest of £2000 for the benefit of the inmates. Upwards of ninety-one acres of land, under the superintendence of eight trustees, belong to a charity, founded by Dame Eliz. Frevill, in 1630, for apprenticing poor children, and for purposes of general benevolence; in addition to which there are several minor charitable benefactions. Mrs. Elizabeth Elstob, the celebrated Saxon scholar, who died in 1756, was a native of Elstob, in this parish, of which the pious and erudite Bishop Lowth was rector, prior to his elevation to the see of London.

SEDFORD, a parish in the hundred of SMITHDON, county of NORFOLK, $8\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. E.) from Castle-Rising, containing 534 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £8. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

SEDGHILL, a parish in the hundred of DUNWORTH, county of WILTS, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W.) from Hindon, containing 213 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the rectory of Berwick St. Leonard, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Salisbury, and in the patronage of the Rev. C. H. Grove. The church is dedicated to St. Catherine.

SEDGLEY, a parish in the northern division of the hundred of SEISDON, county of STAFFORD, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S.) from Wolverhampton, containing 17,195 inhabitants. This populous parish is situated in the midst of a country abounding with coal, iron-stone, and limestone, the working of which furnishes employment to the greater part of the inhabitants, who have increased nearly three thousand in number since 1821. The iron is manufactured in a variety of ways, both into pig-iron in furnaces, and into wrought or malleable in mills, which latter is again converted into bars, rods, hoops, hurdles, nails, coffee-mills, locks, &c. A great extent of the Essington and Wyrley canal intersects the parish in various directions, affording a ready transit for these articles. A court leet is annually held, at which a constable is chosen. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Stafford, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, rated in the king's books at £5. 12. 8 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Earl of Dudley. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a beautiful edifice in the purest style of English architecture, with side aisles, vaulted nave, and clerestory windows: it was completed in 1829, at the sole expense of the Earl of Dudley, and will contain one thousand three hundred persons. In the hamlet of Lower Gornall, in this parish, is a chapel dedicated to St. James, which was erected about nine years ago, and in which are five hundred free sittings, the Incorporated Society for the building and enlargement of churches having contributed £500 towards defraying the expense: the living is a perpetual curacy, endowed with £400 private benefaction, £600 royal bounty, and £200 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Earl of Dudley. A chapel of ease has also been recently erected at Coseley, calculated to contain nearly two thousand persons, with one thousand one hundred and fifty-six free sittings, at an expense of £10,536, partly arising from subscriptions in the parish, and from a grant by the parliamentary commissioners. There are two places of worship belonging to the Particular Baptists, three to Wesleyan Methodists, one to Primitive Methodists, and one each to Independents and Presbyterians; the Roman Catholics have also two chapels. Here is a small bequest by Samuel Timmins, for teaching poor children; and an excellent National school, for two hundred boys and two hundred girls, has been recently erected by the Earl of Dudley: there is also one at Gornall, for one hundred boys and one hundred girls, both supported by voluntary contributions. The emeraldite, and the singular fossil called the "Dudley locust," are found chiefly in this parish, the latter only in an isolated limestone rock, termed the Wren's Nest Hill.

SEDGWICK, a township in the parish of HEVERSHAM, KENDAL ward, county of WESTMORLAND, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S.) from Kendal, containing 184 inhabitants. There is a place of worship for Independents. A mill for the manufacture of gunpowder was established here about 1770. The river Kent and the Lancaster canal pass through the township. Here is a free school with a trifling endowment.

SEDLSCOMB, a parish in the hundred of STAPLE, rape of HASTINGS, county of SUSSEX, 3 miles (N. E.) from Battle, containing 667 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Lewes, and diocese of Chichester, rated in the king's books at £9. 4. 2., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is principally in the early style of English architecture. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. The Rev. George Barnsley, in 1723, bequeathed £150 for the education of children, which sum, added to subsequent gifts, was laid out in the purchase of an estate now let for £20 per annum, for which twenty boys are instructed. Here was formerly a preceptory of Knights Templars.

SEEND, a chapelry in the parish and hundred of MELKSHAM, county of WILTS, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E. by E.) from Melksham, containing 1011 inhabitants. The chapel is dedicated to the Holy Cross. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. The Kennet and Avon canal passes through the chapelry.

SEER-GREEN, a hamlet in the parish of FARNHAM-ROYAL, hundred of BURNHAM, county of BUCKINGHAM, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. N. E.) from Beaconsfield, containing 264 inhabitants.

SEETHING, a parish in the hundred of LONDON, county of NORFOLK, $5\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. by W.) from Bungay, containing 386 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, and in the patronage of the Mayor and Corporation of Norwich. The church is dedicated to St. Margaret.

SEIGHFORD, a parish in the southern division of the hundred of PIREHILL, county of STAFFORD, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (W. N. W.) from Stafford, containing, with the townships of Aston and Doxey, 851 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Stafford, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, rated in the king's books at £6, and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. Chad. Six children are instructed for about £3. 3. a year, arising from a bequest by Dame Dorothy Bridgman.

SEISDON, a township in the parish of TRYSULL, southern division of the hundred of SEISDON, county of STAFFORD, 6 miles (W. S. W.) from Wolverhampton. The population is returned with the parish.

SELATTYN, a parish in the hundred of OSWESTRY, county of SALOP, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. N. W.) from Oswestry, containing 959 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of St. Asaph, rated in the king's books at £12. 9. 9½, and in the patronage of William Lloyd, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. James Wylding, one of the assembly of divines during the Interregnum, and the celebrated Dr. Henry Sacheverell, were rectors here. Offa's Dyke forms part of the western boundary of the parish, wherein formerly stood the ancient "Castle Brogyntyn," of which there are now scarcely any remains. A National school has been recently established.

SELBORNE, a parish in the hundred of SELBORNE, Alton (North) division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 4½ miles (S. E. by S.) from Alton, containing 893 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Winchester, rated in the king's books at £8. 2. 1., and in the patronage of the President and Fellows of Magdalene College, Oxford. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is principally in the early style of English architecture: the altar-piece is ornamented with a fine painting, by Albert Durer, representing the offerings of the Magi, presented by the late Rev. Gilbert White, author of "The History of Selborne," and other works on Natural History, who was born here in 1720, where he chiefly resided. In the time of the Saxons Selborne was held in royal demesne. A fair is held at the village on May 29th. Gilbert White, in 1719, bequeathed £100, now producing an annual income of £8. 10., for teaching the poor children of the parish to read. A priory of Black canons, in honour of the Blessed Virgin Mary, was founded here, in 1233, by Peter de Rupibus, Bishop of Winchester; it was subsequently suppressed, and became part of the endowment of Magdalene College, Oxford. At Temple, in this parish, resided Sir Adam Gurdon, the celebrated freebooter in the time of Henry III.

SELBY, a market town and parish, partly within the liberty of St. Peter of York, East riding, and partly in the lower division of the wapentake of BARKSTONE-ASH, West riding, of the county of York, 14 miles (S. by E.) from York, and 177 (N. by W.) from London, containing 4097 inhabitants. The Saxon name of this place was Salebeia, whence its present appellation is obviously derived. The first remarkable event in its history is the foundation of a Benedictine abbey by William the Conqueror, in 1070, which was dedicated to St. German, and, in process of time, acquired such extensive possessions and immunities, as to render it equal in rank to the church of St. Peter at York; the superior of this establishment, with that of St. Mary's, in that city, being the only mitred abbots north of the Trent: at the dissolution the revenue was valued at £819. 2. 6.: of this magnificent fabric the church is the only part remaining. In the early period of the great civil war, the town appears to have been held for the parliament, and, although subsequently taken by the royalists, it was eventually recaptured by Sir Thomas Fairfax, when the majority of the king's party were made prisoners, with several horses, pieces of ordnance, and a large quantity of ammunition.

The town is situated on the river Ouse, on the great road from London to Edinburgh: the streets are well paved, and lighted with oil, and the houses in general well built. A new street has been formed, called the Crescent, which consists of excellent and commodious houses, and adds considerably to the improved appearance of the town. The fertility of the surrounding district has been greatly increased by a process of irrigation, whereby the water of the rivers Ouse and Aire is detained upon the land until a sediment has been deposited, which forms excellent manure, and has contributed most materially to the increased value of the soil. A large quantity of weld, for the use of dyers, is produced in the vicinity, and formerly flax was cultivated and prepared to a considerable extent; this branch of trade, however, has greatly declined, owing to the importation of that article from France and the Netherlands, but flax-spinning is still carried on to some extent; there are also some iron-foundries, and manufactories for sail-cloth and leather. The general trade of the town has been much improved by means of a canal connecting the navigable rivers Ouse and Aire, thus opening a more direct communication with Leeds and the West riding of Yorkshire, so that the greater quantity of the goods sent to that district is disembarked here. A bridge of timber across the Ouse was opened in 1795, and is remarkable for the facility with which it can be turned round, though weighing seventy tons, being opened and closed within the space of a minute. A branch custom-house has been recently established, whereby vessels are enabled to clear out without touching at the port of Hull. The chief article exported is stone, which is sent coastwise: ships of one hundred and fifty to two hundred tons' burden navigate to Selby; steam-boats pass daily to and from Hull, and there are daily communications with London, and every port on the coast: here is a ship-yard, in which vessels of considerable burden are built. It is in contemplation to construct a railway from Selby to Leeds, which, if effected, will materially promote the trading interests of the town. The market is on Monday, and fairs are held on Easter-Tuesday, Monday after June 22nd, and on Michaelmas-day, for cattle, horses, cloth, &c.: in the centre of the market-place is a handsome cross, in the ancient style of English architecture. A petty session for the wapentake of Barkstone-Ash is held every alternate Monday; and courts leet and baron twice a year, by the lord of the manor, the Hon. E. R. Petre, who gave the site for the erection of a town hall, which was built in 1825, at an expense of £800, raised by subscription; it is a neat edifice of brick, enclosed with an iron railing.

The living is a perpetual curacy, in the jurisdiction of the peculiar court of Selby, endowed with £800 royal bounty, and £1600 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Hon. E. R. Petre. The church, formerly conventual, and belonging to the abbey, is dedicated to St. Mary and St. German, and was made parochial by letters patent of James I., dated March 20th, 1618. The ancient monastery stood on the west side of the river Ouse, and the principal buildings were on the west and south side of the church; the barn and granary are yet remaining, but the gateway was taken down about thirty years ago; over it was the abbot's court-house, with two rooms on the sides for the jury and the witnesses; on one side was the porter's lodge, and on the other a room in which to serve the poor. The appearance of this venerable pile is strikingly impressive: the magnificence, yet comparative simplicity, of the west front, render it deserving of particular notice, as its proportions and decorations merit remark from their singularity and elegance. The entrance is by a large and richly-ornamented Norman doorway, supported by six columns, with simply ornamented capitals. The triple arches above the doorway are in the English style, and the decorations partake in character with many found on the north and west doorways, and internal parts of the church. The centre arch forms the west window, being considerably larger than those at the sides, and filled with tracery. The walls of the nave and north transept are Norman, though few exterior arches of that character now remain, being mostly replaced by windows, &c., in the English style, at different periods. The most striking feature on this side is the porch, in that mixed style which prevailed soon after the formation of the pointed arch, having circular and pointed arches indiscriminately introduced, composed of the same mouldings. Under it is a Norman doorway less enriched, but more elegantly proportioned than that at the west end. With the simple and massive nave is contrasted the beautiful choir, a perfect and splendid example of the early style of English architecture. The proportions are extremely elegant, and the ornaments richly disposed, forming on the whole, perhaps, one of the most chaste and magnificent designs in the kingdom. The upper part of the centre tower fell down, destroying the south transept and the roof of the western part of the south aisle, on March 30th, 1690. The present tower was probably rebuilt about the year 1700, but in a style by no means corresponding with the original. The chapter-house is a beautiful building attached to the south side of the choir: the room used for that purpose, now the vestry-room, appears, from its style and simplicity, to be of an earlier date: over it is a room now used as a school. The internal architecture of the choir is magnificent, the ornaments being of the most splendid and elaborate kind; but the object which most attracts the attention is the east window; the proportion of all its parts, the beauty of its tracery, and the slender lofty mullions, supported by transoms, are unsurpassed. In the last century this window contained the Genealogy of Christ, but only a few scattered fragments now remain. The priests' stalls, of stone, are on the south side of the choir: there are several wooden stalls now remaining. The four Norman arches at the intersection of the great cross aisles are composed of a few mouldings and ornaments: the nave in this style is particularly grand and well-proportioned, and almost every pier and cluster of columns differ in design and decoration. Among the many striking architectural peculiarities which this magnificent edifice exhibits are two clusters of columns, or piers, supporting arches in the gallery, on the north side of the nave. The front is simple, with a beautiful and lofty cover of carved wood suspending from the second arch, on the north side of the nave. In the year 1826, a fine-toned organ was erected by private subscription, and adds considerably to the beauty of the choir. The only monuments of consequence are those of a knight and a lady, and two slabs, one for Abbot Selby, dated 1504, and the other for Abbot Berwich, 1526: this church has lately received four hundred and twenty-two additional sittings, of which three hundred and twenty-two are free, the Incorporated Society for the building and enlargement of churches and chapels having contributed £300 towards defraying the expense. Its appearance has been much improved by an addition to the churchyard, and the removal of some houses which obstructed the view of the west end, whereby the whole edifice has been thrown open to the market-place: these improvements were effected by the Hon. E. R. Petre, at an expense of not less than £2000: the whole has been since enclosed with an iron railing, three hundred and fifty yards in length, at the cost of £600, which was defrayed by the voluntary contribution of the parishioners. There are places of worship for the Society of Friends, Independents, Calvinistic and Wesleyan Methodists, Unitarians, and Roman Catholics. A Blue-coat school for boys is principally supported by voluntary contributions, augmented by a legacy of £100 from John Herbert, in 1775, which, with other donations, was vested in land; and £13 per annum is paid to the master by the trustees under the will of Joseph Rayner, who, in 1710, bequeathed £100 to be vested in land for the instruction of poor children: twenty boys are clothed and educated on this foundation, and £22. 10. per ann. is likewise paid for the instruction of thirteen poor boys and ten girls on the foundation of Leonard Chamberlain, in 1716, who also endowed an almshouse for seven poor widows. Henry I., the youngest son of William the Conqueror, was born here, during the visit of that monarch and his queen, the year after the foundation of the abbey. Thomas Johnson, a botanist, who published the first local catalogue of plants in the kingdom, besides an improved edition of Gerard's Herbal, and who fell in a skirmish with the parliamentarians, in 1644, was also a native of this place.

SELBY'S-FOREST, a township in the parish of KIRK-NEWTON, western division of GLENDALE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, containing 63 inhabitants. This extensive district consists chiefly of moors and mountains; the principal of the latter is the Cheviot, from which the celebrated range of hills so called derives its name; on its summit is a large lake occasionally frozen in the summer.

SELHAM, a parish in the hundred of EASEBOURNE, rape of CHICHESTER, county of SUSSEX, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W by S.) from Petworth, containing 80 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chichester, rated in the king's books at £4. 15. 11 $\frac{1}{2}$., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Principal and Fellows of Brasenose College, Oxford. The church, dedicated to St. James, is in the early style of English architecture. The Rother, or Arundel, navigation passes through the parish.

SELLACK, a parish in the upper division of the hundred of WORMELOW, county of HEREFORD, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. W.) from Ross, containing 301 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, with the perpetual curacy of King's Caple, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Bishop of Hereford, rated in the king's books at £16. 6. 8., and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Hereford. The church is dedicated to St. Tesiliaii.

SELLING, a parish in the hundred of BOUGHTON under BLEAN, lathe of SCRAY, county of KENT, 4 miles (S. S. E.) from Faversham, containing 573 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Canterbury, rated in the king's books at £6. 13. 4., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of Lord Sondes. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is partly in the early and partly in the later style of English architecture.

On Shottendon Hill is an ancient fortification of an irregular form, thought by some to be Roman, and by others Danish; but it seems probable that it was a work of the former, from the extensive Roman intrenchments still visible in a wood two miles to the south-east of it: there is also a tumulus in the neighbourhood.

SELLINGE, a parish in the hundred of STREET, lathe of SHEPWAY, county of KENT, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. W. by W.) from Hythe, containing 469 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Canterbury, rated in the king's books at £7. 4. 5., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, has an admixture of the various styles of English architecture. Five children are educated for £5 a year, bequeathed by Mr. Godfrey.

SELMESTON, a parish in the hundred of DANEHILL-HORSTED, rape of PEVENSEY, county of SUSSEX, $6\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E. S. E.) from Lewes, containing 208 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Lewes, and diocese of Chichester, rated in the king's books at £7. 5. 8., and in the patronage of the Prebendary of Heathfield in the Cathedral Church of Chichester. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is in the early style of English architecture.

SELSEY, a parish in the hundred of MANHOOD, rape of CHICHESTER, county of SUSSEX, 8 miles (S.) from Chichester, containing 766 inhabitants. The living comprises a discharged vicarage and a sinecure rectory united, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chichester, the former rated in the king's books at £8, and the latter at £11. 3. 4., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Chichester. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a stately pile, principally in the early style of English architecture: in the middle aisle are several coffin-shaped gravestones, with crosses and various other devices; and against the north wall of the chancel is a monument to John and Agatha Lewes, of the time of Henry VIII. This parish is peninsular, having Pagham harbour on the north, the English channel on the east and south, and, at high water, a narrow stream on the west, which is crossed by a ferry a little below Littleham, and also by a small bridge. Its name, according to Bede, is derived from the Saxon Seals-ey, signifying the island of Seals, for the resort of which animals it was anciently noted. The village, consisting principally of one street of neatly-built houses, occupies a dry gravelly site. A court baron is annually held here, and there is a fair for toys, &c., on July 14th. A school-house was erected for children of the parish by the late Rev. William Walker. Near the church is a circular intrenched mound, supposed to be an ancient British work. A monastery, dedicated to the Blessed Virgin, was founded here, about 681, by St. Wilfred, who, having previously converted many of the South Saxons to Christianity, and obtained of King Ædilwac the lands of this peninsula for its endowment, placed therein some religious who had been his companions in exile, of whom Eadbercht, abbot in 711, was consecrated first bishop of the South Saxons, and fixed his episcopal seat at this place, but Bishop Stigandus, in 1075, procured its translation to Chichester. Vestiges of this ancient little city are mentioned, in ancient records, as being plainly visible at ebb-tide, and at such times are said to be still discernible, with remains of its cathedral. Selsey gives the title of baron to the family of Peachy.

SELSIDE, a chapelry in that part of the parish of KENDAL which is in KENDAL ward, county of WEST-MORLAND, 4 miles (N. N. E.) from Kendal, containing, with the township of Whitwell, 291 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Richmond, and diocese of Chester, endowed with £400 private benefaction, and £400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Inhabitants. The chapel, dedicated to Christ, was built about 1720, by the inhabitants, on a site given by William Thornburgh, Esq., the descendant of a Roman Catholic family, proprietors of Selside Hall, in consideration of his being allowed to devote the original chapel, attached to the hall of his ancestors, to his own religion; it is now the kitchen of a farm-house. The free school, which was rebuilt by subscription in 1793, is supported from several sources, the principal being an estate left by John Kitching, in 1730, now producing an annual income of £50, for the education of all the poor children of the chapelry.

SELSTON, a parish in the northern division of the wapentake of BROXTOW, county of NOTTINGHAM, 9 miles (S. W.) from Mansfield, containing 1321 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Nottingham, and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £5, endowed with £800 royal bounty, and in the patronage of Sir W. Dixie, Bart. The church is dedicated to St. Helen. The Mansfield and Pinxton railway intersects the parish, in the neighbourhood of which are extensive collieries.

SELWORTHY, a parish in the hundred of CARHAMPTON, county of SOMERSET, 4 miles (W.) from Minehead, containing 483 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Taunton, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £12. 15. 5., and in the patronage of Sir T. D. Acland, Bart. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a neat edifice in the decorated style, with a plain embattled tower; the roofs of the nave, chancel, and south aisle, are each divided into small square compartments, enriched with figures curiously carved in wood, and supported by two rows of pillars and arches of a peculiarly light and graceful construction. There are remains of two chapels, one at Tivington, now used as a school-room, the other at West Lynch, converted into a barn. On a hill to the north-west of the church are vestiges of an ancient encampment, called Bury Castle; it is of an elliptical form, with a rampart of earth and stones, enclosing an area of about an acre and a half.

SEMER, a parish in the hundred of COSFORD, county of SUFFOLK, 2 miles (S. by E.) from Bildeston, containing 262 inhabitants, exclusively of 169 inmates of the house of industry for the hundred of Cosford, which is in this parish. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Sudbury, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £11. 7. 1., and in the patronage of the Rev. C. Cooke. The church is dedicated to All Saints. The river Brett runs through the parish. The house of industry, capable of holding five hundred persons, was erected in 1799, at the expense of the hundred.

SEMINGTON, a chapelry in the parish of STEEPLE-ASHTON, hundred of WHORWELSDOWN, county of WILTS, 3 miles (N. E. by E.) from Trowbridge, containing 244 inhabitants. The chapel is dedicated to St. George. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. Thomas Somner, in 1699, bequeathed land producing a trifling income for the education of two children.

SEMLEY, a parish forming a detached portion of the hundred of CHALK, county of WILTS, $4\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. by W.) from Hindon, containing 675 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £17. 2. 8½., and in the patronage of the Dean and Canons of Christ Church, Oxford. The church is dedicated to St. Leonard. There is a place of worship for Baptists. Dr. William Thorn, a celebrated divine and Hebrew scholar, was born here, towards the close of the sixteenth century.

SEMPERINGHAM, a parish in the wapentake of AVELAND, parts of KESTIVEN, county of LINCOLN, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E.S.E.) from Falkingham, containing, with the chapelries of Birthorpe and Pointon, 462 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £2. 15. 8., endowed with £400 royal bounty, and £200 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Crown. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, appears to have been originally a larger structure, and is principally in the Norman style, with a plain tower of later date, crowned with eight rich pinnacles. Gilbert de Sempringham, rector of this parish, and founder of the Gilbertine, or Sempringham, order, erected here, about 1139, a priory in honour of the Blessed Virgin Mary, for nuns and canons, whose revenue, at the dissolution, was valued at £359. 19. 7.: it was the superior establishment of the Sempringham order, where their general chapters were held: the buildings stood a little to the northward of the church, where the site only is discernible, being surrounded by a moat.

SEND, a parish in the second division of the hundred of WOKING, county of SURREY, 3 miles (S.W. by W.) from Ripley, containing, with the chapelry of Ripley, 1283 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Surrey, and diocese of Winchester, rated in the king's books at £8. 18. 1½., and in the patronage of Earl Onslow. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is principally in the early style of English architecture. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. A church and priory of Black canons, in honour of the Blessed Virgin Mary and St. Thomas à Becket, was founded, in the time of Richard I., at Newark, in this parish, by Ruald de Calva, and Beatrix, his wife, which at the dissolution possessed a revenue of £294. 18. 4.. The Wey and Arun canal passes through the parish.

SENNEN, a parish in the hundred of PENWITH, county of CORNWALL, $8\frac{1}{4}$ miles (W.S.W.) from Penzance, containing 637 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the jurisdiction of the royal peculiar court of St. Burian, and in the patronage of the King, as Prince of Wales. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. In this parish are, the Land's End, which, according to Dr. Berger, is three hundred and ninety-one feet above the level of the sea; Cape Cornwall; and Whitsand bay: it was in this bay that King Stephen landed, on his first arrival in England; also King John, on his return from the conquest of Ireland; and Perkin Warbeck, in the reign of Henry VIII.: near it are the site of an ancient castle called Castle-Mean, and the remains of a chapel. On one of the rocks, called the Longships, off this part of the coast, is a lighthouse, constructed, in 1797, under the direction of the Master and Wardens of the Trinity House.

SEPHTON, a parish in the hundred of WEST DERBY, county palatine of LANCASTER, comprising the chapelry of Great Crosby, and the townships of Aintree, Little Crosby, Ince-Blundell, Litherland, Lunt, Nether-ton, Orrell with Ford, Sephton, and Thornton, and containing 3433 inhabitants, of which number, 389 are in the township of Sephton, 7 miles (N.) from Liverpool. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chester, rated in the king's books at £30. 1. 8., and in the patronage of the Rev. R. R. Rothwell. The church, dedicated to St. Helen, was rebuilt in the reign of Henry VIII., by the Rev. Anthony Molyneux, a distinguished preacher, then rector: it is principally in the later style of English architecture, with a lofty spire; the interior is remarkably elegant, the chancel in particular, which is separated from the nave by a magnificent screen, and contains sixteen richly-sculptured stalls, with numerous monuments of the family of Molyneux, of whom Sir William fought and performed signal acts of valour under the banner of the Black Prince, at Navaret, as did Sir Richard in the battle of Agincourt, and another Sir William in that of Flodden Field. This place confers the title of earl on their descendants.

SERLBY, a township in the parish of HAUGHTON, Hatfield division of the wapentake of BASSETLAW, county of NOTTINGHAM, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S.S.W.) from Bawtry. The population is returned with the parish. Here was formerly a chapel of ease to the vicarage of Harworth, which has long been in ruins.

SESSAY, a parish in the wapentake of ALLERTON-SHIRE, North riding of the county of YORK, comprising the townships of Hutton-Sessay and Sessay, and containing 493 inhabitants, of which number, 364 are in the township of Sessay, $6\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N.W. by W.) from Easingwold. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Cleveland, and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £17. 0. 2½., and in the patronage of Lord Viscount Downe. The church is dedicated to St. Cuthbert.

SETCHEY, a parish in the Lynn division of the hundred of FREEBRIDGE, county of NORFOLK, 5 miles (S.) from Lynn-Regis, containing 94 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, annexed to that of North Runcton, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Norwich.

SETMURTHEY, a chapelry in the parish of BRIGHAM, ALLERDALE ward above Darwent, county of CUMBERLAND, 4 miles (E.N.E.) from Cockermouth, containing 188 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Richmond, and diocese of Chester, endowed with £800 royal bounty, and £400 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Earl of Lonsdale. A school-house was built by subscription among the inhabitants, in 1795, but it is not endowed.

SETTLE, a market town in the parish of GIGGLESWICK, western division of the wapentake of STAINCLIFFE and EWCROSS, West riding of the county of YORK, 59 miles (W. by N.) from York, and 234 (N.W. by N.) from London, containing 1508 inhabitants. The name of this town is derived from the Saxon word Setl, a seat: its situation is singular and picturesque, at the base of an almost perpendicular limestone rock, which rises to the height of two hundred feet; it is neat and well built, the houses being chiefly of stone: the streets are partially paved, and the inhabitants are well supplied with water from numerous springs and wells. There is a subscription library and news-room. The surrounding vale consists of rich pastures, and is enclosed on each side by a long range of craggy mountains, including the lofty elevations of Pendle hill on the south, of Pennigant on the north, and Ingleborough on the north-west. Considerable business is done in the cotton trade, and there are several roperies and a paper manufactory. The market is on Tuesday: fairs are held on April 26th, Whit-Tuesday, August 18th and the two following days, and Tuesday after October 27th; in addition to which there are fairs every alternate Tuesday from Easter to Whitsuntide, for lean cattle, and every second Monday in the year for fat cattle. A constable is appointed annually at a court baron of the lord of the manor, which is always held once, and sometimes twice, a year. There are places of worship for Independents and Wesleyan Methodists. A National school is supported by voluntary contributions.

SETTRINGTON, a parish in the wapentake of BUCKROSE, East riding of the county of YORK, comprising the townships of Scoggleshope and Settrington, and containing 757 inhabitants, of which number, 535 are in the township of Settrington, 4 miles (E. S. E.) from New Malton. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of the East riding, and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £42. 12. 6., and in the patronage of the Trustees of the late Earl of Bridgewater. The church is dedicated to All Saints.

SEVENHAMPTON, a parish in the hundred of BRADLEY, county of GLOUCESTER, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S.) from Winchcombe, containing 386 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Gloucester, endowed with £200 private benefaction, £400 royal bounty, and £200 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of William Morris and John Hinckman, Esqrs. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew.

SEVENHAMPTON, a chapelry in the parish of HIGHWORTH, hundred of HIGHWORTH, CRICKLADE, and STAPLE, county of WILTS, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (S. E. by S.) from Highworth, containing 242 inhabitants. The chapel is dedicated to St. Andrew: the chapelry is within the peculiar jurisdiction of the Prebendary of Highworth in the Cathedral Church of Salisbury.

SEVEN-OAKS, a township in that part of the parish of GREAT BUDWORTH which is in the hundred of BUCKLOW, county palatine of CHESTER, 4 miles (N. W. by N.) from Northwich, containing 141 inhabitants.

SEVEN-OAKS, a market town and parish in the hundred of CODSHEATH, lathe of SUTTON at HONE, county of KENT, containing, with the chapelry of Riverhead, and the liberty of Weald, 3942 inhabitants, of which number, 2114 are in the town, $17\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W.) from Maidstone, and 24 (S. E. by S.) from London. This place, which in the Textus Roffensis is written Seovan Acca, is supposed to have derived its name from seven large oaks which stood upon the eminence on which the town is built: the period of its origin is uncertain, and the only historical event connected with it is the defeat and death of Sir Humphry Stafford, by Jack Cade and his followers, when sent to oppose the rebels by Henry VI., in 1450. The manor, formerly an appendage to Otford, and as such belonging to the see of Canterbury, was conveyed, about the time of the dissolution of the monastic establishments, by Archbishop Cranmer to Henry VIII., and it subsequently became the property of the Dukes of Dorset. The town is situated on the ridge of hills which crosses the county, separating the Upland from the Weald, or southern part, near the river Darent, in a fertile and beautiful part of the country: it is well built, being divided into two principal streets, and is most respectably inhabited, being generally esteemed a very desirable place of residence. There are some silk-mills in the neighbourhood. The market is on Saturday, principally for corn; and there is also a market on the third Tuesday in every month, for cattle, which is very numerous attended: the fairs are on the 10th of July and the 12th of October, the latter being also a statute fair. The town is under the jurisdiction of the county magistrates: a bailiff, high constable, and several inferior officers, are chosen annually at a court leet, but their authority embraces little more than the superintendence of the charities. The petty sessions for the lathe of Sutton at Hone are held here; and a court of requests, for the recovery of debts not exceeding £5, the jurisdiction of which extends throughout the hundreds of Codsheath, Somerden, Westerham, and Wrotham, and the ville and liberty of Brasted. In the reign of Queen Elizabeth the assizes were held in the ancient market-house, near the middle of the High-street, and also two or three times at subsequent periods.

The living comprises a sinecure rectory and a vicarage, in the exempt deanery of Shoreham, which is within the peculiar jurisdiction of the Archbishop of Canterbury; the rectory is rated in the king's books at £13. 6. 8., and the vicarage at £15. 3. 1½., both being in the patronage of the Rev. Thomas Sackville Curteis. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a spacious and handsome edifice at the southern end of the town, and on so elevated a situation as to be a conspicuous object many miles around. A new church, or chapel, with a house for the minister, was erected a few years since in the Weald liberty, by Lord Amherst and Multon Lambard, Esq.; it will contain about two hundred persons, and is endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £2100 parliamentary grant: another, which will accommodate six hundred persons, is being erected by the same persons, in the Riverhead liberty: the right of presentation to both, after the decease of the founders, will be vested in the vicar. The Baptists have two places of worship, and the Supralapsarians and Wesleyan Methodists one each. The free grammar school was founded and endowed by Sir William Seven-oake, usually written Sennocke, in 1432; who, having been deserted by his parents, was brought up by some charitable persons, and apprenticed to a grocer in London, from which humble station he rose to be lord mayor of that city, and its representative in parliament, and left a portion of his wealth to found this school and an hospital for decayed elderly tradespeople. Queen Elizabeth granted a charter to the school, which places the management in the hands of the warden and assistants of the town, who are elected annually, and appoint the master; and it is in consequence called "The Free Grammar School of Queen Elizabeth." It has seven scholarships; four of £15 per annum each, founded by direction of the court of Chancery, in 1735, from the surplus of money received under this endowment in the hands of the trustees, in any college at either of the Universities; two of £12 a year each, founded by Lady Boswell, in Jesus' College, Cambridge; and one of £4 per annum, founded by Robert Holmden, paid by the Leather-sellers' Company, at either University: in default of scholars from this school, that at Tonbridge has the right to appoint to the three last-named scholarships. The income at present derived from Sir William Sennocke's endowment, including some additions to it, particularly that of Anthony Pope, in 1571, is between £700 and £800 per annum, of which sum, exclusively of repairs, &c., of the house, £50 a year is appropriated as a salary to the master, who has also a house and excellent premises: about seven boys are generally on the foundation. Lady Margaret Boswell founded a school, in 1675, for educating poor children of the town, with funds for apprenticing them: the present income is nearly £700 per annum, from which a considerable deduction is made for repairing the sea wall at Burnham Level, which, on an average of six years, amounted to upwards of £200 per annum: a new school-house was erected, in 1827, on the site of the former, at an expense of about £2000, defrayed by savings from the income, and nearly three hundred children are instructed on the National system: a premium of £12 is given, as an apprentice fee, with each boy on leaving the school, the number of whom averages about six yearly. In the almshouse founded by Sir William Sennocke are thirty-two persons, who are maintained; and sixteen out-pensioners receive an allowance from the endowment.

SEVINGTON, a parish in the hundred of CHART and LONGBRIDGE, lathe of SCRAY, county of KENT, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. E. by E.) from Ashford, containing 86 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Canterbury, rated in the king's books at £8. 14. 0 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Rev. Edward Norwood. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

SEWARDSTONE, a hamlet in the parish of WALTHAM-ABBEY, or HOLY CROSS, hundred of WALTHAM, county of ESSEX, $1\frac{1}{4}$ mile (S.) from Waltham-Abbey, containing 808 inhabitants. There is a heap of rubbish in the vicinity, called "the ruins of the old church." The Wesleyan Methodists have a place of worship here.

SEWERBY, a joint township with Marton, in the parish of BRIDLINGTON, wapentake of DICKERING, East riding of the county of YORK, $1\frac{3}{4}$ miles (E. N. E.) from Bridlington, containing, with Marton, 317 inhabitants.

SEWSTERN, a chapelry in the parish of BUCKMINSTER, hundred of FRAMLAND, county of LEICESTER, 9 miles (E. by N.) from Melton-Mowbray, containing 298 inhabitants. The chapel is dedicated to St. Michael. The Independents and Wesleyan Methodists have each a place of worship.

SEXHOW, a township in the parish of RUDBY in CLEVELAND, western division of the liberty of LANGBAURGH, North riding of the county of YORK, 5 miles

(S. W. by W.) from Stokesley, containing 38 inhabitants.

SHABBINGTON, a parish in the hundred of ASHENDON, county of BUCKINGHAM, 3 miles (W. by N.) from Thame, containing 241 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Buckingham, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £10. 9. 7., and in the patronage of the Rev. Philip Wroughton and Mary Anne his wife. The church is dedicated to St. Mary Magdalene.

SHACKERSTONE, a parish in the hundred of SPARKENHOE, county of LEICESTER, 5 miles (N. W.) from Market-Bosworth, containing, with the hamlet of Odestone, and exclusively of a portion of the township of Barton in the Beans, which is in this parish, 486 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Leicester, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £5. 2. 3 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of G. Greenaway, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. The Ashby de la Zouch canal passes through the parish.

SHADFORTH, a township in the parish of PIRTINGTON, southern division of EASINGTON ward, county palatine of DURHAM, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by S.) from Durham, containing 223 inhabitants. One of the towers of an ancient castellated mansion still remains.

SHADINGFIELD, a parish in the hundred of WANGFORD, county of SUFFOLK, $4\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S.) from Beccles, containing 189 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Suffolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £12, and in the patronage of Lord Braybrooke. The church is dedicated to St. John the Baptist.

SHADOXHURST, a parish in the hundred of BLACKBOURNE, lathe of SCRAY, county of KENT, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. W.) from Ashford, containing 244 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Canterbury, rated in the king's books at £7. 13., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul.

SHADWELL, a parish in the Tower division of the hundred of OSSULSTONE, county of MIDDLESEX, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (E. by S.) from London, containing 9557 inhabitants. This parish is situated on the northern bank of the river Thames, and comprises several streets, which are lighted with gas, and supplied with water from the East London water-works. It is within the jurisdiction of the New Police, the Thames Police Office, and a court of requests held in Whitechapel. There are some roperies in the parish. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Middlesex, and diocese of London, and in the patronage of the Bishop of London. The church, dedicated to St. Paul, is a handsome modern edifice, the old structure having, within the last few years, been taken down, and the present building erected upon its site, but within the original foundations. There are places of worship for Independents and Primitive and Wesleyan Methodists. A parochial school, in which forty-five boys, and thirty-five girls are instructed, is supported by subscription. The British Union school, instituted in 1816, in Shakspeare's walk, affords instruction to four hundred and sixty boys, and one hundred and eighty girls; it is conducted on the Lancasterian plan, and is supported by voluntary contributions. The Protestant dissenters' original charity school was founded in 1712, and is situated in Shakspeare's walk: since its institution, one thousand five hundred and ninety-two boys have been received and one thousand five hundred and twenty-two apprenticed: at present there are seventy boys, who are educated and clothed by subscription. A chapel is attached to the institution. Thirty-one almshouses for the widows of poor seamen, founded and endowed in 1713, by Captain James Cooke and Alice his wife, are situated in this parish.

SHADWELL, a township in the parish of THORNER, lower division of the wapentake of SKYRACK, West riding of the county of YORK, $5\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. N. E.) from Leeds, containing 197 inhabitants. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

SHAFTESBURY, or SHASTON, a borough and market town, having separate jurisdiction, though locally in the hundred of Monckton up Wimborne, Shaston (East) division of the county of DORSET, 28 miles (N. N. E.) from Dorchester, and 101 (W. S. W.) from London, on the great western road from London to Exeter, containing, with the liberty of Alcester, 2903 inhabitants. The origin and derivation of the name of this town have given rise to much conjecture, it being supposed by some to have had existence even prior to the birth of Christ, and to have been called Caer Palladur by the Britons: other periods have been assigned for its foundation, but that which appears to be most probable is the reign of King Alfred; in confirmation of which, Camden states, that in the time of William of Malmesbury was to be seen an old stone, brought from the ruins of a wall into the nuns' chapter-house, with an inscription purporting that King Alfred built this city (if so we may render "fecit") in 880, and in the eighth year of his reign. Its Saxon derivation from Sceaft, signifying the point of a hill, is supposed to be in allusion to the situation of the town. A Benedictine nunnery, founded here about the same period, has also been ascribed to various persons. Camden, following William of Malmesbury, attributes it to Elgiva, wife of Edmund, great grandson to King Alfred; whilst Leland and many other writers assert this latter monarch to be its founder, and that his daughter was the first abbess. To this abbey the remains of Edward the Martyr were removed after his murder at Corfe-Castle, and it appears to have been much resorted to by pilgrims, amongst whom was King Canute, who died here; and the extent of its endowments may be estimated from their value at its dissolution being £1166 per annum: the remains are very inconsiderable. The importance of the abbey naturally increased that of the town, which is reported at an early period to have contained ten parish churches. In the time of Edward the Confessor three mints were established here; and, according to a survey made shortly before the Norman Conquest, Shaftesbury contained one hundred and four houses, and three mint-masters. The town is situated on a high hill, with a gradual rise on the east and south-east, but more precipitous on the west and south-west, at the extremity of the county of Dorset, and bordering on that of Wilts: it commands extensive views over both counties. The streets, which are neither paved nor lighted, are narrow and irregular; the houses are principally built of stone, and the inhabitants are badly supplied with water: on the hill is a well of prodigious depth, from which water is drawn up by machinery worked by a horse; but the inhabitants are principally supplied from the adjoining parish of Motcomb. The manufacture of shirt buttons was formerly carried on to a considerable extent, but it has very much declined, and there is now but very little trade. The market is on Saturday, and well supplied with all kinds of commodities; and there are fairs on the Saturday before Palm-Sunday, 24th of June, and 23rd of November.

This is a very ancient borough, being described as such in Domesday-book, but it was not incorporated till the reign of Queen Elizabeth, who, according to Hutchins, granted its first charter, appointing a mayor, recorder, twelve aldermen, a bailiff, and common council; but no charter can be found prior to that granted by James I., in 1604, which, confirmed by one of Charles II., vests the government in a mayor and twelve capital burgesses, assisted by a recorder, who elect annually a town clerk, coroner, and two serjeants at mace. The mayor, the preceding mayor, and the recorder, are justices of the peace, and, with the capital burgesses, have power to hold a court of record every Saturday, for debts under £10, contracted within the borough; three of them form a quorum, the mayor or preceding, mayor, being one. A town hall, which is a handsome building, has been recently erected, at an expense of about £3000, defrayed by Earl Grosvenor. The borough first sent members to parliament in the 23rd of Edward I., and has since continued to do so without interruption: the right of election is vested in the inhabitants paying scot and lot, about four hundred in number: the mayor is the returning officer, and the prevailing influence is exercised by Earl Grosvenor.

The town comprises the three parishes of St. Peter, the Holy Trinity, and St. James, in the archdeaconry of Dorset, and diocese of Bristol. The living of St. Peter's is a discharged rectory, rated in the king's books at £11. 10. 2½, and united to that of the Holy Trinity, which union comprehends the ancient parishes of St. Lawrence and St. Martin: the living of Holy Trinity parish is rated in the king's books at £4. 1. 10½. St. Peter's church is of considerable antiquity, but contains many modern alterations: it possesses a curiously carved font, and a very ancient monument, supposed to have been removed from the abbey. That of the Holy Trinity is also ancient, and is said to have been enlarged by Sir Thomas Arundel, in the early part of the reign of Queen Elizabeth; it has a square embattled tower, ornamented with pinnacles; the churchyard is spacious, and adjoining it may still be seen the remains of the wall of the abbey. The living of St. James' (a portion of which parish, in the liberty of Alcester, is without the borough) is a rectory, rated in the king's books at £1. 11. 0½.; the church is a small and ancient fabric. The ancient parishes into which the town was formerly divided are now comprised in the above three, the livings of all which are in the patronage of the Earl of Shaftesbury. The Society of Friends, Independents, and Wesleyan Methodists, have each places of worship here. The free school, for educating, clothing, and apprenticing twenty poor boys, was founded and endowed by Mr. William Lush, in 1719. Spiller's spittal, for ten poor men, was founded and endowed by Sir Henry Spiller, in 1646; and an almshouse for sixteen poor women was founded by Matthew Chubb, and endowed by him and several other benefactors. On Castle Green, an eminence near the town, is a small mount, surrounded by a shallow ditch, which some have conjectured to be the site of a castle, but of which no mention can be found; by others it is supposed to have been a Roman intrenchment. The old city, which tradition reports to have existed prior to the time of Alfred, is said to have been near this mount. Shaftesbury was the birthplace of the Rev. James Granger, author of the Biographical History of England: it gives the title of earl to the family of Ashley Cooper.

SHAFTO (EAST), a township in that part of the parish of HARTBURN which is in the north-eastern division of TINDALE ward, county of NORTHUMBRLAND, 11¾ miles (W. S. W.) from Morpeth, containing 35 inhabitants. Here was formerly a chapel. Behind the ancient hall rises a lofty verdant hill, termed Shafto Crag, adjacent to which there is a spacious cave formed in the solid rock.

SHAFTO (WEST), a township in that part of the parish of HARTBURN which is in the north-eastern division of TINDALE ward, county of NORTHUMBRLAND, 12½ miles (W. by S.) from Morpeth, containing 54 inhabitants.

SHAFTON, a township in the parish of FELKIRK, wapentake of STAINCROSS, West riding of the county of YORK, 5 miles (N. E.) from Barnesley, containing 235 inhabitants. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

SHALBOURN, a parish partly in the hundred of KINTBURY-EAGLE, county of BERKS, and partly in the hundred of KINWARDSTONE, county of WILTS, 4 miles (S. S. W.) from Hungerford, containing, with the township of West Shalbourn, 941 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the Dean and Canons of Windsor, rated in the king's books at £14. 17. 6. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is principally in the Norman style. In that part of the parish which is in the county of Wilts is an ancient chapel, in a dilapidated state, with a house attached to it, called Westcourt, and supposed to have been a retreat for the monks of Sarum, or rather a place of occasional relaxation from the austerities of the monastery. On the edge of the down, a continuance of Salisbury plain, is a tumulus, commanding very extensive prospects over several counties. Fragments of human skeletons and of horses, supposed to be the remains of those slain in the wars during the Octarchy, are often met with in the neighbourhood. Wansdyke, the boundary between the kingdoms of Mercia and the West Saxons, runs along one side of the parish, on the north side of which is a chalybeate spring, formerly in great repute.

SHALBOURN (WEST), a township in that part of the parish of SHALBOURN which is in the hundred of KINWARDSTONE, county of WILTS, 4 miles (S. S. W.) from Hungerford, containing 410 inhabitants.

SHALDEN, a parish in the hundred of ODIHAM, Basingstoke division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 2¾ miles (N. W.) from Alton, containing 149 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Winchester, rated in the king's books at £9. 15. 10., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul.

SHALDON-GREEN, a township in the parish of STOKEINTINHEAD, in a detached portion of the hundred of WONFORD, county of DEVON, 5¼ miles (E.) from Newton Abbots. The population is returned with the parish. A chapel was erected in this township about one hundred and fifty years ago, by the Carews of Haccombe. There are places of worship for Baptists and Independents. Shaldon, which contains many genteel villas, is pleasantly situated on the south bank of the river Teign, across which a bridge has been lately erected opposite to Ringmore, and a ferry-boat is constantly passing between this and Teignmouth, so that a more direct communication is thus established, both for vehicles and foot-passengers, with Teignmouth and Torquay.

SHALFLEET, a parish in the liberty of WEST MEDINA, Isle of Wight division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 3¾ miles (E. by S.) from Yarmouth, containing 878 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Winchester, rated in the king's books at £18. 12. 1., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is partly Norman and partly of later date, with a low tower of considerable magnitude. The navigable river Newton bounds the parish on the north-east.

SHALFORD, a parish in the hundred of HINCKFORD, county of ESSEX, 5 miles (N. N. W.) from Braintree, containing 670 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the jurisdiction of the Commissary of Essex and Herts, concurrently with the Consistorial Court of the Bishop of London, rated in the king's books at £7, and in the patronage of the Prebendary of Shalford in the Cathedral Church of Wells. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew.

SHALFORD, a parish in the first division of the hundred of BLACKHEATH, county of SURREY, 1 mile (S. S. E.) from Guildford, containing 744 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Surrey, and diocese of Winchester, rated in the king's books at £8. 4. 7½., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. The Wey and Arun Junction canal passes through the parish; and in the neighbourhood the two rivers meet and form one stream.

SHALSTONE, a parish in the hundred and county of BUCKINGHAM, 4 miles (N. W. by W.) from Buckingham, containing 201 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Buckingham, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £8. 0. 5., and in the patronage of the Rev. Sir S. C. Jervoise, Bart. The church is dedicated to St. Edward.

SHAMBLEHURST, a tything in the parish of SOUTH STONEHAM, hundred of MANSBRIDGE, Fawley division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (W. by S.) from Bishop's Waltham. The population is returned with the parish.

SHANGTON, a parish in the hundred of GARTREE, county of LEICESTER, $6\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. by W.) from Market-Harborough, containing 44 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Leicester, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £10 13. 4., and in the patronage of Sir J. Isham, Bart. The church is dedicated to St. Nicholas: about three quarters of a mile from it is "Gartre Bush," the spot where the hundred court was formerly held.

SHANKLIN, a parish in the liberty of EAST MEDINA, Isle of Wight division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, $9\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E.) from Newport, containing 155 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the rectory of Bonchurch, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Winchester. In the church is an oak chest, curiously carved, with a Latin inscription, dated 1512, and the arms of the see, the gift of Thomas Silksted, Prior of Winchester. At a short distance from the village is a prodigious chasm, called Shanklin Chine, which, extending a considerable way inland from the coast, and being overgrown with shrubs and brushwood, forms a picturesque and extremely romantic scene.

SHAP, a parish in WEST ward, county of WESTMORLAND, 6 miles (N. W.) from Orton, containing, with portions of the chapelry of Mardale, of the township of Fawcett-Forest, and of the hamlet of Birbeck-Fells, 969 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Carlisle, rated in the king's books at £8. 15. $7\frac{1}{2}$., endowed with £400 private benefaction, £600 royal bounty, and £1100 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Earl of Lonsdale. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, has lately received an addition of one hundred and ten free sittings, the Incorporated Society for the enlargement of churches and chapels having granted £50 towards defraying the expense. The river Lowther runs through the parish, which is bounded on the west by the lake Hawswater, and contains quarries of limestone and blue slate. In 1687, a charter was obtained for a market on Wednesday, and three fairs on April 23^d, August 1st, and September 17th, each for two days, but they have been long in disuse. At present a small market is held on Monday, and a fair for cattle and pedlary on May 4th. About one mile west from the town, which consists of a long straggling street, on the high road between Penrith and Kendal, are the venerable ruins and tolerably perfect tower of Shap abbey, founded about 1150, by Thomas Fitz-Gospatrik, in honour of God and St. Mary Magdalene, for Premonstratensian canons, whom he caused to be removed hither from an abbey which he had previously established at Preston in Kendal: at the dissolution it contained twenty monks, whose revenue was estimated at £166. 10. 6. Thomas Jackson, in 1703, gave a messuage and land for the erection and support of a school; the annual income is £25, for which about twenty children are instructed. In this parish is the site of a remarkable Druidical monument, or temple, upwards of half a mile in length, and from twenty to thirty yards in breadth: it is encompassed by huge masses of granite, many of them three or four yards in diameter, placed at irregular distances, having at the upper end a circus, or hippodrome, supposed to have been the place of sacrifice. Shap Well, the water of which is impregnated with sulphur, and serviceable in scorbutic cases, is within the adjoining parish of Crosby-Ravensworth. At Hardendale, in this parish, Dr. John Mill, the learned editor of the Greek Testament, was born, in 1645; he died in 1701.

SHAPWICK, a parish in the hundred of BADBURY, SHASTON (East) division of the county of DORSET, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E.) from Blandford-Forum, containing 409 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Dorset, and diocese of Bristol, rated in the king's books at £7. 9. $4\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of Lord Rivers. The church is dedicated to St. Bartholomew. The navigable river Stour bounds the parish on the south. James Alexander, Esq., in 1818, gave a moiety of the dividends arising from £300 three per cents. for the education of poor children. Here was a small Carthusian priory, a cell to that of Sheen in Surrey.

SHAPWICK, a parish in the hundred of WHITLEY, county of SOMERSET, $6\frac{3}{4}$ miles (W. by S.) from Glastonbury, containing 414 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, with the perpetual curacy of Ashcott annexed, in the archdeaconry of Wells, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £9. 13. 4., and in the patronage of the Rev. G. H. Templar. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

SHARDLOW, a township in the parish of WILN, hundred of MORLESTON and LITCHURCH, county of DERBY, 7 miles (S. E. by E.) from Derby. The population is returned with the parish. The Trent and Mersey canal passes through the township.

SHARESHILL, a parish in the eastern division of the hundred of CUTTLESTONE, county of STAFFORD, $5\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. N. E.) from Wolverhampton, containing, with the township of Great and Little Saredon, 583 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, with that of Penkridge, in the archdeaconry of Stafford, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £600 royal bounty, and in the patronage of E. J. Littleton, Esq. The church, dedicated to the Assumption of the Virgin Mary, is a brick building, with an ancient tower of stone. The Staffordshire and Worcestershire canal crosses the north-western angle of the parish.

SHARLSTON, a township in the parish of WARMFIELD, lower division of the wapentake of AGBRIGG, West riding of the county of YORK, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E. by S.) from Wakefield, containing 330 inhabitants.

SHARNBROOK, a parish in the hundred of WILLEY, county of BEDFORD, 4 miles (N. E.) from Harrold, containing 691 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Bedford, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £8, and in the patronage of the Crown. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is of early English architecture, with a spire. There is a place of worship for Baptists.

SHARNFORD, a parish in the hundred of SPARKENHOE, county of LEICESTER, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E.S.E.) from Hinckley, containing 460 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Leicester, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £9. 18. 9., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. Helen. The river Soar runs through the parish.

SHARPENHOE, a hamlet in the parish of STREATLEY, hundred of FLITT, county of BEDFORD, 4 miles (S.S.W.) from Silsoe. The population is returned with the parish. This hamlet contains a charity school for the instruction of eight children, founded by Richard Norton, in 1686, and endowed with a rent-charge of £10. Thomas Norton, a dramatic writer, was born here in the early part of the sixteenth century: he died about 1600.

SHARPERTON, a township in the parish of ALLENTON, western division of COQUETDALE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by N.) from Rothbury, containing 107 inhabitants.

SHARPLES, a township in the parish of BOLTON, hundred of SALFORD, county palatine of LANCASTER, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N.) from Great Bolton, containing 2065 inhabitants. In this township are a large power-loom factory, and a bleaching establishment, affording employment to about one thousand three hundred persons. Coal abounds in the neighbourhood; and there are reservoirs for supplying the town of Bolton with water. Children of this place have the benefit of a free education at Eagley-bridge school, in the township of Turton.

SHARRINGTON, a parish in the hundred of HOLT, county of NORFOLK, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (W.S.W.) from Holt, containing 235 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, annexed to that of Saxlingham, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £10. The church is dedicated to All Saints.

SHARROW, a township in that part of the parish of RIPON which is in the liberty of RIPON, West riding of the county of YORK, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (E. by N.) from Ripon, containing 103 inhabitants. A chapel has been lately erected, containing five hundred and fifty sittings, of which two hundred and eighty are free, the Incorporated Society for building additional churches having granted £400 towards defraying the expense. This township is within the peculiar jurisdiction of the Archbishop of York. The Rev. Thomas Savage, in 1782, bequeathed £5 per annum for teaching eight poor children. The sum of £4. 10. a year is also paid out of the chapel rates, on account of sundry small gifts for the education of six others.

SHATTON, a joint hamlet with Brough, in the parish of HOPE, hundred of HIGH PEAK, county of DERBY, 6 miles (N.E. by N.) from Tideswell. The population is returned with Brough. Shatton is in the honour of Tutbury, duchy of Lancaster, and within the jurisdiction of a court of pleas held at Chapel en le Frith every third Tuesday, for the recovery of debts under 40s.

SHAUGH, a parish in the hundred of PLYMPTON, county of DEVON, 6 miles (N.) from Earl's Plympton, containing 551 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to that of Sampford-Spiney, in the archdeaconry of Totness, and diocese of Exeter, endowed with £22. 10. per annum and £100 private benefaction, £200 royal bounty, and £1800 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Dean and Canons of Windsor. The scenery in the immediate vicinity is of the most romantic description.

SHAVINGTON, a joint township with Gresty, in the parish of WYBUNBURY, hundred of NANTWICH, county palatine of CHESTER, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E.) from Nantwich, containing 274 inhabitants. The old manorial seat of the Wodenoths, of whom was descended John, the celebrated antiquary, born in 1624, was highly curious, from its age, and the abundance of stained glass and other ancient relics it contained.

SHAW, a chapelry in the parish of OLDHAM cum PRESTWICH, hundred of SALFORD, county palatine of LANCASTER, 5 miles (S.E.) from Rochdale. The population is returned with the parish. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chester, endowed with £400 private benefaction, £400 royal bounty, and £1000 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Vicar of Prestwich. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

SHAW cum DONNINGTON, a parish in the hundred of FAIRCROSS, county of BERKS, $1\frac{1}{4}$ mile (N.E.) from Speenhamland, containing 531 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Berks, and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £12. 11. 8., and in the patronage of the Rev. Thomas Penrose, D. C. L. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. The river Lambourn runs through the parish. An attempt was made by a soldier of Cromwell's army, in 1644, to assassinate Charles I. at the manor-house, his usual place of rest, when journeying to the West of England: a brass plate fixed on the spot where the ball entered still records the event. In the second battle of Newbury this mansion was garrisoned for the king, and attacked by a large body of the enemy, which was repulsed with great loss. Several cannon balls, since found at intervals about the grounds, are preserved; as are also a cloak, hat, bridle, and spur belonging to the Protector, and a bed on which Queen Anne reposed. Here are almshouses for twelve poor persons, founded about 1618, by Sir Richard Abberbury, Knt.

SHAWBURY, a parish comprising the townships of Besford and Preston-Brockhurst, in the hundred of PIMHILL, the township of Acton-Reynold, in the liberties of SHREWSBURY, and the townships of Edgbolton and Shawbury, in the Whitchurch division of the hundred of BRADFORD (North), county of SALOP, and containing 1133 inhabitants, of which number, 339 are in the township of Shawbury, $7\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N.E.) from Shrewsbury. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Salop, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, rated in the king's books at £7. 1. 5½., and in the patronage of William Marvin, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

SHAWDON, a township in the parish of WHITTINGHAM, northern division of COQUETDALE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W.) from Alnwick, containing 77 inhabitants. Two ancient urns of common earthenware were found in the neighbourhood some years ago.

SHAWELL, a parish in the hundred of GUTHLAXTON, county of LEICESTER, 3 miles (S.) from Lutterworth, containing 209 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Leicester, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £9, and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to All Saints. A free grammar school for children of this parish and that of Newton, founded here by John Eckington, has an endowment of £20 per annum, with a house and garden for the master. The founder also erected an almshouse for six poor men.

SHEARSBY, a chapelry in that part of the parish of KNAPTOFT which is in the hundred of GUTHLAXTON, county of LEICESTER, 7 miles (N. E.) from Lutterworth, containing 310 inhabitants. The chapel is dedicated to St. Mary Magdalene. Here is a saline spring, the water of which has been found serviceable in scorbutic affections.

SHEBBEAR, a parish in the hundred of SHEBBEAR, county of DEVON, $7\frac{3}{4}$ miles (W. N. W.) from Hatherleigh, containing 1006 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, with the perpetual curacy of Sheepwash annexed, in the archdeaconry of Barnstaple, and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £11. 8. 4., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. Lawrence. The parish is bounded on the west by the river Torridge.

SHEEN, a parish in the southern division of the hundred of TOTMONSLOW, county of STAFFORD, 10 miles (E. by N.) from Winster, containing 429 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Stafford, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, endowed with £800 royal bounty, and in the patronage of Sir H. Bateman. Fourteen poor children are educated for £7. 10. a year, the produce of sundry bequests.

SHEEN (EAST), a hamlet in the parish of MORTLAKE, western division of the hundred of BRIXTON, county of SURREY, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W. by W.) from London. The population is returned with the parish.

SHEEPSHEAD, a parish in the western division of the hundred of GOSCOTE, county of LEICESTER, 4 miles (W.) from Loughborough, containing 3464 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Leicester, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £8. 10. 10., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of C. M. Philipps, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Botolph. There are places of worship for Baptists, the Society of Friends, and Wesleyan Methodists. Many of the inhabitants are employed in the weaving of stockings. A National school established here is supported by subscription.

SHEEPSTOR, a parish in the hundred of ROBOROUGH, county of DEVON, 7 miles (S. E. by E.) from Tavistock, containing 129 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the vicarage of Bickleigh, in the archdeaconry of Totness, and diocese of Exeter. Sheepstor rock is one of the most remarkable granite heaps upon Dartmoor, and is a conspicuous object from Roborough down: at the foot of it is situated the village, on the little river Mew. At Ailsborough, in this parish, a lofty eminence on Dartmoor, are very extensive tin mines.

SHEEPWASH, a parish in the hundred of SHEBBEAR, county of DEVON, 4 miles (W. N. W.) from Hatherleigh, containing 436 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the vicarage of Shebbear, in the archdeaconry of Barnstaple, and diocese of Exeter.

There is a place of worship for Baptists. The river Torridge runs through the parish. A market and three annual fairs were formerly held here. In 1743, the village was almost destroyed by fire. In this parish are the remains of a very large mansion, called Upcott Avenel, to which a chapel was formerly annexed; the few rooms still in being have been converted into a farm-house, and the fine old gateway was removed some years ago, for the purpose of building a handsome residence.

SHEEPWASH, a parish with Bothall, in the eastern division of MORPETH ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, $4\frac{3}{4}$ miles (E.) from Morpeth, containing, with Ashington, 50 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, united to that of Bothall, in the archdeaconry of Northumberland, and diocese of Durham, rated in the king's books at £3. 17. 1. The church, which has been demolished, was dedicated to the Holy Sepulchre. The river Wansbeck, which is navigable for keels and small boats, is here crossed by a bridge.

SHEEPY (MAGNA), a parish in the hundred of SPARKENHOE, county of LEICESTER, 3 miles (N. E. by N.) from Atherstone, containing, with the chapelry of Ratcliffe-Culey, 638 inhabitants. The living is a mediety of the rectory of Sheepy Magna and Parva, in the archdeaconry of Leicester, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £13. 4. $9\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Rev. T. C. Fell. The church is dedicated to All Saints. At the Mythe, which formerly belonged to the monks of Merevale, are some slight remains of an ancient chapel. This parish is in the honour of Tutbury, duchy of Lancaster, and within the jurisdiction of a court of pleas held at Tutbury every third Tuesday, for the recovery of debts under forty shillings.

SHEEPY (PARVA), a parish in the hundred of SPARKENHOE, county of LEICESTER, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. E.) from Atherstone, containing 87 inhabitants. The living is a mediety of the rectory of Sheepy Magna and Parva, in the archdeaconry of Leicester, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £13. 4. $9\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Rev. T. C. Fell. The church is dedicated to All Saints.

SHEERING, a parish in the hundred of HARLOW, county of ESSEX, 3 miles (N. E.) from Harlow, containing 439 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Middlesex, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £13. 13. 4., and in the patronage of the Dean and Canons of Christ Church, Oxford. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

SHEERNESS, a sea-port, market town, and chapelry, in the parish of MINSTER, having separate jurisdiction, though locally in the liberty of the Isle of Sheppy, lathe of SCRAY, county of KENT, 21 miles (N. E.) from Maidstone, and 50 (E. by S.) from London, containing 817 inhabitants. This place, which is situated at the north-western point of the Isle of Sheppy, on the river Medway, at its junction with the Thames, was a mere swamp until the reign of Charles II., when the importance of its situation being appreciated, that monarch, early in 1667, directed the construction of a strong fort, and twice personally ascertained its progress. In the same year, before the new fortifications were in a very advanced state, the Dutch fleet entered the Thames, and made their memorable attack on the shipping in the Medway, having in their passage destroyed that portion of the works which was completed, and landed some men, who took possession of the fort. In consequence of this, a regular fortification, with a line of heavy artillery and of smaller forts higher up, on each side of the Medway, was formed, to which other works have since been added. A garrison is kept up, under the command of a governor, lieutenant-governor, fort-major, and inferior officers; and the construction of a royal dock-yard, for repairing ships and building frigates and smaller vessels, has caused Sheerness to become a naval station of the first importance. In 1798, the mutiny of the fleet stationed at the Nore threatened this town with the most alarming consequences, and induced many of the inhabitants to make a precipitate retreat to Chatham and other places; but the fortunate suppression of this formidable insurrection saved the town from the apprehended danger. In 1827, it suffered from a dreadful fire, which destroyed fifty houses, and property of the value of £60,000; but the houses, which were before principally of wood, have been replaced by others built of brick.

Owing to the naval establishment formed here, Sheerness has grown up into a considerable town, consisting of two divisions, Blue Town and Mile Town: it has been recently much enlarged, some new streets and a spacious hotel having been erected, the latter fitted up in a very superior style; but there are not sufficient houses for the population, many of the poorer inhabitants residing in the hulls of old vessels, though, in consequence of recent reductions in the dock-yards and arsenals, the number has considerably decreased. A pier and causeway extend from the town to low water mark, which are kept in good repair; and the town is paved, lighted, and cleansed under the authority of two acts of parliament passed in the 41st and 49th of George III. There was formerly a great scarcity of water, but it is now supplied, and of a very excellent quality, at one half-penny per pail, from four subscription wells, which have been sunk to a depth of three hundred and sixty feet: the principal one, called King's well, is within the fort, and supplies the vessels at the Nore. This place has latterly become the resort of a great deal of company, attracted by the facility of sea-bathing; the beach, on which the machines are stationed, being very clean, and forming a delightful promenade. On the cliffs leading from the beach towards Minster there is, perhaps, one of the most splendid and interesting views in the kingdom: the German Ocean on the east; the rivers Thames and Medway, bearing innumerable vessels of all sizes, with the town and harbour of Sheerness, to the north and west; and the fertile valleys of Kent, with the Medway winding through them, and the towns and villages interspersed, towards the south, combine in presenting a diversity and sublimity of landscape rarely excelled. The harbour has of late years been much enlarged and improved, and is now safe and commodious, often presenting a splendid appearance from the number of vessels in it; passage boats ply with every tide, and a steam-boat daily, to and from Chatham, and there is in summer a regular communication by steam-boats with London.

The dock-yard has been greatly extended and improved within the last fifteen years, at a cost of about three millions, and is now one of the finest in Europe:

it covers an area of sixty acres, and is surrounded by an extremely well built brick wall, which cost £40,000. The docks are sufficiently capacious to receive men of war of the first class, with all their guns, stores, equipments, &c., on board; and two steam-engines, each of fifty horse power, have been erected for the purpose of pumping them dry. There is a basin, with a depth of water of twenty-six feet, which will hold six ships of the first class; and two of a smaller size, for store-ships and boats. The storehouse, which is the largest building in the country, is six stories high, with iron joists, beams, window-frames, and doors, and will contain at least thirty thousand tons of naval stores: there are also a handsome victualling storehouse, smithy, navy pay office, mast-houses, &c. The commissioners and principal officers of the establishment have handsome houses in the yard, and a noble residence has been erected in the garrison for the port-admiral, in which are state rooms for the reception of the royal family, the lords of the admiralty, &c. The principal establishment of the ordnance departments has been removed hence to Chatham, where the stores for the fleet at the Nore, &c., are kept, and the ground formerly occupied by it has been added to the dock-yard. An office connected with this department is still, however, retained here; and it is said that government contemplates the re-establishment of the department at this place on a very enlarged scale, and the extension of the present line of fortifications from the garrison point, outside the town, to the sea wall, called Queenborough wall, for which purpose they have purchased two hundred acres of land surrounding the town. The principal government officers residing here are clerks of the cheque and survey, store-keeper, master shipwright and his assistant, master attendant, master caulker, boatswain, surgeon, and porter. Many convicts are employed in the hulks and in the improvements here.

The chief trade in the town arises from the dock-yard and other establishments connected with government, though considerable quantities of corn and seed, the produce of the isle, as well as oysters (of which the beds extend all along the coast, as far as Milton), are shipped for the London market. There are copperas works of considerable extent, within a few miles of the town: the pyrites, or copperas stones, are collected in heaps upon the beach, from the falling cliffs, and carried away in vessels. The market is on Saturday, but there is no regular market-place. The parish church was formerly at Minster, about four miles distant, but a very elegant church has lately been erected at the east end, but outside the wall, of the dock-yard, the area of which is appropriated for the officers, &c., of the dock-yard, and the galleries for the public. The chaplain is appointed by the Board of Admiralty. The living is distinct from that of Minster, though it is in contemplation to unite them, and the ecclesiastical government is in the jurisdiction of the Consistorial Court of Canterbury, concurrently with the Archidiaconal court. There are two places of worship each for the Baptists and Independents, and one each for the Primitive and Wesleyan Methodists, the Unitarians, and Roman Catholics, also a Synagogue. Sunday schools are attached to the chapels of the Baptists, Independents, and Wesleyan Methodists, in which more than one thousand children are instructed: there are several reading societies. In sinking the wells here, the workmen, at the depth of two hundred feet, discovered a complete prostrate forest, through which, in the prosecution of their work, they were obliged to burn their way; which is considered to be a remarkable confirmation of the history of the deluge, and specimens are in the possession of most of the Philosophical Institutions in Europe. Stones well adapted for the composition of Roman cement, in consequence of being impregnated with copperas, are dredged up from the sea in the neighbourhood of the cliffs.

SHEET, a tything in the parish of PETERSFIELD, hundred of FINCH-DEAN, Alton (South) division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, $\frac{3}{4}$ of a mile (N. E. by E.) from Petersfield, containing 306 inhabitants. John Lock, in 1674, bequeathed a rent-charge of £2. 10. for the education of children.

SHEFFIELD, a parish comprising the market town of Sheffield, the chapelries of Attercliffe and Ecclesall-Bierlow, the townships of Nether Hallam, and Upper Hallam, and the hamlet of Darnall, in the southern, and the township of Brightside-Bierlow in the northern, division of the wapentake of STRAFFORTH and TICKHILL, West riding of the county of YORK, and containing 65,275 inhabitants, of which number, 42,157 are in the town of Sheffield, 55 miles (S. W. by S.) from York, and 163 (N. N. W.) from London. This place, which is of great antiquity, and was formerly called Sheaf, derived its name from its situation on the river Sheaf, near its confluence with the Don, and forms the chief town of the extensive Saxon manor of Hallam, now called Hallamshire. The parish formed a portion of this large manor, which, although dismembered, and its jurisdiction dissolved, has imparted name to the more extensive tract called Hallamshire, the limits of which are undefined, but of which Sheffield may be considered the chief town. At the time of the Norman survey, the manor of Sheffield was held, under Judith, niece of William the Conqueror, by Roger de Busli, and the widowed countess of the Saxon Earl Waltheof, who had been decapitated for entering into a conspiracy against William, and subsequently, with other manors, by the family of De Lovetot, the first of that family who owned the manor being supposed to have erected the ancient castle, which, with the lordship of Hallamshire, afterwards descended to the Earls of Shrewsbury, from whom the estate finally passed to the Dukes of Norfolk. Edward I. granted the lords of the manor various privileges, who in turn releasing the inhabitants from the feudal tenure by which they held their estates, in consideration of a fixed annual payment, occasioned Sheffield to become a free town. Cardinal Wolsey, after his arrest in 1530, was detained in the manor-house here for eighteen days, in custody of the Earl of Shrewsbury; and Mary, Queen of Scots, was, with the exception of a few short intervals, held in captivity in the same place, or in the castle, for nearly fourteen years. During the civil war in the reign of Charles I., the inhabitants being in the interest of the parliamentarians, made a feeble effort to maintain the town and castle for the parliament; but the Earl of Newcastle, with a party of royalists, quickly gained possession for the king, and placed a garrison in the castle, under the command of Sir William Saville, who was appointed governor. The Earl of Manchester sent a force, under Major-General Crawford, to attempt its reduction, and after a protracted siege, it was surrendered on honourable terms, and soon afterwards demolished by order of the parliament.

The town is pleasantly situated on a gentle eminence rising out of a spacious valley, which, with the exception of an opening to the north-east, is sheltered by a chain of lofty hills richly clothed with wood, and nearly surrounded by the rivers Don, Sheaf, and Porter. Over the river Don a stone bridge of three arches was erected in 1485, and called Lady bridge, from a religious house near it, dedicated to the Blessed Virgin, which was taken down, on widening the bridge, in 1768. An iron bridge of three arches has been also constructed over the same river; and, in 1828, an additional stone bridge of three arches was erected, for the purpose of affording an easier communication between the Rotherham and Barnesley roads, and the new corn and cattle markets: a bridge over the Sheaf, consisting of one arch, was rebuilt in 1769, by Edward, Duke of Norfolk. The town extends for nearly a mile from north to south, and for three-quarters of a mile from east to west, and consists of numerous streets, which, with the exception of one or two of the principal, are narrow and inconvenient: the houses, chiefly of brick, have obtained from the works a sombre appearance, and are intermixed with many of very ancient character. The chief portion is within the angle formed by the rivers, but there are considerable ranges of building on the opposite banks: considerable improvements have taken place, under the provisions of an act obtained in 1818, by which the town is partially paved, lighted with gas by a company whose extensive works are situated at Shude Hill, near the bridge over the river Sheaf, and formerly supplied with water, conveyed from springs in the neighbouring hills, by means of works, situated on Crook's moor, erected by a few private individuals, in 1782; but the supply becoming inadequate to the increasing demands of the town, a company was formed in 1829, with a capital of £100,000, and incorporated by act of parliament. The environs abound with beautiful scenery and pleasant walks, and are ornamented with elegant villas, inhabited by the more opulent families. The barracks, forming an extensive range of building, and, with the parade ground, occupying a large tract of land to the north-east of the town, were erected in 1794, and are pleasantly situated on the bank of the river Don; they contain accommodation for two troops of cavalry. The public subscription library, originally in Surrey-street, has been removed into a commodious room fitted up for it in the music hall, and is supported by a proprietary of two hundred members, who pay an annual subscription of £1. 1. each: connected with the establishment is a reading-room, which is well supplied with periodical works. A Literary and Philosophical Society was instituted in 1822, the members of which hold their meetings in an elegant apartment in the music hall, containing their apparatus, a collection of fossils, botanical specimens, and curiosities from the South Sea islands, and ornamented with a full-length portrait of Mr. Montgomery, the poet: the society deliver their public lectures in the saloon of the music hall. The public news-room, a neat stone building, forming part of the East Parade, recently erected, is well attended by a number of annual subscribers of £1. 6. each; and a commercial news-room has been also established in the music hall. The mechanics' library, established in 1824, contains more than two thousand volumes, and is open every evening, under the superintendence of six of the members. Concerts are occasionally held, during the season, in the music hall, under the direction of the choral concert committee. The music hall is a spacious and elegant building, in the Grecian style of architecture, erected in Surrey-street, in 1824; it comprises on the ground-floor a room for the public library, thirty-eight feet long, and thirty-five feet wide, of which the roof is supported on pillars; a reading-room and a saloon; and a spacious room for the Literary and Philosophical Society, thirty-seven feet long, and thirty-six feet wide: the buildings also contain an elegant music-room, ninety-nine feet in length, and thirty-eight feet wide, with a well-arranged orchestra; adjoining are a handsome saloon, thirty-eight feet long, and twenty feet wide, with four recesses, two large refreshment-rooms, and house-keeper's apartments. The theatre and assembly-rooms were erected in 1762, and form an extensive building of brick, handsomely ornamented with stone, and having a central portico supporting a pediment; the theatre is generally open from October to January, and the assembly-rooms, which are elegantly fitted up, are well attended during the season. The Town's Trust has arisen from a grant made by a member of the ancient family of Furnival, about the year 1300, and consists of property in lands and tenements, shares in the river Don navigation, &c., producing about £1400 per annum, which is under the management of twelve trustees, resident in the town, elected by the freeholders, who have been lately incorporated, under the title of the "Town's Trust," or "Sheffield Free Tenants:" the income is applied to the maintenance of Lady's bridge, the keeping in order of Barker pool, the repair of the church and the highways, the payment of the stipendiary clergy, and other charitable and public uses.

This town appears to have been distinguished at a very early period for the manufacture of articles of cutlery, for which the numerous mines of coal and iron in the neighbourhood rendered its situation peculiarly favourable. Chaucer, in his Canterbury Tales, mentions the "Sheffield Thwytel, or Whittel," a kind of knife worn by such as had not the privilege of wearing a sword, for the making of which, as well as the iron heads for arrows, before the general use of fire-arms, Sheffield had, even at so early a period, become celebrated. From that time the principal articles manufactured were, implements of husbandry, including scythes, sickles, shears, and other sharp instruments of steel, till the middle of the last century, when considerable improvements were introduced, and great ingenuity displayed in the finer articles of cutlery. The superintendence of the trade was entrusted to twelve master cutlers, appointed at the court leet of the lord of the manor, with power to enforce the necessary regulations for its protection and improvement. In 1624, the cutlers were incorporated by an act of parliament entitled "an act for the good order and government of the makers of knives, scissors, shears, sickles, and other cutlery wares, in Hallamshire, in the county of York, and parts near adjoining;" and the government was invested in a master, two wardens, six searchers, and twenty-four assistants, consisting of freemen only, in number about six hundred. The master, who, with the other officers of the company, is chosen annually by the whole corporation, on retiring from office, nominates the senior warden as his successor, whom if rejected by the company, he nominates another member, till one is approved of by the body: the wardens are chosen by the officers of the company from among the searchers for the time being. The master, wardens, and assistants, have power to make by-laws for the regulation of the trade, and to inflict penalties for the neglect of them; and the jurisdiction of the company, which is restricted exclusively to affairs relating to the trade, extends throughout the whole district of Hallamshire, and all places within six miles of it. By an act obtained in 1814, permission is given to all persons, whether sons of freemen or not, and without their having served an apprenticeship, or obtained from the company a mark for their goods, to carry on business any where within the limits of Hallamshire. The privilege thus bestowed has been a great means of advancing the trade to its present state of perfection, by affording encouragement to men of genius from every part of the country to settle in this town; and the competition thus produced, has furnished exquisite specimens of workmanship in the finer branches of the trade, which abound in the show-rooms of the principal manufacturers, particularly in those of Messrs Rodgers and Sons, and excite the admiration of the spectator. The cutlery trade employs from eight to ten thousand persons. The principal articles are table knives and forks; pen and pocket knives of every description; scissors; razors; surgical, mathematical, and optical instruments; engineers' and joiners' tools; scythes, sickles, and files, of which great quantities are manufactured and exported; and an endless variety of steel wares, which may be considered the staple trade of the town, though various other branches of manufacture have been subsequently introduced and carried to a high degree of perfection.

Connected in some degree with the cutlery, but embracing a great variety of other objects, are ivory articles of every description; but the principal branches of manufacture which have more recently been established, and for which the town has obtained an unrivalled superiority, are spoons, tea and coffee pots, candlesticks, and a great variety of articles of Britannia metal, which are made in great quantities, and of every pattern; likewise silverplated goods of every kind, among which are dessert knives and forks plated upon steel, tureens, epernes, and services for the table, candelabras, ice-pails, urns, and a variety of similar articles, of the most elegant patterns, and of the richest workmanship, being generally known by the name of "Sheffield plate with silver edges." The manufacture of silver plate in all its branches, from the most minute to the most massive articles, is also carried on to a considerable extent, and has obtained deserved celebrity. The most ingenious and highly-finished specimens of cutlery displayed in the principal shops in the metropolis, and in those of the principal towns in England, notwithstanding their being stamped with the venders' names, are manufactured here, and so highly are the manufactures of this town esteemed, that they are found in every market in Europe, and exported in great quantities to every part of the globe. The making of buttons and button-moulds, wire-drawing, and the refining of silver, are also carried on; and along the banks of the rivers are numerous iron and steel works, in which the heavier castings are produced, and extensive works for slitting and preparing the iron and steel for the use of the manufacturers: among the manufactured iron goods are boilers for steam-engines, stove-grates (of most elegant design and exquisite workmanship), fenders, fire-irons, and various smaller articles. There are also extensive factories for the weaving of carpets, and of horse-hair seating for chairs. In 1806, a type-foundry was established with considerable success; and another was commenced in 1818, the proprietors having purchased the business of a house in London: both these establishments are now considerable, and supply type not only to printers in the provincial towns, but to several highly respectable houses in the metropolis. The trade of the town is greatly facilitated by its advantageous line of inland navigation. The river Don was, in 1751, made navigable to Tinsley, about three miles from the town; and in 1815, a bill was obtained for enabling the proprietors of the Sheffield canal to connect the Don, at Tinsley, with the town, by means of a navigable cut, which was accomplished in 1819, forming a direct communication with the German sea. Adjoining the basin of this canal, at the eastern extremity of the town, is a commodious wharf, where vessels can load and unload under cover, and spacious warehouses and offices for the transaction of business. The basin is capable of containing more than forty vessels of about fifty tons' burden, which arrive here from Hull, York, Gainsborough, Manchester, Leeds, Liverpool, and Thorn, at which last place, vessels from London generally unload goods intended for Sheffield. The market was granted, in 1296, to Thomas, Lord Furnival; the market days are Tuesday and Saturday: the former, chiefly for corn, is held in the corn exchange, a handsome building, erected under an act of parliament obtained, in 1827, by the Duke of Norfolk, on the site of the Shrewsbury hospital, which has been removed. The market for butchers' meat is held in a convenient situation near Newmarket-street, at the end of which is the market for eggs, poultry, and butter: the vegetable market is on the outside of the enclosure for the butchers' meat, and consists of ranges of shops: the fruit market is held on the south side of Newmarket-street; and the fish market, in King-street, is well supplied with salt-water fish on Monday and Thursday, and with fresh-water fish every day during the season. The fairs are on the Tuesday in Trinity week and November 28th, for cattle and toys; and a cheese fair, held at the same time with the latter, has been established within the last few years, in which are sold many hundred tons of cheese from the counties of Derby, Stafford, Chester, and Lancaster. The town is within the jurisdiction of the magistrates for the district, who meet in the town hall every Tuesday and Friday, for the determination of petty causes: the October sessions for the West riding are also held here. A court is held every third week, under the steward of the manor of Eccleshall, for the recovery of debts under £5; and a court of requests every Thursday, under commissioners appointed by an act passed in the 48th of George III., for the recovery of debts not exceeding £5, of which the jurisdiction extends for several miles round the parish. The town hall, a spacious and commodious building of plain architecture, with a cupola, was erected in 1808, at the foot of the hay market, on the site of an old building, which was taken down: it contains a large and well-arranged room in which the sessions are held, and apartments for the use of the police magistrates, the commissioners of the court of requests, and for the transaction of public business; on the ground-floor is a prison for felons within the liberty of Hallamshire, with apartments for the keeper. The Cutlers' Hall, in Church-street, in which the business of that company is transacted, and their public meetings held, was erected in 1726: it is a neat and capacious stone building, ornamented with the arms of the company well sculptured, and contains three large rooms in front for the transaction of business, and other offices; on the second floor is a spacious dining-room, elegantly fitted up, and ornamented with several well-executed portraits. In addition to an excise-office and post-office, there is also an assay-office, erected in 1773, in order to relieve the manufacturers from sending their silver goods to London to receive the Hall mark.

The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £12. 15. 2½., and in the alternate patronage of Marmaduke Lawson, Esq., and Philip Gell, Esq., as representatives of Robert and William Swyft, Esqrs., to whom the advowson was granted in the reign of Henry VIII.;

the latter of those gentlemen presented in 1805. Three stipendiary clergymen, who are independent of the vicar, are appointed to assist him by twelve burgesses of the town and parish, incorporated by charter of Queen Mary, who hold certain lands and estates in trust, for the payment of the stipendiary assistants, and for the repairs of the church: they are called the "Twelve Seal of the Twelve Capital Burgesses.

Capital Burgesses," and hold their meetings in a room over the vestry-room of the church, vacancies in their number being filled up by vote among themselves. The church, erected in the reign of Henry I., and dedicated to St. Peter, is a spacious cruciform structure, with a central tower and spire, most probably in the Norman style of architecture; but it has been so altered by repairs, that, with the exception of part of the tower and spire, and a few small portions of the interior, very little of its original character can be distinguished. The chancel contains the first production from the chisel of Chantrey, a mural tablet, with the bust of the Rev. James Wilkinson, late vicar, canopied with drapery, in Carora marble, erected at the public expense, as a tribute of respect to his memory. Many illustrious persons have been interred in this church, among whom were Mary, Countess of Northumberland; Elizabeth, Countess of Lennox, mother of the unfortunate Lady Arabella Stuart; Lady Elizabeth Butler; four of the Earls of Shrewsbury; and Peter Roflet, French secretary of Mary, Queen of Scots. St. Paul's, a chapel of ease to the vicarage, was erected in 1720, by subscription, towards which Mr. R. Downes, silversmith, contributed £1000: it is a handsome edifice in the Grecian style of architecture, with a tower surmounted by a well-proportioned dome, and a cupola of cast-iron; the interior is light, and elegantly ornamented, and contains a bust by Chantrey of the Rev. Alexander Mackenzie, with emblematical sculpture finely executed. St. James', also a chapel of ease to the vicarage, a neat structure in the Grecian style of architecture, with a campanile turret, was erected by subscription in 1788: the interior is well arranged, and the east window is embellished with a beautiful painting of the Crucifixion, by Peckett. St. George's church, on an eminence at the western extremity of the town, containing two thousand and three sittings, of which one thousand and eleven are free, erected, in 1824, by grant from the parliamentary commissioners, at an expense of £15,129. 9. is a very handsome structure, in the later style of English architecture, with a lofty square embattled tower, crowned with pinnacles: the living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the Vicar. St. Philip's church, near the infirmary, containing two thousand sittings, of which seven hundred and fifty-five are free, was erected, in 1827, by grant from the parliamentary commissioners, at an expense of £13,970. 16.: it is a neat edifice, in the later English style of architecture, with a square embattled tower, crowned with pinnacles: the living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the Vicar. St. Mary's church, of which the first stone was laid by the Countess of Surrey, in 1826, is a handsome structure in the later style of English architecture, with a tower, and a porch of beautiful design: it was erected by grant from the parliamentary commissioners, at an expense of £13,946. 11. 9., and contains one thousand nine hundred and ninety-two sittings, of which seven hundred and forty are free: the site, and the cemetery, were given by His Grace the Duke of Norfolk: the living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the Vicar. There are also other churches in the townships belonging to the parish, which are noticed under their proper heads. There are five places of worship for Independents, four for Wesleyan Methodists, and one each for Baptists, the Society of Friends, Unitarians, and Roman Catholics.

The free grammar school was founded by letters patent in the reign of James I., and endowed by Thomas Smith, of Crowland, in the county of Lincoln, with lands producing, in 1603, £30 per annum, which have been since exchanged for lands at Wadsley, producing, together with subsequent benefactions, a revenue of £175. 10.: the school is under the control of the vicar and twelve inhabitants of the town, who appoint the master, with a salary of £60 per annum: there are at present about twenty scholars on the foundation, who are gratuitously instructed in the classics. The boys' charity school, at the north-east corner of the churchyard, was established in 1706, and the present school-house, a neat and commodious edifice of stone, has been recently erected on the site of the original building: it has an income arising from a benefaction of £5000 by Mr. Parkins, in 1766, aided by a donation from Mr. T. Hanby, which maintains six boys on the establishment, at an expense of upwards of £60 per annum, the past masters of the Cutlers' Company being his principal trustees: the whole revenue is about £284 per annum, with which, and annual subscriptions, eighty boys are maintained, clothed, educated, and apprenticed. At the opposite corner of the churchyard is a similar school, in which sixty girls are maintained, clothed, and educated, and afterwards placed out in service: a convenient school-house was erected, in 1786, at an expense of £1500. A school for reading, writing, and arithmetic, has also been established here, in pursuance of the will of Mr. William Birley, who, in 1715, bequeathed £900 in trust for the purchase of an estate, of the rental of which, one-third was to be appropriated to the establishment of the school, one-third towards the maintenance of indigent tradesmen, or their widows, and the remainder towards the support of a minister to officiate in the chapel of the hospital. The school of industry was established in 1795, and removed to its present situation in 1815: the buildings, which are upon an extensive scale, and well adapted to their use, were erected by subscription: there are three hundred and fifty children in this establishment. A Lancasterian school for boys, established in 1809, and a similar institution for girls, established in 1815, are supported by subscription. National schools for children of both sexes are maintained in connexion with the National Society, and there are numerous Sunday schools.

The Earl of Shrewsbury's hospital was projected by Gilbert, Earl of Shrewsbury, in 1616, and completed, in pursuance of his will, by the Earl of Norfolk, Earl Marshal of England, and the buildings erected in 1673: it is amply endowed for eighteen men and eighteen women, who have each a comfortable dwelling, ten shillings per week for each man, and eight shillings for each woman, and an allowance of coal, coats, and a gown, annually: the original buildings were recently taken down to make room for the market-place, and the erection of the corn exchange, and a neat range of buildings, in the later style of English architecture, has been erected on the southern side of the town, in the centre of which is a chapel. Hollis' hospital was founded, in 1703, by Mr. Thomas Hollis, a native of the town, who, with others of his descendants, endowed it for sixteen aged women, widows of cutlers, or of persons connected with the trade, who receive each seven shillings per week, an annual allowance of coal, and a gown once in two years: a part of the funds is also applied to the support of a school. The general infirmary was first opened for the reception of patients in 1797, and, in a manufacturing town, where so many artisans are continually exposed to accidents, and their health materially injured by the processes of many of the trades in which they are employed, has been deservedly regarded as an object entitled to the most liberal patronage and support. The premises, occupying an extensive site about a mile to the north-west of the town, and guarded against the too near approach of other buildings by the purchase of thirty-one acres of surrounding land, were erected by public subscription, at an expense of nearly £20,000, including the purchase of the land: they are handsomely built of stone, and form a conspicuous ornament in the principal approaches to the town. In front of the building is a neat portico, ornamented with statues of Hope and Charity, finely sculptured, and the grounds are enclosed by an iron palisade, with a central gateway, and a porter's lodge on each side. The internal arrangements are extensive and complete, and the institution is supported by an income arising from donations and bequests, and by annual subscription. Among the principal benefactions are, £200 by the Rev. James Wilkinson, late vicar; £200 by Dr. Browne, under whose auspices the establishment was materially promoted; £1000 by Mrs. Fell, of Newhall; a donation of £2000, and a subsequent legacy of £500, by Francis H. Sitwell, Esq.; and £6337. 2. 10. bequeathed by the late Rev. Thomas Gisborne, who also gave like sums to the infirmaries of Nottingham and Derby.

Several extensive charitable benefactions have been made for the benefit of the inhabitants. Mr. Thomas Hanby left £8000, of which the interest of £3000 was for the benefit of the boys' charity school, and that of the remaining £5000 for distribution among the poor and creditable housekeepers, members of the church of England, and not under fifty years of age, two-thirds of the number to be men, and one-third women: the nomination is in the Master and Wardens of the Cutlers' Company, the past masters, the vicar and churchwardens, and the Town's Trust. Mrs. Eliza Parkins bequeathed £10,000, one-half of which is appropriated to the support of the boys' charity school, and the interest of the remainder divided annually among such poor persons as the vicar, the three assistant ministers, and the churchwardens, shall select. Mrs. Mary Parsons bequeathed £1500 to be invested in the funds, and the proceeds annually divided among forty-eight aged and infirm silver-platers; Mr. John Kirby left £400, the interest of which is annually divided between two poor widows; and Mr. Joseph Hudson, of London, gave £200 in trust to the Cutlers' Company, to divide the proceeds annually among sixteen of the most needy file-makers: there are also various other charitable bequests for distribution among the indigent; a humane society for recovering persons apparently drowned; a society for ameliorating the condition of the poor, and various others. The neighbourhood, which is rich in mines of iron and coal, abounds also with quarries of excellent stone, some of which, especially that at Grims-thorpe, contain many admirable specimens of calamites; and the coal shale and iron-stone have beautiful impressions of various vegetable productions. On Spital Hill, near the town, was an hospital, founded in the reign of Henry II., by William de Lovetot, and dedicated to St. Leonard, of which there is no vestige; and of the ancient manor-house, in which Cardinal Wolsey and Mary Queen of Scots were confined, the ruins can but faintly be traced. In 1761, two thin plates of copper were ploughed up on a piece of land, called the Lawns, each containing an inscription commemorating the manumission of some Roman legionaries, and their enrolment as citizens of Rome. From the prevalence of iron-ore, the waters of Sheffield have a slight chalybeate property. The Rev. Dr. Robert Saunderson, Regius Professor of Divinity in the University of Oxford, and Bishop of Lincoln; the Rev. Mr. Balguay, Prebendary of North Grantham in the Cathedral Church of Salisbury, and an eminent disputant in the Bangorian controversy, were natives of this place: and Chantrey, the celebrated sculptor, was born at Norton, a village about three miles from the town. Sheffield gives the titles of baron and earl to the family of Holroyd.

SHEFFORD, a chapelry (formerly a market town) in the parish of CAMPTON, hundred of CLIFTON, county of BEDFORD, $9\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E. by S.) from Bedford, containing 618 inhabitants. The chapel, dedicated to St. Michael, has lately received an addition of two hundred and two free sittings, the Incorporated Society for the enlargement of churches and chapels having granted £250 towards defraying the expense. The market, which was on Friday, has been discontinued. The river Ivel has been rendered navigable to Biggleswade, by the assistance of a canal recently cut. Robert Bloomfield, the poet, died here in 1823.

SHEFFORD (EAST), a parish in the hundred of KINTBURY-EAGLE, county of BERKS, $5\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. E.) from Hungerford, containing 59 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Berks, and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £9. 11. 3., and in the patronage of the Rev. C. B. Coxe. This parish is entitled to send children to the school founded by Lady Frances Winchcombe at Thatcham.

SHEFFORD (WEST), a parish in the hundred of KINTBURY-EAGLE, county of BERKS, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E. by N.) from Hungerford, containing 490 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Berks, and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £14. 3. 4., and in the patronage of the Principal and Fellows of Brasenose College, Oxford. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is principally in the Norman style, with a circular tower at the west end. Near the north door is a niche enriched with pinnacles, &c., and the font is richly and curiously carved with foliage. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. This parish is entitled to send one boy to the school founded by W. Saunders at Chaddleworth. Charles I. took up his quarters here on the 19th of November, 1644.

SHEINTON, a parish in the hundred of STOTTESDEN, though locally in that of Conover, county of SALOP, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by W.) from Much Wenlock, containing 182 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Salop, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, rated in the king's books at £6. 9. 2., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of W. Hill, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul. The parish is bounded on the north by the river Severn.

SHELDING, a township in that part of the parish of RIPON which is in the lower division of the wapentake of CLARO, West riding of the county of YORK, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by S.) from Ripon, containing 56 inhabitants.

SHELDON, a chapelry in the parish of BAKEWELL, hundred of HIGH PEAK, county of DERBY, 3 miles (W.)

from Bakewell, containing 143 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Dean and Chapter of Lichfield, endowed with £200 private benefaction, £600 royal bounty, and £200 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Vicar of Bakewell. The chapel is dedicated to All Saints. There are lead mines in the neighbourhood. Mary Frost, in 1756, gave £200 for apprenticing poor boys. Sheldon is in the honour of Tutbury, duchy of Lancaster, and within the jurisdiction of a court of pleas held at Chapel en le Frith, for the recovery of debts under 40s.

SHELDON, a parish in the hundred of HAYRIDGE, county of DEVON, 7 miles (E. by N.) from Cullompton, containing 186 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Exeter, endowed with £600 private benefaction, and £800 royal bounty, and in the patronage of John R. Drewe, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. James.

SHELDON, a parish in the Birmingham division of the hundred of HEMLINGFORD, county of WARWICK, $4\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. W.) from Coleshill, containing 423 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Coventry, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, rated in the king's books at £8. 10. 10., and in the patronage of Earl Digby. The church, dedicated to St. Giles, is principally in the decorated style, with a fine tower of later architecture.

SHELDWICK, a parish in the hundred of FAVERSHAM, lathe of SCRAY, county of KENT, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. by W.) from Faversham, containing 545 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Canterbury, rated in the king's books at £6. 16. 8., and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Canterbury. The church, dedicated to St. James, is principally in the decorated style of English architecture.

SHELF, a township in the parish of HALIFAX, wapentake of MORLEY, West riding of the county of YORK, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E. by N.) from Halifax, containing 1998 inhabitants. There is a place of worship for Primitive Methodists. A Lancasterian school has been established for children of all persuasions.

SHELFANGER, a parish in the hundred of DISS, county of NORFOLK, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by W.) from Diss, containing 440 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £17, and in the patronage of the Duke of Norfolk. The church is dedicated to All Saints. There is a place of worship for Baptists.

SHELFORD, a parish in the southern division of the wapentake of BINGHAM, county of NOTTINGHAM, 8 miles (E. N. E.) from Nottingham, containing, with the township of Saxondale, and part of that of Newton, 671 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Nottingham, and diocese of York, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £300 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Earl of Chesterfield. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is the burial-place of the noble family of Stanhope, and contains the remains of Philip, the accomplished Earl of Chesterfield, who died in 1773. This parish forms part of the vale of Trent, which river bounds it on the west and north, and the Fosse-road touches its south-eastern boundary. It is in the honour of Tutbury, duchy of Lancaster, and within the jurisdiction of a court of pleas held at Tutbury every third Tuesday, for the recovery of debts under 40s. A priory, in honour of the blessed Virgin Mary, was founded here, in the time of Henry II., by Ralph Hanselyn, which, at the dissolution, had a revenue of £151. 14. 1. An hospital, called the Bede Houses, was founded and endowed, in 1694, by Sir William Stanhope, for the reception and support of six of his decayed tenants, but the number has been reduced to four. The manor-house was garrisoned by Col. Stanhope, son of the first Earl of Chesterfield, for Charles I., and taken by storm by Col. Hutchinson, for the parliament, after a gallant resistance, during which Colonel Stanhope and most of his men were slain.

SHELFORD (GREAT), a parish in the hundred of THRILOW, county of CAMBRIDGE, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. by E.) from Cambridge, containing 718 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the Bishop of Ely, rated in the king's books at £13. 6. 8., endowed with £600 royal bounty, and £1600 parliamentary grant. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is said to have been built by Bishop Fordham, who died in 1425; the steeple was blown down by the great storm of 1703, and again, in 1798; it has since been rebuilt by subscription.

SHELFORD (LITTLE), a parish in the hundred of THRILOW, county of CAMBRIDGE, 5 miles (S. by E.) from Cambridge, containing 438 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Ely, rated in the king's books at £15. 9. 7. The Rev. H. Finch was patron in 1806. The church is dedicated to All Saints. There is a place of worship for Independents. Near the bridge over the Cam, which separates Great and Little Shelford, stood anciently a hermitage.

SHELL, a hamlet in the parish of HIMBLETON, middle division of the hundred of OSWALDSLOW, county of WORCESTER, containing 45 inhabitants.

SHELLAND, a parish in the hundred of STOW, county of SUFFOLK, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. N. W.) from Stow-Market, containing 104 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Sudbury, and diocese of Norwich.

SHELLEY, a parish in the hundred of ONGAR, county of ESSEX, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (N.) from Chipping-Ongar, containing 179 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Essex, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £9. 15. J. Tomlinson, Esq. was patron in 1812. The church is dedicated to St. Peter.

SHELLEY, a parish in the hundred of SAMFORD, county of SUFFOLK, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S.) from Hadleigh, containing 130 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Suffolk, and diocese of Norwich, endowed with £16 per annum and £200 private benefaction, and £800 royal bounty, and in the patronage of Sir W. B. Rush, Knt. The church is dedicated to All Saints.

SHELLEY, a township in the parish of KIRK-BURTON, upper division of the wapentake of AGRIGG, West riding of the county of YORK, 6 miles (S. E.) from Huddersfield, containing 1329 inhabitants. There are places of worship for Independents and Wesleyan Methodists.

SHELLLOW-BOWELS, a parish in the hundred of DUNMOW, county of ESSEX, $6\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. E.) from Chipping-Ongar, containing 114 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, consolidated with that of Willingale-Doe, in the jurisdiction of the Commissary of Essex and Herts, concurrently with the Consistorial Court of the Bishop of London, rated in the king's books at £7. 13. 4. The church is dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul.

SHELSLEY (KING'S), a hamlet in that part of the parish of SHELSLEY-BEAUCHAMP which is in the upper division of the hundred of DODDINGTREE, county of WORCESTER, $9\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W. by W.) from Stourport, containing 264 inhabitants.

SHELSLEY-BEAUCHAMP, a parish partly in the lower, and partly in the upper, division of the hundred of DODDINGTREE, county of WORCESTER, $8\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. W.) from Stourport, containing 546 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Worcester, rated in the king's books at £9. 4. $4\frac{1}{2}$, and in the patronage of Lord Foley. The church is dedicated to All Saints. Caleb Avenant, in 1723, gave certain land in support of a school.

SHELSLEY-WALSH, a parish in the upper division of the hundred of DODDINGTREE, county of WORCESTER, 9 miles (S. W.) from Stourport, containing 57 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Worcester, rated in the king's books at £3. 8. 9., and in the patronage of Lord Foley. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew.

SHELWELL, a parish in the hundred of PLOUGHLEY, county of OXFORD, 6 miles (N. N. E.) from Bicester, containing 51 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, annexed to that of Newton-Purcell, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, rated in the king's books at £4. The church, which was dedicated to St. Ebbe, has been long desecrated.

SHELTON, a parish in the hundred of STODDEN, county of BEDFORD, 4 miles (W. by N.) from Kimbolton, containing 129 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Bedford, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £13, and in the patronage of Lord St. John. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. This parish has the privilege of sending five boys to the free school which was founded, in 1702, by Joseph Neale, in the adjoining parish of Nether Dean.

SHELTON, a parish in the hundred of DEPWADE, county of NORFOLK, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E. by S.) from St. Mary Stratton, containing 236 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, with that of Hardwich annexed, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £8, and in the patronage of the King, by reason of lunacy. The church dedicated to St. Mary, was built by Sir Ralph Shelton, who also erected the manor-house, now in ruins: it was a spacious castellated structure, with a chapel attached, encompassed by an embattled wall and a moat.

SHELTON, a parish in the southern division of the wapentake of NEWARK, county of NOTTINGHAM, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. by W.) from Newark, containing 105 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Nottingham, and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £6. 14. $4\frac{1}{2}$. The Rev. J. J. Maltby was patron in 1814. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

SHELTON, a chapelry in the parish of STOKE upon TRENT, northern division of the hundred of PIREHILL, county of STAFFORD, 2 miles (E. N. E.) from Newcastle under Lyne, containing, with Etruria, and part of Cobridge, 7325 inhabitants. This, like many other places in this part of the county, has risen from the extensive potteries carried on in the vicinity, and consists chiefly of the houses of the proprietors, which are handsome buildings, and of the dwellings of the numerous workmen. The village is amply supplied with water, and is paved with brick, and lighted with gas, under the superintendence of commissioners appointed under an act of parliament obtained in 1815, and amended in 1828, for its regulation and improvement. A mechanics' institution was established in 1826, under the patronage of the Marquis of Stafford, Josiah Wedgwood, Esq., and others; lectures are delivered in a spacious and commodious room over the British and Foreign school-rooms, in which also concerts, generally for the benefit of some charitable institution, take place occasionally, and the public meetings of the inhabitants are held. Races have been recently established in the neighbourhood, and are generally well attended. The principal articles of manufacture are, porcelain, china, and earthenware, for which there are thirty-four factories, affording employment to more than two thousand five hundred men, women, and children. The works are on the bank of the Trent and Mersey canal, which passes through the village, and affords great facility for the transport of goods, which are sent in great quantities to the London market, and to the principal towns in England: there are also convenient wharfs on its banks, and extensive gas-works have been erected. The regulation of the police, like that of the adjoining township of Hanley, is under the superintendence of the commissioners appointed under the act, and all public meetings of the inhabitants are convened by the chief bailiff of that township, in which the public market for both townships is held. Shelton is in the honour of Tutbury, duchy of Lancaster, and within the jurisdiction of a court of pleas held at Tutbury every third Tuesday, for the recovery of debts under 40s.

This chapelry is, by act of parliament passed in 1827, for the further endowment of the living, about to be erected into a parish and district rectory, and a new church is at present being built by grant from the parliamentary commissioners. There are places of worship for Baptists, Independents, Wesleyan Methodists of the Old and New Connexions, and Unitarians. The British and Foreign school, in which more than six hundred children are instructed, was established in 1821, and is supported by subscription; and there are also Sunday schools in connexion with the established church, and the various dissenting congregations, in which several thousand children are instructed. In the immediate vicinity is the North Staffordshire Infirmary, a noble institution, of extensive public utility, forming a valuable school of medicine, and a source of incalculable benefit to the population of this large manufacturing district. Elijah Fenton, the poet, was born and resided in a house in the village, which is still existing; he was buried in the parish church of Stoke upon Trent, where a monument has been erected to his memory. In this township are the Potteries, and the beautiful villa of Etruria, erected by the late Josiah Wedgwood, Esq., the former a considerable hamlet, and the latter remarkable for the beauty of its situation and style of architecture, and for the many splendid Etruscan vases with which it is ornamented: these elegant specimens of art, produced under his own superintendence, are imitations of the original vases found in Italy, to the discovery of which that gentleman was chiefly indebted for the elegance of form, and purity of taste, which he has introduced into the manufacture of porcelain, china, and stone ware, for which this place is so deservedly celebrated, and which, by the use of flint in the composition of these articles, also introduced by Mr. Wedgwood, has been progressively brought to its present state of perfection.

SHELVE, a parish in the hundred of CHIRBURY, county of SALOP, $7\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. by E.) from Bishop's Castle, containing 55 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Salop, and diocese of Hereford, rated in the king's books at £2. 13. 4., endowed with £600 royal bounty, and in the patronage of Robert Bridgeman More, Esq. The church is dedicated to All Saints. Here are numerous veins of lead-ore, which is considered to vie in richness with any in England: one of the mines was worked by the Romans in the time of Adrian, as is evident from an inscription on a pig of lead found in the vicinity. A market on Friday, and a fair on the festival of the Invention of the Cross, were granted by Henry III.

SHELWICK, a township in the parish of HOLMER, hundred of GRIMSWORTH, county of HEREFORD, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E. by N.) from Hereford. The population is returned with the parish.

SHENFIELD, a parish in the hundred of BARS-TABLE, county of ESSEX, 1 mile (N. E. by N.) from Brentwood, containing 619 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Essex, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £14. 18. 4., and in the patronage of the Countess de Grey. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

SHENINGTON, a parish in the upper division of the hundred of TEWKESBURY, county of GLOUCESTER, 6 miles (W. N. W.) from Banbury, containing 381 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Gloucester, rated in the king's books at £15. 3. 4. Robert Dent, Esq. and others were patrons in 1801. The church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, has lately received an addition of one hundred and thirteen sittings, of which ninety are free, the Incorporated Society for the enlargement of churches and chapels having granted £60 towards defraying the expense.

SHENLEY, a parish in the hundred of DACORUM, county of HERTFORD, 6 miles (N. W.) from Chipping-Barnet, containing 1132 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Huntingdon, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £16. 8. $1\frac{1}{2}$. The Rev. T. Newcome was patron in 1801. The church, dedicated to St. Botolph, is built with flints, and has a wooden tower on the south side. A chapel is supposed to have formerly stood on a moated site in the park belonging to the house called Colney Chapel.

SHENLEY, a parish comprising the hamlet of Brook-End in the hundred of COTTESLOE, and the township of Church-End in that of NEWPORT, county of BUCKINGHAM, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by W.) from Penny-Stratford, and containing 449 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Buckingham, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £22. 9. 7., and in the patronage of the Rev. P. Knapp.

The church is dedicated to St. Mary. An almshouse was founded here by Thomas Stafford, Esq., with an endowment of £35 per annum, for four men and two women, each of whom receives a small weekly stipend, and an annual allowance for clothing.

SHENSTONE, a parish in the southern division of the hundred of OFFLOW, county of STAFFORD, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. by W.) from Lichfield, containing 1699 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Stafford, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, rated in the king's books at £6. 5. 8., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of Sir Robert Peel, Bart. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, exhibits specimens of the various styles of English architecture. There is a chapel of ease at Upper Stonnal. An unknown benefactor gave £27 towards building a school-room, for the support of which there is a trifling endowment. There was once a castle, or fortification, at Upper Stonnal, of which only the remembrance is preserved in the name of Castle field. A fair for cattle is held on the last Monday in February.

SHENTON, a chapelry in the parish of MARKET-BOSWORTH, hundred of SPARKENHOE, county of LEICESTER, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W. by S.) from Market-Bosworth, containing 194 inhabitants. The Ashby de la Zouch canal crosses the north-eastern angle of the chapelry.

SHEPHALL, a parish in the hundred of CASHIO, or liberty of ST. ALBANS, county of HERTFORD, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. E. by S.) from Stevenage, containing 187 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of St. Albans, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £9. 5. 10., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

SHEPLEY, a township in the parish of KIRK-BURTON, upper division of the wapentake of AGRIGG, West riding of the county of YORK, 7 miles (S. E. by S.) from Huddersfield, containing 1000 inhabitants.

SHEPPERTON, a parish in the hundred of SPELTHORNE, county of MIDDLESEX, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E. by S.) from Chertsey, containing 782 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Middlesex, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £26. S. H. Russell, Esq. was patron in 1817. The church is dedicated to St. Nicholas.

SHEPRETH, a parish in the hundred of WETHERLEY, county of CAMBRIDGE, $5\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. by W.) from Royston, containing 320 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Ely, rated in the king's books at £6. 11. 1., and in the patronage of Hale Wortham, Esq. The church is dedicated to All Saints. The river Cam runs through the parish.

SHEPSCOM, a chapelry in the parish of PAINSWICK, hundred of BISLEY, county of GLOUCESTER, 2 miles (E. by N.) from Painswick, containing 725 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Gloucester, endowed with £1800 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Vicar of Painswick. The chapel has lately received an addition of sixty free sittings, the Incorporated Society for the enlargement of churches and chapels having granted £60 towards defraying the expense.

SHEPTON-BEAUCHAMP, a parish in the southern division of the hundred of PETHERTON, county of SOMERSET, $3\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. E. by E.) from Ilminster, containing 567 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Taunton, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £14. 8. $11\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of Robert Dent, Esq. and others. The church is dedicated to St. Michael. The poor children of this parish are instructed for £12. 12. a year, arising from the rent of certain land bequeathed by Thomas Rich, in 1723, and from £200, the gift of Elizabeth Morgan, in 1763.

SHEPTON-MALLET, a market town and parish in the hundred of WHITESTONE, county of SOMERSET, 14 miles (N. E.) from Somerton, and 125 (W. by S.) from London, containing 5021 inhabitants. The origin of this town is not comparatively of very remote antiquity, the charter for its market having been granted by Edward II., in the 11th year of his reign. The manor, at the time of the Norman survey, was subordinate to that of Pilton, which had been granted by King Ina to the abbot of Glaston; and its pastures, from the sheep fed on which it is supposed to derive its name, are noticed in that work; the additional and distinguishing appellation having been received from the Barons Mallet, lords of Shepton in the reigns of Henry I. and II. The consequences of the Duke of Monmouth's rebellion were severely felt in this part; thirteen persons of the town, having been convicted at the "bloody western assizes," suffered here for their participation in it. The town is situated chiefly on the southern bank of a deep valley, and consists of a number of streets and lanes, the principal of which, crossing the valley from north to south, is spacious and well built, paved, and lighted with oil, but the others are mostly narrow and irregular: the recent erection of a bridge, and the opening of a new road, have materially improved the town. It is well supplied with water, and a stream runs through the bottom of the valley, turning several mills in its course. The manufacture of woollen goods, silk, lace, stockings, sail-cloth, and hair-seating, is carried on to a considerable extent, and affords employment to a great number of persons. The parish comprises a portion of the Mendip range of hills, prior to the enclosure of which lead-ore was obtained in it. The market days are Tuesday and Friday, the latter a very large one for all kinds of agricultural produce. The market cross, erected by Walter and Agnes Buckland, in 1500, is a fine old structure: it originally consisted of five arches, but it has lately undergone a thorough renovation (funds having been left to keep it in repair by the founders), and a sixth arch has been added in the centre: elevated above two rows of steps is an hexagonal pillar, supporting a flat roof, surmounted by a pyramidal spire, and ornamented with niches. The fairs are on Easter-Monday, 18th of June, and 8th of August. The management of the local affairs is vested in a high constable and subordinate officers, who are chosen at a court leet held annually in October, by the householders generally; and a court for the recovery of debts under £2 has been held here from time immemorial.

The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Wells, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £33. 12. 1., and in the alternate patronage of the King, as Duke of Cornwall, and the Rev. Provis Wickham. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is a venerable cruciform pile of building, to which are attached two small chapels; the roof of the nave is curiously wrought, and the pulpit and font, which are of stone, are much admired: it contains some ancient monuments. There are places of worship for Baptists, Independents, Wesleyan Methodists, and Roman Catholics. The nuns of the order of the Visitation have a convent here, which is the only one of that order in the kingdom; its inmates are about thirty in number. The free school, founded by Sir George Strode and others, in 1639, is endowed with property at present producing about £75 per annum, principally arising from the rectorial tithes of the parish of Meare, subject to the master's keeping the school-house, and the chancel of the parish church of Meare, in repair, and paying a crown-rent of £10. 18. per annum to the Earl of Radnor, for the rectory of Meare: the present master has had no scholar on the foundation. Four poor boys are educated, and an apprentice fee of £7 given with each, by means of a charity founded by Mr. John Curtis, in 1730, now producing about £20 per annum; and sixteen poor girls are clothed and educated from the produce of a bequest made by Mrs. Mary Gapper, in 1783, now amounting to £27 per annum. Almshouses for four poor men were founded and endowed, in 1699, by Mr. Edward Strode, with property now yielding about £360 per annum, of which amount about £80 per annum is appropriated to the repairs of the almshouses, and allowances to the inmates, and about £200 to the purchase of bread for weekly distribution among the poor of the parish, for whose benefit there are several other smaller benefactions. The county bridewell, or house of correction, is in this town: it has been materially enlarged of late years, and is capable of receiving from two to three hundred prisoners; it comprises fourteen wards, fifteen day-rooms, and thirty-one cells, besides workshops and tread-mills: the building was erected by prison labour, the stone being quarried within the walls. The Roman Fosse-way to Ilchester passes through the parish to the eastward of the town. Shepton-Mallet was the birthplace of Hugh Inge, Chancellor of Ireland, who died in 1528; of Walter Charlton, an eminent physician, author of a work on Stonehenge, and other productions; and of Simon Browne, a celebrated dissenting minister.

SHEPTON-MONTAGUE, a parish in the hundred of NORTON-FERRIS, county of SOMERSET, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S.) from Bruton, containing 367 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Wells, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £8. 15., endowed with £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Earl of Ilchester. The church is dedicated to St. Peter.

SHERATON, a township in the parish of MONK-HESLETON, southern division of EASINGTON ward, county palatine of DURHAM, $11\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.) from Stockton upon Tees, containing 116 inhabitants.

SHERBORNE, a market town and parish in the hundred of SHERBORNE, Sherborne division of the county of DORSET, 18 miles (N. by W.) from Dorchester, and 120 (W. S. W.) from London, containing 3622 inhabitants. This place, though of remote antiquity, does not appear to have emerged from comparative insignificance until the Saxon era: the name, anciently written Schiraburn, Schireburn, and Scyreburn, and of which its present appellation is a corruption, is derived from the Saxon words Scire clear, and Burn a spring, or fountain, and was usually written in old Latin records Fons clarus. In 670, a house was founded here for Secular canons, by Cenwalh, King of the West Saxons, and others; and in the year 704, Sherborne was made the head of an episcopal see, which included the counties of Dorset, Somerset, Wilts, Devon, and Cornwall, by Ina, of which his kinsman, Aldhelm, was the first bishop. About 998, the Secular canons were displaced, and a society of Benedictines, established under license from Ethelred, by Wlffin, bishop of this see, who also rebuilt the monastery, and dedicated it to St. Mary, which institution became richly endowed, and at the dissolution its revenue was valued at £682. 14. 7.: the only remains of the convent are the cloister, the abbey barn, and the ancient refectory, now used as a silk manufactory. It is evident that a castle was built here at a very early period, but the founder, and the time of its erection and demolition, are unknown. Previously to the time of Henry I., however, another had succeeded it, which was built by Roger, the third Bishop of Salisbury, and became an episcopal palace: it was an octagonal structure, situated on a hill eastward of the town, and fortified by a moat and several drawbridges: having been seized by Stephen, it remained in the possession of the crown for some time, but about 1350 was recovered by Bishop Wyvil, and reverted to the bishoprick. During the civil war in the reign of Charles, it was garrisoned in the royal interest, and although gallantly defended and one of the last that yielded, it was eventually taken by the parliamentary forces under the command of Fairfax, and was demolished in 1645. Considerable portions of the ruins are remaining: the present mansion, called Sherborne castle, the seat of the Earl of Digby, was built by Sir Walter Raleigh. About 1103 Sherborne is stated to have been burnt by a detachment of the Danish invaders, and the entire destruction of the town and its ecclesiastical buildings, although doubtful, is a matter of great probability. The see continued for nearly three centuries, when it was removed first to Wilton, afterwards to Old Sarum, and finally to New Sarum, or Salisbury; this event contributed much to depress the prosperity of Sherborne, and for a long period afterwards it was in comparative obscurity. The town is situated principally on the side of a hill near the border of the White Hart Forest, and the vale of Blackmore, and is divided by a small stream into two parts, of which one is called Castle Town; it is well paved by a rate on the inhabitants, lighted by subscription, and amply supplied with excellent water. The woollen trade, which formerly flourished, was succeeded by the making of buttons, haberdashery, and lace: in 1740 the first silk-mill was erected, and the various branches of this manufacture, especially the making of silk twist and buttons, afford employment to a great number of the working class. Markets are held on Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday; and fairs on May 22nd, July 18th and 26th, and the first Monday after the 10th of October. The town is within the jurisdiction of the county magistrates: and formerly a court for the recovery of debts under 40s. was held by the steward of the hundred, but has been for some years discontinued.

The living is a vicarage, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Dean of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £20. 4. 7., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church, anciently the cathedral of the bishops of Sherborne, and originally erected by Bishop Aldhelm, stands south of the town, and is dedicated to St. Mary: it was partially destroyed by fire in the reign of Henry VI., and having been rebuilt by the abbots during the three succeeding reigns, it consequently exhibits specimens of different styles of architecture: the semicircular arches and zigzag mouldings in the porch, transept, west end, and north side of the building, are Norman, while the upper part of the nave, the tower, east end, aisles, and some of the chapels, are in the later style of English architecture: the roof is supported by groins springing from the aisles, and at the intersection of the tracery is a variety of arms and emblematical devices. It is a cruciform structure of freestone, with a tower rising from the intersection, one hundred and fifty-four feet high, and containing six bells, the largest of which, weighing more than three tons, was the gift of Cardinal Wolsey, and is considered the largest bell ever rung in a peal. The Saxon kings, Ethelbald and Ethelbert, and many Saxon nobles, bishops and abbots, have been interred here: the church contains some very ancient monuments: it has been enlarged with one hundred free sittings, towards which the Incorporated Society for the building and enlargement of churches and chapels contributed £50. There are places of worship for the Society of Friends, Independents, and Wesleyan Methodists. The free grammar school was founded by Edward VI., who endowed it with property belonging to the several chantries in the churches of Gillingham, Lychett-Matravers, and Marnhull, in the county of Dorset; and of Martock, in the county of Somerset; producing an income of £1200 per annum, and placed it under the government of twenty of the inhabitants, whom he incorporated, and appointed the Bishop of Bristol special visitor: the masters are required to be clergymen and graduates in one of the Universities. There are four exhibitions of £60 per annum each to either of the Universities, tenable for four years by boys on the foundation only, of whom the present number is fifty: the school is in high repute, and, in addition to the scholars on the foundation, there are sixty private boarders, under the care of the masters. One of the principal benefactors to this town was Mr. Benjamin Vowell, who by will gave the dividends of £1000 three per cent. consols., to be annually distributed in clothing, besides two sums of £300, and one of £400, to various benefit societies: he was also a liberal contributor to the funds of the British and Foreign Bible Society, and the Church and London Missionary Societies. The Bluecoat school was founded, in 1640, by Richard Foster, who gave land for the instruction of ten boys and ten girls, directing £5 per annum from the surplus rents to be applied towards maintaining one of the boys at the University, if required. A charity school for boys was founded, in 1717, by John Woodman, who gave £250 to the vicar and churchwardens, for the instruction of poor boys, which sum was vested in land for that purpose. In 1743, William, Lord Digby, gave land for teaching and clothing thirteen poor girls. The churchwardens and overseers have the right of sending three boys to Christchurch Hospital, in London, for whose support Giles Russel gave lands, in 1670. A National school, in which one hundred and twenty boys are taught; and a Lancasterian school, in which sixty boys and girls receive instruction, are supported by subscription. The almshouse, originally an hospital of the order of St. Augustine, was, by license from Henry VI., refounded and dedicated to St. John the Baptist and St. John the Evangelist, for twenty brethren, twelve poor men, four poor women, and a chaplain; and was governed by a master and trustees: it now contains sixteen men and eight women, under the superintendence of a master and nineteen brethren, elected from among the inhabitants of the town; a chaplain officiates daily. There is a very considerable fund for the relief of the poor, arising from land and houses given for that purpose, in 1448, by Robert Neville, Bishop of Sarum, and others; also a small sum for apprenticing poor children, given by Agnes Broughton, in 1633, under the management of the trustees of the almshouse.

SHERBORNE, a parish in the lower division of the hundred of SLAUGHTER, county of GLOUCESTER, 6 miles (N. W. by W.) from Burford, containing 525 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, with that of Windrush united, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Gloucester, rated in the king's books at £15. 6. 8., and in the patronage of Lord Sherborne. The church is dedicated to St. Mary Magdalene. James Bradley, D.D., Regius Professor of Astronomy, and Astronomer Royal, was born here, in 1692: he died in 1762, and was buried at Minchinhampton.

SHERBORNE, a parish in the Snitterfield division of the hundred of BARLICHWAY, county of WARWICK, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. W. by S.) from Warwick, containing 217 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Worcester, endowed with £16 per annum and £400 private benefaction, and £800 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Rev. Elias Webb. The church is dedicated to All Saints.

SHERBORNE (ST. JOHN), a parish in the hundred of BASINGSTOKE, Basingstoke division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. N. W.) from Basingstoke, containing 596 inhabitants. The living comprises a sinecure rectory and a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Winchester, the former rated in the king's books at £9. 8. $1\frac{1}{2}$., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of William L. W. Chute, Esq., and the latter rated at £7, and in the patronage of the Rector. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew. There is a private chapel at the Vine, containing a tomb in memory of Chaloner Chute, Esq., Speaker of the House of Commons in Richard Cromwell's parliament, and the purchaser of this noble mansion, which was erected in the reign of Henry VIII., by the first Lord Sandys. A school for the instruction of upwards of one hundred children of both sexes is liberally supported by Mrs. Chute and Miss Wiggatt.

SHERBORNE (MONKS), a parish partly in the hundred of BASINGSTOKE, Basingstoke division, but chiefly in the hundred of CHUTELY, Kingsclere division, of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by N.) from Basingstoke, containing, with the tything of Chineham, 494 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Winchester, rated in the king's books at £8. 0. $7\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Provost and Fellows of Queen's College, Oxford. The church is dedicated to All Saints. Here was a Benedictine priory, dedicated to St. Mary and St. John, a cell to the abbey of Ceraisy in Normandy, which, at its suppression, was given by Henry VI. to Eton College, but it was finally granted by Edward IV. to the hospital of St. Julian in Southampton, and is enjoyed by the Provost and Fellows of Queen's College, as masters of that hospital.

SHERBURN, a township in the parish of PITTINGTON, southern division of EASINGTON ward, county palatine of DURHAM, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (E.) from Durham, containing 281 inhabitants.

SHERBURN, a parish in the wapentake of BUCKROSE, East riding of the county of YORK, $11\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E. N. E.) from New Malton, containing 496 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of the East riding, and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £6. 0. $2\frac{1}{2}$., endowed with £400 royal bounty, and £400 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of Sir W. Strickland, Bart. The church is dedicated to St. Hilda. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

SHERBURN, a parish partly in the liberty of St. PETER of YORK, East riding, and partly in the upper division of the wapentake of BARKSTONE-ASH, West riding, of the county of YORK, comprising the market town of Sherburn, and the townships of Barkston, Huddleston with Lumby, Lotherton with part of Aberford, Micklefield, South Milford, and Newthorp, and containing 2916 inhabitants, of which number, 1144 are in the town of Sherburn, 15 miles (S. W. by S.) from York, and 184 (N. by W.) from London. The name of this place appears to be of Saxon derivation, being compounded of Scire, clear or pure, and Burn, a spring or fountain, with reference to a small stream by which it is watered. It was anciently of more importance than it is at present, when King Athelstan had a palace here, which was subsequently given to the Archbishop of York, but of which only the site remains, and the present church, which was constructed out of its ruins. In the great civil war, Sherburn was the scene of a remarkable conflict between Lord Digby, Lieutenant-General of the forces north of the Trent, and Colonel Copley, an officer in the interest of the parliament, when, owing to a misunderstanding as to the relative position of the parties, the army of the former was broken up and discomfited, and his baggage and cabinet papers fell into the enemy's hands. The town is situated on the direct road from Tadcaster to Ferrybridge, the vicinity abounding with fine orchards: a species of plum, called the Winesoms, is abundantly prolific and fine in this soil. Flax is cultivated to some extent, and is sent to the Leeds market; teasel also forms a prominent article of trade. About a mile and a half from the town is a quarry of fine stone, and upon a stream, called Bishop Dyke, are several corn-mills. The market, now almost disused, is on Friday; and there is a fair on September 25th. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the Prebendary of Fenton in the Cathedral Church of York, rated in the king's books at £10. 17. 1. The church, which is dedicated to All Saints, is a spacious and handsome structure, the nave presenting a rare and beautiful specimen of ancient architecture. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. Sherburn hospital and school-house were erected, in 1619, in pursuance of the will of Robert Hungate, Esq., who gave a rent-charge of £225. 6. 8. for the maintenance, clothing, and education of twenty-four male orphans of the parishes of Sherburn, Saxton, and Sand-Hutton, the city of York, or elsewhere; also for the support of four scholars at St. John's College, Cambridge, from this foundation: the salary of the master is about £40 per annum, and eight boys of the parish are instructed, clothed, and maintained, until they are fifteen years of age: this school is also entitled to send candidates for Lady Hastings' exhibitions at Queen's College, Oxford. A charity school for poor girls was founded and endowed, in 1731, with certain land, and the sum of £1450, by the Rev. Samuel Duffield. A rich and elegant cross was found, some years ago, in the churchyard, in digging amongst the foundations of an old chapel: traces of a Roman road from this place to Aberford are yet visible.

SHERBURN-HOUSE, an extra-parochial liberty, in the southern division of EASINGTON ward, county palatine of DURHAM, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E. by S.) from Durham, containing 67 inhabitants. An hospital for lepers was founded here, previously to 1181, by Hugh Pudsey, Bishop of Durham: it was dedicated to St. Mary Magdalene, and its revenue, in the reign of Henry VIII., was certified as of the value of £142. 0. 4., the society consisting of a master, several priests, and sixty-five lepers. It is yet in being, having been incorporated in 1585, by Queen Elizabeth, for a master and thirty brethren, and is still subject to the regulations then adopted: the Bishop of Durham appoints the master, who must be in holy orders, and of the degree of M.A. at least; and the master nominates the brethren, who each receive a handsome yearly stipend, besides being comfortably lodged, fed, and clothed. At present this is one of the most richly endowed charitable foundations in the North of England, its income amounting to several thousand pounds per annum. The hospital was enlarged in 1819, by fifteen additional lodging-houses, for the accommodation of as many out-brethren, before which period there were only fifteen inmates. The building, to which is attached a chapel and apartments for the master, is of a quadrangular form, situated in an agreeable vale on the eastern side of Sherburn water.

SHERE, a parish in the second division of the hundred of BLACKHEATH, county of SURREY, 6 miles (E. by S.) from Guildford, containing 1077 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Surrey, and diocese of Winchester, rated in the king's books at £26. 1. $5\frac{1}{2}$. The Bishop of Winchester, by lapse, presented in 1805. The church, dedicated to St. James, is principally in the early style of English architecture, with a tower and spire rising from the centre. There are two places of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. Courts leet and baron are occasionally held by the lord of the manor, William Bray, Esq., the county historian. Thomas Galton, in 1758, gave £400 for teaching poor children. There is a smaller bequest, for a like purpose, the gift of Mr. Duncomb, in 1746.

SHEREFORD, a parish in the hundred of GALLOW, county of NORFOLK, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (W.) from Fakenham, containing 98 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Norwich, VOL. IV.

rated in the king's books at £9, and in the patronage of Marquis Townshend. The church is dedicated to St. Nicholas.

SHERFIELD upon LODON, a parish in the hundred of ODIHAM, Basingstoke division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, $3\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. E. by N.) from Basingstoke, containing 522 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Winchester, rated in the king's books at £11. 3. $6\frac{1}{2}$. The King, by reason of lunacy, presented in 1815. The church is dedicated to St. Leonard. James Sherfield, in 1735, gave £100 to build a school-house, and £25 a year for the education of the children of this parish, including four from Stratfield-Saye.

SHERFIELD-ENGLISH, a parish in the hundred of THORNGATE, Andover division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, $4\frac{3}{4}$ miles (W. N. W.) from Romsey, containing 327 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Winchester, rated in the king's books at £6. 10. $2\frac{1}{2}$, and in the patronage of R. Bristow, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Leonard.

SHERFORD, a parish in the hundred of COLERIDGE, county of DEVON, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E.) from Kingsbridge, containing 429 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the vicarage of Stokenham, in the archdeaconry of Totness, and diocese of Exeter. The church, dedicated to St. Martin, contains some good screen-work. Attached to an old farm-house at Kennedon are some remains of the manorial seat of Justice Hals, who lived in the reign of Henry V.

SHERIFF-HALES, a parish partly in the Newport division of the hundred of BRADFORD (South), county of SALOP, but chiefly in the western division of the hundred of CUTLESTONE, county of STAFFORD, 3 miles (N. by E.) from Shiffnall, containing, with the hamlet of Woodcote, 1064 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Stafford, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, rated in the king's books at £11. 1. 8., and in the patronage of the Marquis of Stafford. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. A milky vitriolic water is found among the iron mines in the neighbourhood.

SHERMANBURY, a parish in the hundred of WINDHAM and EWHURST, rape of BRAMBER, county of SUSSEX, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E. by N.) from Steyning, containing 320 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Lewes, and diocese of Chichester, rated in the king's books at £4. 19. $4\frac{1}{2}$, and in the patronage of the Rev. J. G. Challen, D.D. The church is dedicated to St. Giles. The river Adur, which divides into two branches in the parish, is navigable hither from Shoreham. The springs here are strongly impregnated with iron, and there are some of a saline quality. Here are the groined gateway and some other remains of a castellated mansion, surrounded by a moat called Ewhurst, and anciently a seat of the Lords De la Warr.

SHERMANS-GROUNDS, an extra-parochial district, in the western division of the hundred of GOSCOTE, county of LEICESTER, containing 19 inhabitants.

SHERNBORNE, a parish in the hundred of SMITHDON, county of NORFOLK, $6\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. E. by N.) from Castle-Rising, containing 135 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £8, and in the patronage of the Bishop of Ely. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, was built by one Thorpe, lord of Shernborne, when Felix, Bishop of the East Angles, came to convert the inhabitants to Christianity, and is said to be the second founded in that kingdom; it has no tower, and the chancel has been long in ruins.

SHERRINGHAM, a parish in the northern division of the hundred of ERPINGHAM, county of NORFOLK, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W.) from Cromer, containing 694 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Norwich, endowed with £600 royal bounty, and £1200 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Bishop of Ely. The church is dedicated to All Saints. Here was formerly a monastery of Black canons, a cell to Nutley abbey, Buckinghamshire.

SHERRINGTON, a parish in the hundred of NEWPORT, county of BUCKINGHAM, $1\frac{3}{4}$ mile (N. N. E.) from Newport-Pagnell, containing 796 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Buckingham, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £20. 0. $2\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Lincoln. The church is dedicated to St. Laud.

SHERRINGTON, a parish forming a detached portion of the hundred of BRANCH and DOLE, county of WILTS, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. E. by N.) from Hindon, containing 165 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £11, and in the patronage of E. Lambert, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Michael.

SHERSTON (MAGNA), a parish in a detached portion of the hundred of CHIPPENHAM, county of WILTS, $5\frac{3}{4}$ miles (W. by S.) from Malmesbury, containing 1146 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, with the rectory of Sherston Parva united, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £10. 2., endowed with £1000 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Gloucester. The church, dedicated to the Holy Cross, exhibits portions of Norman and of the several styles of English architecture: it is a large structure, with a lofty tower rising from the centre. Mrs. Hodges, in 1726, bequeathed a rent-charge of £5 for teaching poor children; besides which there are a trifling sum, the gift of Thomas Byrton, in 1721, and £200 left by Ann Brain, in 1780, for the like purpose. Two small streams, forming the river Avon, unite in this parish. Sherston, from its situation near the Consular way, and from the coins of Antoninus, Faustinus, Gordianus, Flavius, Julianus, and others found here, was evidently occupied by the Romans. In the neighbourhood are the foundations and fragments of three stone crosses; and here was fought, in 1016, an obstinate battle between Edmund Ironside and Canute the Great.

SHERSTON (PARVA), or SHERSTON-PINKNEY, a parish in a detached portion of the hundred of CHIPPENHAM, county of WILTS, $4\frac{3}{4}$ miles (W.) from Malmesbury, containing 123 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, united to the vicarage of Sherston Magna, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £3. 14. $4\frac{1}{2}$. The church has long been demolished, no institution having taken place since 1640, when the patronage was in the Crown.

SHERWILL, a parish in the hundred of SHERWILL, county of DEVON, 4 miles (N. E.) from Barnstaple, containing 645 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Barnstaple, and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £30. 3. $11\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of Sir Arthur Chichester, Bart. The church is dedicated to St. Peter.

SHEVINGTON, a township in the parish of STANDISH, hundred of LEYLAND, county palatine of LANCASTER, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. W. by W.) from Wigan, containing 836 inhabitants.

SHEVIOCK, a parish in the southern division of the hundred of EAST, county of CORNWALL, 3 miles (S. by E.) from St. Germans, containing 491 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Cornwall, and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £26. 14. 7., and in the patronage of the Rt. Hon. R. P. Carew. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is an ancient structure, containing a sumptuous monument to the memory of Sir Edward and Lady Courtenay, and several curious tombs of the family of Dawney. The parish is bounded on the north by the Lynher river, and on the south by the English channel. At Wrinkle Cove is an ancient pier, and off the coast a considerable pilchard fishery.

SHIELDS (NORTH), a sea-port and market town, partly in the township of NORTH SHIELDS, partly in that of TYNEMOUTH, partly in that of PRESTON, and partly in that of CHIRTON, parish of TYNEMOUTH, eastern division of CASTLE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, 8 miles (E. N. E.) from Newcastle, and 276 (N. by W.) from London; the township of North Shields contains 8205 inhabitants, and the present population of the town is supposed to be about 20,000. The earliest notice of this place occurs in the reign of Edward I., from which it appears, that in the preceding reign the only buildings on the site of the present town consisted of fishermens' huts, or Shielings, of which the name is supposed to be a corruption. At about the same period, the prior and monks of Tynemouth erected houses here, formed a harbour, established a market, and encouraged the settlement of ship-builders and tradesmen, thereby exciting the jealousy of the burgesses of Newcastle, who possessed the exclusive trade of the Tyne, and commenced proceedings against the prior, who, by a judgment of the court of King's Bench, was obliged to destroy the buildings that he had erected, and to give up the commerce which he was creating, and the town consequently returned to its former obscurity, and remained in that state until the middle of the seventeenth century, when Cromwell used exertions to remove the restrictions which prevented it from assuming that station as a commercial town which its situation was entitled to, by causing an act to be passed for the erection of quays, &c., and the establishment of a market twice a week; but his death interfered with these plans, and it was not until the close of the seventeenth century, that any of the restrictions crippling its trade were removed: since that period the facilities afforded by the increase of knowledge to the freedom of trade having caused the abolition of the remaining restrictions, North Shields has advanced rapidly to its present importance, and the immense augmentation in its commerce may be estimated from the circumstance of its population having increased, in the period between the census of 1801 and that of 1821, upwards of nine thousand seven hundred persons, being more than three-fourths of the whole number of inhabitants at the former period.

The town is situated on the northern shore of the river Tyne, at its confluence with the German Ocean, and opposite to South Shields, which is on the southern bank of the river. The older part consists chiefly of narrow lanes and alleys, and its appearance has been compared to that of Wapping in London, but the more recent additions comprise several spacious streets, three handsome squares, and many houses of a very superior description, both in the town and its immediate vicinity. The theatre is a small brick building, fitted up in a neat and appropriate manner, and is open for a few months in the winter season. A subscription library was established in 1807, and the valuable collection of books of which it is composed is kept in a handsome building erected for the purpose. A scientific and mechanics' institution was formed in 1825, which is rapidly advancing in prosperity. The town is lighted with gas; and water, which formerly in dry seasons was difficult to be procured, is now abundantly supplied from the reservoirs at Percy Main, Whitley, and Waterville, and conveyed by pipes into the town, by a company incorporated in 1786. The harbour is capable of containing two thousand sail of vessels, and in spring tides ships of five hundred tons' burden can pass the bar crossing its mouth in safety. The principal article of trade is coal, which is exported in large quantities to London and places on the eastern coasts of England and Scotland, and this trade employs the greater part of the vessels belonging to the port, the number of which, in 1827, was two hundred and seventy-nine, a few being engaged in the American and Baltic trade, and in the Greenland and Davis' Straits fishery. Ships of three hundred tons' burden can load or unload at the quay, which is spacious, and has a crane for facilitating the landing or shipping of goods. The principal manufactures are such as are connected with the shipping, there being six ship-builders' yards, two sail-cloth manufactories, two salt-works, and a chain-cable and anchor manufactory; in addition to which are rope-walks, and manufactories for tobacco, gloves, and hats. Some inconvenience is felt from ships being obliged to clear out at the custom-house at Newcastle; here is an office belonging to that establishment, and at Clifford's Fort is a watch-house, where officers are stationed, with a lighthouse adjoining to it: a life-boat is also kept here, which was presented to the town by the Duke of Northumberland, in 1798, with a donation of £20 towards keeping it in repair. A weekly market is held on Friday, in a spacious and commodious market-place, formed in 1804, by the Duke of Northumberland, as lord of the manor; and there is a statute fair annually on the first Friday in November. A meeting of magistrates is held every Tuesday; and a court leet and baron, for making presentments, and for the recovery of debts under 40s., is held at Easter and Michaelmas, by the steward of the manor of Tynemouth.

North Shields has had no place of worship belonging to the established church (the inhabitants having attended the church at Tynemouth) until recently, when a chapel of ease was erected in the market-place. There are two places of worship belonging to Methodists in the New Connexion, and one each to Particular Baptists, the Society of Friends, Independents, Primitive and Wesleyan Methodists, Presbyterians, United Secession Church, and Roman Catholics, also a synagogue: that belonging to the Wesleyan Methodists is a spacious building, erected in 1807, at an expense of £2500. A free school, with houses for the master and mistress, was erected by subscription in 1810, in commemoration of the royal jubilee; it is supported by subscriptions, and nearly three hundred children of both sexes are instructed on the Lancastrian plan. Another school was founded and liberally endowed by Mr. Thomas Kettlewell, in 1825, for which a handsome and commodious house has been erected, at an expense of £1200, and nearly two hundred boys are gratuitously instructed. The dispensary, which was established in 1802, is supported by donations and annual subscriptions, and has afforded most extensive relief to the poor. In addition to the institutions already noticed, there are several benefit societies, particularly that formed in 1824, for the mutual relief of sailors suffering from sickness, shipwreck, or want, and consisting of upwards of two thousand members. Steamboats pass regularly every day between this town and Newcastle, and a constant intercourse is maintained by boats with South Shields. It has been frequently proposed to connect this latter town with North Shields, to accomplish which a tunnel, to pass under the bed of the river, was at one period proposed; and it was more recently thought that a chain bridge would be the most desirable mode of opening a communication between the two places; but this appears to have been abandoned, from a fear that it might obstruct the progress of the shipping.

SHIELDS (SOUTH), a sea-port, and market town, partly in the chapelry of SOUTH SHIELDS, and partly in that of WESTOE, parish of JARROW, eastern division of CHESTER ward, county palatine of DURHAM, 20 miles (N.N.E.) from Durham, and 278 (N.N.W.) from London; the township of South Shields contains 8885 inhabitants, and the present population of the town is supposed to exceed 17,000. Although this town has only attained its present size and importance in very recent times, its origin appears to lay claim to considerable antiquity; many remains of the Romans, consisting of altars, an hypocaust, coins, and other memorials, discovered on Lawe hill, near the town, indicating that it was one of the stations occupied by that people, though the name by which it was then known has not been ascertained. The military road, called the "Wreken Dyke," terminated here, and an elevated pavement at the western end of the town appears to be a Roman work. It is situated on the southern bank of the Tyne, at its junction with the German Ocean, nearly opposite to North Shields: the old part of the town consists principally of a long, narrow, and inconvenient street, running along the shore of the river, but the higher and more modern part of it comprises many spacious and well-built houses: it is lighted with gas, supplied by works completed in 1824, at an expense of £4000. In the large square near the centre of the town is the town hall, erected, about 1768, by the Dean and Chapter of Durham, in which the petty sessions for this part of the eastern division of Chester ward are held, on the second and fourth Wednesdays in each month; and a court leet and court baron by the Dean and Chapter, as lords of the manor, for making presentments, and for the recovery of small debts: it is also used as an exchange by the merchants, and as a public news-room; the under part is composed of a colonnade, in which the market for butter, eggs, and poultry, is held. A subscription library was established in 1803, and "a Literary, Scientific, and Mechanics' Institution" in 1825; the latter, in addition to its library, possesses apparatus for mechanical and scientific experiments, and has very much contributed to increase a desire for knowledge in its neighbourhood. The theatre, erected in 1791, on the Bank Top, is a neat building. This town owes much of its present importance to the salt trade, which was established about 1499; and during the reigns of Elizabeth, James, and Charles I., it attracted many strangers, who settled here. When in its most flourishing state, in 1696, it employed nearly one hundred and fifty salt-pans, and many hundred individuals; but it has so much declined, that the number of pans does not now exceed five, producing about six tons of salt weekly. It has, however, been succeeded by other branches of business, from which the town derives equal benefit, the principal being the coal trade: in addition to the coal brought down the river in keels and shipped here, two mines are worked in the immediate neighbourhood; connected with them are staiths on the banks of the river, for facilitating the loading of vessels, by means of which a cargo is frequently shipped in one tide. The number of vessels belonging to the port in 1827 was two hundred and fifty-nine, though within the last century the number was only four or five: the majority of them are employed as colliers, and a few in the American, Baltic, and Indian trades. Here are thirteen dry docks, which will contain nineteen large vessels, and extensive yards for ship-building are attached to each dock: during the late war, when the trade of the port was most flourishing, thirty vessels have been launched in a year, but the number is now very far short of this. There are nine glass-houses in the neighbourhood, in which the different kinds of crown and flint glass, and glass bottles, are made, and some mills for grinding it; the duty paid in one year, during the war, on this branch of manufacture amounted to £89,334. There are also three breweries, and seven rope-walks, in some of which patent cordage is made. The market is on Wednesday; and fairs, granted by charter of Bishop Trevor, in 1770, are held on June 24th and September 1st, but they are indifferently attended.

The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Durham, and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Durham. The chapel, dedicated to St. Hilda, is of great antiquity, although very little remains of the original edifice, it having been, with the exception of the old tower, modernised and nearly rebuilt in 1810, at an expense of nearly £5000; the altar is placed in a circular recess, ornamented with three transparent paintings of scriptural subjects: a lectureship has been established, with an allowance of about £200 per annum, raised by subscription among the inhabitants, who appoint the lecturer. A chapel of ease was erected in 1818, in that part of the town which is in the township of Westoe, at an expense of about £2400, raised by subscription, towards which, £1000 was given by the Dean and Chapter of Durham, and £500 by the trustees of Lord Crewe: it contains one thousand two hundred sittings, seven hundred of which are free. The ground-floor of the building is used for a school, which was established at the same time, and in which upwards of three hundred children of both sexes are instructed on the National system. There are two places of worship each belonging to the Particular Baptists, Wesleyan Methodists, and Presbyterians, and one each to Independents, Methodists of the New Connexion, and Primitive Methodists, and the United Secession Church: nearly all of which have Sunday schools attached. A charity school was founded, in 1772, by subscriptions amounting to upwards of £1400, which, by the aid of subsequent liberal donations, affords instruction to about one hundred and twenty children: it is under the superintendence of five trustees, elected annually, one of whom is always the minister for the time being. The dispensary, established in 1821, has been productive of great benefit, having afforded relief to nearly three thousand poor persons: there are several other benevolent and benefit societies established in the town. The invention of the life-boat originated with a few benevolent individuals of the town, who assisted Mr. Greathead to construct one, which was found effectual for its purpose, and to whom parliament voted a reward of £1200. To Mr. Marshall, another native, the seamen of the eastern coast are indebted for the construction of the floating-light off Newwarp Sand, on the coast of Norfolk.

SHIFFNALL, a parish in the Shiffnall division of the hundred of BRIMSTREE, county of SALOP, comprising the market town of Shiffnall, the chapelry of Priors-Lee, the townships of Hatton and Woodside, and the hamlet of Oakengates, and containing 4411 inhabitants, of which number, 1463 are in the town of Shiffnall, $17\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by S.) from Shrewsbury, and 143 (N. W.) from London. This place, formerly called Idsall, appears to have been of greater note than it is at present, although the origin of its name and history is involved in obscurity. It belonged to Earl Morcar prior to the Conquest and, at a period considerably later, it was the property of the family of Dunstanville, one of whom, Walter de Dunstanville, by the special command of Henry III., resided in the marches of Wales, to protect them against the ravaging incursions of the Welch. It afterwards came into the possession of the Badlesmeres, who obtained from Edward I. a market for two days in the week, and two yearly fairs. Bartholomew de Badlesmere having been executed for his participation in the battle of Boroughbridge, it subsequently became the property of various persons of distinction, among whom were the families of Bohun, Tiptoft, Ap Rees, Mortimer, Talbot, &c. The town is supposed to have been destroyed by fire, and subsequently built on its present site, to the eastward of the church, it being, prior to its destruction, situated to the westward; and a book printed towards the end of the fifteenth century, entitled "the Burnynge of the town of Idsall, alias Shiffnall," is said to be in existence, though very scarce. It is situated on the high road from London to Holyhead, in a country abounding with coal and iron-ore, and is indifferently paved and not lighted, but the inhabitants are supplied with good water from wells: there are two paper-manufactories, and the coal and iron mines in the neighbourhood are worked on an extensive scale by a company at Priors-Lee. A subscription library has been established. The market is on Tuesday; and there are fairs on the first Monday in April, August 5th, and November 23rd, for hops, horses, and cattle of different kinds. A petty session is held monthly by the magistrates, and a court leet annually.

The living is a vicarage, with the perpetual curacy of Priors-Lee annexed, in the archdeaconry of Salop, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, rated in the king's books at £15. 6. 8., and in the patronage of George Brooke, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a large ancient cruciform structure, with a tower in the centre; the prevailing style of architecture is the later Norman, with many modern alterations, and the four pointed arches supporting the tower are good specimens of that style: the chancel, in which are two round-headed windows (now blocked up), with slender-shafted columns and decorated capitals, is evidently of earlier date, and is separated from the tower by a large semicircular arch, which is a fine specimen of the early Norman style: the roof of the nave, composed of oak richly carved, is covered by a plaister ceiling, added in 1810, when the church underwent a thorough repair: there are some ancient monuments, and a tablet to the memory of one William Wakeley, stating that he died in 1714, having lived in the reigns of eight kings and queens. The Baptists and Independents have each places of worship here. A free school, founded in 1595, by John Aaron, had, from other endowments, an income of £13. 17. 4., which was paid to the master until 1816, when an addition was made from a fund raised by subscription, making the income £30 per annum, and the National system was adopted; about one hundred and thirty children of both sexes are instructed. Three exhibitions to Christ Church College, Oxford, founded, in 1689, by Edward Careswell, are attached to this school, but the course of education pursued not qualifying the scholars for the University, the benefit of them is enjoyed by a private classical school, the master of which is nominally classical master of the free school. Six poor girls are clothed and instructed in reading and working, from a small endowment by Beatrice Jobber, and there are some minor bequests for the benefit of the poor. In a field near the town are the remains of a military station, consisting of a circular mound with a ditch. Shiffnall was the birthplace of Dr. Beddoes, a physician eminent as well for his literary attainments as for professional skill.

SHIFFORD, a chapelry in the parish and hundred of BAMPTON, county of OXFORD, 6 miles (S.E.) from Witney, containing 42 inhabitants.

SHILBOTTLE, a parish in the eastern division of COQUETDALE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, comprising the townships of Guyson, Hazon, Newton on the Moor, Shilbottle, Whittle, and Woodhouse, and containing 1153 inhabitants, of which number, 548 are in the township of Shilbottle, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. by E.) from Alnwick. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Northumberland, and diocese of Durham, rated in the king's books at £4. 14. 8., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church, dedicated to St. James, was thoroughly repaired about 1793. Coal of a superior quality is obtained here. Henry Strother, in 1741, founded and endowed a school for teaching poor children, the income of which was augmented by Francis Strother, in 1765 and 1770.

SHILDON, a township in that part of the parish of ST. ANDREW AUCKLAND which is in the north-western division of DARLINGTON ward, county palatine of DURHAM, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E. by S.) from Bishop-Auckland, containing 115 inhabitants. Here is an extensive dépôt for goods, on the line of the railway from Witton park to Darlington and Stockton. A free school, erected by Mrs. Edward Whalton, is endowed with £25 a year, and a house and land occupied by the master.

SHILLINGFORD, a parish in the hundred of GANFIELD, county of BERKS, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. E. by E.) from Great Farringdon, containing 271 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Berks, and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £17. 8. 11 $\frac{1}{2}$. W. Y. Mills, Esq. was patron in 1810. The church, dedicated to St. Faith, is partly Norman, and partly in the early style of English architecture: it contains some ancient and curious monuments, particularly an altar-tomb to the memory of John de Blewbury, a priest, who died in 1372.

SHILLINGFORD (ST. GEORGE), a parish in the hundred of EXMINSTER, county of DEVON, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. S. W.) from Exeter, containing 70 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, recently consolidated with that of Dunchideock, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £9, and in the patronage of Sir L. V. Palk, Bart. The church contains an old monument to one of the Courtenay family.

SHILLINGSTONE, or SHILLING-OKEFORD, a parish in the hundred of CRANBORNE, in a detached portion of the Shaston (West) division of the county of DORSET, $5\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. W.) from Blandford-Forum, containing 430 inhabitants. The living is a rectory in mediety, in the archdeaconry of Dorset, and diocese of Bristol, the first mediety rated in the king's books at £7. 9. 9 $\frac{1}{2}$, and the second at £6. 16. 5 $\frac{1}{2}$, and in the patronage of J. Thompson, Esq. The church, dedicated to the Holy Rood, has an embattled tower, crowned with pinnacles: it contains a small altar-tomb, erected, it is said, to the memory of the founder. The parish is bounded on the north by the river Stour.

SHILTON, a parish partly in the hundred of FARRINGTON, county of BERKS, and partly in the hundred of BAMPTON, county of OXFORD, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. S. E.) from Burford, containing 256 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, rated in the king's books at £5. 5. 5. Miss Georges and others were patrons in 1808. The church is in Oxfordshire, the greater part of the parish in Berkshire, and the vicarage-house upon the boundary of the two counties. A charity school is supported by subscriptions.

SHILTON, a parish in the Kirby division of the hundred of KNIGHTLOW, county of WARWICK, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. E.) from Coventry, containing 396 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Coventry, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, endowed with £800 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew. The Oxford canal crosses the southern portion of the parish.

SHILTON (EARL), county of LEICESTER.—See EARL-SHILTON.

SHILVINGTON, a township in that part of the parish of MORPETH which is in the western division of CASTLE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, 5 miles (S. W. by S.) from Morpeth, containing 110 inhabitants.

SHIMPLING, a parish in the hundred of DISS, county of NORFOLK, $3\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. E.) from Diss, containing 179 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £10. 13. 4. P. J. Harrison, Esq. was patron in 1821. The church, dedicated to St. George, was erected early in the thirteenth century, but the steeple appears to be of more ancient date; a representation of St. George and the Dragon, and the arms of the Shimplings, are carved on the front of it.

SHIMPLING, a parish in the hundred of BABERGH, county of SUFFOLK, 4 miles (W. N. W.) from Lavenham, containing 450 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Sudbury, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £16. 17. 1. The Rev. Thomas Fiske was patron in 1800. The church is dedicated to St. George.

SHINCLIFFE, a chapelry in that part of the parish of ST. OSWALD, DURHAM, which is in the southern division of EASINGTON ward, county palatine of DURHAM, $1\frac{3}{4}$ mile (S. E.) from Durham, containing 367 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Durham, and in the patronage of the Vicar of St. Oswald. The chapel was built and endowed, in 1826, by the Dean and Chapter of Durham.

SHINETON, county of SALOP.—See SHEINTON.

SHINFIELD, a parish comprising Shinfield East side, in the hundred of CHARLTON, and the liberty of Hartley-Dammer, in that of THEALE, county of BERKS, and Shinfield West side, in the hundred of AMESBURY, county of WILTS, 3 miles (S. by E.) from Reading, and containing 1065 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, with the perpetual curacy of Swallowfield annexed, in the archdeaconry of Berks, and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £20. 3. $1\frac{1}{2}$, and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Hereford. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. There is a place of worship for Independents. A free school was founded here, in 1707, by Richard Piggot, who endowed it with £42 per annum, for teaching and clothing twenty boys. There is another school, endowed by Mary Spicer in 1697, in which fifteen children are taught by a schoolmistress for £9 a year, arising from the rent of a house and land.

SHINGAY, a parish in the hundred of ARMINGFORD, county of CAMBRIDGE, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by N.) from Royston, containing 86 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the vicarage of Wendy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Ely. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. A preceptory of the Knights Hospitallers of St. John of Jerusalem was founded here in 1140, the revenue of which, at the suppression, was estimated at £175. 4. 6.

SHINGHAM, a parish in the hundred of CLACKCLOSE, county of NORFOLK, $4\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. W. by W.) from Swaffham, containing 58 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, annexed to that of Beechamwell All Saints, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £4. 6. 8., endowed with £200 royal bounty.

SHIPBORNE, a parish in the hundred of WROTHAM, lathe of AYLESFORD, county of KENT, $3\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N.) from Tonbridge, containing 402 inhabitants. The living is a donative, in the patronage of John Simpson, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Giles the Abbot, on whose festival (Sep. 1st) a fair is still held. Christopher Smart, a poet and miscellaneous writer of some eminence, was born here in 1722, and died in a state of derangement in 1771.

SHIPBROOK, a township in the parish of DAVENHAM, hundred of NORTHWICH, county palatine of CHESTER, 3 miles (S. E.) from Northwich, containing 92 inhabitants. The Grand Trunk canal passes through the township.

SHIPDEN, formerly a parish in the northern division of the hundred of ERPINGHAM, county of NORFOLK, adjacent to Cromer. The living was a rectory, but the church, which was dedicated to St. Peter, having been destroyed by an inundation of the sea, the parochial rights of Shipden have, for a very long period, been lost.

SHIPDHAM, a parish in the hundred of MITFORD, county of NORFOLK, $4\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. W. by S.) from East Dereham, containing 1642 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £27. 7. 6., and in the patronage of the Rev. B. Barker. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a stately pile, with a strong western tower embattled and crowned with a handsome turret. Thomas Bullock, in 1735, bequeathed land, producing upwards of £45, for teaching the poor children of the parish. There was anciently a hermitage within the parish, with a chapel dedicated to St. Thomas à Becket, for the repair of which the Bishop of Ely, in 1487, granted forty days' indulgence to all who might contribute.

SHIPHAM, a parish in the hundred of WINTERSTOKE, county of SOMERSET, 3 miles (N. E. by N.) from Axbridge, containing 635 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Wells, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £10. 3. 11., endowed with £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Wells. The church is dedicated to St. Leonard. There are lead and calamine works in operation in the parish.

SHIPLAKE, a parish in the hundred of BINFIELD, county of OXFORD, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S.) from Henley upon Thames, containing 528 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, rated in the king's books at £7. 1., and in the patronage of the Dean and Canons of Windsor. The church is dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul.

SHIPLEY, a township in the parish of HEANOR, hundred of MORLESTON and LITCHURCH, county of DERBY, $9\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E. by E.) from Derby, containing 595 inhabitants. The Nutbrook canal and several railways communicate with the coal mines here.

SHIPLEY, a parish in the hundred of WEST GRINSTEAD, rape of BRAMBER, county of SUSSEX, 6 miles (S. S. W.) from Horsham, containing 1159 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chichester, endowed with £200 private benefaction, £200 royal bounty, and £600 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Rector of Coombs. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is principally in the Norman style.

SHIPLEY, a parochial district, in the parish of BRADFORD, wapentake of MORLEY, West riding of the county of YORK $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. N. W.) from Bradford, containing 1606 inhabitants. A church was founded in 1825, under the authority of His Majesty's Commissioners, and in 1828 it was constituted a district church; the estimate, including incidental expenses, was £7622. 7. There are places of worship for Baptists and Wesleyan Methodists. A branch of the Leeds and Liverpool canal passes through the township, in which the manufacture of worsted, woollen cloth, paper, &c., is carried on to some extent.

SHIPMEADOW, a parish in the hundred of WANGFORD, county of SUFFOLK, 3 miles (W. by S.) from Beccles, containing 133 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Suffolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £10. Robert Suckling, Esq. was patron in 1803. The church is dedicated to St. Bartholomew. The navigable river Waveney bounds the parish on the north.

SHIPPON, a chapelry in that part of the parish of St. Helen, Abingdon, which is in the hundred of HORMER, county of BERKS, 1 mile (W. N. W.) from Abingdon, containing 138 inhabitants.

SHIPSTON upon STOUR, a market town and parish forming, with the parishes of Tidmington and Tredington, a detached portion of the upper division of the hundred of OSWALDSLOW, county of WORCESTER, being locally in the Kington division of the hundred of Kington, county of Warwick, 16 miles (S. by W.) from Warwick, and 83 (N. W. by W.) from London, containing 1562 inhabitants. This town is said to derive its name from having been formerly one of the largest markets for sheep in the kingdom; it is situated on the river Stour, in a fertile and rather hilly country, at about two miles distance from the Stratford upon Avon and Moreton railway: there was formerly a large manufacture of shag, which has quite declined, and it has now little trade of any description. The Dean and Chapter of Worcester, who possess the manorial rights, hold a court annually, at which a constable is appointed. The market is on Thursday, and there are fairs on the third Tuesday in April, June 22nd, the last Tuesday in August, and the Tuesday after the 10th of October. The living is a rectory, with the perpetual curacy of Tidmington annexed, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Worcester, rated in the king's books at £5. 7. 8½., and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Worcester, and of the Principal and Fellows of Jesus College, Oxford, the former presenting to every third vacancy. The church is dedicated to St. Edmund. The Baptists, Society of Friends, and Wesleyan Methodists, have each a place of worship. Endowments for the instruction of children were bequeathed by John Pittway, in 1706, and by George Marshall, in 1747, the latter amounting to £39 per annum, and the National school is well attended; there are also various small bequests for the poor of the town.

SHIPTON, a parish within the liberties of the borough of WENLOCK, county of SALOP, 7 miles (S. W. by S.) from Much-Wenlock, containing 126 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Salop, and diocese of Hereford. The church is dedicated to St. James. This was formerly a chapelry in the parish of Wenlock.

W. by W.) from Market-Weighton, containing 369 inhabitants. It is within the peculiar jurisdiction of the Prebendary of Weighton in the Cathedral Church of York. There is a school for the education of ten boys, endowed with a rent-charge of £5. 14., by John Hutchinson, in 1714, and another of £2 by John and Elizabeth Barker, in 1742.

SHIPTON, a township in that part of the parish of OVERTON which is in the wapentake of BULMER, North riding, and extending into the liberty of St. Peter of York, East riding, of the county of YORK, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by N.) from York, containing 377 inhabitants. There are places of worship for Calvinistic and Wesleyan Methodists. A free grammar school was founded, in 1655, by Ann Middleton, who endowed it with £40 per annum, which is paid to the master, who also occupies a house rent-free, for teaching about fifty children reading, writing, and accompts.

SHIPTON upon CHERWELL, a parish in the hundred of WOOTTON, county of OXFORD, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E.) from Woodstock, containing 147 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, rated in the king's books at £11. 9. 4½. Mrs. Payne was patroness in 1813. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

SHIPTON under WHICHWOOD, a parish in the hundred of CHADLINGTON, county of OXFORD, 4 miles (N. N. E.) from Burford, comprising the chapelries of Langley, Leafeld, Lyneham, Milton, and Ramsden, and containing 2275 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, rated in the king's books at £16, and in the patronage of the Professor of Civil Law in the University of Oxford. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

SHIPTON-BELLINGER, a parish in the hundred of THORNGATE, Andover division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. W. by S.) from Ludgershall, containing 267 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Winchester, rated in the king's books at £8, and endowed with £200 royal bounty. J. Gilbert, Esq. was patron in 1812. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. This parish is within the jurisdiction of the Cheyney Court held at Winchester every Thursday, for the recovery of debts to any amount.

SHIPTON-LEE, a hamlet in the parish of QUAINTON, hundred of ASHENDON, county of BUCKINGHAM, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W. by S.) from Winslow, containing 106 inhabitants. Here was formerly a chapel, now demolished.

SHIPTON-MOYNE, a parish in the hundred of LONGTREE, county of GLOUCESTER, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. by E.)

from Tetbury, containing 390 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Gloucester, rated in the king's books at £18. 1. 10½, and in the patronage of W. Hodges, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. John the Baptist.

SHIPTON-OLIFFE, a parish in the hundred of BRADLEY, county of GLOUCESTER, 6¼ miles (N.W. by W.) from North Leach, containing 177 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, with that of Shipton-Sollars united, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Gloucester, rated in the king's books at £7. 5. 9., and in the alternate patronage of the families of Peachy and Chapeau. The church is dedicated to St. Oswald. Lime-stone exists in the parish.

SHIPTON-SOLLARS, a parish in the hundred of BRADLEY, county of GLOUCESTER, 6½ miles (W. N.W.) from North Leach, containing 62 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, united with that of Shipton-Oliffe, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Gloucester, rated in the king's books at £7. 3. 4. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

SHIRBURN, a parish in the hundred of PIRTON, county of OXFORD, 4 miles (S. by E.) from Tetsworth, containing 332 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, rated in the king's books at £10. 16. 0½, endowed with £800 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Earl of Macclesfield. The church is dedicated to All Saints. Shirburn castle, the seat of the Earl of Macclesfield, is surrounded by a moat, over which is a drawbridge.

SHIREHAMPTON, a chapelry in the parish of WESTBURY upon TRIM, lower division of the hundred of HENBURY, county of GLOUCESTER, 5 miles (N.W. by W.) from Bristol, containing 635 inhabitants. The chapel, dedicated to St. Michael, has lately received an addition of one hundred and fifty-four sittings, of which ninety-one are free, the Incorporated Society for the enlargement of churches and chapels having granted £100 towards defraying the expense. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. King-road and Hung-road, two noted anchorages for ships, are within the precincts of this chapelry.

SHIREHEAD, a chapelry in that part of the parish of COCKERHAM which is in the hundred of AMOUNDERNESS, county palatine of LANCASTER, 4 miles (N. W. by N.) from Garstang. The population is returned with the parish. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Richmond, and diocese of Chester, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £800 royal bounty.

SHIRE-NEWTON, a parish in the upper division of the hundred of CALDICOTT, county of MONMOUTH, containing 689 inhabitants, of which number, 261 are in the village of Shire-Newton, 4½ miles (W.) from Chepstow. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Llandaff, rated in the king's books at £9. 8. 1½, and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. Thomas à Becket.

SHIRLAND, a parish in the hundred of SCARSDALE, county of DERBY, 2 miles (N. by W.) from Alfreton, containing, with the hamlet of Higham, 1205 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Derby, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, rated in the king's books at £7. 15. 5., and in the alternate patronage of the Earl of Thanet, and W. E. Nightingale, and John Charge, Esqrs. The church, dedicated to St. Leonard, contains several ancient monuments of the De Greys. Higham was formerly a market town, but the market was discontinued about 1785; a fair, chiefly for cattle, is still held on the Wednesday after New Year's day. At Hatfield-gate is a charity school, endowed by Edward Revell, Mr. Stocks, and others, with about £25 per annum, and a house for the master, who educates twenty-four children: the premises have been recently rebuilt by subscription.

SHIRLEY, a parish in the hundred of APPLE-TREE, county of DERBY, 4¼ miles (S.E. by S.) from Ash-bourn, comprising the chapelry of Yeaveley, and the township of Stydd, and containing 589 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Derby, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, rated in the king's books at £6. 13. 4., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £300 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Rev. W. A. Shirley. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a small building with a wooden tower. Part of the old manor-house of the Shirleys, who settled here in the reign of Henry II., still remains attached to a farm-house.

SHITLINGTON, a parish partly in the hundred of CLIFTON, and partly in that of FLITT, county of BED-FORD, 4 miles (E. S. E.) from Silsoe, containing, with the hamlets of Holywell and Lower Stondon, 1149 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage with Graven-hurst, in the archdeaconry of Bedford, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £18, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the President and Fellows of Trinity College, Cambridge. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a large and handsome edifice; the tower was rebuilt by the parishioners in 1750.

SHITLINGTON, a township in the parish of THORN-HILL, lower division of the wapentake of AGRIGG, West riding of the county of YORK, 5¾ miles (S. W. by W.) from Wakefield, containing 1635 inhabitants.

SHITLINGTON (HIGH), a township in the parish of WARK, north-western division of TINDALE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, 3 miles (W.) from Wark, containing 104 inhabitants.

SHITLINGTON (LOW), a township in the parish of WARK, north-western division of TINDALE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, 2½ miles (W. by N.) from Wark, containing 105 inhabitants.

SHITTERTON, a tything in the parish and hundred of BEER - REGIS, Blandford (South) division of the county of DORSET, containing 127 inhabitants.

SHOBDON, a parish in the hundred of STRET-FORD, county of HEREFORD, 5½ miles (E. S. E.) from Presteigne, containing 536 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Hereford, rated in the king's books at £5. 7. 11., and in the patronage of William Hanbury, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. John the Evangelist, is the burial-place of the Bateman family; it was partially rebuilt, in 1757, by John Viscount Bateman. A court leet is annually held here. Two schools, one for boys, the other for girls, are supported by Mr. and Mrs. Hanbury. Near the church is a mount, called Castle Hill, encompassed with a moat supposed to be the remains of a Roman, or Danish, fortification.

SHOBROOKE, a parish in the western division of the hundred of BUDLEIGH, county of DEVON, 2 miles (E.N.E.) from Crediton, containing, exclusively of a portion of the tything of Fulford which is in this parish, 737 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, annexed to the bishoprick of Exeter, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £36. There is a place of worship for Independents. Various bequests, producing about £6 a year, are applied to the education of poor children.

SHOBY, a chapelry in the parish of SAXELBY, eastern division of the hundred of GOSCOTE, county of LEICESTER, 5 miles (W. by N.) from Melton-Mowbray, containing 31 inhabitants.

SHOCKLACH, a parish in the higher division of the hundred of BROXTON, county palatine of CHESTER, comprising the townships of Caldecott, Church-Shocklach, and Oviatt-Shocklach, and containing 422 inhabitants, of which number, 158 are in the township of Church-Shocklach, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.W. by W.), and 180 in that of Oviatt-Shocklach, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W.N.W.), from Malpas. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chester, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of Sir R. Puleston, Bart. The church, dedicated to St. Edith, is a small ancient building, with an enriched Norman door. The parish is bounded on the west by the river Dee, which is crossed by a bridge at Castle-Town, where is the moated site of Shocklach castle.

SHOEBURY (NORTH), a parish in the hundred of ROCHFORD, county of ESSEX, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E.N.E.) from South End, containing 210 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Essex, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £9, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

SHOEBURY (SOUTH), a parish in the hundred of ROCHFORD, county of ESSEX, 4 miles (E.) from South End, containing 153 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Essex, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £14. 13. 4. R. Bristow, Esq. was patron in 1812. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew. The parish is bounded on the south by the Thames, and lies opposite to the Nore. On Shoebury Ness is a signal station. A school is supported by small annual subscriptions.

SHOPLAND, a parish in the hundred of ROCHFORD, county of ESSEX, 2 miles (N.E. by E.) from Prittlewell, containing 34 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Essex, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £9, and endowed with £200 royal bounty. Thomas Mutlow, Esq. was patron in 1803. The church is dedicated to St. Mary Magdalene.

SHOREDITCH (ST. LEONARD), a parish in the Tower division of the hundred of OSSULSTONE, county of MIDDLESEX, adjoining the north-eastern portion of the metropolis, and, with Haggerstone and Hoxton, which, by a recent act of parliament, have been constituted distinct parishes, containing 52,966 inhabitants. This parish, in ancient records called Sordig, Soresdich, and Shordych, appears to have derived its name from the great common sewer, or ditch, which passed through it, and to have given name to the family of Sir John de Sordig, lord of the manor, and one of the ambassadors of Edward III. to Philip of France, more than a century prior to the time of Jane Shore, from whom, according to a legendary tradition, it is supposed to have been originally derived. The Roman military way leading from London wall to the ford at Hackney, passed through part of the churchyard, and there are still some vestiges of the old artillery ground, anciently a Roman Campus Martis, which was subsequently celebrated for archery and other military exercises practised there by the citizens of London, but now covered with houses. The parish, which is very extensive, consists of numerous streets connecting it with the metropolis, and of several ranges of building on the roads to Kingsland, Hackney, and Bethnal Green; it is well paved, lighted with gas, and amply supplied with water. There are some remains of ancient houses, but by far the greater number are of modern appearance, and many of them of recent erection. Among the more ancient is one near the bath of St. Agnes de Clare, rebuilt after the fire of London, in which the practice of inoculation for the small-pox was first brought to perfection, previously to the erection of the Small-pox hospital in the parish of St. Pancras, to which the original establishment was removed in 1765. The only branches of manufacture carried on in the parish are such as are connected with the silk-factories of the adjoining parish of Spitalfields, and there are several breweries, and some extensive foundries for church bells. The parish is within the jurisdiction of a court of requests for the Tower Hamlets, established under an act passed in the 23rd of George II., and 19th of George III., for the recovery of debts under 40s., and within the limits of the new police act.

The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £17, and in the patronage of the Archdeacon of London. The church, rebuilt in 1740, is a handsome edifice in the Grecian style of architecture, with a tower, from which rises an open turret surrounded with Corinthian pillars, supporting an elliptical dome surmounted by a small, but well-proportioned, spire; the western entrance is through a stately portico of four columns of the Doric order, supporting an enriched entablature and cornice, and surmounted by a triangular pediment. The interior is well arranged; the east window is embellished with stained glass, and there are numerous ancient monuments, among which may be noticed an altar-tomb, with recumbent effigies, of Sir John Elrington and his lady; a monument of Sir Thomas Leigh, in a kneeling posture; one for four ladies of the Rutland family, whose figures are represented kneeling at an altar, two on each side, in a recess; some erect statues, and various other memorials. There are places of worship for Baptists, Independents, and Wesleyan and other Methodists. The charity school, for the maintenance, clothing, and education, of boys, was established in 1705, and a school-house erected by subscription, in 1722: a similar institution for girls was established in 1709, and the school-house was erected in 1723; the former has an annual income of £100, and the latter one of £160, arising from rents and personal estates; they are further supported by subscription, and afford maintenance and instruction to fifty boys and forty girls. There are National and Sunday schools in connexion with the established church and the various dissenting congregations. On the south side of Old Street-road are twelve almshouses, built, in 1591, by Judge Fuller, who endowed them with £50 per annum, for twelve aged widows of the parish: on the opposite side of the road are eight almshouses, founded, in 1658, by Mr. John Walter, who endowed them for aged widows, who have an allowance of money weekly, and an annual supply of coal: adjoining these are almshouses erected by the Company of Weavers, for decayed members, to which Mr. William Watson was a great benefactor in 1670: there are also some almshouses belonging to the Dutch church in Austin Friars, among which are two tenements, the gift of Egbert Guede, of Overysse, Gent., for the maintenance and habitation of four poor men belonging to that church. The Refuge for the Destitute, in Kingsland-road, a spacious building, in every respect adapted to its purpose, is also within the parish.

SHOREHAM, a parish in the hundred of Cods-HEATH, lathe of SUTTON at HONE, county of KENT, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.) from Seven-Oaks, containing 891 inhabitants. The living, a discharged vicarage, is one of the three which constitute the deanery of the Arches, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Archbishop of Canterbury, rated in the king's books at £14. 6. 8., and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Westminster. The rectory of Shoreham, with the curacy of Otford, is rated in the king's books at £34. 9. $9\frac{1}{2}$., and is an impropriation belonging to the Dean and Chapter of Westminster, a certain stipend being allowed to the curate. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is an ancient structure, containing several elegant monuments. The river Darent runs through the parish in its course to Dartford. Castle farm was built with the remains, and upon the site, of Shoreham castle. An old mansion-house, built by Inigo Jones, and formerly belonging to the D'Aranda family, is fast going to decay.

SHOREHAM (NEW), a borough, market town, sea-port, and parish, in the hundred of FISHERGATE, rape of BRAMBER, county of SUSSEX, 23 miles (E.) from Chichester, and 56 (S. by W.) from London, containing, according to the last census, 1047 inhabitants, which number has since increased to about 1500. This town is indebted for its origin to the decay of Old Shoreham, situated not far distant, which, though anciently a place of importance, is now an inconsiderable village. In ancient history it is chiefly remarkable for having been built on the spot where Ælla, the Saxon, landed with supplies from Germany, in aid of his countrymen, Hengist and Horsa. The town is situated about one mile from the English channel, on the river Adur, across which is a long wooden bridge, on the main road between Brighton and Portsmouth. A suspension bridge, on a design similar to that at Hammersmith, is now in progress over the river, at the western entrance into the town, at the expense of His Grace the Duke of Norfolk; which, when completed, will reduce the distance between Shoreham and Worthing about two miles. Shoreham is noted for its ship-building, and vessels of seven hundred tons have been launched here. From its proximity to Brighton and Worthing, the trade and importance of the port has, of late years, rapidly increased; its revenue, within the last twenty years, has been augmented five-fold, having been, in 1810, about £7000, and now amounting to £35,000. The harbour, which is a tide harbour, is very commodious: in spring tides it has about nineteen feet of water, in common ones about fourteen feet, and not more than three feet at ebb. The river runs by the side of the town, parallel with the sea, with which it communicates about half a mile eastward, and is frequented by ships of considerable burden. The imports consist principally of timber, deals, merchandise from France, wine, spirits, coal, &c.; and considerable quantities of oak timber are exported. Cement manufactories have been established here. The custom-house, lately erected, under the direction of Mr. Smirke, is an elegant building in the Grecian style, situated in the centre of the town. A large market for corn is held every fortnight; and a fair on July 25th. Shoreham is a borough by prescription, and is governed by a high constable appointed by the lord of the manor. It has sent two members to parliament since the 1st of Edward I.; the right of election being in the inhabitants paying scot and lot, and the freeholders of the rape of Bramber: the high constable is the returning officer. At the election in 1791, a majority of the electors having formed themselves into a society, called the Christian Club, the real object of which was to sell their votes to the best bidder, an act of parliament was passed, disfranchising every member of the society, and extending the votes for New Shoreham to the whole rape of Bramber, so that the right of election was imparted to about one thousand six hundred freeholders, instead of two hundred, to which it had been previously confined.

The living is a discharged vicarage, annexed to that of Old Shoreham, in the archdeaconry of Lewes, and diocese of Chichester, rated in the king's books at £6. 1. 8., endowed with £200 private benefaction, £800 royal bounty, and £800 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the President and Fellows of Magdalene College, Oxford. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is an extremely interesting specimen of Norman architecture. At present only the choir is fitted up and appropriated to divine worship, the nave having been entirely destroyed. It was originally cruciform, and one of the largest in the neighbourhood, as well as perhaps the most elegant; the architectural details within being still remarkable for their richness and diversity. The Independents and Wesleyan Methodists have each a place of worship. There are National schools for boys and girls. Here was anciently a priory for Carmelites, or White friars, founded by Sir John Mowbray, Knt.; also an hospital, dedicated to St. James, but no remains of either are now discernible.

SHOREHAM (OLD), a parish in the hundred of FISHERGATE, rape of BRAMBER, county of SUSSEX, $\frac{1}{2}$ a mile (N. W. by N.) from New Shoreham, containing 235 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, with that of New Shoreham annexed, in the archdeaconry of Lewes, and diocese of Chichester, rated in the king's books at £7. 18. 6., and in the patronage of the President and Fellows of Magdalene College, Oxford. The church is dedicated to St. Nicholas. Here was an ancient hospital, dedicated to St. James, which was valued, in the reign of Elizabeth, at £1. 6. 8. per annum.

SHORESWOOD, a township in the parish of NORHAM, otherwise Norhamshire, county palatine of DURHAM, though locally to the northward of the county of Northumberland, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W. by S.) from Berwick upon Tweed, containing 261 inhabitants, who are chiefly employed in the adjacent coal mines.

SHORNCUTT, a parish in the hundred of HIGHWORTH, CRICKLADE, and STAPLE, county of WILTS, $5\frac{3}{4}$ miles (W. N. W.) from Cricklade, containing 25 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £4. 7. 6., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to All Saints.

SHORNE, a joint parish with Merston, in the hundred of SHAMWELL, lathe of AYLESFORD, county of KENT, $3\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. E.) from Gravesend, containing, with Merston, 776 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Rochester, rated in the king's books at £13. 1. 8., and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Rochester. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, contains a fine monument to the memory of Sir Henry de Cobham. Courts leet and baron are occasionally held. National and Sunday schools established here are supported partly by subscription, but principally by the dividends arising from £900 three per cent. consols., the bequest of the Rev. R. G. Ayerst, in 1812. A battery, mounting twenty-four pounders, for the protection of this part of the Medway, was constructed in 1796.

SHORTFLATT, a township in that part of the parish of BOLAM which is in the north-eastern division of TINDALE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, $10\frac{3}{4}$ miles (W. S. W.) from Morpeth, containing 22 inhabitants.

SHORTHAMPTON, a chapelry in that part of the parish of CHARLBURY which is in the hundred of CHADLINGTON, county of OXFORD, 5 miles (S. by E.) from Chipping-Norton. The population is returned with the tything of Chilson. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the vicarage of Charlbury, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford. The chapel is dedicated to All Saints.

SHORWELL, a parish in the liberty of WEST MEDINA, Isle of Wight division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 5 miles (S. W. by S.) from Newport, containing 576 inhabitants. The living comprises a sinecure rectory, rated in the king's books at £20. 0. $2\frac{1}{2}$., and a discharged vicarage, to which is united the rectory of Mottiston, rated at £17. 16. 0 $\frac{1}{2}$., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Winchester, and both in the patronage of Lady St. John Mildmay. The church is dedicated to St. Peter.

SHOSTON, a township in the parish and northern division of BAMBROUGH ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, 8 miles (E. by S.) from Belford, containing 63 inhabitants.

SHOTFORD, a hamlet (formerly a chapelry) in the parish of MENDHAM, hundred of EARSHAM, county of NORFOLK, 1 mile (S. E.) from Harleston. The population is returned with the parish. The chapel is desecrated, having been converted into a malt-house.

SHOT-HAUGH, a joint township with East and West Thriston, in that part of the parish of FELTON which is in the eastern division of MORPETH ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND. The population is returned with East and West Thriston.

SHOTLEY, a parish in the eastern division of TINDALE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, comprising the chapelry of High Blanchland, and the townships of Newbiggin and Shotley, and containing 1090 inhabitants, of which number, 609 are in the township of Shotley, $10\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E.) from Hexham. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Northumberland, and diocese of Durham, endowed with £10 per annum and £200 private benefaction, and £400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of Lord Crewe's trustees. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is situated upon an eminence about a mile and a half from the village of Shotley: in the cemetery is an elegant mausoleum in memory of the Hopper family. Here are several extensive and productive lead and coal mines. A school is supported by annual contributions amounting to about £20.

SHOTLEY, a parish in the hundred of SAMFORD, county of SUFFOLK, $8\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. E. by S.) from Ipswich, containing 339 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Suffolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £20, and in the patronage of the Marquis of Bristol. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is remarkable for its elegance, which it owes to a former incumbent, the Hon. Hervey Aston, D.D., who completely pewed, paved, and beautified it in 1744. The parish is situated at the confluence of the navigable rivers Orwell and Stour, opposite to the town of Harwich, with which there is a communication by a regular ferry.

SHOTOVER, an extra-parochial liberty, in the hundred of BULLINGTON, county of OXFORD, $4\frac{3}{4}$ miles (E. by N.) from Oxford, containing 85 inhabitants.

SHOTTESBROOK, a parish in the hundred of BEYNHURST, county of BERKS, 5 miles (S. W.) from Maidenhead, containing 135 inhabitants. The living is a rectory not in charge, united, in 1744, to the vicarage of White Waltham, in the archdeaconry of Berks, and diocese of Salisbury. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, though small, is an elegant cruciform structure, principally in the decorated style, with a tower and spire rising from the intersection: it was erected in 1337, and contains three stone stalls under trefoil arches, with a piscina adjoining, an octangular font, enriched with crocketed pinnacles, and several interesting monuments and inscriptions. In the chancel lie the remains of the learned Henry Dodwell, some time Camden Professor of History at Oxford, and an able chronologist and historian: his celebrated work "De cyclis Veterum" was written here. A chantry, or college, for a warden, five priests, and two clerks, was founded here, in 1337, by Sir William Trussell, Knt., the revenue of which at the dissolution was estimated at £42. 2. 8. Smewins, in this parish, was a hunting-seat of Prince Arthur, eldest son of Henry VII., but it is now a farm-house.

SHOTTESHAM (ALL SAINTS), a parish in the hundred of HENSTEAD, county of NORFOLK, $4\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. E. by N.) from St. Mary Stratton, containing 458 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £6. 13. 4., and in the patronage of the Earl of Albemarle. Elizabeth Bayspoole, in 1711, bequeathed £4. 12. per annum for a school and other charitable purposes.

SHOTTESHAM (ST. MARTIN), a parish in the hundred of HENSTEAD, county of NORFOLK, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E. by N.) from St. Mary Stratton. The population is returned with the parish of Shottesham St. Mary. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £4, and in the patronage of the Bishop of Norwich. The church has been demolished.

SHOTTESHAM (ST. MARY), a parish in the hundred of HENSTEAD, county of NORFOLK, $4\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. N. E.) from St. Mary Stratton, containing, with the parish of Shottesham St. Martin, 383 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £5, and in the patronage of the Earl of Albemarle. The church of St. Botolph has been demolished; and the living, a discharged vicarage, was annexed in 1311 to this parish.

SHOTTISHAM, a parish in the hundred of WILFORD, county of SUFFOLK, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. E.) from Woodbridge, containing 235 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Suffolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £4. 16. 0 $\frac{1}{2}$., endowed with £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of Mrs. Elizabeth Darby and Miss Mary Kett. The church is dedicated to St. Margaret. The navigable river Deben runs on the western side of the parish, where there is an inlet, called Shottisham creek. Crag or shell pits, supposed to be diluvial remains, abound here.

SHOTTLE, a joint township with Postern, in the parish of DUFFIELD, hundred of APPLETREE, county of DERBY, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (W. by S.) from Belper, containing, with Postern, 607 inhabitants. The sum of £6 per annum, arising partly from a bequest by Ralph Dowley, in 1740, is paid to a schoolmaster for teaching the poor children of the township, in a school-room erected by subscription among the inhabitants.

SHOTTON, a joint township with Langley-Dale, in the parish of STAINDROP, south-western division of DARLINGTON ward, county palatine of DURHAM, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E. by E.) from Barnard-Castle. The population is returned with Langley-Dale.

SHOTTON, a township in the parish of EASINGTON, southern division of EASINGTON ward, county palatine of DURHAM, 9 miles (E. by S.) from Durham, containing 264 inhabitants. A free school, with a house for the master, was founded here, in 1668, in pursuance of the will of Edward Walton; the annual income is £25, of which sum £20 is paid for the instruction of twenty children, and £5 is appropriated for books and repairs, under the superintendence of the Society of Friends.

SHOTTON, a joint township with Foxton, in the parish of SEDGEFIELD, north-eastern division of STOCKTON ward, county palatine of DURHAM, $8\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W.) from Stockton upon Tees, containing 63 inhabitants.

SHOTTON, a joint township with Plessey, in the parish of STANNINGTON, western division of CASTLE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, $6\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. by E.) from Morpeth. The population is returned with Plessey.

SHOTTSWELL, a parish in the Burton-Dasset division of the hundred of KINGTON, county of WARWICK, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. W.) from Banbury, containing 268 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Coventry, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, rated in the king's books at £5. 13. 4., and in the patronage of the Earl of Guildford. The church is dedicated to St. Lawrence. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

SHOTWICK, a parish in the higher division of the hundred of WIRRAL, county palatine of CHESTER, comprising the townships of Cappenhurst, Kingswood, Great Saughall, Little Saughall, Shotwick, and Woodbank, otherwise Rough Shotwick, and containing 719 inhabitants, of which number, 94 are in the township of Shotwick, 6 miles (N. W.) from Chester. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chester, endowed with £18 per annum, and £240 private benefaction, £600 royal bounty, and £400 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Chester. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, has a curious Norman door, and some portions in the later style of English architecture.

SHOTWICK-PARK, an extra-parochial liberty, in the higher division of the hundred of WIRRAL, county palatine of CHESTER, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. W.) from Chester, containing 23 inhabitants. This was the site of a castle formerly belonging to the crown. Henry II. is said to have lodged here on his journey to and from Ireland; and Edward I. occupied it in 1278. The castle was standing in Leland's time, and there were some remains in 1622, since which period every vestige has been gradually removed.

SHOULDEN, a parish in the hundred of CORNILO, lathe of ST. AUGUSTINE, county of KENT, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (W.) from Deal, containing 285 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the vicarage of Northbourne, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Canterbury. The church is dedicated to St. Nicholas.

SHOULDHAM, a parish in the hundred of CLACKCLOSE, county of NORFOLK, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E.) from Downham-Market, containing 679 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, consolidated with that of St. Margaret, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, and in the patronage of Sir Thomas Hare, Bart. The church is dedicated to All Saints; that of St. Margaret was standing in 1512, but after the dissolution was suffered to go to decay. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. A Gilbertine priory, in honour of the Holy Cross and the Blessed Virgin, was founded, in the time of Richard I., by Jeffrey Fitz-Piers, Earl of Essex, which, at the dissolution, possessed a revenue of £171. 6. 8.

SHOULDHAM-THORPE, a parish in the hundred of CLACKCLOSE, county of NORFOLK, 5 miles (N. E.)

from Downham-Market, containing 305 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, and in the patronage of Sir Thomas Hare, Bart. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

SHOWELL, a chapelry in the parish of SWERFORD, hundred of CHADLINGTON, county of OXFORD, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. N. E.) from Chipping-Norton.

SHRAWARDINE, a township in that part of the parish of ABBEBURY, which is in the hundred of FORD, county of SALOP, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W.) from Shrewsbury, containing, with Benthall, 48 inhabitants.

SHRAWARDINE, a parish in the hundred of PIMHILL, county of SALOP, $6\frac{3}{4}$ miles (W. N. W.) from Shrewsbury, containing 177 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Salop, and diocese of Hereford, rated in the king's books at £9. 12. 6., and in the patronage of the Earl of Powis. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. Shrawardine castle was built by Alan, a follower of the Conqueror, and ancestor of the celebrated Fitz-Alans, who held it under the crown for many ages, to check the invasions of the Welch. After having been the scene of many remarkable events, it was, in the reign of Elizabeth, purchased by Lord Chancellor Bromley: the site and remains, together with other estates in the parish, are now the property of the Earl of Powis.

SHRAWLEY, a parish in the lower division of the hundred of DODDINGTREE, county of WORCESTER, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. by W.) from Stourport, containing 484 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Worcester, rated in the king's books at £9. 17. 1., and in the patronage of Thomas Taylor Vernon, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. The river Severn passes through the parish, in which there are vestiges of some ancient intrenchments.

SHREWLEY, a chapelry in the parish of HATTON, Snitterfield division of the hundred of BARLICHWAY, county of WARWICK, 4 miles (N. W. by W.) from Warwick, containing 250 inhabitants.

SHREWSBURY, a borough and market town, having separate jurisdiction, locally in the liberties of Shrewsbury, county of SALOP, of which it is the chief town, 154 miles (N. W.) from London, containing, exclusively of the parish of Meole-Brace, which is within the liberties, 18,254 inhabitants, according to the census of 1821, since which period the number has increased to about 2000 more. This ancient borough is said to have risen from the ruins of Uriconium, now Wroxeter, a celebrated Roman station on the line of the Watling-street, which, passing through the present town in a direction from east to west, divides it into two nearly equal parts. From its situation on two hills, richly covered with shrubs and trees, it obtained from the Britons the appellations of Pengwerne and Amwithic, or Y Mwythig, and was by the Saxons called Scrobbes-byrig, from which, written in Domesday-book Sciropesberie, its present name is derived; from what source it obtained the appellation of Salopesberie, by which it is mentioned in some ancient records, and from which it has, with the county, been denominated "Salop," has not been satisfactorily ascertained. During the octarchy, it was the capital of the district called Powysland, which comprised a portion of the Saxon and British frontier territories; and the residence of the princes of Powys, whom, in 778, Offa, King of Mercia, expelled from their possessions, adding them to his own kingdom; and, to secure his conquest, raised that stupendous barrier still called Offa's Dyke. In the reign of Alfred the Great, this town was numbered among the principal cities of Britain: it had a mint, which it retained till the reign of Henry III., there being several of the coins extant, struck in the reigns of Athelstan, Edgar, Athelred, Canute, Edward the Confessor, and Harold II., besides several between the years 1066 and 1272. When Canute was pursuing his conquests through the northern parts of the kingdom, the inhabitants revolted in his favour and surrendered the town, which, in 1016, Edmund Ironside, a short time previously to the partition of the kingdom, recovered from the Danes, inflicting signal vengeance on the townsmen for their treachery. At the time of the Conquest, Shrewsbury, with nearly the whole of the county, was bestowed by William on his kinsman, Roger de Montgomery, whom he created Earl of Shrewsbury, Chichester, and Arundel, that nobleman erecting here a formidable castle for his baronial residence. In 1069, the town was besieged by Edric Sylvaticus, and Owen Gwynedd, Prince of Wales, but was relieved by King William, who advanced from York, and defeated the assailants with great slaughter. In 1102, Robert de Belesme, son of Earl Roger, having espoused the cause of Robert, Duke of Normandy, and commenced measures for raising him to the throne of England, in opposition to his brother Henry I., that monarch marched against the town with an army of sixty thousand men; and the earl, although he had previously fortified it with a wall on each side of the castle, across the isthmus formed by the river Severn, submitted on the approach of the king, acknowledged his treasonable conduct, and was banished to Normandy; his estates were thus forfeited, and the castle became a royal fortress. The importance of Shrewsbury as a frontier town has rendered it the scene of many and various transactions of historical interest. In 1116, the nobles of the realm assembled here to do homage, and take the oaths of allegiance, to William, son of the Empress Matilda. Stephen, in 1138, laid siege to the castle, while Fitz-Alan, the governor, was absent in forwarding the claims of the empress, and having taken it by storm, hanged several of the garrison.

The frequent inroads of the Welch induced John to assemble a council here, in order to concert measures for suppressing them; and, in 1215, Llewellyn, who had married Joan, natural daughter of that monarch, appeared before Shrewsbury with a numerous army, and obtained possession of it and the castle. Henry III. soon dispossessed him of his capture, and drove him back to his own territory; but in the war with the barons, Richard, Earl of Pembroke, retired into Wales, and, being assisted by that prince, laid waste the intermediate district, and plundered and burnt the town, after having put many of the inhabitants to the sword. Simon de Montfort, whilst prosecuting the war against

Henry III., obtained possession of the town, which he held only for a short time. In 1241 and 1267, the same monarch assembled an army here for the invasion of Wales, but was diverted from his purpose by the submission of Llewellyn, with whom he subsequently concluded a treaty of peace. About this time the king recommended the inhabitants to complete the fortifications of the town, of which only one side was defended, but notwithstanding the aid of royal bounty, the work was not accomplished in less than thirty years. The continued incursions of the Welch upon the English frontier induced Edward I., in 1277, to fix his residence in Shrewsbury, to which he removed the courts of King's Bench and Exchequer, and, in 1283, assembled the parliament here; the king and his court were accommodated at Acton-Burnell, the seat of Bishop Burnell, the Lord High Chancellor; the lords held their sittings in the castle, and the commons, who for the first time had any voice in the national councils, assembled in a barn in the town. This monarch having sent a force against the Welch without success, took the field in person, at the head of a numerous army, and an engagement took place at the foot of Snowdon, in which they were completely routed, Llewellyn slain, and his brother David, who had instigated him to this insurrection, taken prisoner, and, after a short confinement in Rhyddlan castle in Flintshire, brought to Shrewsbury, where, having been tried by the parliament, he was condemned and executed as a traitor, with a degree of degradation and severity previously unknown in this country, and which, till a very late period, furnished a precedent for the punishment of treason. Edward II. was received in this town with the greatest pomp in 1322, where, in the same year, he celebrated a grand tournament, which was attended by a numerous assemblage of knights and noblemen. In 1397, Richard II. convened the parliament at Shrewsbury, gave a splendid entertainment to the lords and commons, and created several peers, who at this time first assumed their seats in parliament: this, from the number of noblemen and others who attended, was called the Great Parliament; but the measures enacted, though ratified by the pope's bull, were repealed during the following reign, and the king's conduct while in this town was made the subject of one of those charges which subsequently led to his deposition.

In 1403, a sanguinary battle was fought in the immediate vicinity, between the forces of Henry IV. and those of the Earl of Northumberland, who had rebelled against the king, assisted by a considerable body of Scottish troops under the command of Earl Douglas, amounting to fourteen thousand men. After a severe and protracted conflict, the victory was decided in favour of Henry: two thousand three hundred knights and gentlemen, among whom was Hotspur, son of Earl Percy, after performing prodigious exploits of valour, and six thousand common soldiers, were slain on both sides; the dead were interred on the spot, which has since been called Battlefield, where a church was afterwards erected by the king, in memory of his victory. Owen Glyndwr, who had raised an army to co-operate with the insurgents, remained inactive with twelve thousand men at Oswestry, and, on their defeat, retired into Wales. During the contest between the houses of York and Lancaster, the inhabitants embraced the cause of the former; and on the defeat of Richard Plantagenet, Duke of York, at the battle of Wakefield, in which he was slain, his son Edward, Earl of March, afterwards Edward IV., levied in this town and neighbourhood a powerful army, with which he avenged the death of his father at the battle of Mortimer's Cross, where he gained a signal victory. Edward, on his elevation to the throne, selected Shrewsbury as an asylum for his queen during the agitation of the times, and in the convent of the Dominican friars, in which her Majesty resided, the princes Richard and George were born, the latter of whom died in childhood, and the former, with his elder brother, Prince Edward, was inhumanly murdered in the Tower of London by their uncle, the Protector, afterwards Richard III. The Earl of Richmond, on landing at Milford Haven, proceeded to this town, where he was proclaimed king, and, having strengthened his army with considerable reinforcements raised in the neighbourhood, advanced into Leicestershire, where he gained the battle of Bosworth Field, which terminated in the death of Richard III., and his own elevation to the throne, under the title of Henry VII. This monarch on his accession visited the town, with his queen and Prince Arthur; and after celebrating the festival of St. George in the church of St. Chad, granted the inhabitants several privileges, in acknowledgment of the alacrity with which they had supported his claims to the crown.

On the breaking out of the parliamentary war, Charles I. came to Shrewsbury, where he was received with every demonstration of loyalty by the inhabitants, and was soon afterwards joined by Prince Rupert, Prince Charles, the Duke of York, and several noblemen and gentlemen: the king kept his court in an ancient building, called the Council-house, and having established a mint for the supply of his exigencies, the inhabitants liberally presented their plate to be melted and coined into money for his use, of which considerable sums were expended in extending and strengthening the fortifications of the town. In 1664, Col. Mytton made two attempts to obtain possession of the town and castle for the parliament, but was repulsed in both, with considerable loss; but having obtained a reinforcement, he made a third effort, in which he carried the place by storm, and was appointed governor. In 1651, Charles II. summoned it to surrender, but, on the refusal of the governor, marched on to Worcester; after which disastrous battle he took refuge in the Royal Oak at Boscobel, on the confines of this county. During that monarch's retreat on the continent, a plan was formed by a party of royalists to besiege the castle; but their scheme was frustrated, and several of them were punished. James II. visited the town in 1687, and, attended by the nobility and gentry of the county, kept his court for several days at the council-house. During this reign the castle was dismantled, and all its ammunition and military stores removed. This castle, originally of such great extent and formidable strength that, to make room for its erection, Earl Roger pulled down nearly one-fifth of the town, was a fortress of very great importance till the final subjugation of Wales, after which period it was entrusted to a constable, generally the sheriff, who made it the county prison: its importance as a frontier garrison having ceased, it fell into decay, and was repaired during the parliamentary war, as a garrison for the king : after it came into the possession of the parliament, Cromwell erected an additional fort, called Roushill, which is among the most entire of the remaining portions. The remains are situated at the northern entrance into the town, on the summit of a bold eminence overlooking the Severn, by which it is nearly surrounded, and are composed principally of the keep, a spacious modernised structure of red stone, consisting of two round embattled towers connected by a quadrangular building, one hundred feet in length ; the walls of the inner court ; and the great arch of the interior gateway : these include a grassy area, in which, though now private property, the knights of the shire, according to immemorial usage, are girt with their swords, on their election to parliament. On the south side of the court is a lofty mount rising abruptly from the river : the summit is surrounded with a wall, and in one angle of the enclosure was a barbican, which has been converted into a summer-house, and commands an extensive, varied, and picturesque view of the surrounding country. The ramparts formerly environing the town, together with the towers by which they were defended, have, with the exception of the part erected by Cromwell, and one of the towers on the south side of the town, been demolished. Adjoining the castle precinct, and formerly within its walls, are the remains of the ancient Council-house, where the courts for the Marches of Wales were occasionally held, and which afforded a temporary residence to several of the English monarchs.

The town is pleasantly situated on two eminences rising gently from the river Severn, which, by its windings, forms a peninsula : it consists of several streets irregularly formed, and, with some exceptions, inconveniently narrow. Various improvements have been made under the provisions of an act obtained in 1821, and others are in progress, for removing numerous obstructions arising from the style of building, and widening the approaches to the town. The houses are in general of ancient character, though greatly intermixed with others of handsome appearance and modern erection ; and, under the influence of a situation admirably adapted to commercial purposes, and affording in its environs delightful spots for private residence, a very rapid degree of improvement is progressively taking place. It is well paved, lighted with gas by a company established in 1820, and supplied with excellent water from a remarkably fine spring, called Bradwell, about two miles distant, from which, since 1574, it has been conveyed by pipes, into numerous conduits in several parts of the town, and with water from the river Severn, by a company established in 1827. Over this river are two bridges of stone, one called the English bridge, a handsome structure of Grinshill freestone of seven circular arches, crowned with a balustrade, erected in 1774, at an expense of £16,000, defrayed by public subscription, and connecting the suburb of Abbey Foregate with the town ; the other, called the Welch bridge, a neat plain structure of five spacious arches, erected in 1795, at a cost exceeding £8000, affording a passage over the river into Wales. Near the Abbey Foregate is the military depôt, a handsome brick building, one hundred and thirty-two feet in length, and forty feet in width, erected in 1806, from a design by Wyatt, at an expense of £10,000 : within the enclosure are two magazines for ammunition, and at each angle a neat house for the store-keeper and armourer : the building is capable of containing twenty-five thousand stand of arms. At the entrance into the town from the London road is a lofty column of the Grecian Doric style, rising from a base, ornamented at the angles with lions couchant, to the height of one hundred and thirty-two feet, and supporting on its summit a well-executed statue of Lieut. Gen. Rowland, Lord Hill, in honour of whose achievements in the late continental war it was erected, by general subscription, in 1814. The public subscription library, near St. John's Hill, containing more than five thousand volumes in various departments of literature, is conducted by a president and a committee, and supported by proprietary members, who pay £2. 2. admission, and an annual subscription of £1. 11. 6. ; attached to it is a news-room well supplied with periodical publications. A mechanics' institution was established in 1825, where lectures are occasionally delivered. The theatre was formerly part of the palace of the Princes of Powysland, of which it still retains some vestiges, though materially altered by its appropriation to dramatic uses : it is at present in a dilapidated condition, and performances take place in the circus. Assemblies are held monthly, during the season, in a suite of rooms well fitted up ; and races annually in September, continuing three days ; the course is on Bicton heath, about two miles west of the town. The river Severn, in addition to the salmon for which it is celebrated, and with which it formerly abounded to a much greater extent, produces trout, pike, perch, carp, eels, shad, flounders, lampreys, &c. On the southwestern side of the town is a beautiful walk, called the Quarry, comprising about twenty acres, and extending along the winding margin of the Severn for five hundred yards in length, forming a noble avenue of full-grown lime-trees, from which diverge three other walks leading to the town. In the vicinity also are numerous pleasant walks and rides, through a country abounding in beautiful and picturesque scenery. The richly-cultivated plain of Shrewsbury, extending thirty miles from north to south, and twenty-eight from east to west, is divided into two nearly equal parts by the river Severn, and surrounded by a noble range of lofty mountains and beautiful hills. Among the former are the famed Wrekin, the Lawley, the Caradoc, the Longmynd, the Stiperstones, and the Breyddin chain, on which is an obelisk in honour of Admiral Lord Rodney ; and among the latter, the beautiful wood-crowned eminences of Grinshill, Pymhill, Hawkstone, Haughmond, and others, forming a finely varied range of hills of different elevation and character.

The trade, which was formerly of considerable extent and importance, has been materially diminished by the growth of other places ; but the town has, notwithstanding, always maintained a respectable share of internal commerce. Its ancient traffic in Welch cloths and flannel was formerly the principal source of its opulence, and at present, though not restricted to the Drapers' Company as before, produces no inconsiderable profit : the greater portion of those made in the counties of Montgomery and Merioneth, and part of Denbighshire, is sent to Shrewsbury. Two extensive manufactories for thread, linen yarn, and canvas, situated near the castle, adjoining the suburb of Castle Foregate, afford employment to a considerable number of persons ; and on the banks of the river, in Coleham, are the extensive iron-foundries of Mr. Hazledine, in which the immense chains that support the stupendous bridge over the Menai straits, and the iron work in many similar erections, were cast. This town is also noted for its brawn, and for a particular kind of sweet cakes, called Shrewsbury cakes. The river affords a convenient transit for goods of every description to Worcester, Gloucester, Bristol, and other towns; and considerable quantities of grain, in which the trade is extensive, and of lighter manufactured articles, are forwarded by land-carriage to Edstaston wharf, and thence, by the Ellesmere canal, to Chester and Liverpool. The Shrewsbury canal, which is the great medium of supplying the town with coal of excellent quality, terminates near the Castle Foregate, where convenient wharfs have been constructed by the canal company, for the use of persons connected with the coal-works on the line of the canal, which, when the Birmingham and Liverpool junction canal is completed, will open a new and extensive species of traffic for the town. The market days are Wednesday and Saturday, the latter being for grain: the general market is held in a stone building, erected in 1819, and about to be enlarged by subscription; and that for corn, in the area under a spacious building of stone, erected in 1595, in the later style of English architecture; in the centre of the principal front is a spacious portal, above which are the arms of Queen Elizabeth in alto relievo, and on each side of the central arch, pillars, supporting lions with shields on their breasts, well sculptured: the building is one hundred and five feet in length, and twenty-four feet wide, and over the ground-floor is a room of the same dimensions, appropriated formerly to the Drapers' Company, for the sale of flannel, and now used as a warehouse.

This town has received a succession of charters of incorporation, from the time of William the Conqueror to the reign of James II.: the earliest preserved in the archives of the corporation is dated Nov. 11th, 1st of Richard I., under which, as extended and confirmed by succeeding sovereigns, and remodelled by Charles I., the government is vested in a mayor, recorder, steward, twenty-four aldermen, and forty-eight common council-men, assisted by a town clerk, two chamberlains, two coroners, sword-bearer, sergeants at mace, and subordinate officers. The mayor is elected annually on the Friday after St. Bartholomew's day, the charter directing the mayor, aldermen, and assistants, to choose the senior alderman, who hath not before served for that dignity, which course is usually followed; they also appoint the other officers of the corporation. The mayor, late mayor, recorder, three senior aldermen, and the Bishop of Lichfield and Coventry, with his commissary, are justices of the peace within the town and liberties. The freedom is acquired by descent, as well as by being born in the town, or obtained by apprenticeship to a member of one of the Incorporated Companies, of which there were sixteen, the Drapers' being the principal, but they are now much reduced in number.

Corporate Seal.

It was formerly the custom for the several companies to celebrate the festival of Corpus Christi in St. Chad's church, after which three days were devoted to festivity and recreation; the religious part of this ceremony was discontinued at the Reformation, but they still meet on the second Monday after Trinity, and go in procession to Kingsland, where they hold a rural festival, in arbours erected for the purpose, in which they are visited by the mayor and corporation. All persons above the age of twenty-one, born in the town, and all persons having served an apprenticeship in it, may demand their freedom on payment of £6. 19. 1.; and all sons of burgesses, and those claiming by descent from burgesses, on paying £1. 3. 6. The corporation hold quarterly courts of session, on the Friday after the county quarter sessions, for all offences not capital; and the mayor, assisted by some of the other magistrates, holds a session every Tuesday and Friday, for the determination of petty causes: they also hold a court of record, the jurisdiction of which extends over the liberties, every Tuesday, at which the mayor and the recorder preside, for the recovery of debts to any amount. A court of requests is also held, every alternate Wednesday, by commissioners appointed under an act passed in the 23rd of George III., for the recovery of debts exceeding 2s. and under 40s.: and courts leet are held annually in May and October, at the latter of which constables and other officers for the town are appointed. The assizes and general quarter sessions for the county are held here. The town and shire hall is a spacious, handsome, and commodious building of stone, erected in 1785, containing, on the ground-floor, a vestibule and two courts for the assizes, under one of which, appropriated to the Crown bar, is a cell for prisoners awaiting their trial: a handsome geometrical staircase leads to the upper story, where are a large room, occasionally used for county meetings, and for those of the corporation, and the incorporated and trading companies, and for other purposes; a grand jury room, ornamented with portraits of George I., II., and III., Queen Charlotte, Admiral Benbow, Lord Hill, and Admiral Owen; offices for the court of record, and for transacting the public business of the corporation. The town and county gaol, and house of correction for the county and the several boroughs therein, an extensive building of brick, pleasantly situated on the bank of the Severn, was erected in 1793, at an expense of £30,000: the entrance is through a freestone gateway, over which is a bust of the celebrated Howard, and on each side a lodge for the inspection of prisoners previously to their admission: it contains a house for the governor, a chapel, an infirmary, twenty-three wards, nine work-rooms, twenty-three day-rooms and airing-yards, and is admirably adapted to the classification, employment, and reformation of prisoners, of whom it is capable of receiving five hundred. The borough has exercised the elective franchise from the 23rd of Edward I., and has regularly returned two members to parliament: the right of election is vested in the resident burgesses paying scot and lot, and not receiving alms, of whom the number is about nine hundred: the mayor is the returning officer.

Shrewsbury comprises the parishes of St. Alkmund, St. Chad, Holy Cross, St. Julian, and St. Mary, all, with the exception of St. Mary's, which is a royal peculiar, in the archdeaconry of Salop, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry. The living of St. Alkmund's is a vicarage, rated in the king's books at £6, and in the patronage of the Crown. The church was made collegiate by King Edgar, who endowed it for the support of ten canons, one of whom acted as dean; but the society was dissolved on the establishment of Lilleshall abbey, to which its revenue was appropriated. The old edifice, a cruciform structure of great antiquity, was, with the exception of the tower and spire, which are one hundred and eighty-four feet in height, taken down, from an apprehension of insecurity, and rebuilt in 1795: the east window is embellished with a painting by Eginton, in stained glass, emblematical of faith. The living of St. Chad's is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the Crown: the church, erected in 1792, at an expense of nearly £20,000, in lieu of an older edifice, which, while undergoing repair, fell down in 1788, is a handsome circular building, in the Grecian style of architecture, with a square rustic tower supporting an octagonal belfry surmounted by a dome resting on eight Corinthian pillars: the body of the church forms a rotunda one hundred feet in diameter, surrounded by a range of duplicated Ionic pillars between the lofty arched windows, rising from the basement, and supporting a handsome cornice surmounted by a balustrade: the entrance is through a stately portico of four Doric columns, supporting a triangular pediment; the interior has a rich and pleasing effect; the galleries are supported by a duplicated range of Ionic pillars, from which rise Corinthian pillars supporting the roof; the chancel is adorned with a painting of the Resurrection, in stained glass, by Eginton, from a design by West, removed from Lichfield cathedral. The remains of the ancient church, formerly collegiate, and once a royal free chapel, consist only of the south aisle of the chancel, containing portions in the Norman, early English, and decorated styles of architecture: it was fitted up for the performance of the funeral service, and is at present appropriated to the use of the charity school. The living of the parish of the Holy Cross is a vicarage, with the chapel of St. Giles', rated in the king's books at £8, and in the patronage of Lord Berwick. The church, occupying a low site in the eastern suburb, to which it gives name, and surrounded on the south and west by the river Rea, commonly called Meole brook, is part of the conventual church of a splendid abbey, founded for Benedictine monks, by Roger de Montgomery, in 1083, (on the site of a religious institution established prior to the Conquest, with the revenue of which it was partly endowed,) and dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul: it was a mitred abbey, and the abbots exercised episcopal authority in their house, being in some respects exempt from the jurisdiction of the diocesan: at the dissolution, in 1513, its revenue was estimated at £615. 4. 3. The king intended to make Shrewsbury the seat of a diocese, and to raise the abbey church into a cathedral, Dr. Bouchier, the last abbot of Leicester, having been actually nominated bishop; but pecuniary exigencies compelled him to abandon the design. The abbey was further distinguished by the resort of many pilgrims to the shrine of St. Winifred, whose remains had been removed hither from Gwytherin, in Denbighshire. The walls of this establishment included ten acres, and the buildings, principally in the Norman style of architecture, were extensive and magnificent: the principal remains are the western tower, the north porch, nave, and aisles of the abbey, now the parish church, besides some small portions of the conventual buildings: the former retains several features of its ancient grandeur, though many alterations have been made, particularly the introduction of a large window of seven lights, of elegant tracery, and emblazoned with armorial bearings in stained glass, in the later English style, over the west doorway, which was originally a handsome circular arch, within which, at a much later period, a painted one has been placed; on each side of which are niches, one of them containing a statue of St. Peter, and the other a statue of St. Paul. The interior has a solemn grandeur of effect; the roof is finely vaulted, and supported on circular arches and massive piers, and in other parts the slender clustered column and the pointed arch prevail: the east window is enriched with armorial bearings, including those of Lord Berwick, by whom it was presented, and, in the central compartment, with paintings of St. Peter and St. Paul, in stained glass, by Mr. D. Evans, of Shrewsbury: there are various altar-tombs and ancient monuments, and within an arch, which formerly led to the south aisle of the transept, is an ancient figure in armour, supposed to be that of its founder, Earl Roger, who, having assumed the cowl toward the close of his life, died and was buried here. Among the ruins of the conventual buildings is a fragment, supposed to be part of the refectory, on which is an exquisitely beautiful octagonal structure of stone, resting partly on a corbel, projecting from the wall, and supposed to have been an oratory, or pulpit, from which one of the monks, according to their custom, read to his brethren while at dinner: it is an unrivalled specimen of the decorated style of English architecture, ornamented with lofty and finely-pointed windows, divided only by enriched mullions rising from the corbel, and crowned with trefoiled arches, deeply moulded; the spaces between the three northern arches are filled up to the height of four feet with stone panels, in which are enshrined figures, and the exterior is crowned with an obtuse dome almost concealed by the ivy which has overspread the building: the interior is six feet in diameter, and the roof is elaborately groined, and ornamented in the centre, where the ribs unite, with an alto relievo of the Crucifixion. The chapel of St. Giles, which was originally attached to the hospital belonging to the abbey church, stands at the eastern extremity of the Abbey Foregate, and divine service is performed in it only twice a year, being principally appropriated to the performance of the funeral service: it is a small ancient building, having recently undergone considerable repair, with a diminutive turret, and an elegant eastern window of stained glass. The living of St. Julian's is a perpetual curacy, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Earl of Tankerville: the church, with the exception of the tower, which is in the Norman style of architecture, was rebuilt of brick in 1750; the interior, which is neatly arranged, is decorated with some relics of the ancient structure; in the east wall of the chancel is a small female figure, enshrined in rich tabernacle-work, probably representing St. Juliana the patroness, and in the ceiling is preserved a considerable portion of the ancient fret-work; the east window is embellished with a painting of St. James, in stained glass, brought from Rouen during the French revolution, above which are some armorial bearings; among the monuments is a slab of coarse alabaster, inscribed with Longobardic characters. The living of St. Mary's is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the Corporation and Head Master of the free grammar school: the church is an ancient cruciform structure, partly in the Norman, and partly in the early English, style of architecture, with a western tower surmounted by a lofty spire of beautiful proportion; the lower part of the tower and the south porch are of the Norman style: the interior is well arranged, and, from its frequent enlargement and alteration, comprises specimens of various styles; the nave, of which the oak roof is finely panelled and carved, and supported on circular arches and massive piers, is lighted by a double range of clerestory windows, and separated from the chancel by a highly enriched pointed arch; the windows at the ends of the transepts, and on the north side of the chancel, are early English, and the east window of the latter is embellished with stained glass, formerly in the old church of St. Chad, representing the genealogy of Christ from the root of Jesse, and containing in each of the numerous oval compartments a king, or patriarch, of the ancestry of Joseph, the husband of the Virgin Mary: among the monuments is one to the memory of Robert Cadman, who, attempting a second time to perform his descent from the summit of the spire, by means of a rope, the other end of which was secured in a field on the opposite side of the river, was killed by the accidental breaking of the rope. A chapel of ease to St. Mary's, dedicated to St. Michael, has recently been built near the Castle Foregate, by public subscription, aided by a grant of £500 from the Incorporated Society for building and enlarging churches and chapels: it contains eight hundred and ten sittings, of which six hundred and thirty are free. A chapel of ease to the parish of St. Chad is also in progress of erection, in Frankwell. There are places of worship for Baptists, the Society of Friends, Independents, Wesleyan and Welch Methodists, Sandemanians, Unitarians, and Roman Catholics.

The royal free grammar school was founded by Edward VI.; its endowment, augmented by Queen Elizabeth, produces an annual income of about £3000: it is under the superintendence of the Bishop of Lichfield and Coventry, as visitor, and thirteen trustees, the mayor of Shrewsbury, who presides at the several meetings, being one: it is conducted by a head and second master, with salaries of £300 and £150 respectively, appointed by the Master and Fellows of St. John's College, Cambridge, and is open for gratuitous instruction to all sons of burgesses, and has maintained, for many years, a distinguished rank among the public schools of the country. Belonging to it are four exhibitions of £70 per annum each, and four of £15 per annum each, to St. John's College, Cambridge; four, of £60 per annum each, to Christ Church College, Oxford; and two of £25 per annum each, and one of £23 per annum, to either of the Universities; four scholarships of £63 per annum each, and two of £40 each, in Magdalene College, Cambridge; a by-fellowship in the same college, of £126 per annum, and three contingent exhibitions.

Exclusively of boys on the foundation, there are more than two hundred boarders in this establishment, for whose accommodation the ample houses of the masters, contiguous to the school, afford every advantage. The premises, in the later style of English architecture, occupy two sides of a quadrangle, with a square turret crowned with pinnacles in the angle, and comprise spacious school-rooms, and a chapel, over which is a fine library, rebuilt in 1815, at an expense of £1860, and containing an extensive and valuable collection of books and manuscripts, to which is annexed a museum of antiquities from Wroxeter, and fossils peculiar to this part of the country. Among the eminent persons who have received the rudiments of their education in this school are, Sir Philip Sydney; Sir Fulke Greville (Lord Brooke); Dr. John Thomas, Bishop of Salisbury; the Rev. Dr. John Taylor, a learned critic and philologist; Dr. Waring, Lucasian Professor of Mathematics in the University of Cambridge; W. Wycherly and Ambrose Phillips, the poets; William Clark, a learned divine and antiquary; and various others. A school was founded in 1800, and a handsome freestone building erected, at an expense of £2000, containing spacious school-rooms, and a convenient house for the master and mistress, by Mr. John Allat, formerly chamberlain of the borough, who endowed it for the clothing, instruction, and apprenticing of poor children: there are twenty boys and twenty girls in the establishment, and, from the same funds, coats and gowns are annually distributed among a considerable number of aged men and women. A school for instructing, clothing, and apprenticing poor children of the parish of St. Julian, was founded, and a neat brick building erected for it, in 1724, by Mr. Thomas Bowdler, alderman and draper. The public subscription charity school, near the abbey church, was established in 1778, at which time houses for the master and mistress were built; there are one hundred and seventy boys and one hundred and forty girls in this school, who are instructed on Dr. Bell's system, and annually clothed. The royal Lancasterian school was established, and a commodious building, comprising two school-rooms, with apartments for the master and the mistress, was erected by subscription in 1812: there are one hundred and seventy boys, and one hundred and thirty girls in this institution. Sunday schools have also been instituted in connexion with the established church and with the several dissenting places of worship. St. Chad's almshouses were founded, in 1409, by Mr. Bennet Tupton, with a small endowment; there were originally thirteen, but for want of funds two have fallen into decay: the inmates receive sixteen shillings per annum each. St. Mary's almshouses, sixteen in number, were founded, in 1460, by Mr. Degory Watur, draper; the inmates, who must be inhabitants of St. Mary's parish, receive from his endowment £2. 6. 10½. per annum each, and an upper garment every other year from the Drapers' Company: the old almshouses were taken down in 1827, and a new building has been erected opposite St. Mary's church. St. Giles' almshouses, four in number, are inhabited by aged persons nominated by the Earl of Tankerville, who allows them one shilling and sixpence each per week, with a quantity of coal and an upper garment annually.

The house of industry, beautifully situated on an eminence adjoining Kingsland, on the south bank of the Severn, was erected in 1765, at an expense of £12,000, by the governors of the Foundling Hospital in London, as a branch establishment; on the relinquishment of that design it was closed, and afterwards opened as a woollen manufactory for the employment of the children of the poor: it was subsequently rented by Government for the confinement of prisoners during the American war, and on the incorporation of the parishes for the maintenance of their poor, in 1784, it was purchased by the guardians and appropriated to its present use: the buildings, in addition to the inhabited apartments, comprise a chapel, school-rooms, work-rooms, an infirmary, &c., with about twenty acres of land adjoining it. The general infirmary, established in 1745, was the second formed in the kingdom, that of Winchester being the first; it is liberally supported by subscription, and is under the superintendence of a president and a committee, and, in addition to the gratuitous attendance of the physicians and surgeons in the neighbourhood, has a resident surgeon, a matron to superintend the domestic arrangements, a secretary, and other officers: the premises, originally of brick, being found too small for the increased population of the town and neighbourhood, were taken down in 1827, and have been handsomely rebuilt of stone, upon a much more extensive scale, at an expense of £18,735. 17. 10., of which, £13,044. 1. 3. was raised by subscription, forming one of the most commodious and splendid establishments of the kind in England. In the suburb of Frankwell is an hospital, founded, in 1734, by Mr. James Millington, draper, who bequeathed nearly the whole of his property for its erection and endowment: it is a neat brick building, with a turret rising from the centre, in which is a chapel (used also as a school-room), with houses for the master and mistress, and on each side are six small houses, for twelve single men or women chosen from the poor housekeepers of Frankwell, or that part of the parish of St. Chad which is nearest to it; they receive £6 per annum each, an allowance of coal, and a gown or coat; a gown or coat, with £2, is also given annually to each of ten poor housekeepers resident in Frankwell, who, on vacancies occurring in the hospital, have the preference of appointment: twenty poor boys and twenty girls, natives of Frankwell, are completely clothed, educated, and apprenticed on leaving the school; the master has a salary of £40 per annum, with £10 additional for keeping the accounts; the mistress a salary of £40 per annum, and the chaplain a stipend of £25 per annum. On the expiration of the first year of his apprenticeship, each boy, producing a certificate of good conduct, receives a present of £5, and each girl has £5 on being apprenticed. Two exhibitions of £40 per annum each, to Magdalene College, Cambridge, were given by the same founder, to which boys educated in the hospital have the first claim, and which, in default of such, revert to boys born in Frankwell, and educated in the free grammar school. Among the monastic institutions anciently existing here were, a convent of Grey friars, founded in the reign of Henry III., by Hawise, wife of John de Charleton, Lord of Powis, of which there are some remains; a convent of Dominican friars, founded by Lady Genevile, of which there is not a vestige, the foundations having been lately dug up; and a convent of Augustine friars, founded by one of the family of Stafford, of which some small portions are remaining. Of the numerous chapels, the only one of which there are any remains is that of St. Nicholas, near the old Council-house, now converted into a stable. Among the eminent natives of this town were, Richard and George Plantagenet, sons of Edward IV.; Ralph of Shrewsbury, Bishop of Bath and Wells; Robert, Bishop of Bangor; Thomas Bower, and John Thomas, Bishops of Salisbury; Edward Wooley, Bishop of Clonfert; Sneyd Davies; Lord Chief Justice Jones; Richard Onslow, Speaker of the House of Commons; the Rev. Job Orton; George Costard, a distinguished mathematician; Thomas Churchyard, the poet; Vice-Admiral Benbow; Dr. John Taylor, a learned critic, and editor of Demosthenes; Hugh Farmer, an eminent divine; and Dr. Charles Burney, a celebrated musician. Ordericus Vitalis, one of the best of early English historians, born at Atcham, in 1074, was educated in the abbey. Shrewsbury gives the title of earl to the family of Talbot.

SHREWTON, a parish in the hundred of BRANCH and DOLE, county of WILTS, $5\frac{3}{4}$ miles (W. N. W.) from Amesbury, containing 461 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £8, and in the patronage of the Bishop of Salisbury. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. There are two places of worship for Baptists.

SHRIPPLE, a tything in the parish of IDMISTON, hundred of ALDERBURY, county of WILTS, 7 miles (E. by N.) from Salisbury, containing 51 inhabitants.

SHRIVENHAM, a parish (formerly a market town) in the hundred of SHRIVENHAM, county of BERKS, 5 miles (S. W. by S.) from Great Farringdon, containing, with the chapelries of Longcot and Watchfield, the hamlet of Fernham, and the tythings of Beckett and Bourton, 1879 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Berks, and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £20, and in the patronage of the Crown. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a large structure, principally in the Norman style, with a tower rising from the centre. A chantry was founded here, in 1336, by John de Burgh-ton and Agnes his wife. William de Valence obtained a charter, in 1257, for a weekly market on Thursday, and an annual fair on the festival of St. Mary Magdalene, which were confirmed by another charter in 1383, but both have been long disused. The Wilts and Berks canal passes through the parish. Thomas Stratton, in 1703, gave a rent-charge of £4, for which sum ten boys are educated in a school-house purchased by the parish, with aid from private subscriptions. In 1788, the materials of an old chapel at Watchfield were sold, and the produce vested in the purchase of £260. 4. 1. three per cents., the dividends arising from which are applied for teaching six poor children, and six others are instructed by a schoolmistress, for the annual proceeds of £100, left by Richard Smith, in 1818. Here are eight almshouses, founded in 1642, by Sir Henry Martin, with an endowment of about £40 per annum.

SHROPHAM, a parish in the hundred of SHROPHAM, county of NORFOLK, 4 miles (N. by W.) from East Harling, containing 457 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £8. 13. 9., and in the patronage of the Mayor and Corporation of Norwich. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. Shropham, which gave name to the hundred, was anciently a town of some importance, though it is now only a small village.

SHROPSHIRE, an inland county, bounded on the north by Cheshire, and a detached portion of the Welch county of Flint; on the east by Staffordshire; on the south-east by Worcestershire; on the south by Herefordshire; and on the south-west, west, and north-west, respectively, by the counties of Radnor, Montgomery, and Denbigh, in Wales. It extends from $52^{\circ} 20'$ to $53^{\circ} 4'$ (N. Lat.), and from $2^{\circ} 17'$ to $3^{\circ} 14'$ (W. Lon.), and comprises an area of upwards of one thousand three hundred and forty-one square miles, or about eight hundred and fifty-eight thousand two hundred and forty statute acres. The population, in 1821, was 206,153. The name has been corrupted from the Saxon Scrob-scire, a contraction of Scrobbes-byrig-scyre, meaning the shire of Scrobbes-byrig, the Saxon name for Shrewsbury. The aboriginal inhabitants of this district were of the tribes called the Cornavii and the Ordovices, the former occupying the country on the north-eastern side of the Severn; the latter, the opposite shores of that river, and the south-western tracts. Little is known of the Cornavii, but the Ordovices joined with the Silures, under Caractacus, in defending their territory against the Roman invaders; and it is thought by some that the battle in which the Britons under that leader were finally defeated, by Ostorius Scapula, was fought within the limits of this county. Gough supposes it to have been at the hill called Caer Caradoc, or the Gaer, near the junction of the small rivers Clun and Temd, on the point of which are the remains of a very large and strongly fortified camp. Under the Roman dominion, Shropshire was included in the division called Flavia Caesariensis. After that people had abandoned Britain, this county was the theatre of numerous sanguinary contests between the Britons and the Saxons, by the former of whom it was held as part of the kingdom of Powysland, of which Shrewsbury, called by them Pengwerne, was the capital. In the year 642, at Oswestry, then called Maserfeld, Oswald, King of Northumbria, was defeated and slain, by Penda, the Pagan king of Mercia. Though the British princes long disputed the possession of this territory, they were ultimately obliged to retreat; and in 777, their seat of royalty was transferred to Mathrafael, among the mountains of Powys, and Shropshire became part of the kingdom of Mercia. They still, however, made frequent inroads; and the warlike Saxon monarch, Offa, partly to avert the evils attendant upon these hostilities, caused a deep dyke and rampart to be made, which extended one hundred miles along the mountainous border of Wales, from the Clwyddian hills to the mouth of the Wye, crossing the westernmost parts of Shropshire; but the Welch continued their incursions far within this boundary, and in their hasty retreats often carried off immense booty. In the ninth century, when the Danes invaded the island, this part of Mercia, although it suffered less than some others, experienced much calamity, and its chief city, Uriconium, was destroyed. Shrewsbury then sprang up, and flourished in consequence; and Alfred, having subdued these ravagers, ranked it among his principal cities, and gave its name to the shire of which it was the capital. In 1016, Shrewsbury was taken by Edmund Ironside, who severely punished the inhabitants for having taken part with Canute, in opposition to his father Ethelred. The Welch continued their incursions both before and after this event with great fierceness, particularly in the time of Edward the Confessor, under their reigning prince Griffydd. Harold, afterwards king of England, undertook an expedition against this prince, both by land and sea, and harassed the Welch so much, that they sent him the head of their chief in token of subjection: he afterwards endeavoured to secure the advantages thus gained by a decree, forbidding any Welchman to appear on the eastern side of Offa's Dyke, on pain of losing his right hand.

At the period of the Norman Conquest, nearly the whole of Shropshire, together with extensive possessions in other parts of England, was bestowed on Roger de Montgomery, a relation of William's, and one of his chief captains, in reward for his services. But the hostilities of the Welch disturbed this warrior in the enjoyment of his good fortune; and, in 1067, Owen Gwynnedd, their prince, in alliance with Edric Sylvaticus, or Edric the Forester, the Saxon Earl of Shrewsbury, laid siege to that town, with a force so formidable as to require the presence of the Conqueror, who repulsed the assailants with great slaughter, and bestowed the title of Earl of Shrewsbury upon Roger de Montgomery. This county, in like manner, was frequently the scene of contest, or of preparation for military enterprise, so long as the ancient British inhabitants of Wales maintained their independence. William the Conqueror, and his more immediate successors, for the purpose of subduing the resolute Britons, issued grants to certain of his nobles of all the lands they should be able to wrest from them; and hence originated the seigniories and jurisdictions of the lords marchers. The precise extent of the territory designated as the Marches it is difficult to determine, the word meaning, in a general sense, the borders between the Welch and the English: but the western border of Shropshire certainly formed a principal portion. The tenure by which these lords marchers held under the king was, in case of war, to serve with a certain number of vassals, to furnish their castles with strong garrisons, and with sufficient military implements and stores for defence, to keep the king's enemies in subjection: to enable them to perform this, they were allowed to exercise, in their respective territories, absolute power. For their better security they fortified old castles and built new ones, garrisoning them with their own retainers; and thus it was that the greater part of the numerous castles on the Welch border were erected. They had particular laws in their baronies, termed Angletheria and Waltheria, where all suits between them and their tenants were commenced and determined; but if a question arose concerning the barony and its title, it was referred to the king's courts. There was also, so early as the reign of John, a lord warden of the marches, whose jurisdiction resembled that of a lord-lieutenant.

In the year 1102, Bridgenorth and Shrewsbury, both which had been garrisoned for Robert, Duke of Normandy, by Robert de Belesme, Earl of Shrewsbury, were taken by Henry I., and that earl having incurred forfeiture of his estates, the county was bestowed by the king upon his queen Adeliza. In 1138, Ludlow, which had been seized by Henry I. from Robert de Belesme, being held by Gervaise Paganel, its governor, for the empress Matilda, was besieged by King Stephen; and, in 1139, Shrewsbury, which had been seized by William Fitz-Alan, Lord of Oswestry, for the empress, was taken by the same monarch, after a vigorous defence. In 1156, Bridgenorth, then held by Hugh de Mortimer against the authority of its royal owner, Henry II., was besieged and reduced by that monarch, who, in 1164, assembled an army in Shropshire, and attempted the subjugation of the Welch; near the Ceiriog, in the north-western part of the county, a strong body of his troops, which had been sent from Oswestry, where the king was then lying, to attempt the passage of that river, was attacked by the Welch, in a wood of birches at the farther end of Selattyn Hill, opposite to Chirk castle, and very few of the men who composed it escaped. In 1212, Oswestry was taken and burned by King John, who afterwards entered Wales, where he made great devastation. In the year 1215, Shrewsbury surrendered without resistance to Llewellyn, Prince of Wales, whose forces had previously gained many advantages on the marches; and, in 1233, Oswestry was taken and burned by the same chieftain, in alliance with the Earl of Pembroke, who afterwards again obtained possession of Shrewsbury. At that town, in 1241, Henry III. assembled his army to attack David ap Llewellyn, Prince of Wales; but on submission made by him, Henry, after remaining there fifteen days, returned to London. In 1253, the gentry of the county incurred the king's displeasure, by refusing to obey the new constitutions then enjoined for the keeping of arms and musters, and being answerable for robberies on the highway; the penalties exacted in punishment of which disobedience were so severe, that for some years after the people were destitute of necessities, and without means of tilling the ground. In the war between that monarch and the insurgent barons, the latter took Shrewsbury, in 1260, but it was shortly afterwards retaken by the forces of Henry. In 1263, Bridgenorth was captured by Simon de Montfort, Earl of Leicester. Henry III., in 1267, again came to Shrewsbury with an army, designing to attack the Welch, but the expedition was abandoned on the submission of their prince, Llewellyn. The frequent hostilities of the Welch still rendered it necessary that vigorous measures should be taken against them; and in 1277, in the reign of Edward I., that monarch being personally engaged in the final reduction of Wales, the court of Exchequer, and the court of King's Bench, were removed to Shrewsbury for a few months. In 1283, during the same reign, a parliament was assembled at Shrewsbury, the king and his court being lodged at Acton-Burnell.

During the interval which had elapsed between the reign of the Conqueror and that of Edward I., as the English arms had continued to prevail, so the dominion of the marches had penetrated at length into the very heart of Wales; but on the death of Llewellyn, in the eleventh year of the latter monarch's reign, when the Welch submitted to his power, the necessity for such grants as those before mentioned existed no longer, and after this period no more lords marchers were created: the power of these once absolute baronial chieftains was also diminished by the erection of the court of the marches, which was held at Ludlow. In the year 1397, Richard II., in the twentieth year of his reign, held a parliament at Shrewsbury, called by Speed, from the numbers that attended it, "the Great Parliament;" on its dissolution the king went to Oswestry, where the Duke of Hereford, afterwards Henry IV., and the Duke of Norfolk, appeared before him, and it was there determined that they should decide the quarrel which had arisen between them by single combat, at Coventry. In 1403, on July 22nd, the partisans of the Earl of Northumberland, who were to have been joined by an army under Owen Glyndwr, were defeated near Shrewsbury by Henry IV.; their commander, Henry Percy, surnamed Hotspur, was slain, and the Earl of Worcester taken prisoner, as also was the Scotch Earl Douglas, in his flight after the action, on Haughmond hill: the total number of slain on both sides was about two thousand three hundred knights and gentlemen, and six thousand common soldiers. In gratitude for this victory, Henry built and endowed a collegiate church upon the spot where most of the slain were buried, which has ever since been called Battle-field. Glyndwr's forces, amounting to twelve thousand men, which had remained inactive at Oswestry, after the defeat of their allies, retired into Wales. During the war between the rival houses of York and Lancaster, in the year 1455, Richard, Duke of York, published at Ludlow a declaration of allegiance to the reigning monarch, Henry VI., saying also that the army which he had raised was only for the redress of grievances and the public weal: in 1459, however, Henry having advanced against this nobleman with superior forces, was joined at Ludford, a village near Ludlow, on October 13th, by Sir Andrew Trollope, with a large body of troops, which had deserted from the Duke of York at Ludlow; and on this, the duke, with his sons, the Earls of March and Rutland, and his friends, the Earls of Salisbury and Warwick, fled from the country: the king's forces then entered Ludlow, which they sacked. After the death of the Duke of York at the battle of Wakefield, his son Edward, afterwards Edward IV., went to Shrewsbury, in 1460, and obtained from the surrounding country a powerful levy, with which he obtained the victory at the great battle of Mortimer's Cross in Herefordshire. The Earl of Richmond, afterwards Henry VII., in his march from Milford Haven towards Leicestershire, in which county he soon after fought the great battle of Bosworth Field, passed with his increasing army through Shropshire: he was admitted into Shrewsbury without resistance, and thence marched by Newport, where he was joined by Sir Gilbert Talbot, with two thousand of the tenantry and retainers of the Earl of Shrewsbury, then a minor, to whom Sir Gilbert was uncle and guardian.

In the great civil war of the seventeenth century, this county was the scene of much violence and bloodshed. On September 20th, 1642, at Wellington, Charles I., at the head of his army, with which he had marched from Nottingham, issued a proclamation, promising to preserve the Protestant religion, the laws and liberty of his subjects, and the privileges of parliament; and thence marched to Shrewsbury, where he was joined by his two sons, Prince Charles, and James Duke of York, by Prince Rupert, and a great number of noblemen and gentlemen: the king remained here until the 12th of October, when he marched to Bridgenorth, and thence advanced towards Edge-hill in Warwickshire, where occurred the first great conflict of that memorable struggle. In 1644, Longford house, on April 3rd, and Tong castle, on April 6th, were captured from the parliamentarians by Prince Rupert; but on the other hand, in June of the same year, Oswestry was taken from the royalists by the Earl of Denbigh. In July, the latter place was besieged by a party of royalist forces under Col. Marrowe, but was relieved by Sir Thomas Middleton, who took about two hundred prisoners. In February, 1645, Apsley house was taken by the parliamentarians under Sir John Price; and on the 9th of the same month, Shrewsbury was taken by surprise by Col. Mytton, the parliamentary governor of Wem; its governor, Sir Michael Earnley, was slain, sixty gentlemen and two hundred soldiers made prisoners, and fifteen pieces of ordnance fell into the hands of the victors. By the loss of this important station the royal communication with North Wales was cut off, and a check given to the plan which had been formed by the united counties of Salop, Worcester, Chester, and Flint, of augmenting the king's forces at Stokesay, near Ludlow. In the summer of this year, a royalist force of nearly two thousand horse and foot, drawn from the garrisons at Ludlow, Hereford, Worcester, and Monmouth, was defeated by an inferior number of parliamentarians; and to a party of the latter, under Sir William Brereton, the castle of Ludlow was delivered up on the 9th of June in the year following. In 1646, Bridgenorth castle also, after an obstinate resistance of a month, surrendered to the parliamentarians. In 1651, when Charles II. was fleeing, after the disastrous issue of the battle of Worcester, he arrived, at three o'clock in the morning of September 4th, at White Ladies' priory, on the eastern side of this county; from that place, after having concealed himself in the neighbourhood during the two following days, he was conducted to Boscobel house, and the day after his arrival there was concealed, in company with Col. Careless, in the Royal Oak, in an adjoining wood: having passed two nights at this place, he removed to another and more secure hiding-place in Staffordshire. The last hostile movement made in Shropshire was an ineffectual attempt, in 1654, by Sir Thomas Harris and others, to surprise the castle of Shrewsbury for the king. The jurisdiction of the president and council of the marches, which had been re-established at Ludlow by Edward IV., in honour of the Earl of March, from whom he was descended, and whose title he had borne, was abolished by act of parliament, in the first year of the reign of William and Mary, at the humble suit of the gentlemen and other inhabitants of the principality of Wales.

Shropshire includes parts of the several dioceses of Hereford, Lichfield and Coventry, and St. Asaph: a detached portion, containing the parishes of Claverley, Hales-Owen, and Worfield, is in that of Worcester: the whole is contained in the province of Canterbury. That part of the diocese of Hereford which is in Shropshire, forming about one-half of the county, is almost wholly included in the archdeaconry of Salop, together with parts of Montgomeryshire, Radnorshire, Herefordshire, and Worcestershire: only one parish in this county is in the archdeaconry of Hereford. The archdeaconry of Salop, which comprises most of that part of the diocese of Lichfield and Coventry contained in Shropshire, which is very considerable, is for the most part within the limits of this county; five parishes only, in the same diocese, being in the archdeaconry of Stafford. The archdeaconry of St. Asaph is co-extensive with the diocese. Shropshire contains the deaneries of Burford, Clun, Ludlow, Marchia, Newport, Pontesbury, Salop, Stottesden, and Wenlock. The boundaries of the ecclesiastical divisions are extremely irregular: some parishes are contained partly in this and partly in other counties. The number is two hundred and fourteen, of which one hundred and five are rectories, fifty-eight vicarages, and the remainder perpetual curacies. For purposes of civil government the county is divided into fifteen hundreds, or districts answering thereto, viz. the hundreds of Bradford (North), comprising the Drayton and Whitchurch divisions; Bradford (South), comprising the Newport and Wellington divisions; and Brimstree, comprising the Hales-Owen and Shifnall divisions; and the hundreds of Chirbury, Condover, Ford, Munslow, Oswestry, Overs, Pimhill, Purslow (with which that of Clun has been incorporated), and Stottesden; the liberty of Shrewsbury; and the franchise of Wenlock. It contains the borough and market towns of Shrewsbury, Bishop's Castle, Bridgenorth, Clun, Ludlow, and Wenlock; and the market towns of Broseley, Cleobury-Mortimer, Drayton in Hales, Ellesmere, Hales-Owen, Newport, Oswestry, Shifnall, Church-Stretton, Wellington, Wem, and Whitchurch. Two knights are returned to parliament for the shire, and two representatives for each of the boroughs. The county members are elected at Shrewsbury. Shropshire is included in the Oxford circuit: the assizes and general quarter sessions are held at Shrewsbury, where is the county gaol. It is the seat of judicature for all suits of the inhabitants of North Wales, commenced by Quo Minus in the Exchequer at Westminster, which are tried at the assizes here, as they are for those of South Wales at Hereford. There are one hundred and nine acting magistrates. The rates raised in the county for the year ending March 25th, 1827, amounted to £96,921. 3., the expenditure to £96,461. 10., of which £80,753. 18. was applied to the relief of the poor.

The form of the county is an irregular parallelogram. It possesses almost every variety of fine scenery; bold and lofty mountains; woody and secluded vallies; fertile and widely-cultivated plains; a majestic river, which divides it into two nearly equal portions; and sequestered lakes. Though no part of the surface is absolutely flat, yet the north-eastern districts are comparatively so, as contrasted with the hills on the southern and western borders, approaching the Welch mountains, and form an important part of the immense plain, or vale, which also includes the whole of the county of Cheshire, and the southern part of Lancashire, and is bounded on the east by the hills of Staffordshire, Derbyshire, and the western borders of Yorkshire; and on the west by the mountains of North Wales, and by the sea. The extent of the plain of Salop is about thirty miles long from north to south, or from Whitchurch to Church-Stretton; and twenty-eight miles broad, from Oswestry to Colebrook-dale: it is divided into two unequal portions by the Severn, and is bounded, with other parts of Shropshire, on the west by a line of limestone hills, extending from Ruabon to Llanymynech, and the Breydden hills; on the east by the hills on the Staffordshire border, the Wrekin, the hills of Acton-Burnell, Frodgesley, the Lawley, and Caer-Caradoc; and on the south by the Longmynd, or Longmont, and the Stiperstones. The famed Wrekin mountain, celebrated for the magnificent and extensive prospects which it commands, rises singly out of the plain, to the height of nearly one thousand two hundred feet above the level of the Severn, near which it is situated: north of it are excrescences of rock and partial swells. To the south-west the hills are more frequent; and on the western and south-western borders of the county is a striking succession of mountainous elevations, divided by beautiful vallies: some of the highest ground in the county is considered to be the summits of the hills in the vicinity of Oswestry. Lying to the east of the Wrekin, and on the eastern borders of the county, the coal district of Colebrookdale, which extends from north-east to south-west, about eight miles in length, and two in breadth, is considerably above the level of the plain of Shropshire, more especially its southern parts; so that at Horsehay it is five hundred feet above the level of the Severn, which there approaches it: the scenery of this vale is particularly beautiful. South-west of the Severn, the limestone ridge of hills, which commences at Lincoln hill in Colebrookdale, proceeds in a south-westerly direction towards Church-Stretton, near which place it turns southward from the hills, around Hope-Bowdler, and descends nearly in a direct line to Ludlow, on the southern border of the county. Westward is a vale about two miles broad, and nearly fifteen in length, from Colebrookdale to the Stretton valley. Its western side is bounded by the line of low hills ranging, without any intermediate valley, along the base of a much more elevated ridge, of which the Wrekin forms the northern extremity: this chain is continued on the south-western side of the Severn, in a line with the Wrekin, and constitutes the Acton-Burnell hills, the Frodgesley hills, the Lawley, Caer Caradoc, and the Hope-Bowdler hills; all which have craggy summits, ascend abruptly from the plain, at an angle of about sixty degrees, and command remarkably fine prospects. The vale in which Church-Stretton is situated separates from these the singular mass of hills called the Longmynd, which ascends gradually from the plain to a height much superior to that of the Wrekin, and then stretches, with a level and unvaried summit, for several miles towards Bishop's Castle. The peculiar characteristic of these hills is their squareness, both in plan and outline, and from the vale just mentioned three or four lines of them are seen rising above each other, the form of each being nearly a cube, or, from the wasting of the summit and accumulations at the base, a truncated pyramid: almost every hill is separated from the others by a deep narrow valley, or glen, occasionally overhung with wood, and watered by a stream, which here and there forms small cascades: some of these streams flow northward into the plain of Shrewsbury; and others take a southerly course, watering the country between Bishop's Castle and Ludlow. Following the mountainous line that forms the boundary of the plain of Salop, a high and rocky district occurs between the high road from Shrewsbury to Bishop's Castle and the vale of Montgomery. The most elevated peak of this assemblage of lofty hills is called the Stiperstones, its summit being extremely craggy, and overspread with enormous loose blocks of quartz, which, at a distance, look like the ruins of some great fortress. This hill is somewhat higher than the Wrekin, and forms the abrupt termination of a line of mountains that hence extends south-westward into Radnorshire. From the Stiperstones a range of low hills stretches, in a north-easterly direction, as far as Shrewsbury, under the names of Lyth hill, Baystone hill, and the Sharpstones. In the southern parts of the county, the Clee hills, like the Wrekin, have their bases projecting towards the low lands, which accompany the course of the Severn: the Brown Clee hill, and the Titterston Clee hill, are amongst the highest in Shropshire, and have flat tops, but very irregular sides, and, like many others similarly situated, have vestiges of ancient fortifications upon their summits. Of the Berwyn mountains only a small portion, the slate mountain of Selattyn, is within the boundary of Salop. The views obtained from many of the heights are remarkably grand and beautiful. The lakes, though neither numerous nor of great extent, form a variety in the landscape rarely met with in the midland counties; that adjoining Ellesmere covers one hundred and sixteen acres, and there are several others in the neighbourhood, but of smaller extent. Near Whitchurch are two other meres; besides which, on the northern side of the Severn, are those of Fennymere, Llynclyspool, and Ancot. On the western side of the county is Marton pool, occupying about forty acres; and at Shrawardine is a fine piece of water of nearly the same size: there is another Marton pool, on the northern side of the Severn, of nearly the same size as the former. South of the Severn, at the distance of a few miles from Shrewsbury, is Beaumere, a small but beautiful sheet of water, and almost adjoining it is Shomere.

These irregularities of surface and of soil produce great diversity in the climate. The corn harvest on the eastern side of the county, where the land is warm and flat, frequently commences a fortnight sooner than in the more central districts, where, although the vales are extensive, the soils are heavier, and frequently rest upon clay; hay and grain are both, however, gathered earlier in the central than in the western parts of the county, where the ground is not in general so stiff, but where the vales are narrow, and the high lands frequent and extensive. The air is generally very salubrious, and the inhabitants are remarkable for their longevity.

The variations of soil are as great as those of surface; and the different kinds are so intermingled as to render it difficult to define the limits of each. There is nearly an equal quantity of wheat and turnip land, though the proportions of the former somewhat preponderate. That part of the county which lies north-eastward of the Severn consists chiefly of a turnip soil under tillage, intermingled with large portions of meadow and pasture. The flat lands on the banks of that river, which are frequently overflowed, form rich meadows. On its south-western side, from Alderbury, in a district about eight miles wide, down to Cressage, the soils are chiefly of a good quality, but very variable; comprising pasture, wheat, and turnip land, each in small quantities. From Cressage, in a tract about six miles in width, to Bridgenorth, and thence to Cleobury and Ludlow, is chiefly a mixed soil upon clay, in some places very thin. The remaining south-western portion of the county has soils of almost every species, except chalk and flint: they are generally thin, some resting upon clay, others upon hard rock of different kinds, and compose extensive tracts of hilly wastes. In the hundred of Oswestry, on the northern side of the Severn, and occupying the north-western extremity of the county, is a considerable quantity of deep loam and gravelly soil, with some marl, in the parish of that name; while in that of West Felton, in the vicinity of the same town, is a large tract of black peaty bog. Towards the south-east the soil becomes sandy; and Pimhill hundred, which adjoins it on the east, contains a mixture of boggy land and of sand lying over a red sandstone, with a still greater proportion of sound wheat land. North Bradford, forming the north-eastern part of the county, has some low land of a peaty nature, good meadow land, a considerable quantity of sand lying upon a red sandstone, and some gravelly soils. South of this, and on the eastern border, the hundreds of South Bradford and Brimstree consist for the most part of sandy loam. The franchise of Wenlock, immediately to the west of the latter, is chiefly occupied by pale-coloured clays, locally called dye-earth, which at a considerable depth are blue, but near the surface become a pale yellow: there is also some light sand, and a considerable quantity of soil formed chiefly of the decomposed matter upon which it rests. In the hundreds of Stottesden, Overs, and Munslow, which adjoin the south-eastern and southern borders of the county, there is also much clay, and a varying stony soil upon a substratum of limestone: they have also a shallow rocky loam lying upon freestone, and sometimes slate marl; sands covering red sandstone, particularly in the vicinity of Bridgenorth, and some clays of a reddish colour, especially near Ludlow. In Condover hundred, nearly in the centre of the county, and on the southern side of the Severn, is a good deal of gravelly loam, sand, and clay, frequently blending in very small beds. In the liberties of Shrewsbury, around that town, and in the hundred of Ford, which lies on the south side of the Severn, between it and the western border of the county, there is also much pebbly loam: north of Shrewsbury is some reddish clay upon red rock, and on the northern border of Ford hundred are some lighter-coloured clays upon limestone: the southern part of this division consists for the most part of a deep clayey soil, and, proceeding still southward and westward, becomes gravelly, rocky, and uneven. The small hundred of Chirbury, southward of this, is still more rugged, but has plains of a deep light-coloured loam, or clay. In the hundred of Purslow, forming the south-western extremity of the county, although the surface is very uneven, yet several of the hills are smooth, and there are some pale-coloured clays, and a considerable quantity of lighter soils.

The red soils are in general very productive. On the arable lands the courses of husbandry vary; but there is not much difference between the culture of the sandy and gravelly soils of this county, and that practised on similar soils in Norfolk, or any other light soils where turnips are grown. The crops most common are, wheat, barley, oats, peas, and turnips. The average produce of wheat per acre is from fifteen to twenty bushels, that of barley from eighteen to thirty-five, and that of peas from ten to twenty-four. Rye was formerly much cultivated on the arenaceous soils, but to a great extent it has been superseded by wheat. A small quantity of vetches is grown, as green food for horses; and a little buck-wheat is sown on the light soils: scarcely any beans are cultivated: in the eastern part of the county turnips are almost universally grown; as also to a great extent on the rocky lands of the western side of it. The principal artificial grasses are the broad-leaved clover, Dutch clover (both red and white), trefoil, and ray-grass. Hops are cultivated in a small district on the Herefordshire side of the county; hemp and flax only in small quantities; potatoes are extensively grown. Grass land for hay is seldom manured: on the banks of the Severn, and in other flat tracts, intersected by smaller streams that occasionally overflow their banks, are natural meadows regularly mown; but the crops are often much damaged by floods: the hay harvest is generally in July. In the vales of the south-western parts of the county, the grass lands are very good: the pasture lands are not, however, on the whole, of the richest kind. The meadows, in different parts, are irrigated by means of levels preserved from the natural streams, and continued along their banks. Shropshire is not famous for its dairies: in the south-eastern portion of that part of it lying to the north-east of the Severn they are small, and, as much butter is made, the cheese is of an inferior quality: on the north-western side of the same district, and bordering upon Cheshire, the dairies are much larger, and are chiefly for cheese: on the other side of the Severn, small dairies are kept, both for butter and cheese. Lime and marl are very extensively employed as manures: with the former, which is most generally used, every part of the county is tolerably well supplied: soot and malt-dust are sometimes scattered over the meadows, or pastures, in the vicinity of the towns.

The neat cattle are considered to be for the most part of the same kind as those which prevail in Warwickshire and Staffordshire: the Old Shropshire ox was remarkable for a large dewlap. Many are also reared of the improved breeds of Lancashire, Cheshire, Leicestershire, and Staffordshire; and upon the southern confines, the Herefordshire breed prevails. In the vicinity of Bishop's Castle the cattle are good and uniform in shape and colour, the latter being a dark red. The neat cattle on the north-eastern side of the Severn are an inferior sort of the Lancashire long-horned breed, in general for the dairy. Most farmers rear a few calves yearly for the regular supply of their dairies: a still greater number is reared on the south-western side of the Severn, where they are worked young, and then sold, when about six years old, at the great fairs in the county, to the Northamptonshire and Leicestershire graziers. The old Shropshire sheep are horned and have black or mottled faces and legs: their size is about that of the South-Down sheep, but their necks are rather longer, and the carcass not quite so compact; they are extremely hardy, and so seldom drink, that if one of them be seen to do so, it is immediately regarded as diseased. On the Longmynd is a horned breed of sheep with black faces, apparently indigenous to the tract they inhabit; they are nimble and hardy; when fat, they weigh near ten pounds per quarter, and carry a fleece of about two pounds and a half, of which half a pound is coarse wool, and is sold separately from the rest. Upon the hills nearer Wales the flocks are without horns and with white faces; have rather shorter legs and heavier and coarser fleeces than the Longmynd sheep, and are of about the same weight. Perhaps in no county of equal size are reared or fattened so many hogs as in this: the original hog of Shropshire was a high-backed, large-eared animal, but this is now rarely to be met with unmixed with other breeds: pork and bacon are much consumed by the poorer classes of inhabitants.

There are some considerable rabbit-warrens upon the Longmynd and the Brown Clee hill. Geese are reared on the commons, and sold to the farmers, who fatten them: some farmers also, particularly in the honour of Clun, rear great numbers of turkeys, which are purchased by persons who drive them to Birmingham and other large towns. Many farmers have small orchards, from which they make cider for their own consumption; and on the confines of Herefordshire and Worcestershire, the orchards are larger, and the cider is made for sale. This county has been cleared at different times of much of its timber, great supplies having been sent to Bristol, for ship-building; but it still retains more fine woods of oak than most other counties, there being sufficient for the home consumption, and a considerable surplus for exportation. The coppice-woods are extensive, and consist chiefly of oak. Large quantities of oak poles are used in the coal-pits, and as they are required to be of considerable strength, the trees of which they are formed are seldom felled under twenty-four years' growth. On the side of Shropshire, towards Bewdley in Worcestershire, is a large tract of coppices, which are cut at from eighteen to twenty-one years' growth, to be converted into charcoal for manufacturing bar iron. There is much timber in the hedge-rows, consisting principally of oak and ash, with a few elms, and still fewer beech, lime, and sycamore trees: poplars are common by the sides of brooks and the smaller rivers: birches, both as trees and fences, are frequent in the south-western district. There are many modern plantations, generally of various kinds of fir and pine, intermingled with different deciduous trees: indeed, there are few trees which do not flourish in the soil. Exclusively of the heathy mountainous tracts before described, which are chiefly sheep-walks, there are some flat open heaths in the north-eastern part of the county, and in the parishes of Worfield and North Cleobury, in the vicinity of Bridgenorth. Clun Forest, an extensive sheep-walk, contains above twelve thousand acres, and is a fine extent of smooth turf, with every variation of swelling banks and retired dingles: a part of the Longmynd has been enclosed. There are several large mosses and a great number of smaller ones: the largest district of swampy moor-land surrounds the village of Kinnersley.

The whole of the county is plentifully supplied with coal; but in the south-western district, the common articles of fuel are peat and wood. The mineral productions are various and considerable; the principal are, coal, iron, lead, and stone of different kinds. The coal district of Colebrook-dale is about six miles long from north-east to south-west, and two miles broad: it commences on the south-western side of the Severn, in the parishes of Barrow and Much-Wenlock, and runs across that river through those of Broseley, Madeley, Little Wenlock, Wellington, Dawley, Malins-Lea, Shiftnall, Lilleshall, and some others. Red sandstone is found immediately to the eastward of this tract, and the coal strata dip rapidly towards it. The whole of this "independent coal formation" is composed of the usual members, viz. quartzose sandstone, indurated clay, clay porphyry, slate clay, and coal, alternating with each other without much regularity, except that each bed of coal is always immediately covered by indurated, or slaty, clay. Trop, or greenstone, appears in some places between the coal formation and the limestone upon which it rests, and which rises to the west of it. The strata are found most complete in Madeley colliery, where a pit has been sunk to the depth of seven hundred and twenty-nine feet, through all the beds, eighty-six in number, that constitute the formation. The sand-stones, which make part of the first thirty strata, are fine-grained, and often contain thin plates, or minute fragments, of coal: and the thirty-first and thirty-third strata are coarse-grained sandstone, entirely penetrated by petroleum. Below these, at different depths, are three thick beds of sandstone, varying in quality: vegetable impressions are found in most of them, excepting those nearest the surface. The clay porphyry occurs but once, at the depth of seventy-three feet from the surface. The indurated clay is, in some beds, compact, dull, and smooth, when it is termed clod; in others it is glossy, unctuous, and tending to a slaty texture, and is then called clunch: it encloses beds of clay iron-stone, in the form of compressed balls, or broad flat masses, and some vegetable impressions, and a few shells: the beds of iron-ore are five or six in number, and in the iron-stone nodules, vulgarly called ball-stone, impressions of various ferns are common. The slaty clay, called by the miners basses, is of a blueish black colour, usually containing pyrites, and is always either mixed with coal, or combined with petroleum. The first bed of coal occurs at the depth of one hundred and two feet from the surface; it is not more than four inches thick, and is very sulphureous: nine other beds of a similar nature, but somewhat thicker, lie between this and the depth of nearly four hundred feet; they are used only in burning lime. The first bed capable of being worked is five feet thick, and occurs at the depth of nearly five hundred feet: below it are thirteen other beds of different quality and thickness; some possess the quality of caking: they are usually a mixture of slate-coal and pitch-coal, but rarely of cannel coal. Of these numerous beds, some are wanting in the neighbouring collieries, and the thickness of others varies considerably. The whole formation rests either upon die-earth, which is of a greyish colour, and contains petrifications, chiefly of the Dudley fossil kind, and is so named because the beds of coal die, or cease, beneath it; or upon limestone, except in one place, where the greenstone trop interposes between the coal and the limestone. The principal faults, or breaks, in the strata run nearly north-east and south-west: two of these have thrown the strata on both sides of the district, from one to two hundred feet lower than they are in the middle of it, but have not at all affected the surface; and it is in this middle tract, on account of the greater facility of working the mines, that by far the greatest quantity of coal and iron-ore is raised. The limestone formation consists of beds of limestone and sand-stone, forming two mountain ranges westward of this, in the direction of north-east and south-west: at the northern extremity of one range, where it comes in contact with the coal formation, the limestone contains cavities, some of which are lined with, and some full of, petroleum. The combination of coal, iron-ore, &c., together with the advantages of water-carriage which it possesses, renders Colebrook-dale the centre of some of the most extensive iron-works in the kingdom, which consume by far the greater part of the coal raised there. In the Clee hills, from twenty to thirty miles southward of Colebrook-dale, are other coal-works, where the strata consist also of both coal and iron-stone, and dip towards the centre of the hills: this coal and iron-stone is in some places covered by a thick bed of basalt, which forms irregular ridges, higher than any other parts of the hills: the strata of coal in Brown Clee hill are much thinner than in the Tillerston, where the principal stratum is six feet thick: cannel coal is also found in this hill, and the strata are, as elsewhere, disarranged by faults. There are coal fields at Billingsley, two or three miles north-eastward of these, where a stratum of spatous iron-ore has been found; and valuable coal-works lie southward of the Clee hills, some of which produce cannel coal: coal is also found in most other parts of the hundred of Stottesden. Some miles westward of the first-mentioned coal district, pits have been sunk with success; and, indeed, out of the fifteen civil divisions of this county, ten are known to produce this valuable mineral: it is chiefly the south-western districts that are deficient of it. Nearly parallel with the Welch border is a bank of coal strata, extending from the Dee to the Severn, and a portion of these is worked in the western and north-western parts of Shropshire, the coal having the caking quality of the Newcastle coal, and yielding a powerful heat; the principal works are near Chirk bridge: a stratum of coal seven feet thick has here been met with: spatous iron-ore, and common argillaceous iron-stone, are also found. The strata dip towards the east, and rest upon an irregular band of limestone, which in some places rises to a great height above the plain, but in others scarcely appears above the surface. In many parts, especially near Oswestry, this limestone changes into a kind of marble, and small quantities of both lead and copper are found through its whole extent.

There are mines of lead-ore of a good quality adjoining the Stiperstones, and in their vicinity; in the western parts of the county, the veins are in argillaceous schistus, and produce sulphuret of lead, both galena and steel-ore (which latter contains silver), carbonate of lead chrystalized, red lead-ore, and blende, or black-jack: the Bog mine has been worked to the depth of one hundred and fifty yards, and a ton of the ore raised here yields fifteen hundred-weight of pure lead: the ore of the White grit mine does not yield so much. At Snailbach, a vein, which is in some parts four yards in width, has been worked to the depth of one hundred and eighty yards: calamine is also here met with. Ancient tools, judged to be Roman, have been found in these mines. The lead-ore is reduced at Minsterley and other places near the mines, whence it is sent by land-carriage to Shrewsbury, and there shipped, together with the raw calamine, in barges, for Bristol. There are appearances both of lead and copper in different other parts of the county. The various beds of stone are too numerous and diversified for minute description: besides those of limestone, a long range extends from Colebrook-dale, by Wenlock, to Ludlow, on the southern border of the county; the lime-works at Lilleshall are very considerable: limestone is also found in the Clee hills, and to a limited extent in the south-western districts, and in many places south of Shrewsbury, as well as in the parishes of Cardeston and Alberbury to the west of that town. At the eastern extremity of the Wrekin, and at some other lime-works, is produced a red lime, which sets very hard in water; in some parts of Shropshire limestone is found under very thick argillaceous strata. At Grinshill, seven miles north of Shrewsbury, is a noted quarry of white sand-stone, the bed of which is sixty feet thick: great use has been made of this stone in the more modern edifices of Shrewsbury and the vicinity. There are large extents of red sand-stone in the same neighbourhood, and westward and south-westward, as well as in the eastern parts of the county; and near Bridgenorth, beds of red sand-stone are found under white sand-stone, and vice versa. Further south, sand-stone prevails; and at Orton bank is a stratum similar to the Bath and Portland stone, enclosed in strata of limestone. In the western district is a siliceous grit, difficult to work; but the more common stone is argillaceous. A kind of stony slate is found in the parish of Bettws, on the south-western verge of the county, and is used for covering roofs; and good flag-stones are obtained in Corndon-hill, west of Bishop's Castle. In the Swinney mountain, near Oswestry, is a superior white sandstone; and the same is found at Bowden quarry, in the hundred of Munslow. At Soudley, in the parish of Eaton and franchise of Wenlock, is a very good flag-stone for floors. At Pitchford, about seven miles south-east of Shrewsbury, is a red sand-stone, approaching the surface in many places, from which exudes a mineral pitch: from this rock is extracted an oil, called "Betton's British oil," used medicinally. Clay slate occurs as the supporting rock of the trop formation of this county, which extends from the Wrekin to Church-Stretton. Lawley hill is in part formed of a kind of granite; but a still greater part consists of toadstone: Caer Caradoc hill is composed of a shivery kind of schistus: the Wrekin chiefly comprises reddish chert-stone, with granulated quartz imbedded in it: the hills near Oswestry are of coarse-grained sand-stone: this county affords throughout a rich field of enquiry for the mineralogist.

The rich stores of iron and lead ores, coal, and stone; the increasing manufactures, and the agricultural improvements of the district, have raised Shropshire to a high position in the scale of national importance; while its inland navigation has rendered it the emporium of the trade between England and Wales, and a grand centre of communication with the inland counties. The chief manufacture is that of iron: the number of blast furnaces for this metal between Ketley and Willey, in the great eastern coal district, in a space of about seven miles, exceeds that in any other tract of equal extent in the kingdom. Some of these produce iron of the best quality: the number of persons employed in them is about six thousand. The quantity of coal annually raised is nearly three hundred thousand tons: the number of steam-engines employed on both sides of the Severn is remarkably great. In Colebrookdale, coked coal was first employed, on an extensive scale, as a substitute for charcoal, in the manufacture of iron. Various branches of the flannel manufacture are carried on near Shrewsbury; and there are mills at different places for dyeing woollen cloth. A considerable manufacture of gloves is carried on at Ludlow, chiefly for the London market, at which place paper is also made. Near Coalport, on the Severn, coloured china of all sorts, and of exquisite taste and beauty, is made: and at the same newly-formed town is a manufacture of earthenware in imitation of that made at Etruria, commonly called Wedgewood ware. Glass is made at Donington; earthenware, pipes, bricks and tiles, and nails, at Broseley; and at Coalport, in the neighbourhood of the last-mentioned place, is a china manufacture of great excellence: at Coalport are also manufactures of ropes and chains for the mines. There is a manufacture of carpets at Bridgenorth; paper and horse-hair seating are made at Drayton; and at nearly all the towns in the county the malting business is carried on to a very considerable extent. The staple trade of Shrewsbury is in fine flannels and Welch webs, but it has very much declined. The ultimate markets for the strong, or high country cloth, which is woven in Denbighshire, are Holland, Germany, and America: the small cloth, which is about one-eighth of a yard narrower than the other, and is sometimes brought for sale to Oswestry market, is generally dyed before it is exported: it is sent to South America, and to the West Indies, as clothing for the slaves.

The Severn, which, among British rivers, is next in magnitude and importance to the Thames, runs nearly through the centre of the county, in an irregular bending course of between sixty and seventy miles, and in a general direction of from north-west to south-east. Entering on the western border below Welch-Pool in Montgomeryshire, it proceeds eastward across the great plain to Shrewsbury, which it nearly encircles, its course being in that vicinity more circuitous than in any other part within the limits of this county: hence it continues in a south-easterly direction until it has passed Colebrookdale, shortly below which it turns southward to Bridgenorth, and the rest of its course through Shropshire is thenceforward nearly in the same direction; it finally quits the county, after having formed, for the distance of a few miles, the eastern boundary of a projecting portion of Stottesdon hundred, which it separates first from Staffordshire, and afterwards from Worcestershire, which latter county it then enters near Bewdley. During the whole of its course through Shropshire, this river is navigable for barges of from twenty to eighty tons' burden, which are towed up it; and for vessels called trows, which are larger, and navigate the ports lower down the river: by far the greater part of the barges are employed in exporting downwards the produce of the mines near Colebrookdale; wines, groceries, &c., are brought up the Severn, for the consumption of this county, that of Montgomery, and others: and besides the exports of coal and iron by means of it, are those of lime, lead, flannel, grain, and cheese, with some others of minor importance. The inconveniences and interruptions attendant on the navigation of this river are very great, and are chiefly occasioned by the frequent fords and shoals that occur in its channel, which has a rapid fall; by a deficiency of water in times of drought; and by the superabundance of it in rainy seasons, when it rushes down with irresistible force. The fish found in it, within the limits of Shropshire, are salmon, flounders, a few pike, trout, graylings, perch, eels, shad, bleak, gudgeons, chub, roach, and dace (in great abundance), carp, a few lampreys, and ruff. The fishermen very commonly use a kind of canoe, being a very short wide boat, made of osiers covered with hides, and worked with a paddle, answering exactly to the description of the boats of the Britons in the time of Cæsar, and called a coracle: this bark is so light that the fisherman, on quitting the river, carries it upon his back, one end being pulled over his head, in the manner of a large basket. By the statute of the 30th of Charles II., cap. 9th, the conservancy of the Severn, within the county, is vested in the county magistrates, with power to appoint one or more under-conservators. The smaller streams and brooks are extremely numerous, and the waters of almost all of them finally reach the Severn; its most important tributaries are, the Camlet, the Vyrnyw, the Tern, the Clun, the Ony, and the Teme. The Camlet, rising on Corndon Marsh, within a few miles of its source, runs parallel with the Ony for some distance, but upon a different level, and then turns towards the west, and afterwards to the north-west, falling into the Severn a little beyond the western confines of the county. The river Vyrnyw, on the entrance of the Severn into the county, joins it from the north, having for some miles before its confluence formed the boundary between the counties of Salop and Montgomery. The Tern rises in Staffordshire, but shortly entering this county, pursues a southerly course of nearly thirty miles to the Severn, between four and five miles eastward of Shrewsbury. South of the Severn, and rising not far from the course of the Camlet, the Clun runs southward to the Teme near Leintwardine. The Ony, from near the source of the Camlet, joins the Teme near Oakley park. The Teme, rising on the borders of Radnorshire, runs along the southern side of this county, sometimes forming its boundary, and at others deviating on either side of it: at Ludlow this river is augmented by the Corve, which flows towards it through a long valley to which it gives name: the Teme is joined by different other minor streams, and finally quits this county, near Tenbury in Worcestershire: it is celebrated for grayling, and contains, besides, abundance of trout.

The want of a navigable canal for conveying the produce of the more remote coal and iron mines of the eastern districts to the river Severn was long experienced, owing to the peculiar unevenness of the surface of the country over which it must pass, and the impossibility of obtaining a sufficient quantity of water for lockage; until, at last, the remedy for these obstacles was supplied by a canal from the neighbourhood of the Oaken Gates to the iron-works at Ketley, a distance of about a mile and a half, with a fall of seventy-three feet, in which, instead of lockage, an inclined plane was formed. An act of parliament was then obtained for the Shropshire canal, which was finished in 1792, and which, commencing on the north side of the London road from Shrewsbury, at a place called Donnington-Wood, and taking a course nearly southward, proceeds about one hundred yards on a level, and then ascends one hundred and twenty feet, by means of an inclined plane three hundred and twenty yards in length: from the top of this inclined plane, which is the highest level of the canal, it proceeds by the Wrockwardine and Snedshill coal and iron works, and near the Oaken Gates, where it is joined by the small Ketley canal: from this junction it is continued past other iron-works to Southall-bank, where a branch, striking off to the right, terminates at Brierly hill: the main line of the canal, turning to the left at Southall-bank, goes on to the Windmill Farm, where it descends one hundred and twenty-six feet, by means of an inclined plane six hundred yards long, from the bottom of which it passes by the east of Madeley to the banks of the Severn, where it descends two hundred and seven feet, by an inclined plane three hundred and fifty yards in length, and then proceeds parallel with that river, but on a level above the reach of floods, to Coalport, where it terminates: its total extent, including the branch, which is two miles and three-quarters long, is upwards of ten miles and a half: the boats navigating it are only of five tons' burden, and are drawn up the inclined planes by means of machinery worked by steam. Immediately after the completion of this, the Shrewsbury canal was projected, for supplying that town with coal, which was conveyed thither, before its completion, only by an expensive land-carriage of about fourteen miles. From the bottom of the first inclined plane of the Shropshire canal, a short cut had been made to diverge along the side of the hill towards Ketley; and of this, the Shrewsbury Canal Company purchased about a mile in extent, at the northern extremity. At the end of this is an inclined plane of seventy-five feet fall, and two hundred and twenty-three yards in length, from the bottom of which the canal passes by Eyton mill to Long-lane, a distance of four miles and a half, in which is a fall in lockage of thirty-nine feet; hence it proceeds to Long, where it crosses the river Tern and its valley, at the height of sixteen feet above the level of the latter, by means of an aqueduct of cast-iron, sixty-two yards in length, and an embankment: near this place it also crosses the road from Wellington to Shrewsbury, &c., and thence proceeds to Roddington, where it crosses the small river Roden, by an embankment and aqueduct, at the height of twenty-one feet above the surface of the stream: it then passes through Withington to near Atcham, where it crosses another turnpike-road, and half a mile further north enters a tunnel nine hundred and seventy yards in length, from the northern end of which the canal is continued to Pimley, where it crosses another valley, by means of a small aqueduct and embankment, and then proceeds along the banks of the Severn to its termination in a large basin and coal-yard at that entrance to Shrewsbury which is called the Castle-Foregate. As only small boats navigate this canal, the locks are so formed, as to admit of two, three, or four of them passing through at a time. The Ellesmere canal, or rather system of canals, which unites the Severn, the Dee, and the Mersey, crosses the river Ceiriog into the north-western parts of Shropshire, by an aqueduct two hundred yards in length, and sixty-five in height, and then passes about a mile, in an easterly direction, along the southern bank of that river, after which it turns towards the south-east, and passes by St. Martin's moor, where it descends thirteen feet, by means of two locks, to Frankton common, where it falls thirty feet, by four locks, to Hordley: from this latter place it passes to Weston-Llullingfields, where it terminates. At Frankton common, a branch strikes off eastward, which, after having passed close by the town of Ellesmere, proceeds by Welch-Hampton to Fens-moss, where it divides, one branch proceeding to the town of Whitchurch, the other terminating at Prees heath, near the village of Prees: this Whitchurch and Prees branch is altogether twenty-one miles in length, and entirely upon one level: from Whitchurch, however, it descends northward, by one hundred and twenty-eight feet of lockage, towards the Chester canal, near Nantwich. At Hordley is a branch from the Ellesmere canal, in a south-westerly direction, which, proceeding on a level to Aston moor, in the parish of Oswestry, there descends nineteen feet, by means of three locks, and afterwards passes by Crick heath, and through Llanymynech, to about half a mile beyond that village, where it joins the Montgomeryshire canal: this branch is upwards of eleven miles in length: it was intended to carry this canal near Leaton heath, to pass by Newton, Baschurch, &c., and to enter the Severn near Fitz, but it is doubtful whether or not this will ever be carried into effect. A canal, formed by the Marquis of Stafford, commences at Donnington-Wood, and proceeds on a level to Pave-lane, near Newport, a distance of seven miles: there is a branch from this to his lordship's lime-works at Lilleshall. Iron railways, for the conveyance of heavy articles, have been adopted to a considerable extent in this county: the whole of the extensive iron and coal tract in the vicinity of Colebrook-dale is intersected by numerous tram-roads leading from the coal-works to the different foundries, and the wharfs on the banks of the canal and the river Severn.

The great road from London to Holyhead, through Buckingham and Shrewsbury, enters this county from Shatterford in Staffordshire, and passes through Bridgenorth, Much Wenlock, Shrewsbury, and Oswestry, to Llangollen in Denbighshire. The road from London to Holyhead, through Birmingham, enters from Wolverhampton in Staffordshire, and passes through Wellington, Shrewsbury, and Ellesmere, to Overton in Flintshire. The road from London to Holyhead, through Worcester, enters the county from Tenbury in Worcestershire, passes through Burford, and (after crossing a corner of Herefordshire) through Ludlow and Bishop's Castle, to Montgomery in Wales. The road from London to Holyhead, through Chester, enters from Weston under Lizard in Staffordshire, and passes through Newport and Whitchurch, to Chester. That from London to Chester, through Birmingham, enters from Muckleston in Staffordshire, and passes through Dormoton and Woore, to Nantwich in Cheshire.

The relics of antiquity contained in the county are numerous and diversified. Remains of encampments, supposed by antiquaries to have been of early British formation, are to be seen in Brocard's Castle, near Church-Stretton; Bury ditches, on Tongley-hill, near the village of Basford; on the Clee hills; on the hills called Caer Caradoc, two miles and a half from Church-Stretton, and the Caer Caradoc, or Gear, near Clun; at Old Port, near Oswestry, and on the Wrekin. The principal Roman stations were Uriconium, or Viroconium, now Wroxeter, which was a chief city of the Cornavii, fortified by the Romans; and Rutunium, at Rowton; but of the exact site of the last there is a difference of opinion: there were also Bravinium, at Rushbury; Sariconium, at Bury hill; and Usaona, at Sheriff-Hales. The Roman station Mediolanum, is by some fixed near Drayton, but with more probability at Meifod. Vestiges of Roman encampments and fortifications are found in the Bury Walls, near Hawkstone; the Walls, near Chesterton; and the remains of the ancient city of Uriconium, near Wroxeter. A great Roman road enters Shropshire on the east between Crackley bank and Weston, and passes through it in a bending line, in the vicinity of Church-Stretton, which town derives its name from it, to Leintwardine in Herefordshire, on the southern borders of this county: there are besides numerous minor vestiges of that people. Part of Offa's Dyke may be traced in the south-western part of Shropshire, which it enters from Knighton, in Radnorshire, and quits for Montgomeryshire, between Bishop's Castle and Newton; it is again visible in this county, near Llanymynech, on the western border, whence it proceeds across the race-course, near Oswestry, and then descends to the river Ceiriog, the north-western boundary of the county, near Chirk, where it again enters Wales. There are the remains of a Danish camp near Cleobury-Mortimer. A very singular cave, in which were human bones, was discovered in 1809, in digging at the bottom of a rock, at Burncote, near Worfield: Kynaston's Cave, in the almost perpendicular side of Nesscliffe rock, and the traditions connected with it, are worthy of notice.

The number of religious houses, including collegiate establishments and hospitals, was about forty-seven. The remains of some of them are interesting, either for beauty or antiquity: the principal are those of the abbeys of Buildwas, Hales-Owen, Haughmond, Lilleshall, Much Wenlock, Shrewsbury, and White abbey, near Alberbury; and of the priories of Bromfield, Chirbury, and White Ladies. Several of the churches, too, are interesting for their beauty and antiquity. Among the most worthy of notice are those of Burford, Cleobury-Mortimer, Ellesmere, Hales-Owen, Hodnet (which has a circular tower), Kinlet, Ludlow, Morvill, Newport, Shiffnall, Tong, and St. Mary's and St. Alkmund's, Shrewsbury. Of the ancient castles contained within the limits of the county, the great number of which has before been accounted for, some of the most remarkable that still remain, wholly, or in part, are those of Acton-Burnell; Alberbury; Bridgenorth, which was founded so far back as the year 912, by Ethelfleda, daughter of Alfred the Great; Caus; Clun; Hopton; Ludlow, so long the seat of the Lords President of the Marches; Middle; Moreton-Corbet; Oswestry; Red Castle, Shrewsbury; Sibdon; Stoke; Wattleborough, and Whittington. Among the most remarkable ancient mansions are those of Boscobel, where Charles II. was concealed after the battle of Worcester; White-hall, and Bellstone-house: Shrewsbury Council-house is also remarkable for its antiquity. Of the more modern residences of nobility and gentry, this county includes considerably more than a hundred. Shropshire contains numerous medicinal springs of various properties. At Kingley Wick, about two miles to the west of Lilleshall hill, is a strong spring of impure brine, from which salt was formerly made. There are medicinal springs of different qualities at Smeithmore and Moreton-Say, in the hundred of North Bradford; at Broseley, and at Admaston near Wellington, besides others near Ludlow; between Welbatch and Pulley common, in the vicinity of Wenlock, and on Prolley moor: that best known is Sutton Spa, about two miles to the south of Shrewsbury, and close to the village of Sutton, the waters of which are saline and chalybeate, and somewhat resemble those of Cheltenham: near Colebrook-dale is a bituminous spring of fossil tar. Numerous fossils are found among the strata of this county, particularly in the Colebrook-dale coal district. The reseda luteola, or dyers' weed, which affords a beautiful yellow dye, grows wild in many parts of the county; and the berberis vulgaris, or common barberry, is also occasionally found in a similar uncultivated state.

SHROTON, county of DORSET.—See IWERNE-COURTNAY.

SHUCKBURGH (LOWER), a parish in the Burton-Dassett division of the hundred of KINGTON, county of WARWICK, 5 miles (E.) from Southam, containing 166 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the vicarage of Priors' Hardwick, in the archdeaconry of Coventry, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry. The church is dedicated to St. John the Baptist. The Oxford canal passes through the parish.

The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the vicarage of Badgeworth, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Gloucester, and in the patronage of W. L. Lawrence, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Paul. On opening a large tumulus here a stone coffin was found, at the depth of sixteen feet, which contained the body of a man, with a helmet almost consumed by rust.

SHURLACH, a township in the parish of DAVENHAM, hundred of NORTHWICH, county palatine of CHESTER, $1\frac{3}{4}$ mile (E. S. E.) from Northwich, containing 64 inhabitants. The Grand Trunk canal passes through the parish.

SHUSTOCK, a parish in the Atherstone division of the hundred of HEMLINGFORD, county of WARWICK, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (E. N. E.) from Coleshill, containing, with the hamlets of Bentley and Blythe, 577 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Coventry, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, rated in the king's books at £5. 7., endowed with £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. Cuthbert. Thomas and Charles Huntback, in 1714, gave certain houses and land to endow a school for poor children, and an almshouse for six widows.

SHUTE, a parish in the hundred of COLYTON, county of DEVON, 2 miles (N.) from Colyton, containing 593 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the vicarage of Colyton, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Dean and Chapter of Exeter. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, contains a memorial of Charles Bickford Templar, Esq., who was lost in the wreck of the Halsewell East Indiaman, in 1786.

SHUTFORD (EAST), a chapelry in that part of the parish of SWALCLIFFE which is in the hundred of BANBURY, county of OXFORD, 5 miles (W. by N.) from Banbury, containing 33 inhabitants. The chapel is dedicated to St. Martin.

SHUTTINGTON, a parish in the Tamworth division of the hundred of HEMLINGFORD, county of WARWICK, $3\frac{3}{4}$ miles (E. by N.) from Tamworth, containing 169 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Coventry, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, endowed with £400 private benefaction, and £600 royal bounty, and in the patronage of Sir Francis Burdett, Bart. The Coventry canal crosses the south-western angle of the parish.

SHUTTLEHANGER, a chapelry in the parish of STOKE-BRUERNE, hundred of CLELEY, county of NORTHAMPTON, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (E. N. E.) from Towcester, containing 308 inhabitants.

SIBBERTOFT, a parish in the hundred of ROTHWELL, county of NORTHAMPTON, 5 miles (S. W.) from Market-Harborough, containing 406 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, annexed to that of Welford, in the archdeaconry of Northampton, and diocese of Peterborough, rated in the king's books at £6. 4. $9\frac{1}{2}$. The church is dedicated to St. Helen. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. A spot here, called Castle-yard, is supposed to be the site of an ancient castle.

SIBBERTSWOLD, a parish in the hundred of BEWSBOROUGH, lathe of ST. AUGUSTINE, county of KENT, $6\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. W.) from Dover, containing 299 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, with that of Coldred annexed, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Canterbury, rated in the king's books at £6, and in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is principally in the early style of English architecture.

SIBDON-CARWOOD, a parish in the hundred of PURSLOW, county of SALOP, 7 miles (S. E. by E.) from Bishop's Castle, containing 61 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Salop, and diocese of Hereford, and in the patronage of the Vicar of Clun.

SIBFORD-FERRIS, a hamlet in that part of the parish of SWALCLIFFE which is in the hundred of BLOXHAM, county of OXFORD, $7\frac{1}{4}$ miles (W. S. W.) from Banbury, containing 216 inhabitants. It is within the peculiar jurisdiction of the manorial court of Sibford.

SIBFORD-GOWER, a hamlet in that part of the parish of SWALCLIFFE which is in the hundred of BLOXHAM, county of OXFORD, $7\frac{3}{4}$ miles (W. by S.) from Banbury, containing 494 inhabitants. One-third of the rents of the poor's estate is paid to a schoolmaster for teaching about sixty children. It is within the peculiar jurisdiction of the manorial court of Sibford.

SIBSEY, a parish in the western division of the soke of BOLINGBROKE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. N. E.) from Boston, containing 1354 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £11. 11. 3., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. Margaret. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

SIBSON, a hamlet in the parish of STIBBINGTON, hundred of NORMAN-CROSS, county of HUNTINGDON, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (S. E.) from Wansford. The population is returned with the parish.

SIBSON, a parish in the hundred of SPARKENHOE, county of LEICESTER, 4 miles (W. S. W.) from Market-Bosworth, containing, with the township of Upton, 378 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Leicester, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £15. 18. $11\frac{1}{2}$, and in the patronage of the Master and Fellows of Pembroke College, Oxford. The church is dedicated to St. Botolph.

SIBTHORPE, a parish in the southern division of the wapentake of NEWARK, county of NOTTINGHAM, $6\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. S. W.) from Newark, containing 142 inhabitants. The living is a donative, in the patronage of the Duke of Portland. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, was originally much larger than it is at present: the north and south aisles have been taken down, so that the pillars and lofty arches of the nave are now worked into the outer wall of the building. In the reign of Edward II., Thomas de Sibthorpe founded a chantry in the church, and subsequently erected it into a college for a warden, nine chaplains, three clerks, and four choristers; he also added four chapels, in honour of St. Anne, St. Katharine, St. Margaret, and St. Mary; the revenue, at the dissolution, was estimated at £31. 1. 2. Thomas Secker, D. D., Archbishop of Canterbury, was born here in 1693: he died in 1768.

SIBTON, a parish in the hundred of BLYTHING, county of SUFFOLK, 2 miles (N. W. by W.) from Yoxford, containing 569 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, with the perpetual curacy of Peasenhall annexed, in the archdeaconry of Suffolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £8. 8. 4., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty. M. B. Kingsbury, Esq. and others were patrons in 1821. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. John and Dorothy Scrivener, in 1719, gave a rent-charge of £12. 15. 6. for teaching ten or twelve children. Here are extensive remains of a Cistercian abbey, founded, in 1149, by William de Cayneto; it was dedicated to the Blessed Virgin Mary, and at the dissolution possessed a revenue of £250. 15. 7. There was an hospital at the gate of the abbey.

SICKLINGHALL, a township in the parish of KIRKBY-OVERBLOWS, upper division of the wapentake of CLARO, West riding of the county of YORK, 3 miles (W.) from Wetherby, containing 257 inhabitants. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

SIDBURY, a parish in the eastern division of the hundred of BUDLEIGH, county of DEVON, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. E.) from Sidmouth, containing 1612 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £28. The church is dedicated to St. Giles. There is a place of worship for Independents. Sidbury is a decayed market town, but there are still two annual fairs for cattle, on the Tuesday before Ascension-day, and at Michaelmas. On the Barton, or manor, of Sand is an old mansion, with the inscription Hortus Johannis Capelli over the garden door. A school is supported by small annual subscriptions.

SIDBURY, a parish in the hundred of STOTTESDEN, county of SALOP, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. S. W.) from Bridgenorth, containing 93 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Hereford, rated in the king's books at £4. 17. $8\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of Thomas Wood, Esq., and Miss Hayley. The church is dedicated to the Holy Trinity.

SIDDINGTON, a chapelry in the parish of PRESTBURY, hundred of MACCLESFIELD, county palatine of CHESTER, 5 miles (N. by W.) from Congleton, containing 481 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chester, endowed with £403 private benefaction, and £400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of D. Davenport, Esq. The chapel is built partly of wood and plaster, and partly of brick. Courts leet and baron are held annually at Martinmas. John Fowden, in 1712, founded a school, and endowed it with £8 per annum.

SIDDINGTON, a village in the hundred of CROWTHORNE and MINETY, county of GLOUCESTER, $1\frac{3}{4}$ mile (S. S. E.) from Cirencester, containing 349 inhabitants, and comprising the united parishes of St. Mary and St. Peter, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Gloucester; the former is a rectory, rated in the king's books at £8. 12. 1.; and the latter, a discharged vicarage, rated at £5. 12. $3\frac{1}{2}$.; both being in the patronage of the Crown. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, exhibits portions in the several styles of English architecture, and some Norman remains; the south door and the arch leading into the chancel, in particular, are fine specimens of the former style. The river Churn, and the Thames and Severn canal, run through the parish.

SIDE, a parish in the hundred of RAPSGATE, county of GLOUCESTER, 7 miles (E.) from Painswick, containing 40 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Gloucester, rated in the king's books at £3. 18. 4., endowed with £200 royal bounty. Joseph Pitt, Esq. was patron in 1813. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

SIDESTRANDS, a parish in the northern division of the hundred of ERPINGHAM, county of NORFOLK, 3 miles (S. E. by E.) from Cromer, containing 146 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £5. 10., endowed with £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the King, as Duke of Lancaster. The church is dedicated to St. Michael.

SIDLESHAM, a parish in the hundred of MANHOOD, rape of CHICHESTER, county of SUSSEX, 4 miles (S.) from Chichester, containing 1029 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chichester, rated in the king's books at £7. 10. 10., and in the patronage of the Prebendary of Sidlesham in the Cathedral Church of Chichester. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is in the early style of English architecture. The parish is bounded on the south by Selsey harbour. It has a convenient quay, near which is a superior tide-mill, which for justness of principle is equal to any in the kingdom: it was erected, at a considerable expense, by the late Mr. Woodroffe, under the direction of Benjamin Basle, the inventor and constructor of the machinery, which will grind a load of corn in an hour.

SIDMONTON, a chapelry in that part of the parish of KINGSCLERE which is in the hundred of KINGSCLERE, Kingsclere division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 7 miles (N. by E.) from Whitchurch, containing 156 inhabitants.

SIDMOUTH, a sea-port, market town, and parish, in the eastern division of the hundred of BUDLEIGH, county of DEVON, $13\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. S. E.) from Exeter, and 158 (W. S. W.) from London, containing 2747 inhabitants. The earliest account of this place is in the time of William the Conqueror, who bestowed the manor on the monastery of St. Michael in Normandy, from which, during the subsequent wars with France, it was alienated to the abbey of Sion, and has since belonged to various persons. In the reign of Edward III., the town appears to have been governed by a portreeve, and to have furnished that monarch, in his attack on Calais, with two vessels and twenty-five seamen. It is said to have been formerly famous for its fishery, and to have traded with Newfoundland; but the harbour, which then existed, is supposed, from the discovery of an old anchor and fragments of vessels, to have been in the Ham meadow, near the town; it has been choked up with sand and pebbles, and boats and fishing-smacks can now only approach the shore. To its great attractions as a watering-place is its present prosperity owing, the extent of which may be estimated by the circumstance of the population having increased more than one thousand since 1821. The town is situated at the entrance of a narrow valley, on a small stream called the Sid, from which it derives its name: the surrounding country is remarkably picturesque and beautiful, and the hills bounding it on the east and west sides are of very great altitude, and extremely precipitous, terminating abruptly on the shore, and, in addition to their scenic beauty, affording great shelter to the town, which, though irregularly built, is very neat, and is skirted with numerous detached residences, altogether occupying a site of considerable extent. The inns and boarding-houses are of the best description, and every accommodation is provided for persons requiring sea-bathing. On the beach is a public walk more than half a mile in length, fronting which are the warm baths, public rooms, library, &c.

Assemblies and concerts take place during the season. The markets, on Tuesday and Saturday, are well supplied; and there are fairs annually on Easter Monday and Tuesday, and the third Monday in September. Petty sessions are held on the first Monday in every month, by two resident magistrates, who include Salcombe, Branscombe, Sidbury, and Sidford, within their jurisdiction; and at a court leet and baron held annually by the lord of the manor, two constables and tythingmen are appointed.

The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £18. 15. 5., and in the patronage of the Rev. William Jenkins. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is an ancient structure, with a well-built tower: it has recently received an addition of two hundred and sixty sittings, one hundred and sixty of which are free, and in aid of the expense, £200 was granted by the Incorporated Society for the enlargement of churches and chapels. Amongst the monuments is one to the memory of Dr. Currie, the distinguished biographer of Robert Burns. There are places of worship for Baptists, Independents, and Unitarians. A charity school, on the National system, is supported partly by a small endowment, and partly by subscriptions; and the poor of the parish are relieved by bequests from Anthony Isaack, in 1639, and John Minshall, in 1663, and others of small amount: some charitable institutions are supported by donations and subscriptions from the inhabitants and visitors of the town. A fraternity of Augustine monks is said to have once existed near Sidmouth, and there are still the remains of a building, which tradition affirms to have been a chapel of ease at a period when Sidmouth belonged to the parish of Otterton, on the road to which place there is an ancient stone cross. A fort, mounting four pieces of ordnance, formerly stood near the town. At Wolbrook cottage, in the vicinity, His Royal Highness the late Duke of Kent died. Sidmouth gives the title of viscount to the family of Addington.

SIGGLESTHORNE, a parish in the northern division of the wapentake of HOLDERNESS, East riding of the county of YORK, comprising the townships of Catfoss, Little Hatfield, Seaton, and Sigglesothorne, and containing 538 inhabitants, of which number, 163 are in the township of Sigglesothorne, 10 miles (E. N. E.) from Beverley. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of the East riding, and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £31. 1. 3., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. Lawrence. Marmaduke Constable, in 1810, gave £200 to be applied for the education of poor children: the annual income is £16. 15., and fifteen are instructed.

SIGHILL, a township in the parish of EARSDON, eastern division of CASTLE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, $6\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. W.) from North Shields, containing 138 inhabitants.

SIGNET, a joint hamlet with Upton, in the parish of BURFORD, hundred of BAMPTON, county of OXFORD, $1\frac{1}{4}$ mile (S. by W.) from Burford. The population is returned with Upton.

SIGSTON (KIRBY), a parish in the wapentake of ALLERTONSHIRE, North riding of the county of YORK, comprising the townships of Kirby-Sigston, Sowerby under Cotliffe, and Winton, and containing 322 inhabitants, of which number, 131 are in the township of Kirby-Sigston, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by N.) from North Allerton. The living is a rectory, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Dean and Chapter of Durham for Allerton and Allertonshire, rated in the king's books at £12. 13. 4., and in the patronage of Sir T. Slingsby, Bart. The church is dedicated to St. Lawrence.

SILCHESTER, a parish in the hundred of HOLD-SHOTT, Basingstoke division of the county of SOUTH-AMPTON, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.) from Basingstoke, containing 407 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Winchester, rated in the king's books at £9. 6. 0 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Winchester. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is partly in the early, and partly in the later, style of English architecture. There is an endowed school for five children. This place, situated near the borders of Berkshire, was the Caer Seiont, or Segont, of the Britons, and the Vindonum of the Romans, having been one of the principal stations of the latter in the south of England. The usurper Constantine was invested with the purple in this city, in the year 407. About 493, it was destroyed by the Saxon chief, Ælla, on his march to Bath, from the coast of Sussex, where he had made his landing. The enclosed area is in the form of an irregular octagon, nearly a mile and a half in circumference. The walls are most perfect on the south side, being in some places nearly twenty feet high. About one hundred and fifty yards from the north-east angle of the walls is a Roman amphitheatre, now covered with trees; and about a mile and a half to the north-west, near a village called the Soak, are some remains of a camp. Silchester confers the title of baron upon the family of Pakenham, Earls of Longford.

SILEBY, a parish in the eastern division of the hundred of GOSCOTE, county of LEICESTER, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (E.) from Mountsorrel, containing 1328 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Leicester, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £8. 15. 5., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of George Pochin, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, has a highly enriched tower. There are places of worship for Baptists and Wesleyan Methodists. The manufacture of hosiery is carried on to a considerable extent. The Rev. William Staveley, in 1702, founded a small free school, with an endowment of £5 per annum, to which George Pochin, in 1706, bequeathed £50. The parish, which is bounded on the west by the river Soar, is in the honour of Tutbury, duchy of Lancaster, and within the jurisdiction of a court of pleas held at Tutbury every third Tuesday, for the recovery of debts under 40s.

SILFIELD, a township in the parish of WYMONDHAM, hundred of FOREHOE, county of NORFOLK, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (S. E.) from Wymondham, containing 444 inhabitants.

SILKSTONE, a parish in the wapentake of STAINCROSS, West riding of the county of YORK, comprising the chapelries of Barnesley and Stainbrough, and part of those of West Bretton and Cumberworth, and the townships of Dodworth, Hoyland-Swaine, Silkstone, and Thurgoland, and containing 13,728 inhabitants, of which number, 807 are in the township of Silkstone, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (W. by S.) from Barnesley. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £17. 13. 4., and in the patronage of the Archbishop of York. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is partly Norman, and partly of later date, with some elegant screen-work. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. In this parish the various kinds of linen are manufactured; wire-drawing is also carried on, and there are extensive iron-foundries and collieries in the neighbourhood. The Rev. John Clarkson, in 1734, assigned his interest in the profits arising from certain messuages and lands, under lease for five hundred years, for the education of poor children of the township of Silkstone; the income is £28. 15., and there are at present fifteen free scholars.

SILKSWORTH, a township in the parish of BISHOP-WEARMOUTH, northern division of EASINGTON ward, county palatine of DURHAM, 3 miles (S. W. by S.) from Sunderland, containing 210 inhabitants.

SILPHO, a joint township with Harwood-Dale, in the parish of HACKNESS, liberty of WHITBY-STRAND, North riding of the county of YORK, $6\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. W. by W.) from Scarborough, containing, exclusively of Harwood-Dale, 96 inhabitants.

SILSDEN, a chapelry in the parish of KILDWICK, eastern division of the wapentake of STAINCLIFFE and EWCROSS, West riding of the county of YORK, 4 miles (N. by W.) from Keighley, containing 1904 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the manorial court of Silsden, endowed with £400 private benefaction, £400 royal bounty, and £400 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Earl of Thanet. The chapel is dedicated to St. James. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. The manufacture of woollen cloth, calico, and nails, is carried on. Five poor children are taught for £3. 6. 8. a year, the bequest of William Laycock, in 1612.

SILSOE, a chapelry (formerly a market town) in the parish of FLITTON, hundred of FLITT, county of BEDFORD, 10 miles (S. by E.) from Bedford, containing 568 inhabitants. The chapel, dedicated to St. James, has a tower in the decorated style, with a wooden spire, and over the altar a representation of the Adoration of the Shepherds, painted and presented by Mrs. Mary Lloyd. A market, now disused, was granted in 1319; also a fair, which is held on the festival of St. Peter and St. James, besides which there is another on September 21st.

SILTON, a parish in the hundred of REDLANE, Sturminster division of the county of DORSET, 3 miles (S. S. W.) from Mere, containing 409 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Dorset, and diocese of Bristol, rated in the king's books at £7. 9. 7. H. C. Sturt, Esq. was patron in 1815. The church is dedicated to St. Nicholas.

SILTON (NETHER), a chapelry in that part of the parish of LEAK which is in the wapentake of BIRDFORTH, North riding of the county of YORK, 8 miles (N. by E.) from Thirsk, containing 202 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the vicarage of Leak, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Bishop of Durham. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

SILTON (OVER), a parish in the wapentake of BIRDFORTH, North riding of the county of YORK, comprising the townships of Kepwick and Over Silton, and containing 264 inhabitants, of which number, 94 are in the township of Over Silton, $8\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by E.) from Thirsk. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Cleveland, and diocese of York, endowed with £600 royal bounty, and £200 parliamentary grant. The church is dedicated to All Saints.

SILVERDALE, a chapelry in the parish of WARTON, hundred of LONSDALE, south of the sands, county palatine of LANCASTER, $4\frac{3}{4}$ miles (W. by S.) from Burton in Kendal, containing 243 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Richmond, and diocese of Chester, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £600 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Vicar of Warton. The chapel has lately received an addition of two hundred and seven free sittings, the Incorporated Society for the enlargement of churches and chapels having granted £80 towards defraying the expense. The parish is situated on Morecambe bay.

SILVERLEY, a parish in the hundred of CHEVELEY, county of CAMBRIDGE, $3\frac{3}{4}$ miles (E.) from Newmarket. The population is returned with the parish of Ashley. The living is a vicarage, united to the rectory of Ashley, in the archdeaconry of Sudbury, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £7. 17. $3\frac{1}{2}$. The church is dedicated to All Saints.

SILVERSTONE, a parish in the hundred of GREENS-NORTON, county of NORTHAMPTON, 3 miles (S. by W.) from Towcester, containing 837 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, with that of Whittlebury, annexed to the rectory of Greens-Norton, in the archdeaconry of Northampton, and diocese of Peterborough. The church is dedicated to St. Michael. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

SILVERTON, a parish in the hundred of HAYRIDGE, county of DEVON, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. W. by W.) from Cullompton, containing 1308 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £51. 8. 4., and in the patronage of the Earl of Ilchester and the Hon. P. C. Wyndham. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a handsome specimen of the later style of English architecture: adjoining it are some slight remains of an ancient chapel, dedicated to the Virgin Mary. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. The river Exe marks the northern boundary of the parish. A market was formerly held here weekly: there are cattle fairs on the first Thursday in March and July, and a pleasure fair on September 4th. The free school was founded, in 1724, by John Richards, who gave £1200 for its erection and support; the present annual income is £90, and the number of boys taught about seventy. Sixty girls are also instructed in a school supported by voluntary contributions and an annuity of £2. 10., the gift of the Rev. Richard Troyle, in 1730.

SILVINGTON, a parish in the hundred of OVERS, county of SALOP, 6 miles (N. W.) from Cleobury-Mortimer, containing 38 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Salop, and diocese of Hereford, rated in the king's books at £3. 6. 8., endowed with £400 private benefaction, and £400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Rev. Thomas Hill. The church is dedicated to St. Michael.

SIMONBURN, a parish in the north-western division of TINDALE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, comprising the chapelry of Humshaugh, and the townships of Haughton and Simonburn, and containing 1030 inhabitants, of which number, 569 are in the township of Simonburn, 9 miles (N. W. by N.) from Hexham. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Northumberland, and diocese of Durham, rated in the king's books at £34. 6. 3., and in the patronage of the Governors of Greenwich Hospital. The church, dedicated to St. Simon, was repaired and beautified in 1821: it contains monuments to the family of Allgood. This parish was formerly the largest in the county, having, in 1814, been divided, pursuant to an act obtained in 1811, into six parishes and rectories, the livings of all which are in the gift of the Governors of the Hospital, to which institution the manor of the ancient parish belongs, and from its funds the churches were erected. None but chaplains in the navy who have served ten years, or lost a limb in the service, can be inducted to these benefices; they are not allowed to hold any other preferment, but by an act passed in 1820, may receive their half-pay. The ancient parish was about thirty-three miles in length, and fourteen in breadth, diversified with mountains and vallies of picturesque character: the Roman wall passed on the northern side of it, and within its limits coal is abundant, and iron-ore was formerly obtained. A very small portion of its surface is in tillage, the land being chiefly applied to depasturing sheep and Scotch and Irish cattle. Giles Heron, a liberal benefactor to the poor, founded and endowed, in 1679, a school for teaching poor children, and for apprenticing them. The ancient castle was entirely destroyed in expectation of finding some hidden treasure, but part of the west end was rebuilt in 1766. In 1735, a stone inscribed VLPI. SABL., to Ulpian and Sabinus, Roman lieutenants in Britain, was found in taking down part of the rectory-house.

SIMONDSLEY, a township in the parish of GLOSOP, hundred of HIGH PEAK, county of DERBY, 8 miles (N. by W.) from Chapelen le Frith, containing 340 inhabitants.

SIMONSTONE, a township in that part of the parish of WHALLEY which is in the higher division of the hundred of BLACKBURN, county palatine of LANCASTER, $4\frac{3}{4}$ miles (W. by N.) from Burnley, containing 396 inhabitants.

SIMONSWOOD, a township in the parish of WALTON on the HILL, hundred of WEST DERBY, county palatine of LANCASTER, 5 miles (S. by E.) from Ormskirk, containing 390 inhabitants.

SIMPSON, a parish in the hundred of NEWPORT, county of BUCKINGHAM, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (N. by E.) from Fenny-Stratford, containing, exclusively of the chapelry of Fenny-Stratford, part of which is in this parish, 395 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Buckingham, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £17. 6. 8., and in the patronage of Sir J. Hanmer, Bart. The church is dedicated to St. Nicholas.

SINDERBY, a township in that part of the parish of PICKHILL which is in the wapentake of HALLIKELD, North riding of the county of YORK, $6\frac{1}{4}$ miles (W. by S.) from Thirsk, containing 86 inhabitants.

SINGLEBOROUGH, a hamlet in the parish of GREAT HORWOOD, hundred of COTTESLOE, county of BUCKINGHAM, 3 miles (N.) from Winslow, containing 104 inhabitants.

SINGLETON, a chapelry in the parish of KIRKHAM, hundred of AMOUNDERNESS, county palatine of LANCASTER, 3 miles (E. by S.) from Poulton, containing 501 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Richmond, and diocese of Chester, endowed with £1000 private benefaction, and £1200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of — Shaw, Esq. The chapel, consecrated in 1754, is dedicated to St. Anne. There is a great fair for sheep and cattle on September 21st.

SINGLETON, a parish in the hundred of WESTBOURN and SINGLETON, rape of CHICHESTER, county of SUSSEX, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. by W.) from Midhurst, containing, with the tything of Charlton, 484 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, annexed to the vicarage of West Dean, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chichester, rated in the king's books at £6. 13. 4., and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Chichester for two turns, and of the Duke of Richmond for one. The church is in the later style of English architecture.

SINNINGTON, a parish comprising the townships of Marton and Sinnington in PICKERING lythe, and the township of Little Edstone, in the wapentake of RYEDALE, North riding of the county of YORK, and containing 614 inhabitants, of which number, 343 are in the township of Sinnington, $4\frac{3}{4}$ miles (W. N. W.) from Pickering. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Cleveland, and diocese of York, endowed with £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Master of Hemsworth school. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. An annuity of £5 is paid from the estate of Lady Lumley, for the free instruction of the poor.

SINWELL, a tything in the parish of WOTTON under EDGE, upper division of the hundred of BERKELEY, county of GLOUCESTER. The population is returned with the parish.

SISLAND, a parish in the hundred of LODDON, county of NORFOLK, $6\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. by E.) from Bungay, containing 101 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £4. 3. 9. The Rev. William Hobson was patron in 1819. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

SISTON, a parish in the hundred of PUCKLECHURCH, county of GLOUCESTER, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by N.) from Bristol, containing 902 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Gloucester, rated in the king's books at £5. 14. $4\frac{1}{2}$. F. Trotman, Esq. was patron in 1815. The church is dedicated to St. Anne.

SITHNEY, a parish in the hundred of KERRIER, county of CORNWALL, 2 miles (N.W.) from Helston, containing 2238 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Cornwall, and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £19. 11. $5\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Exeter. The church is dedicated to St. Sithney. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. The parish is bounded on the south by the English channel. Here was an ancient hospital, dedicated to St. John.

SITTINGBOURNE, a parish (formerly a corporate and market town) in the hundred of MILTON, lathe of SCRAY, county of KENT, 10 miles (E. N. E.) from Maidstone, containing 1537 inhabitants. The only incident worthy of notice in the ancient history of this town is the fact that Henry V. was entertained at the Red Lion here, by one John Northwood, a gentleman then resident in the vicinity, at the small expense of nine shillings and ninepence; and several other English monarchs have occasionally conferred a like distinction on the place. The town is situated on the main road from Canterbury to London, and consists of one long wide street. By means of Milton creek, which bounds the parish on the north, and is navigable at Crown quay, hoys sail hence to London. In the neighbourhood is a manufactory for bruising seed. A weekly market and two annual fairs were granted by charter of Elizabeth; the former was soon discontinued; the latter are held on Whit-Monday and October 10th, for linen and woollen goods, hardware, &c.; and a great monthly market is held on Tuesdays. By the same charter the inhabitants were incorporated, under the style of "Guardian and Free Tenants," which was subsequently changed by another charter into that of "Mayor and Jurats;" they likewise had the privilege of sending two members to parliament, but all these were merely nominal, as it seems they were never exercised.

The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Canterbury, rated in the king's books at £10, and in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, was, with the exception of the walls, destroyed by fire in 1762; the present edifice exhibits specimens in the decorated and later styles of English architecture, and contains a fine enriched octagonal font, and some curious and ancient monuments: it has received an addition of two hundred and sixty-eight sittings, of which one hundred and seventy-five are free, the Incorporated Society for the building and enlargement of churches and chapels having contributed £45 towards defraying the expense. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. A National school is supported by voluntary contributions. In the vicinity are some remains of ancient fortifications.

SIX-HILLS, a parish in the eastern division of the wapentake of WRAGGAE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 5 miles (E. S. E.) from Market-Rasen, containing 141 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £6, and in the patronage of George Robert Heneage, Esq. The church is dedicated to All Saints. A Gilbertine priory of nuns and canons, in honour of the Blessed Virgin, was founded here by one Grella, or Greslei, which at the dissolution had a revenue of £170. 8. 9.

SIZEWELL, a hamlet in the parish of LEISTON, hundred of BLYTHING, county of SUFFOLK, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. by E.) from Aldborough. The population is returned with the parish. Here was formerly a chapel, dedicated to St. Nicholas, but it has been demolished.

SKECKLING, a parish in the southern division of the wapentake of HOLDERNESS, East riding of the county of YORK, $10\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E.) from Kingston upon Hull, containing 436 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, with the perpetual curacy of Burstwick annexed, in the archdeaconry of the East riding, and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £7, and in the patronage of Sir T. A. Clifford Constable, Bart. The church is dedicated to All Saints; in the chancel is a fine painting of the Lord's Supper.

SKEEBY, a township in that part of the parish of EASBY which is in the western division of the wapentake of GILLING, North riding of the county of YORK, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E. N. E.) from Richmond, containing 163 inhabitants.

SKEFFINGTON, a parish in the eastern division of the hundred of GOSCOTE, county of LEICESTER, $9\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by N.) from Uppingham, containing 169 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Leicester, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £12. 13. 9., and in the patronage of the Rev. George Crum. The church is dedicated to St. Thomas à Becket.

SKEFFLING, a parish in the southern division of the wapentake of HOLDERNESS, East riding of the county of YORK, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E. by E.) from Patrington, containing 201 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of the East riding, and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £5, endowed with £600 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Rector of Rise. The church, dedicated to St. Helen, is principally in the later style of English architecture. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

SKEGBY, a parish in the northern division of the wapentake of BROXTOW, county of NOTTINGHAM, 3 miles (W.) from Mansfield, containing 584 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to that of Mansfield-Woodhouse, in the archdeaconry of Nottingham, and diocese of York, endowed with £600 royal bounty, and £1400 parliamentary grant. The church is a small stone edifice, in a very dilapidated state, situated on an eminence some distance from the village. The manufacture of earthenware is carried on here, and on Skegby moor are extensive collieries.

SKEGNESS, a parish in the Marsh division of the wapentake of CANDLESHOE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $3\frac{3}{4}$ miles (E. by S.) from Burgh, containing 150 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £15. 6. 8., and in the patronage of the Earl of Scarborough. The church is dedicated to St. Clement. According to Leland, here was once a considerable town, having a haven and a castle, and surrounded by walls, which was swallowed up by the sea.

SKELBROOKE, a chapelry in the parish of SOUTH KIRBY, upper division of the wapentake of OSGOLD-CROSS, West riding of the county of YORK, $7\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. W. by N.) from Doncaster, containing 115 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of York, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £600 royal bounty. Sir R. Perryn, Knt. was patron in 1800. The chapel is dedicated to St. Michael. The ancient Forest of Barnsdale, part of which is comprised in this parish, is said to have been one of the haunts of the famous Robin Hood, whose name is given to a well not far distant. It is further remarkable for the meeting which took place, in 1541, between Henry VIII. and the clergy of York, headed by the archbishop, who on their knees presented the king with £600.

SKELLINGTHORPE, a parish in the lower division of the wapentake of BOOTHBY-GRAFFO, parts of KESTVEN, county of LINCOLN, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W.) from Lincoln, containing 370 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £6. 18. 9., endowed with £200 royal bounty, and £400 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Misses F. and S. Dowbiggin. The church is dedicated to St. Lawrence. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

SKELLOW, a township in the parish of OWSTON, upper division of the wapentake of OSGOLDCROSS, West riding of the county of YORK, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.N.W.) from Doncaster, containing 146 inhabitants.

SKELMANTHORPE, a township partly in the parish of EMLEY, lower division, partly in the chapelry of CUMBERWORTH, parish of KIRK-BURTON, upper division, of the wapentake of AGRIGG, and partly in the parish of HIGH HOYLAND, wapentake of STAINCROSS, West riding of the county of YORK, $7\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. E. by E.) from Huddersfield. The population is returned with Cumberworth. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

SKELMERSDALE, a chapelry in the parish of ORMSKIRK, hundred of WEST DERBY, county palatine of LANCASTER, 4 miles (E. S. E.) from Ormskirk, containing 622 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chester, endowed with £200 private benefaction, £600 royal bounty, and £1500 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Vicar of Ormskirk. The chapel has lately received an addition of one hundred and forty sittings, of which seventy are free, the Incorporated Society for the enlargement of churches and chapels having granted £90 towards defraying the expense. There is a small endowment, bequeathed by Evan Swift, in 1720, for a school. Skelmersdale gives the title of baron to the family of Bootle-Wilbraham.

SKELSMERGH, a township in that part of the parish of KENDAL which is in KENDAL ward, county of WESTMORLAND, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by E.) from Kendal, containing 258 inhabitants. The township is bounded on every side, except on the east, by the small rivers Kent, Mint, and Sprint, upon which there are corn, worsted, bobbin, and dye-wood mills. Here are remains of a chapel, dedicated to St. John the Baptist; and at Doddington Green there is one for Roman Catholics. A school is supported by small annual subscriptions.

SKELTON, a parish in LEATH ward, county of CUMBERLAND, comprising the townships of Lamonby, Skelton, and Unthank, and containing 858 inhabitants, of which number, 332 are in the township of Skelton, $6\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N.W. by W.) from Penrith. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Carlisle, rated in the king's books at £43. 3. $6\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the President and Fellows of Corpus Christi College, Oxford. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is an ancient structure: it was thoroughly repaired in 1794, and formerly contained a richly-endowed chantry. Freestone and limestone are obtained in the parish. A free school, erected in 1750, by Isaac Milner, was endowed in 1817, by the Rev. Joseph Nelson, with £1000, now producing upwards of £32 a year, for which twenty-eight children are instructed.

SKELTON, a township in the parish of HOWDEN, wapentake of HOWDENSHERE, East riding of the county of YORK, 2 miles (S. E. by S.) from Howden, containing 221 inhabitants.

SKELTON, a parish partly in the liberty of ST. PETER of YORK, East riding, but chiefly in the wapentake of BULMER, North riding, of the county of YORK, $3\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. W. by N.) from York, containing 273 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the jurisdiction of the peculiar court of Alne and Tollerton, and in the patronage of — Hepworth, Esq. The church is dedicated to All Saints.

SKELTON, a parish in the eastern division of the liberty of LANGBAURGH, North riding of the county of YORK, comprising the townships of Great Moorsham, Skelton, and Stranghow, and containing 1235 inhabitants, of which number, 791 are in the township of Skelton, 4 miles (N. E. by N.) from Guilsbrough. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Cleveland, and diocese of York, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Archbishop of York. The church is dedicated to All Saints. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. A market, formerly held on Sunday, but afterwards changed to Saturday, and a fair at Whitsuntide, have been discontinued. Skelton castle was built by Robert de Brus, a Norman baron, who came over with the Conqueror, and from whom descended some of the kings of Scotland and the present family of Bruce, Marquises of Ailesbury. There are now but few remains of the ancient building, the whole having been entirely modernised, or renovated, in 1794.

SKELTON, a chapelry in that part of the parish of RIPON which is in the liberty of RIPON, West riding of the county of YORK, 4 miles (S. E. by E.) from Ripon, containing 314 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the jurisdiction of the peculiar court of Ripon, belonging to the Archbishop of York, endowed with £200 private benefaction, £800 royal bounty, and £800 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Ripon. The chapel is small, but handsomely built in the early style of English architecture.

SKELWITH, a joint township with Monk-Coniston, in the parish of HAWKESHEAD, hundred of LONSDALE, north of the sands, county palatine of LANCASTER, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W. by W.) from Ambleside. The population is returned with Monk-Coniston.

SKENDLEBY, a parish in the Wold division of the wapentake of CANDLESHEOE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 4 miles (N. E. by N.) from Spilsby, containing 210 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £4. 0. 5., endowed with £400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of Lord Gwydir and Baroness de Eresby. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

SKENFRETH, a parish in the upper division of the hundred of SKENFRETH, county of MONMOUTH, $6\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. N. W.) from Monmouth, containing 488 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Llandaff, rated in the king's books at £5. 16. $10\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of W. Cecil, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. Bridget, is a large handsome structure, the windows of which are enriched with fine stained glass. The parish is intersected by the river Mon, over which a bridge was erected in 1825, at an expense to the county of £1000, the road from London to Milford Haven being thus shortened by seven miles. Courts leet and baron are annually held here. Of the ancient castle, which stood on an eminence rising gently from the bank of the Mon, nothing remains but the outer wall: it was defended by six towers and a moat supplied from the river.

SKERNE, a parish in the Bainton-Beacon division of the wapentake of HARTHILL, East riding of the county of YORK, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. E. by S.) from Great Driffeld, containing 251 inhabitants. The living is a discharged perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of the East riding, and diocese of York, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £400 royal bounty. R. Arkwright, Esq. was patron in 1808.

SKERTON, a township in that part of the parish of LANCASTER which is in the hundred of LONSDALE, south of the sands, county palatine of LANCASTER, $\frac{3}{4}$ of a mile (N.) from Lancaster, containing 1283 inhabitants. Skerton is a considerable village, separated from the town of Lancaster by the river Lune, in which there is a considerable salmon fishery. A free school was erected by Jane Jephson, and endowed with £12 a year by Henry Williamson, in 1767, for twenty children.

SKETCHLEY, a hamlet in the parish of ASTON-FLAMVILLE, hundred of SPARKENHOE, county of LEICESTER, $1\frac{1}{4}$ mile (S. by W.) from Hinckley. The population is returned with the chapelry of Burbage. Here was formerly a chapel, now in ruins.

SKEWSBY, a township in the parish of DALBY, wapentake of BULMER, North riding of the county of YORK, $8\frac{3}{4}$ miles (E. by N.) from Easingwold. The population is returned with the parish.

SKEYTON, a parish in the southern division of the hundred of ERPINGHAM, county of NORFOLK, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E. by S.) from Aylsham, containing 324 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, with that of Oxnead and the vicarage of Buxton annexed, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £9. 10., endowed with £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of George Anson, Esq. The church is dedicated to All Saints.

SKIDBROOK, a parish in the Marsh division of the hundred of LOUTH-ESKE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $10\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E. by E.) from Louth, containing, with the hamlet of Saltfleet-Haven, 365 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £11. 3. 6., and in the patronage of the Rev. J. M. Phillips. The church is dedicated to St. Botolph.

SKIDBY, a parish in the Hunsley-Beacon division of the wapentake of HARTHILL, East riding of the county of YORK, 4 miles (S. by W.) from Beverley, containing 313 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the vicarage of Cottingham, in the archdeaconry of the East riding, and diocese of York. The church is dedicated to St. Michael. Eight children are educated for the proceeds of £150, the gift of John Marshall in 1803.

SKILGATE, a parish in the hundred of WILLITON and FREEMANNERS, county of SOMERSET, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by S.) from Wiveliscombe, containing 226 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Taunton, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £9. 9. $4\frac{1}{2}$. The Rev. R. Bere was patron in 1817. The church is dedicated to St. John the Baptist.

SKILLINGTON, a parish in the wapentake of BELTISLOE, parts of KESTIVEN, county of LINCOLN, 3 miles (N. W. by W.) from Colsterworth, containing 364 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Dean and Chapter of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £4. 19. $4\frac{1}{2}$., endowed with £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of — Whitelock, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. James. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

SKINBURNESS, a village in the parish of HOLME-CULTRAM, ALLERDALE ward below Darwent, county of CUMBERLAND, $11\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by W.) from Wigton. The population is returned with Low Holme. This place had anciently a market and a fair, granted to the abbot of Holme-Cultram; it was of considerable importance as a depôt from which the army employed against the Scots was supplied with stores. About 1303, the town was washed away by an irruption of the sea, and the abbot, in consequence having obtained license to erect a church, or chapel, at Arlosh, a new town was also built, and called Newton-Arlosh. Skinburness is now a pleasant village and respectable sea-bathing place, affording public and private accommodation to its numerous visitors, and commanding a most extensive view over the Solway Frith, and of the Scottish mountains beyond. A very productive herring fishery is carried on here.

SKINNAND, a parish in the higher division of the wapentake of BOOTHBY-GRAFFO, parts of KESTIVEN, county of LINCOLN, $11\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W.) from Sleaford, containing 14 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £5. 13. $11\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of Lord Viscount Falkland. The church is in ruins.

SKINNINGROVE, a township in the parish of BROTON, eastern division of the liberty of LANGBAURGH, North riding of the county of YORK, 8 miles (N. E.) from Guilsbrough, containing 60 inhabitants. It has a small fishing village, situated on a creek, almost secluded from view by the lofty heights which closely environ it on every side.

SKIPLAM, a township in that part of the parish of KIRKDALE which is in the wapentake of RYEDALE, North riding of the county of YORK, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E. by E.) from Helmsley, containing 170 inhabitants.

SKIPSEA, a parish in the northern division of the wapentake of HOLDERNESS, East riding of the county of YORK, comprising the chapelry of Ulrome, and the townships of Bonwick, Dringhoe with Upton and Brough, and Skipsea, and containing 693 inhabitants, of which number, 329 are in the township of Skipsea, $11\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E. by S.) from Great Driffeld. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of the East riding, and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £9. 16., endowed with £200 private benefaction, £400 royal bounty, and £1000 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Archbishop of York. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is principally in the later style of English architecture. There are places of worship for Independents and Wesleyan Methodists. The parish is bounded on the east by the North sea. A lofty mount, termed Skipsea Brough, was anciently the site of the baronial castle of the lords of Holderness.

SKIPTON, a township in that part of the parish of TOPCLIFFE which is in the wapentake of BIRDFORTH, North riding of the county of YORK, 5 miles (S. W. by W.) from Thirsk, containing 110 inhabitants. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. The Rev. Mr. Day, in 1764, bequeathed a small sum towards the support of a school.

SKIPTON, a parish comprising the market town of Skipton, the chapelry of Bolton-Abbey, and the townships of Barden, Draughton, Embsay with Eastby, East Halton with Bolton, and Stirton with Thorlby, in the eastern division of the wapentake of STAINCLIFFE and EWCROSS, and the township of Hazlewood with Storiths, and part of that of Beamsley, in the upper division of the wapentake of CLARO, West riding of the county of YORK, and containing 5479 inhabitants, of which number, 3411 are in the town of Skipton, 44 miles (W.) from York, and 211 (N.N. W.) from London. The name, which is variously spelt in Domesday-book, as Scriptone, Sceptone, or Sceptetone, was probably acquired from the vast number of sheep anciently fed in the vicinity. About the close of the reign of William the Conqueror, a castle was built here by Robert de Romille, which, in the great civil war, was garrisoned for the royal cause; but having been invested by the opposing party, it was surrendered, after a siege of three years, December 20th, 1645, having held out longer than any other fortress in the northern part of the country: in the following year an order was issued from the parliament for its demolition, which, in 1649, was partially carried into effect, but it was soon after restored by the Countess of Pembroke, who occasionally resided in it; in more modern times it has undergone a thorough repair, and is still a magnificent and commodious residence. The town is situated in a valley of great fertility and beauty, near the river Aire, and is skirted on the south-west by the Leeds and Liverpool canal, which partly passes through it, affording great facility for the conveyance of goods. It consists chiefly of two long and wide streets, one crossing the other at its termination, nearly at right angles, which are partly paved, and well supplied with water, conveyed through pipes from a spring that rises upon Rumbles moor: the houses are neatly built of stone, obtained in the immediate vicinity. The adjacent vale is celebrated for its productiveness, and is a fine grazing district: from the surrounding hills are some beautiful and picturesque views. There is a small subscription library. The situation of the town is highly advantageous to the purposes of trade, of which the spinning and weaving of cotton form the principal branch: there are several cotton-mills upon the neighbouring streams, and an extensive brewery for porter and ale. The market is on Saturday, when a small quantity of grain is brought for sale; and there is a large market every second Monday for fat cattle and sheep: fairs are held on March 25th, Saturdays before Palm and Easter Sundays, the first and third Tuesdays after Easter, on Whitsun-eve, August 5th, and November 23rd, chiefly for sheep, horned cattle, pedlary, &c.; and September 23rd for horses. The local affairs are under the superintendence of a constable, who is appointed annually at the manorial court leet: the general quarter sessions for the West riding are held here at Midsummer, in the town hall, which is a neat stone building, situated on the east side of Sheep-street Hill.

The living comprises a rectory and a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of York, the former rated in the king's books at £4. 0. 10., and the latter, which is endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, rated at £10. 12. 6., and both in the patronage of the Dean and Canons of Christ Church, Oxford. The church is dedicated to the Holy Trinity: it immediately adjoins the castle, and is the work of different periods, but principally in the later style of English architecture; four stone seats, with pointed arches and cylindrical columns, in the south wall of the nave, are supposed to be the only remaining parts of the original edifice: the tower, which stands at the west end, was repaired by Lady Clifford, Countess Dowager of Pembroke, in the year 1655: there are several monuments to different members of the family of Clifford, Earls of Cumberland; and beneath the altar is a family vault, which was their place of interment from the dissolution of Bolton priory to the death of the last Earl of Cumberland. There are places of worship for the Society of Friends, Independents, and Wesleyan Methodists. The free grammar school was founded in 1548, and endowed with lands in Addingham, Eastby, and Skipton, by the Rev. William Ermystead, the annual proceeds of which amount to upwards of £600: the master is appointed by the vicar and churchwardens, and has an agreeable residence, with pleasure grounds and gardens attached: boys are admissible from all parts, and there are about sixty in the school. They are eligible to the exhibitions of Lady Elizabeth Hastings, in Queen's College, Oxford; and the school has two exhibitions in Christ's College, Cambridge, founded by William Petyt, Esq., who gave £200 to the college for that purpose. The Clerk's school was originally endowed, by the Rev. William Ermystead, with lands of great value at Wike, near Harewood, in Yorkshire, which, by mismanagement of the trustees, have been lost, and a prescriptive payment, amounting to £12 per annum, is made to the master of the boys' National school, who is also clerk of the parish: this school and a National school for girls are further supported by voluntary contributions, the school-house having been also erected from a similar fund: the number of children in both is one hundred and sixty. Sylvester Petyt, Esq., Principal of Bernard's Inn, and a native of this parish, bequeathed a library for the use of the parishioners, which is preserved in the church; and the sum of £24,048 South Sea Annuities, for various charitable purposes, especially for the payment of £20 per annum to Christ's College, Cambridge, for an augmentation of exhibitions for the free grammar school, for apprenticing twelve poor children of parishioners annually, the interest of £100 for the librarian, and of £50 to buy books for poor boys at the grammar school. The principal remains of the old castle are the western doorway, and several round towers. George Holmes, an eminent antiquary, who republished the first seventeen volumes of Rymer's Fœdera, was a native of this town.

SKIPWITH, a parish in the wapentake of OUZE and DERWENT, East riding of the county of YORK, comprising the townships of North Duffield and Skipwith, and containing 748 inhabitants, of which number, 315 are in the township of Skipwith, 5½ miles (N.N.E.)

from Selby. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the jurisdiction of the Peculiar Court of Howdenshire, rated in the king's books at £10. 11. 3., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. Helen. The Rev. Joseph Nelson, in 1813, bequeathed £400 for the education of the poorest children of the parish; the annual income is upwards of £13. 10., for which about fourteen children are instructed in a school founded by Dorothy Wilson, in 1717.

SKIRBECK, a parish partly in the wapentake of KIRTON, but chiefly in that of SKIRBECK, parts of HOLLAND, county of LINCOLN, 1 mile (S. E. by S.) from Boston, containing, with the hamlet of Skirbeck-Quarter, 1307 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £34. 17. 8½., and in the patronage of the Rev. William Volans. The church is dedicated to St. Nicholas. An ancient hospital, for ten poor persons, founded in honour of St. Leonard, was given, in 1230, by Sir Thomas Multon, Knt., to the knights hospitallers of St. John of Jerusalem, who settled here, and dedicated it anew to St. John the Baptist. In the time of Edward II., its revenue was sufficient for the maintenance of four priests, also twenty poor people in the infirmary, and for the daily relief of forty more at the gate.

SKIRBECK-QUARTER, a hamlet in that part of the parish of SKIRBECK which is in the wapentake of KIRTON, parts of HOLLAND, county of LINCOLN, containing 325 inhabitants.

SKIRCOAT, a township in the parish of HALIFAX, wapentake of MORLEY, West riding of the county of YORK, 1½ mile (S. S. W.) from Halifax, containing 3323 inhabitants. The manufacture of cotton and woollen goods is carried on here to a considerable extent.

SKIRLAUGH (NORTH), a chapelry in that part of the parish of SWINE which is in the northern division of the wapentake of HOLDERNESS, East riding of the county of YORK, 9 miles (N. N. E.) from Kingston upon Hull, containing, with the township of Rowton, and part of that of Arnold, 260 inhabitants. The chapel, dedicated to St. Augustine, was built by Walter Skirlaw, Bishop of Durham; it is an elegant specimen of the later English style. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

SKIRLAUGH (SOUTH), a chapelry in that part of the parish of SWINE which is in the middle division of the wapentake of HOLDERNESS, East riding of the county of YORK, 8¾ miles (N. N. E.) from Kingston upon Hull, containing 211 inhabitants. Marmaduke Langdale, about 1609, bequeathed £200, directing the interest to be applied for teaching and apprenticing children, and other charitable purposes.

SKIRLINGTON, a township in the parish of ATWICK, northern division of the wapentake of HOLDERNESS, East riding of the county of YORK, 13½ miles (E. S. E.) from Great Driffeld. The population is returned with the parish.

SKIRPENBECK, a parish partly in the wapentake of BUCKROSE, and partly in the liberty of St. PETER of YORK, East riding of the county of YORK, 7¾ miles (N. W. by N.) from Pocklington, containing 263 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of the East riding, and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £14. 7. 8½., and in the patronage of the Crown.

SKIRWITH, a township in the parish of KIRKLAND, LEATH ward, county of CUMBERLAND, 7½ miles (E. N. E.) from Penrith, containing 238 inhabitants. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. A school was erected by subscription in 1828, towards which Lady le Fleming and W. Parker, Esq. each contributed £20. The mansion of the latter is supposed to occupy the site of a preceptory of Knights Templars.

SKUTTERSKELFE, a township in the parish of RUDBY in CLEVELAND, western division of the liberty of LANGBAURGH, North riding of the county of YORK, 2 miles (W. by S.) from Stokesley, containing 32 inhabitants. Near the village is an excellent land-mark called Folly Hill, which is sometimes discernible twenty leagues at sea.

SLAIDBURN, a parish in the western division of the wapentake of STAINCLIFFE and EWCROSS, West riding of the county of YORK, comprising the townships of High Bowland-Forest, Low Bowland-Forest, Easington, Newton, and Slaidburn, and containing 2583 inhabitants, of which number, 904 are in the township of Slaidburn, 8 miles (N. by W.) from Clitheroe. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of the East riding, and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £32, and in the patronage of J. Wigglesworth, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew. There is a chapel of ease, dedicated to St. Peter; also a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. A free grammar school was founded here, in 1717, by John Brannord, who bequeathed an estate in trust, to apply £200 for the erection of the school-house, with £50 a year to a master, and £30 to an usher, for teaching the classics, or English grammar, to all the children of the parish. Another school was endowed, in 1732, by Mr. William Clayton, with £250, and by Mr. Johnson with £100, the interest of which sums, amounting to about £14. 14. per annum, is applied to the gratuitous instruction of from twenty to thirty poor children. A chantry was founded, in 1332, by Stephen de Hamerton, in the chapel of St. Mary, then existing on his manor of Hamerton, for a Secular chaplain, to celebrate mass for the repose of the souls of himself, his father, and his mother.

SLAITHWAITE, a chapelry in the parish of HUDDERSFIELD, upper division of the wapentake of AGRIGG, West riding of the county of YORK, 5 miles (W. S. W.) from Huddersfield, containing 2871 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of York, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £600 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Vicar of Huddersfield. The chapel, rebuilt in 1784, will accommodate upwards of one thousand five hundred persons. The canal, and the new line of road from Huddersfield to Manchester, pass through this place. The manufacture of woollen and cotton goods is carried on to a great extent, and the prosperity of the village is likely to be promoted by the recent discovery of an excellent spa, thought to be equal in its chalybeate properties to the springs at Harrogate. A free school was founded and endowed here, in 1721, by the Rev. Robert Meek; the income, with subsequent benefactions, amounts to £42 per annum, for which twenty boys are instructed.

SLALEY, a parish in the eastern division of TINDALE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, 5½ miles (S. E. by S.) from Hexham, containing 582 inhabitants.

The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Northumberland, and diocese of Durham, endowed with £200 private benefaction, £200 royal bounty, and £1200 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of T. W. Beaumont, Esq. At Dukesfield, in this parish, is a large mill for smelting and refining lead-ore, which is brought from Wardle, in the county of Durham. Ochre is obtained and manufactured on Slaley fell. A small school is supported by the bequests of Matthew Carr, in 1729, and Ralph Carr, in 1769.

SLAPTON, a parish in the hundred of COTTESLOE, county of BUCKINGHAM, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. by W.) from Ivinghoe, containing 312 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Buckingham, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £14. 9. 7., and in the patronage of the Dean and Canons of Christ Church, Oxford. The church is dedicated to the Holy Cross. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. The Grand Junction canal passes through the parish. A charity school is supported by voluntary subscriptions.

SLAPTON, a parish in the hundred of COLERIDGE, county of DEVON, 6 miles (S. W.) from Dartmouth, containing 689 inhabitants. The living is a discharged perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Totness, and diocese of Exeter, endowed with £600 private benefaction, £400 royal bounty, and £1200 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Parishioners. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. John and Charles Kelland, about 1690, bequeathed £150, which, with accumulations, now produces about £20 per annum, applied to the instruction and apprenticing of poor children.

SLAPTON, a parish in the hundred of GREENS-NORTON, county of NORTHAMPTON, $3\frac{3}{4}$ miles (W. S. W.) from Towcester, containing 201 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Northampton, and diocese of Peterborough, rated in the king's books at £9. 9. $9\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Rev. Thomas C. Welch. The church is dedicated to St. Botolph. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. Three poor children are educated by means of a trifling bequest from Thomas Knight, in 1723.

SLAUGHAM, a parish in the hundred of BUTTING-HILL, rape of LEWES, county of SUSSEX, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. W. by W.) from Cuckfield, containing 933 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Lewes, and diocese of Chichester, rated in the king's books at £10. 19. 2. Mrs. Sergison was patroness in 1800. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is in the decorated style of English architecture, and has lately received an addition of two hundred free sittings, the Incorporated Society for the enlargement of churches and chapels having granted £100 towards defraying the expense.

SLAUGHTER (LOWER), a parish in the lower division of the hundred of SLAUGHTER, county of GLOUCESTER, 3 miles (S. W.) from Stow on the Wold, containing 242 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the rectory of Bourton on the Water, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Gloucester. The parish is crossed on the south-east by the Fosse-road, near which a figure of Pallas, sculptured in stone, was discovered about 1770.

SLAUGHTER (UPPER), a parish in the lower division of the hundred of SLAUGHTER, county of GLOUCESTER, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. W. by W.) from Stow on the Wold, containing 245 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Gloucester, rated in the king's books at £14. 14. 2., and in the patronage of Walter Lawrence Lawrence, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. Two brooks run through the parish, and afterwards fall into another, all which uniting form the river Windrush. There is a small endowment by the late rector, the Rev. F. T. Travell, for the support of a Sunday school.

SLAUGHTERFORD, a parish in the hundred of CHIPPENHAM, county of WILTS, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by N.) from Chippenham, containing 121 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the rectory of Biddestone, in the archdeaconry of Wilts, and diocese of Salisbury. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, has lately received an addition of one hundred and thirty sittings, of which one hundred are free, the Incorporated Society for the enlargement of churches and chapels having granted £100 towards defraying the expense.

SLAWSTON, a parish in the hundred of GARTREE, county of LEICESTER, $5\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. E. by N.) from Market-Harborough, containing 228 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Leicester, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £6. 5. $7\frac{1}{2}$., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to All Saints.

SLEAFORD (NEW), a market town and parish in the wapentake of FLAXWELL, parts of KESTIVEN, county of LINCOLN, 18 miles (S. S. E.) from Lincoln, and 116 (N. by W.) from London, containing, with the hamlet of Holdingham, 2220 inhabitants. The name in ancient records is written La Ford and Eslaforde, which has been corrupted into Sleaford, and the epithet New given to distinguish it from Old Sleaford, an adjoining parish. A castle appears to have been erected here at an early period, but of its history there are few records, and of the building only some trifling remains. The town is situated on the main road from London to Lincoln; it is of respectable appearance, and is gradually improving in buildings and importance; it is well paved and lighted, and the inhabitants are supplied with water from an adjacent spring, called Bully, or Boiling, wells. A small theatre was erected in 1824. A canal connects this town with Boston, Lincoln, and the Trent navigation, and thus promotes the prosperity of its general trade. The market is on Monday; and fairs are on Plough-Monday, Easter-Monday, Whit-Monday, August 11th, and October 20th, for horses, cattle, sheep, and provisions. The quarter sessions for the parts of Kesteven are held here by adjournment from Bourne. The old town hall, being greatly dilapidated, has been pulled down, and a handsome edifice, in the later style of English architecture, erected.

The living is a discharged vicarage, in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the Prebendary of Lafford, or New Sleaford, in the Cathedral Church of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £8. The church, dedicated to St. Denis, exhibits some fine specimens of almost every style of English architecture, and consists of a nave, aisles, a large chapel on the north side, and a chancel: at the west end is a tower, erected about 1150, which is by far the most ancient part of the building; it is in the early style of English architecture, and is surmounted by a spire of later date, one hundred and forty-four feet high; an enriched spiral staircase leads to it on the south side. In the chancel are three fine stalls, in the later style; at its entrance are the screen and canopy of the ancient rood-loft. The entire structure is replete with interest: there are several ancient monuments, chiefly belonging to the family of Carr, formerly lords of the manor. There are places of worship for those in the Connexion of the late Countess of Huntingdon, Independents, and Wesleyan Methodists. The free grammar school was founded, in 1604, by Robert Carr, Esq., who endowed it with £20 per annum: the master, who must be a graduate of one of the Universities, is appointed by the Marquis of Bristol, as owner of the "late fair castle of Sleaford," for which he pays to the crown £40 per annum: the children of the town and neighbourhood are instructed gratuitously. A school was endowed with lands by William Alvey, in 1729, for the instruction of poor children: twenty boys and twenty girls are educated. An hospital, for a chaplain and twelve poor men, was founded and endowed by Sir Robert Carr, Bart., in 1636; the almsmen have weekly allowances of ten shillings and sixpence each, and a certain quantity of coal, with comfortable apartments, and the chaplain a salary of £20 per annum, to officiate in a chapel attached. The Bishop of Lincoln had anciently a magnificent palace here, in which King John sojourned a few days, but no part remains except the foundations: it is supposed to have been destroyed by Cromwell. A branch of the Ermin-street passes through this parish, and that of Old Sleaford.

SLEAFORD (OLD), a parish in the wapentake of ASWARDHURN, parts of KESTIVEN, county of LINCOLN, 1 mile (S. E.) from New Sleaford, containing 215 inhabitants. The living was a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £4. 10., and in the patronage of the Marquis of Bristol. The church, which was dedicated to St. Giles, has been demolished upwards of two hundred years, for which period there has been no presentation, the vicarage being now supposed to have merged into the impropriation: the inhabitants attend divine service at Quarrington, or New Sleaford. The Roman street passes through the parish.

SLEAGILL, a township in the parish of MORLAND, WEST ward, county of WESTMORLAND, $8\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. by W.) from Orton, containing 157 inhabitants. Coal is obtained here.

SLECKBURN (EAST), a township in the parish of BEDLINGTON, a detached portion of the eastern division of CHESTER ward, county palatine of DURHAM, locally on the east side of the county of Northumberland, $6\frac{3}{4}$ miles (E. S. E.) from Morpeth. The population is returned with the parish.

SLECKBURN (WEST), a township in the parish of BEDLINGTON, a detached portion of the eastern division of CHESTER ward, county palatine of DURHAM, locally on the east side of the county of Northumberland, $5\frac{3}{4}$ miles (E. by S.) from Morpeth. The population is returned with the parish.

SLEDDALE (LONG), a chapelry in that part of the parish of KENDAL which is in KENDAL ward, VOL. IV.

county of WESTMORLAND, 8 miles (N. by W.) from Kendal, containing 185 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Richmond, and diocese of Chester, endowed with £600 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Land-owners. The chapel was rebuilt in 1712. A school, termed the Chapel school, is supported by the Hon. F. G. Howard, lord of the manor, who allows £15 a year to the master. Here are quarries of a fine blue slate, situated amid mountain scenery of the most romantic and picturesque character.

SLEDMERE, a parish in the wapentake of BUCKROSE, East riding of the county of YORK, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by W.) from Great Driffeld, containing, with the hamlet of Croom, 425 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of the East riding, and diocese of York, endowed with £400 royal bounty, and £200 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of Sir Tatton Sykes, Bart. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

SLEEP, a hamlet in that part of the parish of ST. PETER, ST. ALBANS, which is in the hundred of CASHIO, or liberty of ST. ALBANS, county of HERTFORD, containing 639 inhabitants.

SLIMBRIDGE, a parish in the upper division of the hundred of BERKELEY, county of GLOUCESTER, 4 miles (N. by W.) from Dursley, containing 807 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Gloucester, rated in the king's books at £28. 2. 11., and in the patronage of the President and Fellows of Magdalene College, Oxford. The church, dedicated to St. John the Evangelist, is a handsome structure with a fine spire. There is a place of worship for Independents. The Gloucester and Berkeley canal passes through the parish, and the Severn is navigable along the north-west boundary. Dr. Jenner, who discovered and introduced the practice of vaccination, was a native of this parish.

SLINDON, a township in the parish of ECCLESHALL, northern division of the hundred of PIREHILL, county of STAFFORD, containing 130 inhabitants. It is within the peculiar jurisdiction of the Prebendary of Eccleshall in the Cathedral Church of Lincoln.

SLINDON, a parish in the hundred of ALDWICK, rape of CHICHESTER, county of SUSSEX, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (W. by N.) from Arundel, containing 471 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Archbishop of Canterbury, rated in the king's books at £14. 13. 1 $\frac{1}{2}$. The Rev. M. Smelt was patron in 1815. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is in the early style of English architecture.

SLINFOLD, a parish partly in the hundred of EAST EASWRITH, rape of BRAMBER, but chiefly in the hundred of WEST EASWRITH, rape of ARUNDEL, county of SUSSEX, 4 miles (W. by N.) from Horsham, containing 644 inhabitants. The living comprises a sinecure rectory and a vicarage united, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chichester, rated jointly in the king's books at £12. 14. 2., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Chichester. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. Two branches of the river Arun form a junction here, and a Roman road passes through the parish.

SLINGLEY, a joint township with Seaton, in the parish of SEAHAM, northern division of EASINGTON ward, county palatine of DURHAM, $5\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. by W.)

from Sunderland. The population is returned with Seaton.

SLINGSBY, a parish in the wapentake of RYEDALE, North riding of the county of YORK, 6 miles (W. N. W.) from New Malton, containing 548 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Cleveland, and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £12. 1. 10½., and in the patronage of the Earl of Carlisle. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is partly in the early and partly in the later style of English architecture. The Rev. Robert Wood, in 1712, in exercise of a power reserved to him, gave a rent-charge of £5 for teaching ten poor children, to which the Earl of Carlisle adds £10 per annum. Here is a fine bed of limestone, abounding with organic fossil remains. A Roman road from Malton to the westward passes through the parish, and here was a castle belonging to the family of Lacy before the Conquest, and afterwards to that of Mowbray, which Richard III. subsequently held, and died possessed of: it was partly rebuilt, in the later style of English architecture, by Sir C. Cavendish, in 1603, but the walls only are remaining.

SLIPTON, a parish in the hundred of HUXLOE, county of NORTHAMPTON, 3¼ miles (W. by N.) from Thrapstone, containing 135 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Northampton, and diocese of Peterborough, rated in the king's books at £5. 12. 3½., and in the patronage of the Heirs of the Duke of Dorset. The church is dedicated to St. John the Baptist.

SLOLEY, a parish in the hundred of TUNSTEAD, county of NORFOLK, 3½ miles (N. N. E.) from Coltishall, containing 308 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £5. 6. 8., and in the patronage of the Earl of Orford. The church is dedicated to St. Bartholomew.

SLOUGH, a village, partly in the parish of STOKE-POGES, and partly in that of UPTON, hundred of STOKE, county of BUCKINGHAM, 41 miles (S. E. by S.) from Buckingham, and 21 (W.) from London. The population is returned with the parishes. A cattle market is held on Tuesday. Herschel, the celebrated astronomer, resided at this place, and here he constructed his powerful telescope; the frame of it is visible from the Bath road.

SLYNE, a joint township with Hest, in the parish of BOLTON le SANDS, hundred of LONSDALE, south of the sands, county palatine of LANCASTER, 2½ miles (N.) from Lancaster, containing 317 inhabitants. At Hest bank, in this township, a breakwater was constructed in 1820, along the side of which vessels from Liverpool and Glasgow load and unload their cargoes; and, by means of a canal extending to within a short distance of the shore, a considerable trade is carried on with Kendal and other inland places. The road across the sands to Ulverstone commences at Hest; and the great road to Kendal, Carlisle, and Glasgow, passes through the village of Slyne. Courts leet and baron are held here. There are traces of salt-works which formerly existed in the neighbourhood.

SMALESMOUTH, a township in the parish of GAYSTEAD, north-western division of TINDALE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, 8 miles (W. by N.) from Bellingham, containing 163 inhabitants.

SMALLBURGH, a parish in the hundred of TUNSTEAD, county of NORFOLK, 5¼ miles (N. E. by E.) from Coltishall, containing 722 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £10. 4., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Norwich. The church is dedicated to St. Peter; the steeple fell down in 1677, and occasioned great injury to the edifice.

SMALLEY, a chapelry in the parish of MORLEY, hundred of MORLESTON and LITCHURCH, county of DERBY, 7 miles (N. E.) from Derby, containing 727 inhabitants. The chapel is dedicated to St. John the Baptist. John and Samuel Richardson, in 1712, conveyed certain property to trustees, for the erection and support of a school for twelve poor boys, each to receive eightpence per week; the present annual income is £88, and twenty-eight boys are educated, viz., fourteen from this chapelry, eight from Heanor, and six from Horsely-Woodhouse. There are extensive collieries in the neighbourhood.

SMALLFORD, a ward partly in the parish of St. STEVEN, and partly in that part of the parish of St. PETER, St. ALBANS, which is in the hundred of CASHIO, or liberty of St. ALBANS, county of HERTFORD. The population is returned with the parish. Here are almshouses for three widows.

SMALL-HYTHE, a chapelry in the parish and hundred of TENTERDEN, lathe of SCRAY, county of KENT, 2 miles (S. by E.) from Tenterden. The chapel is dedicated to St. John the Baptist.

SMALLWOOD, a township in that part of the parish of ASTBURY which is in the hundred of NORTHWICH, county palatine of CHESTER, 3 miles (E. by S.) from Sandbach, containing 584 inhabitants. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

SMARDALE, a township in the parish of KIRKBY-STEPHEN, East ward, county of WESTMORLAND, 2¾ miles (W. S. W.) from Kirkby-Stephen, containing 55 inhabitants. A chapel was anciently situated at a place now called Chapel Well.

SMARDEN, a parish (formerly a market town) in the hundred of CALEHILL, lathe of SCRAY, county of KENT, 8 miles (N. E. by E.) from Cranbrooke, and 46 (S. E. by E.) from London, containing 1038 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Canterbury, rated in the king's books at £24. 2. 6., and in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury. The church is dedicated to St. Michael. There are places of worship for Baptists and Wesleyan Methodists: the former has a school attached. A free school was founded, in 1716, by Stephen Dadson, who endowed it with property now producing upwards of £45 a year, for which from forty to fifty children are instructed: six of the parish of Bethersden have the privilege of admittance here. The market has fallen into disuse, but the market-house is still standing: a fair is held on October 10th, for toys and pedlary.

SMEATON (GREAT), a parish partly in the wapentake of ALLERTONSHIRE, and partly in the eastern division of that of GILLING, North riding of the county of YORK, 6½ miles (N. by W.) from North Allerton, containing, with the township of Hornby, 488 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Richmond (with the perpetual curacy of Appleton upon Wisk in that of Cleveland), and diocese of Chester, rated in the king's books at £13. 13. 4., and in the patronage of Henry Hewgill, Esq. The river Wisk runs through the parish, and the Tees flows along the northern side of it.

SMEATON (KIRK), a parish in the upper division of the wapentake of OSGOLDCROSS, West riding of the county of YORK, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E.) from Pontefract, containing 321 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £10. 1. $0\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of Earl Fitzwilliam. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

SMEATON (LITTLE), a township in the parish of BIRKBY, wapentake of ALLERTONSHIRE, North riding of the county of YORK, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by W.) from North Allerton, containing 64 inhabitants.

SMEATON (LITTLE), a township in the parish of WOMERSLEY, lower division of the wapentake of OSGOLDCROSS, West riding of the county of YORK, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E. by E.) from Pontefract, containing 176 inhabitants. Ann Jackson, in 1675, bequeathed £30 in support of a school for teaching poor children.

SMEETH, a parish in the franchise and barony of BIRCHOLT, lathe of SHEPWAY, county of KENT, $4\frac{3}{4}$ miles (E. S. E.) from Ashford, containing 393 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the rectory of Aldington, in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is principally in the Norman style of architecture. Smeeth was formerly a market town; fairs are still held on May 12th and Michaelmas-day, for toys and pedlary. Timothy Beddingfield, in 1691, bequeathed an estate producing a considerable income for teaching poor children, and maintaining two aged women.

SMEETON-WESTERBY, a township in the parish of KIBWORTH-BEAUCHAMP, hundred of GARTREE, county of LEICESTER, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. W.) from Market-Harborough, containing 388 inhabitants.

SMERRILL, a joint chapelry with Middleton, in that part of the parish of YOULGRAVE which is in the hundred of WIRKSWORTH, county of DERBY, 5 miles (S. S. W.) from Bakewell. The population is returned with Middleton. It is in the honour of Tutbury, duchy of Lancaster, and within the jurisdiction of a court of pleas held at Tutbury every third Tuesday, for the recovery of debts under 40s.

SMETHCOTT, a parish in the hundred of CONDOWER, county of SALOP, $9\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. by W.) from Shrewsbury, containing 347 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Salop, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, rated in the king's books at £4. 9., and in the patronage of Mrs. Lacey. The church is dedicated to St. Michael.

SMETHWICK, a township in the parish of BRERETON, hundred of NORTHWICH, county palatine of CHESTER, 4 miles (N. E. by E.) from Sandbach. The population is returned with the parish.

SMETHWICK, a chapelry in the parish of HARBONE, southern division of the hundred of OFFLOW, county of STAFFORD, 4 miles (W. by N.) from Birmingham, containing 1950 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the vicarage of Harbone, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Dean and Chapter of Lichfield. There are places of worship for Independents and Calvinistic Methodists. The Birmingham canal passes through the chapelry. About fifteen children are instructed by a schoolmistress for £9. 9. a year, the bequest of Dorothy Parkes, who erected the school premises in 1723.

SMISBY, a parish in the hundred of REPTON and GRESLEY, county of DERBY, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. W.) from Ashby de la Zouch, containing 322 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Derby, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, endowed with £400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Marquis of Hastings.

SNAILWELL, a parish in the hundred of STAPLOE, county of CAMBRIDGE, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N.) from Newmarket, containing 222 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Sudbury, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £27. 11. $0\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Trustees of the late J. Tharp, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Peter.

SNAINTON, a chapelry partly in the parish of EBBERSTON, but chiefly in that of BROMPTON, PICKERING lythe, North riding of the county of YORK, $9\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W. by W.) from Scarborough, containing 603 inhabitants. The chapel is subordinate to the vicarage of Brompton. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

SNAITH, a parish comprising the market town of Snaith, the chapelries of Armin, Hooke, and Rawcliff, and the townships of Balne, Cowick, Goole, Gowdall, Hick, Hensall, and Pollington, in the lower division of the wapentake of OSGOLDCROSS, and the chapelry of Carleton, in the lower division of the wapentake of BARKSTONE-ASH, West riding of the county of YORK, and containing 6909 inhabitants, of which number, 834 are in the town of Snaith, 23 miles (S. by E.) from York, and 175 (N. by W.) from London. The town is situated on a gentle declivity on the south bank of the river Aire: it is small and irregularly built; the streets are lighted with oil; the houses are chiefly of brick, and rather of mean appearance, but a few handsome and substantial dwellings have been lately erected; the inhabitants are well supplied with water from wells. Flax is cultivated in the neighbourhood to a considerable extent, and conveyed to the market at Leeds by the river Aire: the canal from Knottingley to Goole passes southward of the town. The market is on Thursday, and fairs are held on the last Thursday in April, and August 10th, for cattle, &c. Courts are occasionally held for the manor. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the jurisdiction of the peculiar court of Snaith, and in the patronage of Nicholas Edmund Yarburgh, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is an ancient and spacious structure, in the later style of English architecture, with a low square tower surmounted with pinnacles and a belfry of wood. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. The free grammar school is of unknown foundation: in 1741, Nicholas Waller gave a rent-charge of £30 for its endowment: twenty boys are educated, but classical instruction has been long discontinued. There are almshouses for six poor persons, founded by the Yarburgh family; and others for six poor widows, which were rebuilt, in 1802, by Lord Viscount Downe.

SNAPE, a parish in the hundred of PLOMESGATE, county of SUFFOLK, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. by E.) from Saxmundham, containing 518 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, consolidated with that of Friston, in the archdeaconry of Suffolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £5. 5. 7½., endowed with £400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of R. W. H. H. Vyse, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. John the Baptist; the front is hexagonal and much enriched in the later English style. The parish is bounded on the south by the river Alde, or Orr, which is crossed by a bridge, where there is a quay for shipping corn, &c. A society of Benedictine monks from the abbey of St. John at Colchester settled here in 1155, and in 1400 was exempted from all subjection to that house, and raised into a distinct priory; it was dedicated to the Blessed Virgin Mary, and at its suppression, in 1524, was granted to Wolsey towards the endowment of his intended colleges, when its revenue was valued at £99. 1. 11.

SNAPE, a township in the parish of WELL, eastern division of the wapentake of HANG, North riding of the county of YORK, 3¼ miles (S.) from Bedale, containing 689 inhabitants, who are principally employed in wool-combing for the worsted-spinners in this part of the county. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. An almshouse for eight aged persons, and free schools for children of each sex, have been founded and liberally endowed by the Nevilles.

SNAREHILL-HOUSE, an extra-parochial district, in the hundred of GUILT-CROSS, county of NORFOLK, 1¼ mile (S.) from Thetford. This place and Thetford Lodge are all that remain of two villages, called Great and Little Snareshill.

SNARESTON, a parish in the hundred of SPARKENHOE, county of LEICESTER, 7 miles (N. W.) from Market-Bosworth, containing 356 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the rectory of Sweepstone, in the archdeaconry of Leicester, and diocese of Lincoln. The church is dedicated to St. Bartholomew. The Ashby de la Zouch canal passes through the parish. Snaresstone is in the honour of Tutbury, duchy of Lancaster, and within the jurisdiction of a court of pleas held at Tutbury every third Tuesday, for the recovery of debts under 40s.

SNARFORD, a parish in the wapentake of LAWRESS, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 7 miles (S. W.) from Market-Rasen, containing 64 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Stow, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £4, endowed with £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Subdean of Lincoln. The church is dedicated to St. Lawrence.

SNARGATE, a parish in the liberty of ROMNEY-MARSH, though locally in the hundred of Aloesbridge, lathe of SHEPWAY, county of KENT, 5½ miles (N. W. by W.) from New Romney, containing 93 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Canterbury, rated in the king's books at £17. 6. 8., and in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury. The church is dedicated to St. Dunstan.

SNAVE, a parish in the liberty of ROMNEY-MARSH, though locally in the hundred of Aloesbridge, lathe of SHEPWAY, county of KENT, 4½ miles (N. W. by N.) from New Romney, containing 108 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Canterbury, rated in the king's books at £19. 7. 11., and in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury. The church is dedicated to St. Augustine.

SNEAD, a hamlet in the parish of ROCK, lower division of the hundred of DODDINGTREE, county of WORCESTER, 5½ miles (S. W.) from Bewdley. The population is returned with the parish.

SNEATON, a parish in the liberty of WHITBY-STRAND, North riding of the county of YORK, 2¼ miles (S. by W.) from Whitby, containing 251 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Cleveland, and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £13. 2. 6., and in the patronage of James Wilson, Esq., at whose expense the present church, which is in the decorated style, was lately erected, the former edifice having fallen to decay. He also established a free school for all the children of parishioners. Courts leet and baron are held here.

SNELLAND, a parish in the western division of the wapentake of WRAGGOE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 5 miles (W. N. W.) from Wragby, containing 133 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £3. 17. 6., and in the patronage of Earl Brownlow. The church is dedicated to All Saints.

SNELSMORE, a tything in the parish of CHIEVELEY, hundred of FAIRCROSS, county of BERKS, 3¼ miles (N.) from Newbury. The population is returned with the parish.

SNELSON, a township in that part of the parish of ROSTERN which is in the hundred of MACCLESFIELD, county palatine of CHESTER, 5¼ miles (S. E.) from Nether Knutsford, containing 137 inhabitants.

The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the rectory of Norbury, in the archdeaconry of Derby, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. Snelston is in the honour of Tutbury, duchy of Lancaster, and within the jurisdiction of a court of pleas held at Tutbury every third Tuesday, for the recovery of debts under 40s. Children of this parish are entitled to the benefit of a school at Norbury, founded by Thomas Williams.

SNENTON, a parish in the southern division of the wapentake of THURGARTON, county of NOTTINGHAM, ¾ of a mile (E.) from Nottingham, containing 1212 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Nottingham, and diocese of York, endowed with £600 royal bounty, and £200 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of Earl Manvers. The church is dedicated to St. Stephen. The village, which a few years ago consisted of a few scattered houses, and contained not more than two hundred and fifty inhabitants, now presents a most respectable appearance, new streets and many elegant houses having been recently erected. The county asylum for lunatics is in this parish: it is a large brick building, capable of accommodating one hundred and thirty patients: the establishment is well conducted, and is supported by voluntary contributions. In the neighbourhood are some curious excavations in the stone rock, used as dwellings.

SNETTERTON, a parish in the hundred of SHROPHAM, county of NORFOLK, 3 miles (N.) from East Harling, containing 225 inhabitants. The living comprises the consolidated rectories of All Saints and St. Andrew the Apostle, with the rectory of Quiddenham, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £12. 17. 1. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew.

SNETTISHAM, a parish in the hundred of SMITHDON, county of NORFOLK, $6\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. by E.) from Castle-Rising, containing 959 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £5. 6. 8., endowed with £400 private benefaction, £200 royal bounty, and £300 parliamentary grant. Henry Styleman, Esq. was patron in 1815. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. A market on Friday was formerly held here: the town was then called Snetham. Ancient brass instruments, in the shape of axe heads, with handles to them, usually termed celts, have been discovered in the neighbourhood.

SNEYD, a township in the parish of BURSLEM, northern division of the hundred of PIREHILL, county of STAFFORD, $\frac{1}{2}$ a mile (N.) from Hanley. The population is returned with the parish. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. The manufacture of earthenware is carried on here, and there are extensive coal-works in the vicinity.

SNIBSTON, a chapelry in that part of the parish of PACKINGTON which is in the western division of the hundred of GOSCOTE, county of LEICESTER, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E.) from Ashby de la Zouch. The population is returned with the parish.

SNITTER, a township in the parish of ROTHBURY, western division of COQUETDALE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. W. by W.) from Rothbury, containing 160 inhabitants.

SNITTERBY, a parish in the eastern division of the wapentake of ASLACOE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $11\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. W. by W.) from Market-Rasen, containing 153 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the rectory of Wadingham, in the archdeaconry of Stow, and diocese of Lincoln. The church is dedicated St. Nicholas.

SNITTERFIELD, a parish in the Snitterfield division of the hundred of BARLICHWAY, county of WARWICK, 4 miles (N. by E.) from Stratford upon Avon, containing 642 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Worcester, rated in the king's books at £8, and in the patronage of the Bishop of Worcester. The church, dedicated to St. James, exhibits portions in the early, decorated, and later styles of English architecture.

SNITTERTON, a joint hamlet with Winsley, in that part of the parish of DARLEY which is in the hundred of WIRKSWORTH, county of DERBY, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (W. by N.) from Matlock. The population is returned with Winsley. It is in the honour of Tutbury, duchy of Lancaster, and within the jurisdiction of a court of pleas held at Tutbury every third Tuesday, for the recovery of debts under 40s.

SNITTLEGARTH, a joint township with Bewaldeth, in the parish of TORPENHOW, ALLERDALE ward below Darwent, county of CUMBERLAND, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (W. S. W.) from Ireby. The population is returned with Bewaldeth.

SNODLAND, a joint parish with Paddlesworth, in the hundred of LARKFIELD, lathe of AYLESFORD, county of KENT, $3\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. E. by N.) from West Malling, containing, with Paddlesworth, 438 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, with that of Paddlesworth, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Rochester, rated in the king's books at £20, and in the patronage of the Bishop of Rochester. The church is dedicated to All Saints. On a stream tributary to the Medway there is a paper-mill. John May, Esq., in 1800, founded a school for the instruction of forty children, and vested the government of it in the magistrates for the lathe.

SNOREHAM, a parish in the hundred of DENGIE, county of ESSEX, 5 miles (S. S. E.) from Maldon. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Essex, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £3, and in the patronage of Col. Strutt. The church, which was dedicated to St. Peter, is in ruins. Snoreham is rated with the parish of Latchingdon.

SNORING (GREAT), a parish in the northern division of the hundred of GREENHOE, county of NORFOLK, $1\frac{3}{4}$ mile (S. S. E.) from Little Walsingham, containing 360 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, with that of Thursford annexed, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £24, and in the patronage of the Master and Fellows of St. John's College, Cambridge. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

SNORING (LITTLE), a parish in the hundred of GALLOW, county of NORFOLK, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. E. by E.) from Fakenham, containing 271 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, annexed to the vicarage of East Barsham, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £12, and in the patronage of Sir J. D. Astley, Bart.

SNOWSHILL, a parish in the lower division of the hundred of KIFTGATE, county of GLOUCESTER, 6 miles (N. E.) from Winchcombe, containing 301 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the rectory of Stanton, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Gloucester.

SNYDALE, a parish in the hundred of NORMANTON, lower division of the wapentake of AGRIGG, West riding of the county of YORK, 4 miles (W. by S.) from Pontefract, containing 119 inhabitants.

SOBERTON, a parish in the hundred of MEON-STOKE, Portsdown division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, $3\frac{3}{4}$ miles (E. by S.) from Bishop's Waltham, containing 882 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the rectory of Meon-Stoke, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Incumbent of that parish. The church is principally in the early style of English architecture. Soberton is within the jurisdiction of the Cheyney Court held at Winchester every Thursday, for the recovery of debts to any amount.

SOCKBRIDGE, a township in the parish of BARTON, WEST ward, county of WESTMORLAND, 3 miles (S. S. W.) from Penrith, containing 190 inhabitants. It is situated on the south bank of the river Eamont, and abounds with limestone. The ancient hall, a quadrangular building, with a tower, has been converted into a farm-house.

SOCKBURN, a parish partly in the south-western division of STOCKTON ward, county palatine of DURHAM, but chiefly in the wapentake of ALLERTONSHIRE, North riding of the county of YORK, 7 miles (S. E.) from Darlington, containing, with the townships of Over-Dinsdale and Girsby, 194 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Durham, rated in the king's books at £3. 18. 1½., endowed with £400 royal bounty, and £400 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Master and Brethren of Sherburn Hospital. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is principally in the early English style, and contains some ancient monuments, one of which is that of the valorous Sir John Conyers, representing him with his feet resting upon a lion, that appears to be contending with a winged dragon. In an adjoining field is the Grey Stone, where, according to legendary story, the dauntless knight slew the "monstrous venomous and poysonous wyveron, ask, or worm, which overthrew and devoured many people in fight." In reference to this is the curious tenure of the manor of Sockburn, for an account of which, see NEASHAM. The river Tees runs through the parish.

SODBURY (CHIPPING), a market town and parish in the lower division of the hundred of GRUMBALD'S ASH, county of GLOUCESTER, 28 miles (S. S. W.) from Gloucester, and 113 (W. by S.) from London, containing 1059 inhabitants. This town, which existed in the twelfth century, and was endowed by King Stephen with the same privileges as Bristol, is a great thoroughfare on the road from Bristol to Cirencester, at the foot of a hill near the source of the Little Avon. It is said to be one of the greatest marts for the sale of cheese in England, and many of the inhabitants are engaged in the malt trade, and the carriage of lime and coal. The market is on Thursday; and fairs are held May 23rd and June 24th for cattle, cheese, and pedlary, on the Friday before Lady-day and Michaelmas-day, both statute fairs. The town was governed by a bailiff until 1681, when the inhabitants were incorporated by charter of Charles II., which ordained that the municipal body should consist of a mayor, six aldermen, and twelve burgesses; but this grant was annulled by proclamation of James II., in 1688, at the request of the inhabitants: constables are now elected annually at the court leet of the lord of the manor. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the vicarage of Old Sodbury, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Gloucester, endowed with £1000 royal bounty. The church, a large edifice, is dedicated to St. John the Baptist. There are places of worship for Baptists and the Society of Friends. A free grammar school is endowed with £20 per annum from the funds of the town and church lands, for which the master, who has also a good residence rent-free, instructs twenty boys.

SODBURY (LITTLE), a parish in the lower division of the hundred of GRUMBALD'S ASH, county of GLOUCESTER, 2½ miles (E. N. E.) from Chipping-Sodbury, containing 107 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Gloucester, rated in the king's books at £6. 10. 10. The Rev. W. H. H. Hartley was patron in 1822. The church is dedicated to St. Adeline. On the brow of a hill, in this parish, are traces of an ancient camp, probably of Roman origin. A slight skirmish took place in its vicinity previously to the fatal battle of Tewkesbury, between the forces of Queen Margaret and the advanced guard of Edward IV., when several of the latter were taken prisoners.

SODBURY (OLD), a parish in the lower division of the hundred of GRUMBALD'S ASH, county of GLOUCESTER, 1½ mile (E.) from Chipping-Sodbury, containing 803 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, with the perpetual curacy of Chipping-Sodbury annexed, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Gloucester, rated in the king's books at £14. 8. 1½., and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Worcester. The church is dedicated to St. John the Baptist.

SOFTLEY, a joint township with Lynesack, in that part of the parish of ST. ANDREW AUCKLAND which is in the north-western division of DARLINGTON ward, county palatine of DURHAM, 8 miles (S. S. E.) from Walsingham. The population is returned with Lynesack. This township, which is commonly called South Side, is bounded on the south by the river Gaunless, and contains several coal-works.

SOHAM, a market town and parish in the hundred of STAPLOE, county of CAMBRIDGE, 5½ miles (S. E.) from Ely, and 69 (N. N. E.) from London, containing 2856 inhabitants. This was a place of some note at a very early period. About 630, St. Felix, first Bishop of the East Angles, is said to have founded a monastery here, which he made the seat of his diocese, prior to the removal of the see to Dunwich, and where his remains were interred, they were afterwards taken up and conveyed to Romney abbey, when the cathedral church was erected by Luttingus, a Saxon nobleman. This building, as well as the bishop's palace, was destroyed by fire, and the monks, who at that time were a flourishing society, were killed by the Danish army under the command of Inguar and Ubba, in 870. Before the draining of the fens, here was a large lake, or mere, over which was anciently a dangerous passage by water to Ely, but it was subsequently rendered more safe by the construction of a causeway through the marshes, at the expense of Hervey, Bishop of Ely. The town is situated on the east bank of the river Cam, on the verge of the county; the streets are irregularly built, and the houses of mean appearance. Horticulture is carried on to a considerable extent, especially in the article of asparagus; the dairies are abundant, and cheese of a most excellent quality, and very similar to that of Stilton, is made here. A market, formerly held on Thursday, has been disused for more than a century: the present market is on Saturday: fairs are held on May 9th, for horses, cattle, and pedlary; and on the Monday before Midsummer, which is a pleasure fair; another, formerly held three days before Michaelmas, has been discontinued.

The living is a vicarage, with the chapel of Barroway, in the archdeaconry of Sudbury, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £32. 16. 5½., and in the patronage of the Master and Fellows of Pembroke Hall, Cambridge. The church, which is dedicated to St. Andrew, is a venerable cruciform structure, with a lofty square embattled tower, visible at a great distance; in the interior are several monuments. There are places of worship for Baptists, Independents, Wesleyan Methodists, and Unitarians. The free school is endowed with the profits of an estate of moor land allotted for that purpose on the division of the commons, in 1685: the master's salary is about £50 per annum; poor children are apprenticed from the same fund. Three almshouses were founded for poor widows, in 1502, by Richard Bond; and nine others, in 1581, by Thomas Peachey, but neither has any endowment, excepting an allowance for fuel. Some few vestiges of the ancient palace and cathedral church are yet visible, and several human bones were dug up at the east end of the street, near the church, a few years ago.

SOHAM (EARL), a parish in the hundred of LOES, county of SUFFOLK, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W.) from Framlingham, containing 641 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Suffolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £10, and in the patronage of the Rev. J. H. Groome. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. There is a place of worship for Baptists. A fair is held on August 4th, for lambs.

SOHAM (MONK), a parish in the hundred of HOXNE, county of SUFFOLK, 6 miles (W. by N.) from Framlingham, containing 388 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Suffolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £19. 5. $2\frac{1}{2}$, and in the patronage of the Rev. J. H. Groome. The church is dedicated to St. Peter.

SOHO, a hamlet in the parish of HANDSWORTH, southern division of the hundred of OFFLOW, county of STAFFORD, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N.W.) from Birmingham, which see.

SOKEHOLME, a township in the parish of WAR-SOP, Hatfield division of the wapentake of BASSETT-LAW, county of NOTTINGHAM, 4 miles (N. by E.) from Mansfield, containing 69 inhabitants.

SOLIHULL, a market town and parish in the Solihull division of the hundred of HEMLINGFORD, county of WARWICK, 13 miles (N. W.) from Warwick, and 105 (N.W.) from London, containing 2817 inhabitants. This town is situated on the road from Warwick to Birmingham, and consists principally of one street, with another branching off from the high road to the market-place: the houses in general are modern and well built, and many of them large and handsome; the inhabitants are well supplied with water from the river Blythe, which flows through the eastern extremity of the town, and from springs: the air is salubrious, and the surrounding scenery of a pleasing character. The Warwick and Birmingham, and the Stratford on Avon, canals pass through the parish. The market is on Wednesday; and fairs are held on April 29th, for cattle and horses; Sep. 11th for horses and the hiring of servants; and Oct. 12th, for cattle. A court leet, at which a constable is appointed, is held occasionally in the town hall, a neat modern brick building, beneath which is the market-place, and in the upper part assemblies sometimes take place. Petty sessions are also held every alternate Wednesday. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Coventry, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, rated in the king's books at £24. 18. 4., and in the patronage of E. B. Clive, Esq. The church, which is dedicated to St. Alphege, is a large cruciform structure, partly in the later and partly in the decorated style of English architecture, with an embattled tower and octagonal spire rising from the intersection: the tracery, mouldings, and corbels, in the interior are extremely elegant, and there are some fine specimens of tabernacle and screen-work; near the west entrance is an ancient stone font of octagonal form, and having round Norman pillars at the angles: in the chancel and transepts are several piscinæ in trefoil niches, with triangular canopies: the vestry-room was formerly a chapel dedicated to St. Thomas à Becket. In 1757, the spire fell on the north transept, and broke the roof and some monuments; it was afterwards rebuilt. There are places of worship for Independents and Roman Catholics. Sundry donations prior to 1697 were directed by the court of Chancery to be applied, under the management of fifteen trustees, among other purposes, to the instruction of poor children of this parish; the annual income is upwards of £317, of which sum, the headmaster, who must be a graduate of one of the Universities, receives £100 for teaching the classics, and an under-master £65, for conducting the English department: the number of scholars is from fifty to sixty, all of whom must be sons of parishioners. Shenstone, the poet, was educated here. Fifteen poor girls are instructed by a schoolmistress for £8 per annum, arising from the united bequest of Mrs. Martha Palmer and Mrs. Fisher, in 1746. A Benedictine nunnery, in honour of St. Margaret, was founded at Hean-wood, in this parish, in the time of Henry II., by Ketelburn de Langdon, the revenue of which was valued at the dissolution at £21. 2.

SOLPORT, a township in the parish of STAPLETON, ESKDALE ward, county of CUMBERLAND, containing 360 inhabitants.

SOMBOURN (KING'S), a parish in the hundred of KING'S SOMBOURN, Andover division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 3 miles (S.) from Stockbridge, containing 991 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, with the perpetual curacies of Little Sombourn and Stockbridge annexed, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Winchester, rated in the king's books at £21. 1. $10\frac{1}{2}$, and in the patronage of Sir Charles Mill, Bart. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is an ancient structure, containing, in a recess enriched with the trefoil ornament, the effigy of an ecclesiastic in robes. There was formerly a chapel of ease at Compton, but it has long since gone to decay. The Andover canal passes through the parish, and is crossed by Horse bridge, at a place so called, on the line of the old Roman road from Winchester to Old Sarum. Courts leet and baron are annually held here, the former on the Thursday in Easter week, at which two constables, tythingmen, and other officers for the hundred are appointed. Considerable quantities of chalk are sent hence to Redbridge, for the improvement of the strong clay soil in the New Forest. The spinning of silk for the Winchester manufacturers affords employment to about fifty women and children of the village. A Sunday school is attended by about two hundred boys and girls. This place, before the Conquest, was held in royal demesne, and now forms part of the duchy of Lancaster. John of Gaunt had a palace here, of which there are still some slight remains, and what is supposed were the stables, &c., have been converted into a farm-house. The ancient gardens and pleasure grounds may still be traced, as well as the park, the fish-ponds, and an extensive bowling-green, encompassed by an earthwork about three feet high. On a commanding eminence, three miles to the northward of the church, are the remains of a Roman, or Danish, fortification, called the Ring, with a deep intrenchment enclosing an area of about twenty-one acres; and on the adjoining down are some of smaller dimensions, apparently subordinate to the former, but within the parish of Stockbridge.

SOMBOURN (LITTLE), a parish in the hundred of KING'S SOMBOURN, Andover division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 2 miles (S. E.) from Stockbridge, containing 59 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the vicarage of King's Sombourn, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Winchester. The church is dedicated to All Saints.

SOMERBY, a parish forming, with the parishes of Cold Overton and Withcote, a detached portion of the hundred of FRAMLAND, county of LEICESTER, 6 miles (S. by E.) from Melton-Mowbray, containing 384 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Leicester, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £6. 16. 8. W. Hanbury, Esq. was patron in 1814. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is an ancient structure, with a tower and spire rising from the centre. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

SOMERBY, a chapelry in the parish and wapentake of CORRINGTONHAM, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (E.) from Gainsborough. The population is returned with the parish.

SOMERBY, a parish in the wapentake of WINNIBRIGGS and THREO, parts of KESTIVEN, county of LINCOLN, 4 miles (S. E. by E.) from Grantham, containing, with the hamlet of Great Humby, 246 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £11. 12. $3\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of Lord Gwydir. The church is dedicated to St. Mary Magdalene.

SOMERBY, a parish in the southern division of the wapentake of YARBOROUGH, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E.) from Glandford-Bridge, containing 79 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £7. 7. 6. Robert Burton, Esq. was patron in 1816. The church is dedicated to St. Margaret.

SOMERCOATES (NORTH), a parish in the Marsh division of the hundred of LOUTH-ESKE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $8\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. E.) from Louth, containing 684 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £9. 18. 4., and in the patronage of the King, as Duke of Lancaster. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

SOMERCOATES (SOUTH), a parish in the Marsh division of the hundred of LOUTH-ESKE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $7\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. E. by E.) from Louth, containing 301 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £22. 6. 3., and in the patronage of the King, as Duke of Lancaster. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

SOMERFORD (GREAT), a parish in the hundred of MALMESBURY, county of WILTS, 4 miles (S. E. by S.) from Malmesbury, containing 481 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Wilts, and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £12. 14. 7., and in the patronage of the Rector and Fellows of Exeter College, Oxford. The church is dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul.

SOMERFORD (LITTLE), a parish in the hundred of MALMESBURY, county of WILTS, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E.) from Malmesbury, containing 330 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Wilts, and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £8. 7. 1., and in the patronage of the Earl of Ilchester. The church is dedicated to St. John the Baptist.

SOMERFORD-BOOTHES, a township in that part of the parish of ASTBURY which is in the hundred of MACCLESFIELD, county palatine of CHESTER, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. W. by N.) from Congleton, containing 285 inhabitants.

SOMERFORD-KEYNES, a parish in the hundred of HIGHWORTH, CRICKLADE, and STAPLE, county of WILTS, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W.) from Cricklade, containing 324 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Wilts, and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £8. G. J. Foyle, Esq. was patron in 1803. The church is dedicated to All Saints.

SOMERLEYTON, a parish in the hundred of MUTFORD and LOTHINGLAND, county of SUFFOLK, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by W.) from Lowestoft, containing 349 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Suffolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £12. The Rev. G. Anguish was patron in 1817. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

SOMERSALL-HERBERT, a parish in the hundred of APPLETREE, county of DERBY, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by N.) from Uttoxeter, containing 104 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Derby, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, rated in the king's books at £4. 18. 10., and in the patronage of the Earl of Chesterfield. The church is dedicated to St. Peter.

SOMERSBY, a parish in the hundred of HILL, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 7 miles (N. W.) from Spilsby, containing 95 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £4. 16. $5\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of Lady Willoughby D' Eresby. The church is dedicated to St. Margaret.

SOMERSETSHIRE, a maritime county, bounded on the north-west by the Bristol channel, on the south-west by Devonshire, on the south-east by Dorsetshire, on the east by Wiltshire, and on the north-east by Gloucestershire. It extends from $50^{\circ} 48'$ to $51^{\circ} 27'$ (N. Lat.), and from $2^{\circ} 35'$ to $4^{\circ} 5'$ (W. Lon.); and comprises an area of one thousand six hundred and forty-two square English miles, or one million fifty thousand eight hundred and eighty statute acres. The population, in 1821, was 355,314. At the period of the Roman Conquest, the district now forming the county of Somerset was part of the territory of the Belgæ, a people of Celtic origin, who had migrated hither out of Gaul, about three centuries before the commencement of the Christian era. Between the native Britons and this tribe continued hostilities existed, in consequence of the efforts of the former to regain possession of the territory which had been taken from them. About two hundred and fifty years after the first settlement of the Belgæ, Divitiacus, King of the Suessones, brought over to them from the continent a considerable army of their fellow-countrymen, and a treaty was concluded between the contending nations, in which a line of demarcation between the territories of each was agreed upon: this line consisted of a large and deep fosse defended by a rampart, called Wansdike, parts of which may still be traced: commencing at Andover, in Hampshire, it traverses the county of Wilts, and, on approaching Somersetshire, crosses the Avon near Binacre, and again at Bathampton, whence it continues over Claverton down to Prior Park, English-Combe, Stanton-Prior, Publow, Norton, and Long Ashton, and terminates on the shores of the Bristol Channel at Portishead, being eighty miles in length. Thus nearly the whole of Somersetshire was included in the territory of the Belgæ; and of the three chief cities of that people, two, Bath and Ilchester, were situated within its limits. In the Roman division of the kingdom it was included in Britannia Prima. On the abandonment of Britain by that people, Somersetshire soon became the scene of sanguinary contention between the Saxons and the Britons, who were compelled gradually to retire into the fastnesses of Wales. In the year 493, a large body of Saxons, under the command of Ælla and his three sons, encamped on Lansdown, and laid siege to Bath; but that city was relieved by the renowned King Arthur, who attacked and, after a sanguinary conflict, defeated the Saxon leader. About 520, Arthur again delivered Bath from the assaults of these invaders, led by three lieutenants of the Saxon chief, Cerdic, and repulsed them with great slaughter. In 577, however, the Saxon leaders Ceawlin and Cuthwin, the former of whom was monarch of the newly-founded kingdom of Wessex, led their forces towards the north-eastern part of the county, and advanced to Deorham, a village about eight miles from Bath, in the county of Gloucester, where they defeated three British kings, and added to their conquests the three royal cities of Bath, Gloucester, and Cirencester. In 658, a battle was fought at Pen between a party of Danes and some Saxon forces. In the year 775, Offa, King of Mercia, wrested the city of Bath from the sovereignty of Wessex, and restored much of its ancient splendour. In 845, a great battle was fought at Stoke-Courcy between the Saxons under the conduct of Elstan, Bishop of Sherborne, and an army of Danish marauders, in which the latter were totally defeated. In the early part of the reign of Alfred the Great, the Danes, who had previously desolated almost every other part of England, extended their ravages to this county. In 873 they destroyed Glastonbury, and in 877 Somerton shared the same fate. The king himself, having recourse to flight and concealment, took refuge for some time in the cottage of a neatherd, situated on a spot of ground, a few acres in extent, surrounded by water, and almost impassable marshes, at the confluence of the rivers Parret and Tone, in this county. Here, when the pursuit and search of his enemies had abated, he collected a few faithful adherents, built a habitation, and constructed a long bridge, one end of which was fortified, so as to prevent all hostile approach. From this strong hold, called in Saxon Etheling-ege, or the Isle of the Nobles, and now written Athelney, he made frequent and sudden excursions, harassing the Danes, and maintaining himself and his followers by the booty that he acquired. His successes continuing, the number of his followers increased; and the news of his preservation, and his being in arms, having been spread among the Saxons, a day was appointed for a general rising against the Danes. The place of rendezvous was at a spot called Egbert's Stone, on the eastern side of the Forest of Selwood, in the vicinity of Frome, where the Saxons accordingly assembled in great numbers, and whence their monarch led them to the great victory of Ethandune, in Wiltshire. After the total subjection of these Pagan warriors, Alfred brought their leader, Guthrum, to his court at Aller, on the banks of the Parret, in this county, where he received the rite of baptism. In gratitude for his complete successes, Alfred founded a monastery in the isle of Athelney, to the honour of our Saviour and St. Peter the Apostle. In 918, Somersetshire was again visited by the Danes, a band of whom landed at Porlock; but being attacked with bravery by the inhabitants, the greater part of them were killed, and the remainder compelled to embark: another body landed at Watchet, and there met with a similar reception. This latter town, however, was plundered by them in 987; and again in 997, when they burned it and slaughtered the inhabitants. In 1001, a battle was fought between the Danes and the Saxons at Pen, where also, in 1016, occurred a similar conflict, the Saxons being commanded by Edmund Ironside. In 1052, in the time of Edward the Confessor, Harold, afterwards king of England, landed at Porlock from Ireland, on his return from banishment, with a large body of troops which he had there collected; and having formed an intrenched camp in the vicinity of that town, which he garrisoned, he marched into the interior with the remainder of his troops, spreading desolation on every side: at last, returning to his ships loaded with booty, he set sail, after having fired the town of Porlock and the adjacent woods. In the reign of William Rufus, during the insurrection headed by Odo, Bishop of Baieux, and other Norman barons, in favour of Robert, Duke of Normandy, the city of Bath was plundered and burned by the insurgents, who, however, received a check before the walls of Taunton. No event peculiarly affecting this county occurs on record from this period until the year 1607, when some of the low marshy tracts, for an extent of twenty miles in length, and about four in breadth, were overflowed by an irruption of the sea, and eighty persons drowned.

In the great struggle between Charles I. and the parliament, Somersetshire, owing to the strength of the royal party in the south-west of England, was a scene of active warfare. The first hostile encounter was a skirmish which occurred at Martial's Elm, in 1642. In 1643, on July 5th, was fought the obstinately contested battle of Lansdown, between a portion of the parliamentary army under the command of Sir William Waller, and the king's forces under the Marquis of Hertford and Prince Maurice, after which the former retired into Bath. In 1644, Lieut. F. Doddington and Sir W. Courtney, with some royalist troops, engaged with Lieutenant-General Middleton and his forces, a few miles from Bridg-water, where the latter were defeated, with the loss of eighty men killed, and one hundred and forty taken prisoners. In October, the loyal inhabitants of this county petitioned the king for liberty to arm themselves in his cause, which was granted; and in the same year occurred an action at Aller, a few miles to the north-west of Langport, between some royal and some parliamentary forces, commonly called the battle of Aller-Moor. At Wiveliscombe, on February 9th, 1645,

P

Col. Lutterell, the parliamentary sheriff of Devonshire, with twenty men, was shot dead by the royalists; and on the same day, Major Stephens, having advanced from Taunton to drive Sir Francis Mackworth from his quarters at Langport, was received so warmly by the latter, that very few of his party escaped: the Major and all the chief officers were made prisoners and sent to Bristol. On March 20th of the same year, a party of the parliamentary forces from Taunton having fixed their quarters at Wiveliscombe, were defeated in a skirmish, which took place in a field near Nettlecombe, by Col. Windham, the royalist commander of Dunster castle, with a small body of horse. At Langport, on July 12th, a party of the king's forces, under Lord Goring, were defeated by the parliamentarians: Nunney castle was afterwards burned by the latter. In 1646, the siege of Dunster castle, which had been some time commenced by the parliamentarians, was suddenly raised by the royalists, Lord Wentworth, Sir Richard Grenville, and Col. Webbe, who routed the besiegers, many of whom were slain, and one thousand taken prisoners.

Somersetshire was the principal theatre of the rebellion in favour of the Duke of Monmouth, in 1685. That ill-advised nobleman having landed at Lyme-Regis in Dorsetshire, with scarcely a hundred followers, and published his audacious manifesto, he was immediately joined by great numbers, chiefly of the lower orders, inasmuch that, in four days, he found himself at the head of two thousand horse and foot. Advancing by Axminster towards Taunton, in this county, he received considerable reinforcements, and on his arrival was welcomed by the people of the latter town with every demonstration of joy. There he assumed the title of king, and asserted the legitimacy of his birth: his forces were now augmented to six thousand, and many others who flocked to join him were dismissed for want of arms. From Taunton he proceeded to Bridg-water, Wells, and Frome, and was proclaimed king at all. He then returned to Bridg-water, where being cordially received, he resolved to fortify himself, and maintain his position until he should receive further news from London. The rapid approach of the king's forces, however, caused him to alter his plan: on Saturday, July 4th, intelligence was brought that the king's troops were encamped at Sedgemoor, within a mile and a half of his own army. On the following day he reconnoitred them, in company with Lord Grey and other officers, and considering their position extremely injudicious, he called a council of war, in which it was determined to surprise the enemy in the middle of the following night. The ill conduct and consequent failure of this attack, and the unsparing slaughter of the duke's misguided followers in the rout that followed it, are well known. In the punishment subsequently inflicted upon the favourers of this enterprise, the people of Somersetshire were marked as principal victims, the military executions of Kirk, although not so numerous, exceeding in violence and barbarity the judicial cruelties of Judge Jeffreys. In 1688, the Prince of Orange, shortly after his landing at Torbay, attacked a party of the royal guards at Wincanton, and put many of them to the sword: this event is remarkable as being the first and almost only instance in which blood was spilt during the progress of that glorious revolution.

This county is co-extensive with the diocese of Bath and Wells, in the province of Canterbury, and is divided into the archdeaconries of Bath, Wells, and Taunton, the first having no archidiaconal court, and in the two latter the bishop exercising jurisdiction concurrently with the archdeacons; the first of which contains the two deaneries of Bath, and Redcliffe with Bedminster; the second those of Axbridge, Cary, Frome, Ilchester, Marston, and Pawlett, and the jurisdiction of Glastonbury; and the last those of Bridg-water, Crewkerne, Dunster, and Taunton: the total number of parishes is four hundred and sixty-nine, of which two hundred and forty-one are rectories, one hundred and thirty-eight vicarages, and the remainder perpetual curacies. For purposes of civil government it is divided into the hundreds of Abdick and Bulstone, Andersfield, Bath-Forum, Bempstone, Brent with Wrington, Bruton, Cannington, Carhampton, Catsash, Chew, Chewton, Crewkerne, North Curry, Frome, Glaston-Twelve-Hides, Hampton and Claverton, Hartcliffe with Bedminster, Horethorne, Houndsborough, Berwick and Coker, Huntspill and Puriton, Keynsham, Kilmersdon, Kingsbury (East and West), Martock, Mells and Leigh, Milverton, Norton-Ferris, Petherton (North and South), Pitney, Portbury, Somerton, Stone, Taunton and Taunton-Dean, Tintinhull, Wellow, Wells-Forum, Whitestone, Whitley, Williton and Freemanners, and Winterstoke. It contains the cities of Bath and Wells; the borough, market, and sea-port towns of Bridg-water and Minehead; the borough and market town of Taunton; the borough towns of Ilchester and Milborne Port; the market and sea-port town of Watchet; the small sea-port town of Porlock; and the market towns of Axbridge, Bruton, Chard, Crewkerne, Dulverton, Dunster, Frome-Selwood, Glastonbury, Ilminster, Langport-Eastover, Milverton, Shepton-Mallet, Somerton, Wellington, Wincanton, Wiveliscombe, and Yeovil. Two knights are returned for the shire; two representatives for each of the cities; and two for each of the boroughs: the county members are elected at Ilchester. Somersetshire is included in the western circuit: the Lent assizes are held at Taunton; the summer assizes at Bridg-water and Wells, alternately. The quarter sessions are held on January 11th and April 19th at Wells, on July 12th at Bridg-water, and on October 18th at Taunton. There are one hundred and thirty acting magistrates. The rates raised in the county for the year ending March 25th, 1827, amounted to £189,692. 5.; the expenditure to £186,809. 13.; of which £163,225. 4. was applied to the relief of the poor.

To describe the variety of surface with some degree of perspicuity, it is necessary to consider it as divided into three districts: the first comprehends the north-eastern portion of the county, included between the harbours of Uphill and King-road, on the west, and the towns of Bath and Frome on the east: the next and central division, which is much the largest, comprising the entire middle part of the county, from the borders of Wiltshire and Dorsetshire to the Bristol channel, is bounded on the north-east by the Mendip hills, and on the south-west by the Quantock hills and the forest of Neroche: the third forms the remaining western part of the county. The general surface of the north-eastern district is finely varied by lofty hills, which command magnificent views over the fertile plains that lie beneath them.

The western part of it, however, including the hundreds of Winterstoke and Portbury, consists of low moorlands, as they are called, which are subject to frequent inundation, sometimes for several successive months; but the herbage produced on them, when cleared from stagnant water, is remarkably luxuriant. In the parishes of Congresbury, Yatton, Banwell, Winscombe, Churchill, and Puxton, there are not less than three thousand acres, which, for the most part, discharge their waters into the small river Yeo, and are under the inspection of commissioners of sewers: at spring-tides the waters of the river rise five feet above the level of the adjacent lands. To the northward of these parishes lie nearly four thousand acres, in the parishes of Kenn, Kingston-Seymour, Clevedon, Nailsea, and Chelvey, alike subject to inundation, being secured from the sea by a wall of stone, elevated about ten feet above the level of the lands within: this wall is sometimes overflowed by high tides, and when strong westerly winds prevail at the equinoxes, it is frequently broken down by the impetuosity of the waves, so that many hundred acres are laid under water. This tract discharges its waters by two rivers, called the Little Yeos, at the mouths of which are sluices: it is also subject to frequent land-floods. South-westward of these parishes lie six others, liable to the same circumstance, and discharging their waters by a sluice at Uphill. Northward of these is Leigh down, a tract of elevated land of nearly three thousand acres, extending from Clevedon to the Hot Wells, near Bristol; south-eastward of which is a vale of rich grass land, extending from Bedminster, on the north-east, in a south-westerly direction, to the low districts just mentioned. The extensive mountainous range, called the Mendip hills, stretches from Cottle's Oak, near the town of Frome, on the eastern side of the county, in a direction nearly west-north-west, immediately northward of Wells and Axbridge, to a place called Black Rock, on the Bristol channel, near Uphill, a distance of more than thirty miles. In the middle division, on the borders of Wilts and Dorset, the lands are high, and chiefly occupied either as sheep-walks, or in the production of corn. The country around Shepton, Bruton, Castle-Cary, Ilchester, Somerton, Langport, Petherton, and Ilminster, is exceedingly productive, both in corn and pasture, and abounds with good orchards and fine luxuriant meadows: westward of this extensive tract rise the Polden and Ham hills, with a bold aspect. A distinguishing feature in this division is its marshes, or fen lands, which are divided into two districts, called Brent marsh, and the Bridg-water, or South marsh. By far the greater part of Brent marsh, about twenty thousand acres, has been drained and converted into fine grazing and dairy lands: there yet remain considerable tracts of turf bog, upon which much improvement remains to be effected. The river Brue drains the greater portion of this marsh, and has a barrier against the tide, with sluices at Highbridge. The two principal bogs of this district, comprising several thousand acres, situated one on each side of this river, a little to the westward of Glastonbury, are five or six feet higher than the adjacent lands, and consist of a mass of porous earth, saturated with, and floating in, water: some parts of the drained lands are occasionally subject to land-floods. The Ax has no barrier against the tide; and the waters, both of this river and of the Brue, are much obstructed in their progress towards the sea by accumulations of mud. The divisions of property are here marked by ditches eight feet wide at the top, three feet and a half at the bottom, and five feet deep, which discharge their waters into the rivers: sluices are occasionally formed on them in time of drought, to keep back the water for the use of the cattle. The South marsh is bounded on the north-east by the Polden hill, which extends chiefly between Bridg-water and Glastonbury; on the south-east by Ham hill and others; on the south-west by the river Parret; and on the north-west by Bridg-water bay. That part of it lying nearest the sea has a surface more elevated than the interior, owing to the great deposit of mud by the tides, in the course of successive ages: the same observation is also applicable to Brent marsh. The river Parret is the principal drain of this marsh; but it has no barrier against the tides, the consequence being that in rainy seasons many thousand acres are laid under water for a considerable time, rendering the herbage unwholesome, and the air unhealthy. These tracts having, in former times, been constantly subject to occasional inundations from the sea, it was found necessary to establish a Commission of Sewers, the members of which should examine and inspect the sea-banks, ditches, gutters, and sewers, and order the requisite cleansings and repairs: the first commission of this kind upon record was in 1304; and the like offices are continued to the present day. Part of this marsh, which has been more recently drained (about the end of the last century), is called King's Sedgmoor, and contains nearly fourteen thousand acres. There are other tracts similar to this, on the borders of the rivers Tone and Parret, nearly all of which were, in like manner, and about the same period, drained and improved; viz., Normoor, near North Petherton; Stanmoor, Currymoor, West Sedgmoor, &c., near North Curry; West-moor, near Kingsbury; and Wet-moor, near Muchelney; amounting in the whole to about ten thousand acres, independently of many other low enclosed tracts, which are liable to occasional inundation.

The south-western division of the county has nearly an equal proportion of lofty hills and fertile slopes and vales. In the vale of Taunton-Dean, which comprises thirty parishes, and the market towns of Taunton, Wellington, and Milverton, the prospect is agreeably relieved by a mixture of arable and pasture ground; but to the north-west are wild and mountainous tracts. The Quantock hills, extending nearly the whole of the distance between the town of Taunton and the sea; the Brandon hills, to the westward of these; and others in this part of the county, are noted for their wild and picturesque scenery. The highest point of the Quantock hills is one thousand two hundred and seventy feet above the level of the sea; and these heights command views, not only of the fertile country immediately around them, but also of the Welch coast: the elevation called Dundry-beacon, situated near the sea, is the highest point of land, being, according to the Ordnance survey, one thousand six hundred and sixty-eight feet above the level of the sea. Thus we find the surface of Somersetshire varied by lofty hills and fertile plains: it is also adorned by numerous noble woods. Some of the most remarkable heights, besides those before-mentioned, commanding very rich and extensive views, are, Broadfield down, between Bristol and Wrington; Dundry hill, near Bristol; Lansdown, near Bath; White-down, to the eastward of Chard; Black-down, to the south-westward of the same town; and on the confines of Devon, the hills of Hamden, Montacute, St. Michael's, and Brent-Knoll; the Tor, near Glastonbury; Bratton, near Minehead; Snowden, near Chard; Ash-Beacon; Bradley-Knoll; Dundon hill; Halston Round hill; Moorlinch; and North hill: fine views are also obtained from Enmore castle, which commands the Mendip hills; Hinton St. George; and the vicinity of Taunton. The mountainous parts of the county have a smooth, undulating, and rounded outline, seldom presenting cliffs, or precipitous faces, except on the sea-shore. The extensive line of sea-coast is very irregular; in some places projecting in lofty and rocky promontories, and in others receding into fine bays, with low and level shores. From Stert-point, at the mouth of the Parret, northward, the shore is for a considerable distance entirely flat, and composed of vast sand-banks, repelling the waters of the ocean, which anciently spread over these shoals, and covered the extensive district now called Brent Marsh. The general direction of the Somersetshire coast, from the western extremity until near the mouth of the Parret, is from west to east; here, however, commence the shores of the marshes of the middle district, which, extending in a direction nearly from north to south, form, with the last-mentioned, the bay of Bridg-water, so called from the sea-port of that name, situated some miles up the river Parret. This bay is terminated on the north by the promontory formed by Breane down; beyond this are two smaller bays and promontories, between which and the mouth of the Avon the coast runs nearly in a north-easterly direction.

In such an extent and diversity of surface the climate varies considerably. Near the sea-coast the winters are never severe; and from Minehead and Dulverton, on the west, to Milborne-Port and Wincanton, on the east, the climate is mild and temperate, the Quantock, Branden, and Dundry hills alone excepted. Proceeding northward and ascending Poulden hill, it changes, and becomes colder and more stormy; and still further northward, on the Mendip hills, the cold increases, and the air in winter is moist, and the weather boisterous, the whole country being sometimes enveloped in dense fogs: in summer, however, the air on these hills is clear, salubrious, and invigorating; and it also frequently happens that spring crops in the vales are destroyed by frosts in April or May, while those on the hills remain uninjured. In the beautiful and extensive vale of Taunton-Dean, in the western part of the county, the climate is peculiarly mild and serene; but the north-western and mountainous parts of this division are subject to great mutability in the state and temperature of the atmosphere. In consequence of the contiguity of the Bristol channel, which fills the air with watery vapours, unfavourable to the ripening of corn, considerable tracts of hilly country, which would otherwise be employed in the production of grain, are kept under grass: still, even in the more elevated tracts, there is a very large portion of arable land. The seed-time and harvest in the mountainous districts are nearly a month later than in the vales; excepting only as regards the seeds that are commonly sown in the Autumn, which, in the first-mentioned tracts, on account of the greater degree of cold, are put in the ground a fortnight earlier than is generally done elsewhere.

For its general fertility Somersetshire is particularly eminent; and the variety of soil is so great, that almost every species may be found within its limits. That of the moor-lands of the north-eastern division is, for the most part, a deep and rich mixture of clay and sand, a marine deposit. Leigh down has a thin gravelly soil, lying immediately upon limestone, and frequently not more than three inches from the surface, being therefore unfavourable for tillage: that of Broadfield down, a few miles further south, is of the same nature. The soil of the Mendip hills is for the most part deep and loamy; but tracts of an inferior quality, light, spongy, and black, occasionally intervene; and the loam is sometimes intermingled with pieces of stone, and with gravel, clay, or other substances that alter its quality in different degrees. The soil of the Polden and Ham hills is of an inferior quality and a very thin staple. That of the marshes, or moors, of the middle district is generally very fertile, and consists of four kinds, viz., strong, dry, and fertile clay, of considerable depth, which is esteemed the most valuable; red earth, varying in depth from one foot to six feet, and covering the black moory earth; black moory earth, having a substratum of clay at various depths; and what is called turf-bog, which is of a light spongy texture, and so full of the fibrous roots of plants that it is with difficulty cut with a spade: under it is found a stratum of black earth, from one to two feet thick; and next occurs the peat, which is from three to fifteen feet in depth, full of flaggy leaves and the hollow stalks of rushes, together with bituminous matter: it is employed as the common fuel of the district. Southward of this extensive level is an elevated tract of great fertility, composed chiefly of sea-sand and shells, well adapted for tillage. The soil of the fruitful vale of Taunton-Dean is a rich loam, interspersed in some places with clay, and in others with sand, and that of some other parts of the western division is little inferior; but the hills and forests are for the most part left in a state of nature: the Quantock hills have various thin soils, covering a thin shaly rock, and sometimes limestone. The soil of White-down is very various; that of Black-down consists of a thin surface of black earth on a bed of sand and gravel. On the sea-coast, for some distance westward of the mouth of the river Parret, the remains of a forest are discoverable at low water, which is described in the Geological Transactions, Vol. III., p. 380.

In the north-eastern district the proportion of arable land is very small; in the middle division it is greater, but almost wholly on the south-eastern side, in the vicinities of Shepton-Mallet, Bruton, Castle-Cary, Wincanton, Millborne-Port, Yeovil, Ilchester, South Petherton, Crewkerne, Chard, and Ilminster; there is, however, some on the hills near the great marshes also: in the vale of Taunton, in the western part of the county, is much arable land, and on the northern side, approaching Watchet: the whole amounts to nearly three hundred thousand acres. The rotations of crops are various: those commonly cultivated are wheat, barley, oats, beans, and peas, the produce of which varies greatly. The wheat produced on the rising lands to the south of Bridg-water marsh is of very superior quality; and the best barley in the county is supposed to grow in the parishes of Chedzoy, Weston-Zoyland, Middlezoy, and Othery, in the same district: on the Mendip hills the favourite crop is oats, which are there produced in abundance and of good quality. In the north-eastern district turnips are seldom seen; but in the arable parts of the middle division they are cultivated to a great extent: vetches are sometimes grown. The most common artificial grass is the broad clover: sanfoin is much cultivated in the north-eastern districts, as also are ray-grass, marl-grass, and White Dutch clover: the marl-grass grows spontaneously on the marl ground, and bears a striking resemblance to red, or broad clover. Potatoes are very extensively cultivated in different districts, more especially on the fertile soils in the vicinity of Castle-Cary, where one hundred and sixty sacks per acre is a common produce. In the parishes of Wrington, Blagdon, Ubley, Compton-Martin, and Harptree, in the north-eastern district, teasel is extensively grown, chiefly on a strong rich clay; the produce is very uncertain. The head of this plant, which is composed of well-turned vegetable hooks, is used in dressing cloth; and the manufactures of Somersetshire and Wiltshire are for the most part supplied from these parishes: large quantities are also exported from Bristol to Yorkshire. Woad is also cultivated in this district, chiefly in the vicinity of Keynsham, the quality of which is much esteemed: three or four crops are commonly gathered in the season; the average produce per acre is about a ton and a half. In the rich tract extending from Wincanton, by Yeovil, to Crewkerne, a great deal of flax and hemp is grown. Turkey rhubarb is occasionally cultivated in small quantities. In some of the western parts of the county the common mode of getting in the corn is by carrying it on the backs of horses; a large wooden crook on each side of the saddle being laden with the sheaves: this is in consequence of the unevenness of the country, and the steepness of the hills: even manure is carried upon the land in a similar manner. The arable lands are not near sufficient to supply the consumption of grain, many thousand quarters being annually brought from the counties of Wilts and Dorset. The grass lands are of very great extent, occupying about six hundred thousand acres; and the plains are remarkable for their luxuriant herbage, furnishing a supply of produce much more than sufficient for consumption; London, Bristol, Salisbury, and other markets, receiving great quantities of fat oxen, sheep, and hogs, besides cider, cheese, butter, and different other articles from this county. Many of these tracts, when not chilled by an excess of moisture, bear an almost perpetual verdure. In the northern district, on the rich marsh land near the Bristol channel, the grazing system prevails; in the vicinity of Bristol and Bath, the meadows are almost universally mown, while in the parts more remote from those towns, dairying is almost the only object: to whatever purpose applied, these lands are respectively good and profitable. Nearly the whole of the rich marshes and low lands of the middle division are under grass, and applied partly to grazing and partly to dairying. In the western part of the county, in the parishes of Crowcombe, Stogumber, Monksilver, Nettlecombe, Dun-ter, Dulverton, &c., are some irrigated meadows of excellent quality, the greater part lying on steep declivities. Lime is the principal manure: marl is applied in those parts where it is found of good quality, and some of the marsh farmers on the river Brue cut openings in the banks of that river, in the winter, and thus irrigate their land with the muddy water descending from the hills. In parts of the county where stone is easily procured the fences frequently consist of stone walls, though they are commonly of white thorn: the beech hedges about Dulverton, Dunster, &c., are not only beautiful to the eye, but are an annual source of profit, yielding much fuel. The cattle of Somersetshire form an object of great importance in its agricultural economy. In the north-western district, the cows, which are all for the dairy, are almost entirely of the short-horned breed: both butter and cheese are made here; many dairy farmers in the vicinity of Bath and Bristol make butter and cheese of half-skimmed milk.

From Crewkerne, extending southward into Dorsetshire, is one of those deep large vales for which this county is remarkable, containing the villages of Clapton, Seaborough, Wayford, Woolmington, &c., and in which commences a district about twenty miles square (one half in Dorsetshire, and the other in Somersetshire), noted for supplying the summer markets at Exeter with calves, which are there bought by the Devonshire farmers, and, after being pastured three or four years in that county, are sold to the Somersetshire graziers, who fatten them for the London market: these are of the kind called Devonshire cattle. The neat cattle of Taunton-Dean are of the North Devon breed, and are held in high esteem by the graziers; and, indeed, the oxen of the whole western district are remarkably well shaped; they are almost universally red, yoked at three years old, and worked until they are five or six; they perform the greater part of the agricultural labour: in the other parts of the county also, oxen are often similarly employed. The summer-fattened oxen are for the most part of the Devonshire kind, and bred either in the northern part of that county, or the lower parts of Somerset: the winter-fattened cattle are of an inferior kind, partly home-bred and partly from Wales: heifers are sometimes grazed in preference to oxen. Lean cattle of the red Devonshire and Somersetshire breed are bought at the fairs of this county by the graziers of Leicestershire, Oxfordshire, Warwickshire, &c.; and besides the numerous fairs for the sale of cattle, both in the counties of Somerset and Devon, a large market is held every three weeks, during the summer months, at Somerton, on the southern side of the great central marshes, to which many lean cattle are brought, together with an immense number of lean sheep, the latter chiefly of the Dorsetshire breed: this is a market for fat cattle also. In the vicinity of Bath is a valuable breed of large sheep, some of which, when fattened, weigh from thirty to forty pounds per quarter. The Mendip hills have a native and very hardy breed, with fine wool, which thrive on very scanty pasturage; their flesh is also much esteemed. In the south-eastern part of the middle division the sheep are an improved sort of the Dorsetshire breed; the number kept, chiefly in breeding flocks, is exceedingly great. Many sheep of this kind are fed in the marshes, besides others of the Mendip breed, and great numbers from Dorsetshire. In Taunton-Dean they are of the Dorsetshire breed; and in this western portion of the county are two other kinds of sheep; one, a native breed, without horns, well made, somewhat resembling the Leicester sheep, and having a thick fleece, which generally weighs about seven or eight pounds, is found in the neighbourhood of Dulverton, Bampton, Wiveliscombe, &c., and is highly esteemed by the graziers in the marshes: many of them are taken to the Bristol market; the fat wethers, at two years old, weigh about twenty-five pounds per quarter. The other is a small horned sort, which is bought when young at South Molton in Devonshire, and is kept on the Forest of Exmoor, or the adjoining hills, for two or three years, merely for the sake of their wool, the weight of the fleece seldom exceeding four pounds; when fat, these sheep weigh from fourteen to eighteen pounds per quarter. A few Leicester sheep have been introduced into the county. The extraordinary number of hogs fattened in the north-eastern district are, for the most part, procured from the Bristol market, to which they are brought by men from Wales, or by drovers; they are fed chiefly upon whey, and their flesh is of a fine colour and delicate flavour. The few bred are of different sorts, viz., the native white breed, which has large ears and a long body; the Berkshire black and white kind; the Chinese breed; and a mixed sort. But few horses are bred in the county; the northern district is supplied by dealers, who bring them from the great fairs in the North of England. The great demand for poultry in the cities of Bristol and Bath causes great attention to be paid in the adjoining districts to the rearing and fattening of all kinds of fowls. In the same tracts are also many large pieces of garden-ground for supplying those cities with vegetables; and in the vicinity of the town of Somerton are numerous gardens, which supply the surrounding markets, even as far as Wells and Shepton-Mallet, with early peas, beans, potatoes, &c., and, in the month of August, with great quantities of cucumbers. The northern district contains innumerable orchards; those which have a northern aspect, and are sheltered from the westerly winds, are considered the most regular in bearing: the fruit produced at the northern base of the Mendip hills, as at Langford, Burrington, Rickford, Blagdon, Ubley, Compton-Martin, and Harptree, affords a strong and palatable cider: the favourite apple is here the Court of Wick pippin, which takes its name from the place where it was first cultivated. In the middle division are also many orchards, from which a considerable quantity of cider is made. In the vale of Taunton-Dean cider of the very finest quality is made with particular care.

The woods and plantations occupy about twenty thousand acres; the north-eastern district is but partially covered, and, according to the demand at the collieries, the wood it contains is cut at very irregular intervals. Kingswood, the timber of which is chiefly oak, covers about two hundred and thirty acres. On the northern declivity of the Mendip hills are some good coppices, the principal of which are those of Blagdon, Hasel, and Ubley: the scenery of these woods is very picturesque, and being sheltered from the strong south-westerly winds, their growth is rapid. On the opposite declivity are other coppices, of which Stokewood is the principal; these, from their exposed situation, are less productive. In the eastern part of this district are other woods, large and productive, such as those of Mells, Leigh, Edford, Harwich, Compton, Cameley, &c., being, from their vicinity to the coal-works, very valuable: in the same part are also many beautiful plantations. The vallies of the north-eastern district are richly adorned with elms. In the eastern part of the middle division is an extensive chain of woodland, several miles in length, from the parish of East Cranmore, through Downhead, Cloford, Whatley, Elm, &c., besides other woods of considerable size. On the borders of Wiltshire was the large forest of Selwood, extending from Penscellwood to within three miles of Frome, which was disafforested in the reign of Charles I: it appears to have extended over a vale of about twenty thousand acres, eighteen thousand of which have been cleared and converted into arable and pasture land, with a small portion of meadow: the remainder continues in coppice woods, the chief sorts of timber being oak and ash, while the underwood is principally hazel, ash, alder, willow, and birch: the chief natural defects of these woods are the coldness of the soil upon which they are situated, and their exposure, for the most part, to violent south-west winds: the coal-pits near Mendip are a constant market for the poles cut from the underwood. Numerous modern plantations have been made in this tract, in which the Scotch fir thrives best. The marsh lands have few trees of any kind. On the declivities of the Quantock and other hills, in the western part of the county, are many coppice-woods, chiefly of oak. This district does not otherwise abound with oak, but elms grow in the hedge-rows, sometimes to a considerable size.

This county has different uncultivated wastes: in the north-western district are several unenclosed commons, the principal of which are Broadfield down and Lansdown, the former containing about two thousand five hundred acres, the latter nearly one thousand: the surface of Lansdown is perfectly smooth, and it is remarkable for its excellence in feeding sheep. The large open tract called Leigh down, to the west of Bristol, is also subject to a right of commonage, and is chiefly depastured with sheep. More than one half of the ancient royal forest of Mendip, on the hills of that name, is now enclosed: the remainder is covered to the extent of several miles with heath and fern, and furnishes pasturage for large flocks of sheep. On the highest parts of this tract is a considerable flat, containing several swamps, which often prove dangerous to travellers. In the middle division, the largest unenclosed upland common is the forest of Neroche, near Ilminster, containing eight or nine hundred acres, and upon which different parishes have a right of commonage without stint: the next in size is White-down, near Chard: the low marshy wastes comprise several thousand acres. At the western extremity of the county, and partly in Devonshire, is the great forest of Exmoor, extending from east to west for a distance of ten or twelve miles, and from north to south about eight, and containing nearly twenty-thousand acres. Near the centre of this large tract is an enclosed estate, called Simonsbath, of about two hundred acres, with a dwelling-house, licensed and frequented as an inn. On the summits of the hills, more especially on the western and northern sides, are swamps many acres in extent, in which turf is cut. The small river Barl, which rises in the waste, runs on the border of the Simonsbath estate, but loses its name about two miles further eastward, on joining the Ex, which rises in a low swampy spot of ground, about two miles to the north-east of the above-mentioned estate, and gives name to the forest: the Ex, at the confluence of the Barl, becomes a considerable stream, and soon after, in its course southward, quits the county for Devonshire: numerous small rivulets discharge themselves into the above-mentioned streams, from every quarter. Excepting a few willows and thorns by the sides of these rivulets, not a tree or bush, out of the limits of the Simonsbath estate, is any where to be seen. The roads are in general, as might be expected in so large a tract devoid of inhabitants, extremely bad, and in some places scarcely passable. Upon this forest, about twenty-two thousand sheep are depastured every summer, and about four hundred small horses are kept the whole year round; but the value of the latter is so trifling, that very little profit is derived from them. When the snow covers the ground to the depth of many feet, these hardy animals are seen in droves, traversing the narrow vallies and sheltered parts, gathering their scanty fare from the banks of the rivulets and warm springs; but the sheep are all driven off as the severer part of the winter season approaches. At Simonsbath, the forester has an annual sale for the small horses that are bred on the surrounding hills; and here also, in the month of May, he meets the farmers from all the country round, who enter in his books the number of sheep to be depastured on the forest. There are also several hundred acres of uncultivated land on the Quantock and Brandon hills, and in some other parts. The wastes of that part of Black-down which lies within this county are supposed to exceed a thousand acres: the occupiers of estates contiguous to these hills stock them with young cattle in the summer months. In the northern district the fuel is chiefly coal; in the middle division much turf is burned; while the western part of the county is supplied with coal from Wales, which, however, is of an inferior quality.

The chief mineral productions are coal, lead, calamine, limestone, freestone, and various other kinds of stone: fullers' earth, marl, and ochre, are also occasionally found. The coal beds are the nearest to London of any yet discovered, and constitute the most southern deposit of that mineral in England. This deposit is comparatively small, and lies northward of the eastern parts of the Mendip hills: it may be divided into the northern and the southern; the former including the parishes of High Littleton, Timsbury, Paulton, Radstock, and the northern part of Midsummer-Norton; the latter, the southern part of Midsummer-Norton, Stratton on the Foss, Kilmersdon, Babington, and Mells. This southern division comprises what have long been known as the Mendip collieries, and it is probable that they were once within the verge of the extensive forest of Mendip, but they are now in the midst of old enclosures, and their ancient name has become obsolete. In the northern collieries the strata of coal dip about nine inches in the yard, their thickness varying from ten inches to upwards of three feet; they are seldom worked if less than fifteen inches. The coal is of excellent quality: it is firm, of a strong grain, and commonly raised in large pieces, which ensure its conveyance to almost any distance without injury: in burning, it makes a clear and durable fire. Bath is the principal market for its consumption, to which may be added the western parts of Wiltshire, and the adjacent parts of Somersetshire: about fifteen hundred men and boys are employed at the various collieries. The southern division is worked on a more limited scale: the strata here dip from eighteen to thirty inches in the yard, while in some places they descend perpendicularly: their number is twenty-five, varying in thickness from six inches to seven feet, but they are seldom worked when less than eighteen inches. The quality of the coal raised in this district varies, some of it being nearly equal to that of the northern collieries, but the greater part is softer, of shorter grain, and less adapted for distant carriage. The south-western parts of Wiltshire, the northern parts of Dorsetshire, and the eastern and southern parts of Somersetshire, are the chief markets. At Clapton, a village lying to the north-west of Leigh down, and west of Bristol, is a coal-work, possessing the advantage of a land-level of forty-four fathoms: at this pit are landed about two hundred and forty bushels daily: the small coal is shipped at Portishead point for Wales, where it is used in burning lime. Under the rich and extensive vale lying to the south-east of Leigh down are beds of coal thought to be inexhaustible: some thousands of bushels are now daily raised at the pits in this district. The principal stratum is five feet thick, sometimes rather more: this and the other strata generally dip towards the south, about nine inches in the yard, seldom more than a foot in the same extent: the rocks above the coal being full of fissures, considerable inconvenience is experienced from the influx of water. The Mendip hills, which consist chiefly of limestone of that kind called, in mineralogical language, mountain-limestone, are famous for their mines, chiefly of lead and lapis calaminaris. Those of the former metal are nearly exhausted, or, at least, the deep working is so encumbered with water, that little can be done in them. In former times, however, many thousand pounds have been annually paid to the see of Wells for the lord's share (one-tenth) of the lead dug in the forest, in the parish of Wells only: on Broadfield down also there are veins of lead. In the parishes of Rowberrow, Shipham, and Winscombe, are valuable mines of lapis calaminaris: this mineral is sometimes found within a yard of the surface, and is seldom worked deeper than thirty fathoms: between four and five hundred miners are here constantly employed in raising it. In the parishes of Compton-Martin and East Harptree are mines of the same kind. From these parishes, eastward, through the whole tract of Mendip, to Mells, at its eastern extremity, are also found marks and indications of calamine; and at Merchant's hill, in the parish of Binegar, several tons of it have been raised. The Mendip mines are governed by a set of laws and orders, commonly called Lord Choke's Laws, which were enacted in the time of Edward IV., when, on some disputes arising, that monarch sent Lord Choke, the Lord Chief Justice of England, down to his royal forest of Mendip, and the said laws and orders were agreed upon by the lords royal of Mendip, viz., the Bishop of Bath, Lord

Glaston, Lord Benfield, the Earl of Chewton, and my Lord of Richmond, at a great meeting then held at a place called the Forge. According to these, the miners are allowed to turn upon the forest as many cattle in summer as they are able to keep in winter: but before becoming such they must crave license of the lord of the soil, where they purpose to work, or, in his absence, of his officers, after which they proceed to break the ground: a tenth part of the ore must be paid to the lord, and a tenth part of the lead also, if it be smelted on his territory: every lord of the soil ought to hold a miner court twice a year, and to swear twelve men of the same occupation, for the redress of misdemeanors: the lord, or lords, may issue arrests for strife between man and man, on account of their works, and for obtaining the payment of their own duties: and if any miner should by misfortune meet his death by the earth falling in upon him, or by any other accident, the other miners are bound to fetch him out of the earth, and bring him to Christian burial, at their own costs and charges; nor shall any coroner, or officer at large, have to do with him in any respect. The mountain limestone formation near Bristol, forming a feature in English geology, constitutes the hills rising from beneath the red marl to the west of Bristol, and forms a range of considerable elevation, through which the Avon passes, in its course to the Severn. These hills consist of a prodigious number of strata, of very different natures, but chiefly of limestone of several varieties, the dip of which is about forty-five degrees. Some of the limestone strata contain different organic remains; and an assemblage of numerous strata, called the Black Rock, from the colour of the limestone, which is here quarried for paving-stones, contains numerous fossils and rounded concretions, penetrated by petroleum, which sometimes exudes from the rock. Very few of these numerous beds of limestone are quarried, and many of them will not burn into good lime. Calamine, accompanied by heavy spar and galena, is found in veins of calcareous spar, crossing the limestone. Manganese is found in a vein of iron-stone, crossing the limestone. The strata alternating with the limestone are beds of clay of various kinds, which sometimes contain nodules of coral and geodes of iron-ore: thin beds of iron-stone and quartzose sand are also found; besides a bed of coal about two inches thick. The mountain limestone ranges round Bristol, in almost every direction, forming a kind of irregular basin, and reposes on the red sand-stone, which visibly passes beneath it. On the top of the limestone strata forming the cliffs, on the side of the Avon, lies a yellowish sand-stone, which has sometimes the appearance of a breccia, occurring also in some other parts of the same district. The red clay in the neighbourhood of Bristol contains gypsum, and abounds with sulphate of strontian, in veins and large beds. Red sand-stone is found under the limestone of the Mendip hills. The mountainous part of the western district of this county is formed of a series of rocks, differing much in mineralogical character, but a great proportion of them having the structure of sand-stones: some of the finest of these sand-stones graduate into a fine-grained slate, divisible into laminæ as thin as paper, and having a smooth, silky, and shining surface: their prevailing colours are reddish brown and greenish grey, with many intermediate mixtures; but some of the slaty varieties are of a purplish hue, occasionally spotted with green. In many places large beds of limestone, full of madre-pores, are contained in the slate, which, towards the external parts of the beds, is interstratified with limestone. Copper, in the state of sulphuret and of malachite, and veins of hematite, are frequently met with; and nests of copper-ore, of considerable magnitude, have been found in the subordinate beds of limestone. The Quantock hills, Grabbist hill, Croydon hill, Brendon hill, and some others to the west of them, consist chiefly of the kind of stone called grey wacké, in some places interstratified with limestone: the quarries of limestone in the eastern side of the Quantock hills are very numerous. North hill, extending along the sea-shore from Minehead to Porlock, and forming a very bold and precipitous coast, is of grey wacké; and the whole of the precipitous coast of the county presents a great variety of mineralogical strata. Granite, of small grain, occurs near the foot of a hill a few miles to the north-east of Taunton, where it is quarried to a small extent; the inhabitants of the neighbourhood call it pottle-stone. The kind of limestone called by mineralogists lias, and which extends in a direction nearly north-east and south-west almost to the banks of the Humber, commencing in Dorsetshire a little to the west of Ilchester, passes by Bath, and occupies a large tract of this county; it is also found on the coast of Somerset, whence it extends for some distance inland; proceeding eastward, it first occurs a little distance to the west of Watchet, and forms some very high cliffs to the eastward of that place; the Polden hills consist chiefly of lias: this stone burns into a very strong quick lime, valuable, when made into mortar, for its increasing hardness under water. Coombe down is the place where the greatest quantity of freestone is raised, in doing which the ground has been undermined for several miles. The parishes of Midsummer-Norton, Sutton on the Foss, Kilmersdon, Radstock, Timsbury, High Littleton, Farmborough, Paulton, Stone-Easton, Binegar, and Chilcompton, comprehend a tract of land rendered remarkably fertile by the application of marl, which is found at various depths from the surface, of a black colour, and in inexhaustible quantities.

The principal manufactures are those of woollen and worsted goods at Frome, Taunton, Wellington, and Wiveliscombe; of gloves, at Yeovil, Stoke, and Martock; of lace, at Chard and Taunton; of silk, at Taunton, Bruton, and Shepton-Mallet; of crape, at Taunton; and of knit worsted stockings, at Shepton-Mallet. Upon the Avon are several mills for preparing iron and copper, and others for the spinning of worsted, and the spinning and weaving of cotton. Many of the lower classes derive cheap and wholesome food from the salmon and herring fisheries of Porlock, Minehead, and Watchet, which are carried on to a considerable extent: the other fish found off this coast, and which are occasionally taken at different places upon it, are tublin, flounders, sand-dabs, hakes, pipers, soles, plaice, skate, conger-eels, shrimps, prawns, crabs, muscles, and star-fish.

The chief rivers are the Lower Avon, the Parret, the Tone, the Brue, and the Ax. The Lower Avon, rising in the hilly district of North Wiltshire, after forming, for some distance, the boundary between Somerset and Wilts, enters this county, crossing the north-eastern extremity of it. After partly encircling the city of Bath, a few miles lower, it becomes the north-eastern boundary of the county, and separates it from Gloucestershire during the rest of its very irregular course, which it pursues for the most part in a north-westerly direction, by the town of Keynsham, and the city of Bristol, to its junction at Kingroad with the æstuary of the Severn, which there assumes the name of the Bristol Channel. This river, besides constituting the harbour of Bristol, is navigable for small craft as high as Bath, a distance of sixteen miles above that port. The Parret rises at South Parret in Dorsetshire, and soon entering this county, flows nearly northward by Crewkerne to Langport, where it is joined on the east by the small river Yeo, and assumes a north-easterly direction to Bridg-water, having nearly midway between these towns received the waters of the Tone from the west: forming the harbour of Bridg-water, it thenceforward pursues a very devious course, for the most part in a northerly direction, and finally falls into Bridg-water bay, at Stert point. The navigable part of its course commences at Langport, whence to Stert point is a distance of about twenty miles. The Tone rises in the Quantock hills, near the town of Wiveliscombe, and, flowing for some miles southward to the borders of Devon, afterwards takes an easterly course by the town of Taunton, where it becomes navigable to the Parret at Boroughbridge, about eight miles from Taunton, and near the centre of the county. The Brue rises on the western borders of Wiltshire, not far from the town of Bruton, past which it flows nearly in a south-westerly direction: some miles lower, however, it assumes a north-westerly course, and passes at a short distance south-westward of Glastonbury, to the Bristol Channel, near the mouth of the Parret: from the vicinity of Glastonbury, the course of this river is entirely through the marshes: it is navigable up to Highbridge, a distance of two miles from its mouth. The Ax originates in two small streams from the south-western side of the Mendip hills, one of which has its source in the natural cavern called Wokey Hole; its course is north-westward, and for a considerable distance through the marshes; passing to the south-west of Axbridge, it falls into the Bristol Channel near Black Rock. The Ex rises on Exmoor Forest, at the western extremity of this county, which it soon quits for that of Devon. The smaller streams are very numerous; they all flow through fertile tracts, and the banks of many of them are adorned with extensive ornamented grounds belonging to the various seats of the nobility and gentry, with which this county abounds: some of the principal are the Yeo, the Cale, the Chew, the Frome, the Ivel, and the Barl. Of fish, the rivers contain salmon, trout, pike, perch, roach, dace, eels, carp, tench, and gudgeons. The Kennet and Avon canal enters the county from Bradford in Wiltshire, and joins the Lower Avon at Bath. Previously to the year 1798, acts had been obtained for the following canals, the construction of which was then in progress, viz: the Somersetshire coal canal, which has two branches, the one commencing at Paulton, the other at Radstock, and both communicating with the Kennet and Avon canal near Bath; the Dorset and Somerset canal, which was never carried into execution, was intended to commence near Nettlebridge, in the district of the southern collieries, to pass through the town of Frome, and then to divide into two branches, one of them joining the Kennet and Avon canal near Bradford, and the other to pass through Wincanton, to the borders of Dorsetshire; and the Ilchester and Langport canal. The turnpike roads of this county are good. The road from London to Wells, Bridg-water, and Minehead, enters the county from Warminster in Wilts, and passes through Frome, Shepton-Mallet, Wells, Glastonbury, Bridg-water, Watchet, and Dunster, to Minehead. That from London to Wells, through Marlborough, falls into the former at Frome. The road from London to Exeter and Dartmouth, by Taunton, enters from Stourhead in Wilts, and passes through Castle-Cary, Somerton, Langport, Taunton, and Wellington, to Cullompton in Devonshire: this is also the road from London to Barnstaple and Ilfracombe. The road from London to Bath, Bristol, and Milford Haven, enters the county from Chippenham in Wilts, and passes through Bath-Ford, Bath-Easton, Bath, Keynsham, and Bristol, to New Passage in Gloucestershire. That from London to Bath, through Devizes, enters from Melksham in Wilts, and falls into the last-mentioned road at Bath-Ford.

The remains of antiquity that have been found are very various. The parish of Stanton-Drew, in the north-eastern district, is remarkable as containing the remains of four clusters of huge massive stones, forming two circles, an oblong, and an ellipsis, which are supposed to have anciently constituted a Druidical temple. The ancient boundary called Wansdyke may be traced in several places; in the vicinity of its course, near Great Bedwin, celts and ancient instruments of war have been discovered. Besides the Roman cities of Bath and Ilchester, there are numerous places which, although their names have been changed, or altered, since that remote period, still bear evident marks of Roman origin in the foundations of some of their walls, and in various remains that have from time to time been dug from them; such are Camalet, Hamden, Wellow, Coker, Chilcompton, Conquest, Wiveliscombe, Bath-Ford, Warley, Street, Long Ashton, Postlebury, South Petherton, Watergore, Wigborough, Yeovil, Putsham, Kilton, Stogumber, Edington, English-Combe, &c. Among the many miscellaneous remains of this people which have been discovered, more especially at Bath, are included temples, sudatories, tessellated pavements, altars, hypocausts, and coins of different ages. Traces of ancient encampments are still visible at Blacker's hills, Bow-ditch, Brompton, Bury Castle, and Burwalls; in the parish of South Cadbury, near Chesterton, in the parish of Chew Magna, Cowes Castle, Doleberry, Douxborough Castle, Godshill, Hawkrigge Castle, on Hampton down, Masbury, Mearknoll, Modbury, on the forest of Neroche, Newborough, Norton-Hautville, Stantonbury, Stokeleigh, Tedbury, Trendle Castle, Turk's Castle, Wiveliscombe Castle, and Worleberry. The principal Roman road was the Fosse-way, which extended across this county from Bath, in a south-westerly direction to Perry Street, on the confines of Devonshire. In a direction nearly parallel with this ran another road from the forest of Exmoor, through Taunton, Bridg-water, and Axbridge, to Portishead, whence there was a trajectus, or ferry, across the Bristol Channel to the city of Isca Silurum, now Caerleon. On Salisbury hill are traces of the earthworks thrown up at the time of the siege of Bath by the Saxons. An encampment called Jack's Castle, near Wilmington, is supposed to have been of Danish formation. The intrenchments formed by the forces of Harold, near Porlock, in 1052, are still to be seen.

According to Tanner, the number of religious houses in the county of all denominations, before the Reformation, including two Alien priories, was about forty-four. There are remains of the abbey in the Isle of Athelney, founded by King Alfred; of that of Banwell, founded in the same reign; of those of Bath, Bruton, Cliff, Glastonbury, Hinton, Keynsham, Muchelney, and Wells; of the priories of Barlinch, Barrow, Bath, Berkeley, Buckland, Sordrum, Cannington, Chewton, Dunster, Frome, Hinton-Charterhouse, Ilchester, Kewstoke, Montacute, Portbury, Stavordale, Stogursey, Taunton, Woodspring, and Yeanston; and of the nunneries of Nunney, Walton, and Whiteball. Of ancient church architecture, the most interesting specimens are in the churches of Allen, Ashill, Axbridge, Barton St. David, St. James at Bath, Bath-Easton, North Cadbury, Camerton, Chew Magna, Crewkerne, Dunster, Goathurst, Ilminster, Keynsham, Lansdown, Martock, Nunney, St. Magdalene and St. James Taunton, Walton, Wincanton, and Yeovil. The greater number of the churches of Somersetshire exhibit fine specimens of the decorated and later styles of English architecture; from which it has been thought probable that they were rebuilt by that prince, in reward for the zeal in his cause displayed by its inhabitants. There are several ancient chapels; and the fonts of Beckington, East Camel, Corfe, and Pendomer, are remarkable for their antiquity. Remains still exist of the ancient castles of Bridgwater, Dunster, Montacute, Stoke under Hamdon, Stowey, Taunton, and Walton. Combe-Sydenham, near Stogumber, is a very ancient mansion, the seat of the family of the Sydenhams. The more modern seats of nobility and gentry are particularly numerous. Besides the celebrated waters of Bath, there are mineral springs of different properties at Alford, Ashill, Castle-Cary, East Chinnock, Glastonbury, Queen-Camel, Wellington, and Wells: at Nether Stowey is a petrifying spring. In the Mendip hills, and surrounded by wild and magnificent scenery, is Wokey Hole (so called from the neighbouring village of Wokey), an extensive natural cavern, the most celebrated in the West of England, in which the waters of the Ax take their rise, issuing from it in a clear and rapid stream: in the parish of Cheddar, in the same district, is an immense chasm in the hills, called Cheddar Cliffs, the scenery of which is particularly rugged and striking. Mr. Collinson, in his history of this county, mentions the following birds as the most remarkable that are found in it, or upon its coasts, viz., the heath-hen, the wild duck, the curlew, the rail, the gull, and the wheat-ear; and adds, that on Exmoor Forest, and some other lower and uncultivated tracts, red deer are found. Somersetshire abounds with rare and curious plants: on the hilly wastes occur the dwarf juniper, the cranberry, and the wortleberry, the last being here provincially called hurts. The rocks on the coast have great quantities of the lichen marinus, or sea-bread: in the low moors grows the gale, or candleberry myrtle. The county of Somerset gives the title of duke to the family of Seymour.

SOMERSHAM, a parish (formerly a market town) in the hundred of HURSTINGSTONE, county of HUNTINGDON, $8\frac{3}{4}$ miles (E. N. E.) from Huntingdon, and $64\frac{1}{4}$ (N.) from London, containing 1166 inhabitants. This town, formerly called Summersum, is supposed to have derived its name from an adjacent hill, which was the site of a summer camp of the Romans: it is situated in a fertile country, abounding with springs of remarkable purity, some of which were considered to possess medicinal qualities, but are now disused. Several of the inhabitants are employed in preparing wicks for rushlights, which are extensively transmitted hence to various parts of the kingdom. The market, long since discontinued, was on Friday: fairs are held on June 23rd and November 12th, but they are very inconsiderable. The living is a rectory, with the perpetual curacies of Colne and Pidley annexed, in the archdeaconry of Huntingdon, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £40. 4. 7., and annexed to the Regius Professorship of Divinity in the University of Cambridge. The church, standing in the centre of the town, is dedicated to St. John the Baptist. There is a place of worship for Baptists. A free school is endowed with the proceeds of £200, the bequest of Thomas Hammond, in 1730, and with some land assigned by the commissioners in 1765. The Bishops of Ely had formerly a palace here.

SOMERSHAM, a parish in the hundred of BOSMERE and CLAYDON, county of SUFFOLK, 6 miles (N. W. by W.) from Ipswich, containing 377 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Suffolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £8. Mrs. Stubbin was patroness in 1807. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. There is a place of worship for Independents.

SOMERS-TOWN, a chapelry in the parish of ST. PANCAS, Holborn division of the hundred of OSSULSTONE, county of MIDDLESEX, 2 miles (N. W.) from St. Paul's Cathedral, London. This place has, within the last thirty years, become a very populous neighbourhood, a particular description of which is given in the article on ST. PANCAS.

SOMERTON, a parish in the hundred of PLOUGHLEY, county of OXFORD, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E.) from Deddington, containing 400 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, rated in the king's books at £15. 1. 10 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Rev. H. Wintle. The church is dedicated to St. James. On the north side of the tower is represented, in stone, our Saviour between two thieves, and over the communion table is a painting (after the manner of L. Da Vinci) of Christ and the Eleven Apostles at the Last Supper. In the churchyard is a handsome stone cross, having on its south side a fine crucifix in basso relievo. The river Cherwell and the Oxford and Birmingham canal pass through the parish. Here was a castle, probably built in the reign of Stephen, as appears from the will of Thomas Fernor, Esq., dated 1580, by which he bequeathed "the castle yard and chapel therein" to his executors, who erected on its site a free school, with a house for the master, and endowed it with £10 per annum, for which about fifteen boys are instructed. There is also a girls' school, endowed by the Countess of Jersey with £20 a year. Some remains of the old mansion of the Fermors still exist, particularly the large western window, which gave light to the grand hall; and very recently an apartment could be traced, termed the Prince's chamber, from its having been once occupied by James II., who, on coming to the crown, granted a charter for a fair at Somerton, which was held in a place now called Broad Pound. There is a powerful petrifying spring in the parish, forming a small cascade.

SOMERTON, a market town and parish, in the hundred of SOMERTON, county of SOMERSET, 5 miles (N. N. W.) from Ilchester, and 123 (W. S. W.) from London, containing 1643 inhabitants. This was anciently the chief town in the county. During the Saxon era, a castle was erected here which became a royal residence; it was subsequently converted into a state prison, and was the place of custody of many distinguished persons, among whom was John, King of France, who was removed hither from Hertford castle by Edward III.: its site is now occupied by the gaol, in the erection of which the materials of the ancient edifice were used. The town is situated near the river Cary, over which is a stone bridge, and consists of several narrow streets. The market is on Tuesday: fairs are on the Tuesday in Passion week, and the third, sixth, ninth, and twelfth Tuesdays following, for cattle; and September 30th and November 8th, for cattle, sheep, hogs, and pedlary. The town is governed by a bailiff and constables, annually chosen by the inhabitants; and the county magistrates hold petty sessions in the town hall, which stands in the centre of the market-place. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Wells, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £16. 0. 7½, and in the patronage of the Earl of Ilchester. The church, which is dedicated to St. Michael, is an ancient structure, with an octagonal embattled tower on the south side. There is a place of worship for Independents. The free school was founded, in the 27th of Charles II., by Thomas Glover, who endowed it with an estate producing £10. 10. per annum, in addition to which is a rent-charge of £5, given by Alice Yates, for the education of twelve poor boys of Hurcot and Easter, in this parish. On the eastern side of the hill above the village of Hurcot are considerable quantities of fine white alabaster.

SOMERTON, a parish in the hundred of BABERGH, county of SUFFOLK, 7 miles (N. E. by N.) from Clare, containing 156 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Sudbury, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £6. 16. 8., and in the patronage of the Marquis of Downshire. The church is dedicated to St. Margaret.

SOMERTON (EAST), a parish in the western division of the hundred of FLEGG, county of NORFOLK, 6½ miles (N. N. W.) from Caistor, containing 76 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the rectory of Winterton, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Norwich. The church, which was dedicated to St. Mary, has been long since demolished.

SOMERTON (WEST), a parish in the western division of the hundred of FLEGG, county of NORFOLK, 6½ miles (N. W. by N.) from Caistor, containing 197 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Norwich, endowed with £400 private benefaction, £1000 royal bounty, and £600 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of Thomas Groves, Esq. The church, dedicated to St.

Mary, is thatched, and has a tower round at the base, and octangular above.

SOMPTING, a parish in the hundred of BRIGHTFORD, rape of BRAMBER, county of SUSSEX, 2 miles (E. N. E.) from Worthing, containing 472 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chichester, rated in the king's books at £8. 7. E. Barker, Esq. was patron in 1815. The church is a cruciform structure, principally in the early English style, with a curious tower at the west end, apparently of more ancient date: it has lately received an addition of one hundred and fourteen sittings, of which eighty-eight are free, the Incorporated Society for the enlargement of churches and chapels having granted £70 towards defraying the expense.

SONNING, a parish comprising the liberty of Eye with Dunsden, in the hundred of BINFIELD, county of OXFORD, the liberty of Early, in the hundred of CHARLTON, and the township of Sandford with Woodley, in that of SONNING, county of BERKS, 3½ miles (E. N. E.) from Reading, and containing 2493 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the Dean of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £20. 7. 1. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew. There is a place of worship for Independents. The river Thames runs through the village. During the separation of Berkshire and Wiltshire from the ancient diocese of Sherborne, this is said to have been a bishop's see, though the fact has not been clearly established: it is certain, however, that the bishops of Salisbury had a palace here, in which Isabel Queen of Richard II. resided, from the period of the king's imprisonment at Pomfret, till his lamentable death. Sir Thomas Rich, in 1766, founded a free school, and endowed it with an estate now producing about £52. 10. a year, for educating and clothing twenty poor boys, and apprenticing three of them annually in London. There are also a rent-charge of £5, the bequest of Mr. Payne, in 1709, for placing out an additional apprentice, and the interest of £500 South Sea annuities, bequeathed by Dame Harriet Read, towards educating, clothing, and apprenticing children, at the discretion of the vicar, but the latter fund has hitherto been expended in clothing only.

SOOTHILL, a township in that part of the parish of DEWSBURY which is in the lower division of the wapentake of AGRIGG, West riding of the county of YORK, 6 miles (N. W. by W.) from Wakefield, containing 3099 inhabitants. An ancient building, now used as a malt-house, is supposed to have been originally a church, or chapel.

SOPLEY, a parish in the hundred of CHRISTCHURCH, New Forest (West) division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 2½ miles (N.) from Christ-church, containing 978 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Winchester, rated in the king's books at £12. 16. 10½, and in the patronage of — Willis, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, and the village, are situated on the left bank of the river Avon. There is a place of worship for Baptists.

SOPWORTH, a parish in a detached portion of the hundred of CHIPPENHAM, county of WILTS, 7½ miles (W. by S.) from Malmesbury, containing 222 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Wilts, and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £8. 10. 5., and in the patronage of the Duke of Beaufort. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

SOTBY, a parish in the eastern division of the wapentake of WRAGGOE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 5 miles (E. by N.) from Wragby, containing 128 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £9. 0. 10., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. Peter.

SOTHERTON, a parish in the hundred of BLYTHING, county of SUFFOLK, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E. N. E.) from Halesworth, containing 178 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, annexed to that of Uggheshall, in the archdeaconry of Suffolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £5. 6. 8. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew.

SOTTERLEY, a parish in the hundred of WANGFORD, county of SUFFOLK, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E. by S.) from Beccles, containing 287 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Suffolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £10. M. Barne, Esq. was patron in 1805. The church is dedicated to St. Margaret.

SOTWELL, a parish in the hundred of MORETON, county of BERKS, $1\frac{3}{4}$ mile (N. W. by W.) from Wallingford, containing 145 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the rectory of St. Leonard, Wallingford, in the archdeaconry of Berks, and diocese of Salisbury. The church is dedicated to St. James.

SOUGHTON, a township in that part of the parish of LLANSILLIN which is in the hundred of OSWESTRY, county of SALOP, $3\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. W. by W.) from Oswestry, containing 249 inhabitants.

SOULBURY, a parish in the hundred of COTTESLOE, county of BUCKINGHAM, 3 miles (W. N. W.) from Leighton-Buzzard, containing 547 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Buckingham, and diocese of Lincoln. Sir John Lovett, Bart. was patron in 1808. The church is dedicated to All Saints. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. Robert Levet, in 1710, and the Rev. John Sambee, in 1728, liberally endowed with land a school for twenty-four boys and girls, one of the former to be apprenticed annually.

SOULBY, a township in the parish of DACRE, LEATH ward, county of CUMBERLAND, 5 miles (S. W.) from Penrith. The population is returned with the parish. The village is situated on the margin of the beautiful lake Ullswater.

SOULBY, a chapelry in the parish of KIRKBY-STEPHEN, EAST ward, county of WESTMORLAND, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W.) from Kirkby-Stephen, containing 251 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Carlisle, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Rev. Sir C. J. Musgrave, Bart. The chapel was erected in 1663, at the expense of Sir Philip Musgrave, Bart. Soulby is a considerable village, situated on the river Eden, which is here crossed by a bridge of three arches, erected in 1819. Two fairs for cattle and sheep are held on the Tuesday before Easter, and August 30th; they are of recent establishment, and well attended. Three poor boys are educated for a tripling annuity, the gift of several individuals since 1768.

SOULDERN, a parish in the hundred of PLOUGHLEY, county of OXFORD, 4 miles (E. by S.) from Deddington, containing 491 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, rated in the king's books at £8. 14. 2., and in the patronage of the Master and Fellows of St. John's College, Cambridge. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. The Oxford and Birmingham canal passes through the parish, and the river Cherwell forms the western boundary. A National school is supported partly by contributions, and partly by a sum of money left by Miss Westcarr for that purpose.

SOULDROP, a parish in the hundred of WILLEY, county of BEDFORD, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E. by N.) from Harrold, containing 223 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, united to that of Knotting, in the archdeaconry of Bedford, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £10. The church, dedicated to All Saints, has been rebuilt, but the ancient steeple remains.

SOULTON, a township in that part of the parish of WEM which is in the Whitchurch division of the hundred of BRADFORD (North), county of SALOP, containing 30 inhabitants.

SOUND, a township in the parish of WYBUNBURY, hundred of NANTWICH, county palatine of CHESTER, 3 miles (S. W. by S.) from Nantwich, containing 247 inhabitants.

SOURTON, a parish in the hundred of LIFTON, county of DEVON, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W.) from Oakhampton, containing 546 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the rectory of Bridestowe, in the archdeaconry of Totness, and diocese of Exeter. The church is dedicated to St. Thomas à Becket.

SOUTH-ACRE, a parish in the southern division of the hundred of GREENHOE, county of NORFOLK, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by W.) from Swaffham, containing 100 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £10. 18. $1\frac{1}{2}$. B. Fountain, Esq. was patron in 1802. The church is dedicated to St. George. At Rache-ness, in this parish, there was, in the time of Henry II., an hospital for lepers, subordinate to the priory of Castle-Acre.

SOUTHAM, a hamlet in the parish of BISHOP'S CLEEVE, hundred of CLEEVE, or BISHOP'S CLEEVE, county of GLOUCESTER, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E.) from Cheltenham. The population is returned with Brockhampton.

SOUTHAM, a market town and parish in the Southam division of the hundred of KNIGHTLOW, county of WARWICK, 10 miles (E. S. E.) from Warwick, and 84 (N. W.) from London, containing 1161 inhabitants. This town, anciently called Suthau, is a place of great antiquity, and had formerly a mint. In an old mansion near the centre of the town, which appears to have been built prior to the reign of Elizabeth, King Charles and his two sons are said to have slept, on the night before the battle of Edge Hill, in which a son of the Earl of Pembroke, whose monument is in the church, was slain. The parochial register for the year 1641 contains an entry of money paid to the king's footman for opening the church doors, which had been locked up and sealed by the king's order, as a punishment to the inhabitants for not ringing the bells on his entering the town. The monks of Coventry had a religious establishment here, and in Bury orchard, near the churchyard, foundations have been discovered, and many skeletons dug up: in 1741, a considerable part of the town was destroyed by fire. At Haliwell, in this parish, was a cell of Black canons, subordinate to the abbey of Rowcester in Staffordshire, whither it was removed in the 19th of Edward II. The town is pleasantly situated on an eminence rising from the eastern bank of the river Sowe, and consists of two streets: the houses in general are modern and well built, the inhabitants are well supplied with water from springs, and the surrounding scenery is pleasingly diversified. The river Stowe is crossed by a neat stone bridge of two arches, at the lower extremity of the town, and on the rising ground on the opposite side an antique mansion forms a striking contrast with the other buildings. The market, formerly on Wednesday, is now held on Monday, and is well supplied with corn: fairs are held on Easter-Monday, the Monday after Holy Thursday, and July 10th, for cattle and horses; the last of these is a show fair, at which, in imitation of that at Coventry, the procession of Lady Godiva is celebrated. A constable and headborough are appointed annually at the court leet of the lord of the manor.

The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Coventry, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, rated in the king's books at £22. 17.. 6., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church, which is dedicated to St. James, is a stately structure, principally in the decorated style of English architecture, with a fine tower, surmounted by a lofty spire; in the roof of the nave, which is lighted by eight clerestory windows, adorned with tracery, is some tabernacle-work, well carved in oak. There is a place of worship for Baptists. A free school was founded in 1762, and endowed with lands, previously given for the relief of the poor, the proceeds of which amount to about £30 per annum, and the funds have been further augmented with £30 per annum from the rents of the town lands. There is also an endowment of £200 per annum for the relief of the poor and the repairs of the bridge. A self-supporting dispensary, for the relief of the sick poor, was established here, on a peculiar plan, by Mr. Smith, a resident surgeon, who has been the means of founding similar institutions in different parts of the country. An infirmary for curing diseases of the eye and ear, established by the same indefatigable gentleman, in 1818, under the patronage of the nobility and gentry of the neighbourhood, is supported by annual subscriptions and donations: it is under the management of a president, vice-president, treasurer, and a committee, and is attended by the professional gentlemen in the town and neighbourhood: the building is in the later English style, and is highly ornamental to the town. Here is a mineral spring, of similar properties to the waters at Leamington, and another called Holywell, of considerable antiquity, remarkable for the intense coldness of the water. The Rev. Mr. Holyoake, author of the first collection of English words ever published in the form of a dictionary, was at one time rector of this parish.

SOUTHAMPTON, a sea-port, borough, and market town, and a county of itself, under the designation of "The Town and County of the Town of Southampton," locally in the county of Hants, 75 miles (S. W. by W.) from London, containing, according to the last census, 12,913 inhabitants, which number has since much increased. This place probably derives its name from the ancient British Ant, the original name of one of the rivers which empty themselves into its fine æstuary. To the north-east of the present town, on the opposite bank of the Itchen, the Romans had a military station, called Clausentum, which was succeeded by the Saxon town of Hantune, on the site of the present Southampton. In 838, the Danes, with a fleet of thirty-three ships, effected a landing on the coast, but were repulsed with considerable loss by Wulphere, governor of the southern part of the county, under Ethelwolf; and in 860 they again penetrated into the county, and burned the city of Winchester. In the reign of Athelstan, two mints were established here. In 981, a party of Danish pirates having made a descent from seven large vessels, plundered the town, and laid waste the neighbouring coast. In the reign of Ethelred II., Sweyn, King of Denmark, and Olave, King of Norway, landed here with a considerable force, plundered and burned the town, massacred the inhabitants, and committed the most dreadful depredations in the surrounding country, till Ethelred purchased peace by the payment of £16,000, on the receipt of which, the invaders retired to Hantune, where they embarked for their own kingdom. Canute, after his establishment on the throne, made this town his occasional residence; and it was whilst seated on the beach here, at the influx of the tide, that he took occasion to make that memorable reproof of his courtiers, for their gross flattery, which has been recorded by historians. At the time of the Conquest, the town was so much reduced by the repeated incursions of the Danes, that, at the Norman survey, the king had only seventy-nine demesne tenants. Henry II. and his queen landed at this port, on their return from France, in 1174. In the reign of John, Adam de Port was governor of the castle; and in that of Edward III., the town was completely destroyed by the French and their allies, the Spaniards and Genoese, but they were repulsed, with the loss of the Prince of Sicily and other commanders. Richard II. enlarged the castle, and strengthened the fortifications that had been erected for the defence of the town and harbour. Henry V., previously to the battle of Agincourt, marshalled his army here for his expedition against France, and, during his stay in the town, detected a conspiracy formed against him by the Lords Cambridge and Scroop, and Sir Thomas Grey, who were here executed for treason, and buried in the chapel of an ancient hospital, still remaining, called God's House. In the reign of Edward IV., Southampton was the scene of a sanguinary contest between the partisans of the houses of York and Lancaster, in which the former having gained the victory, many of the Lancastrian chiefs were, by the king's order, executed with extreme barbarity. The town had increased materially in extent and importance, and its trade had become so flourishing that, in the reign of Edward V., the Lord Mayor of London was appointed collector of the king's duties at this port. In 1512, Grey, Marquis of Dorset, embarked here with a force for the assistance of Ferdinand, King of Spain; and ten years after, the Emperor Charles V. sailed from it, on his return to his own dominions, after having visited Henry VIII. Edward VI., in his tour through the western and southern parts of the kingdom, for the benefit of his health, visited the town, and was sumptuously entertained by the mayor and corporation. Philip, King of Spain, on his arrival in England to espouse Queen Mary, landed at this port, and was entertained at the sheriff's house by the mayor and his brethren, who sent him a present of wine, which he received on board his ship, the Grace de Dieu, then lying in the harbour.

The town is beautifully situated on a peninsular tract of ground, rising with a gradual ascent from the north-eastern shore of Southampton water, and bounded on the east by the river Itchen, over which is a bridge leading to Gosport; and on the south and west by the fine open bay formed by the confluence of the Itchen with the river Test. The shores of the bay, or æstuary, are richly clothed with wood, and afford a succession of beautifully diversified scenery, the vicinity being studded with villages, mansions, and villas. Southampton water, about two miles broad at its entrance near Calshot castle, stretches north-westward nearly seven miles: on the eastern shore are the ruins of Netley abbey, forming an object romantically picturesque. The town, rising gradually from the margin of the water, is distinguished for the beauty of its situation; and the approach from the London road, through an avenue of stately elms and a well-built suburb, is striking. The principal entrance is through Bar gate, one of the ancient gates, on the north front of which are two gigantic figures representing Sir Bevois of Southampton and the giant Ascupart, whom, according to legendary tale, Bevois is said to have slain in combat. From this gate, which is embattled and machicolated, a spacious street, more than half a mile in length, and equal to many of the finer streets of the metropolis, leads directly to the quay, for the improvement of which the old Water gate was taken down about twenty-five years since. The ancient part of the town was formerly enclosed with walls nearly a mile and a quarter in circuit, of which, with their ruined circular towers, considerable portions are still entire, the principal being that reaching from the south-east of West gate, along the shore northward. Of the ancient gates, the principal now remaining are West gate and South gate, in addition to Bar gate, in relation to which last the more modern part of the town is distinguished, by the appellation of Above Bar, from the other part, which is called Below Bar. In that part Above Bar are many fine ranges of building. A new street of handsome houses has been recently erected, leading from the street Above Bar to the western shore, with a terrace, commanding a fine view of the surrounding scenery. The town is well paved, lighted with gas, and supplied with excellent water, chiefly from springs collected on an adjoining common, and conveyed from a reservoir into public conduits, as well as into many of the houses. The handsome iron pillars for the gas-lights were presented by William Chamberlayne, Esq., late member for the borough, in commemoration of whose munificence, the inhabitants have erected on the quay a lofty cast-iron column, supporting a splendid gas-light. A Literary and Philosophical Society, recently established by a proprietary of thirty members, is further supported by an unlimited number of annual subscribers of £1. 1.: lectures are given periodically, and the business of the institution is conducted by a president and committee. In the lecture-room of this institution, during the six months of the year in which it is unoccupied by the society, there is an exhibition of paintings for sale, which is well attended, and considerably resorted to by the numerous visitors frequenting this place. The library and reading-rooms in the High-street, at which a book of arrivals is regularly kept, are amply supplied with volumes in every department of literature, and with periodical works, and the establishment is liberally supported by subscription: there are also two circulating libraries and several reading-rooms in other parts of the town, together with billiard-rooms elegantly fitted up. Near the platform is a subscription bowling-green. There are two sets of assembly-rooms, one called the Long Rooms, erected on the west side of the town, in 1761; and the other, recently erected, called the Archery Rooms: these rooms command an extensive view of the bay and the scenery of the opposite shore. The theatre, in French-street, is well arranged and tastefully decorated: performances take place three evenings in the week during the season, which commences in August. Races are held annually in the autumn, and continue two days: the course, which is well adapted to the purpose, is pleasantly situated on Southampton common, and was given to the town by the corporation. The Botanic gardens, on the west bank of the Southampton water, form an agreeable promenade, and contain a very extensive collection of indigenous and exotic plants, constantly keeping pace with the improved state of botanical science and discovery. There are three lodges of Freemasons. An annual regatta takes place during the summer, in which prizes, given by subscription, are contested for by yachts and small vessels belonging to the fishermen of Itchen, on the Southampton river; than which none can be more favourably adapted to aquatic excursions, from the bay being so beautiful and finely sheltered.

The salubrity of the air, and the beauty of its situation, have made Southampton a resort for sea-bathing; and hot, cold, medicated, and vapour baths have been constructed. In addition to those previously established, a handsome and commodious building has been erected, in the Grecian style of architecture, at an expense of £7000, near the platform on the beach, and provided with baths of every kind, with an elegant and spacious promenade-room attached, commanding a good view of the water, which, during the summer season, is covered with pleasure boats, and with fine yachts. Numerous respectable lodging-houses are let for the accommodation of visitors. On the beach is a causeway planted with trees, extending above half a mile. On the platform, which has been much enlarged, is an ancient piece of ordnance, presented by Henry VIII., and recently mounted on a handsome cast-iron carriage, the gift of John Fleming, Esq., member for the county. The barracks, erected here during the late war, and occupying about two acres of land, were, in 1816, considerably enlarged, and converted into a military asylum, as a branch of the institution at Chelsea, under the patronage of the late Duke of York, for the orphan children of soldiers, and of those whose mothers are dead, and their fathers absent on service: the buildings are of brick, handsome and commodious, and are appropriated to the reception of female children only. At Itchen Ferry, and on the western side of the town, are bathing-machines, with experienced guides. The environs are equally remarkable for the varied beauty of their scenery, and for the number of elegant mansions and villas. In addition to the numerous attractions which the town itself possesses, and the facilities afforded for aquatic excursions, there are, in various directions, extensive rides through a country abounding with objects of extreme interest, and enriched with a great variety of scenery.

The port, of which the jurisdiction extends from Langstone harbour, on the east, to Hurst castle on the west, and midway from Calshot castle to the Isle of Wight, carries on a considerable foreign trade: the imports are wine and fruit from Portugal; hemp, iron, and tallow, from Russia; pitch and tar from Sweden; and timber from other ports of the Baltic: it has also a considerable trade with Jersey and Guernsey. By act of parliament of Edward III., making Southampton one of the staple ports for the exportation of wool, all cargoes of that material, not originally shipped to those islands from this port, must either be re-landed here, or pay a duty at the custom-house. A coasting trade is also carried on with Wales, from which it imports iron and slates; with Newcastle, from which it imports coal, lead, and glass; and with various other places. The quay, on which stands a convenient custom-house, is accessible to vessels of two hundred and fifty tons' burden, and is commodiously adapted to the dispatch of business. Belonging to the port are one hundred and seventy-nine vessels, averaging a burden of forty-five tons. The harbour is spacious, and affords good anchorage for ships, which may ride at all times in security, being sheltered from all winds. Steam vessels proceed regularly, all the summer and autumn, from this port to Havre, and to Jersey and Guernsey; and there are sailing-packets on the same destination at all other seasons daily: steam-packets afford a constant communication with the Isle of Wight and Portsmouth in summer and autumn, and sailing vessels at other times. The trade of the town principally arises from the wants of the inhabitants and visitors. The trade is facilitated by the Itchen canal navigation to Winchester, the river itself being navigable as far as Northam; and a seventy-four gun ship and several frigates were built in the docks here during the late war. A canal to Salisbury, with a view to open a communication between this town and Bristol, was projected about thirty-five years since; but the design, after having been partly carried into effect, was abandoned, the capital having been expended before half of the work was completed. The market days are Tuesday, Thursday, Friday, and Saturday; the market on Friday is for corn: the markets are well supplied with fish, eggs, poultry, and provisions of every kind. The fairs are on May 6th and 7th, for cows and pigs, and on Trinity Monday and Tuesday: the latter, a very ancient fair, is proclaimed by the mayor with particular ceremony on the preceding Saturday, and continues till the Wednesday noon following; during which time the senior bailiff presides and entertains the corporation in a booth erected on the occasion: this fair, which is principally for horses, cattle, and pigs, is held on the eastern side of the town, near the site of an ancient hermitage, formerly occupied by William Geoffrey, to whom its revenue, arising from standings, &c., was originally granted; a court of pie-powder is attached to it, and during its continuance all persons are free from arrest for debt within the precincts of the borough.

The inhabitants were first incorporated in the reign of Henry I., whose charter was confirmed by Richard I., and by John, who assigned the customs of the port, together with those of Portsmouth, to the burgesses, for an annual payment of £200: their privileges were extended and confirmed by Henry VI., who erected the town, with a surrounding district, into a county of itself, and were modified by Charles I., by whose charter the government is vested in a mayor, sheriff, two bailiffs, an indefinite number of aldermen, and twenty-four common council-men, assisted by a recorder, town clerk, two coroners, four serjeants at mace, and subordinate officers. The mayor, who is also admiral of the port, the late mayor, the recorder, five senior aldermen, and two senior common council-men, together with the Bishop of Winchester, are justices of the peace within the borough and liberties. The freedom is obtained only by election of the corporation, who have the right of nominating an indefinite number of burgesses; among many illustrious personages to whom the freedom of the borough has been given were, Frederick, Prince of Wales, the then Dukes of York and Cumberland, George III., the late Duke of Cumberland, and his late Majesty George IV. The corporation hold quarterly courts of session for all offences not capital; and they have the privilege of holding assizes, when the judges are travelling the western circuit, to try for capital crimes committed within the limits of the town and county of the town. The mayor and bailiffs hold a court of record every Tuesday, for the recovery of debts to any amount. The inhabitants paying scot and lot have right of common on the Town Lands, adjoining the town, the most extensive of which is Southampton common, containing about three hundred and fifty acres. The audit-house is a handsome building, erected about fifty years since, comprising in the upper story a spacious hall, in which the business of the corporation is transacted, and the records and regalia are deposited; among the latter, which are splendid, is a silver oar borne before the mayor on public occasions, as the ensign of his admiralty jurisdiction. The guildhall is a spacious room above the arches of the ancient Bar gate, which is a beautiful and venerable structure in the Norman style of architecture: the principal archway is deeply moulded and enriched, and is flanked by circular embattled turrets, and the approach is ornamented with two lions sejant, cast in lead, presented to the corporation in 1744, in lieu of two which were decayed, by William Lee, Esq., on his being elected a burgess; the south side of the gateway is neatly faced with stone, with a niche in the centre, in which is a statue of George III., presented to the corporation by the late Marquis of Lansdowne, to replace a decayed figure of Queen Anne: the hall, in which the borough sessions and other courts are held, is fifty-two feet in length, and twenty-one feet wide, and is lighted with four handsome windows; adjoining it are a room for the grand jury, and other apartments. The common gaol for the borough comprises four rooms for twelve prisoners, but does not admit of classification. The bridewell, to which female prisoners alone are committed, contains three rooms, capable of receiving ten prisoners, and a small chapel, in which divine service is performed once in the week. The sheriff's prison for debtors contains two wards, and is adapted to the reception of ten prisoners. The borough exercised the elective franchise in the 23rd of Edward I., since which time it has regularly returned two members to parliament: the right of election is vested in the burgesses, resident and non-resident, and in the inhabitants generally paying scot and lot, of whom the number exceeds nine hundred: the mayor and bailiffs are the returning officers.

Southampton comprises the parishes of All Saints, Holy Rood, St. John and St. Lawrence united, St. Mary, and St. Michael, all, with the exception of St. Mary's, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Winchester. The living of All Saints' is a discharged rectory, rated in the king's books at £8. 1. 10½., endowed with £300 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Crown: the church, rebuilt on the enlarged site of an ancient structure, is in the Grecian style of architecture, with a turret at the east end rising from a square pedestal, and surrounded by six Corinthian columns, supporting a circular entablature surmounted by a dome. The west entrance is ornamented with four three-quarter columns of the Ionic order, supporting a triangular pediment; an entablature, resting upon Ionic pilasters, surrounds the building, which is of brick stuccoed; the interior, of which the roof is arched and handsomely panelled, is neatly arranged; the altar is within a deep recess, formed by the arch supporting the tower, and is lighted by a handsome window on each side: the area underneath the church is divided into arched catacombs, in one of which are deposited the remains of Captain Carteret, the celebrated circumnavigator, and of Bryan Edwards, author of the "History of the West Indies;" and on the north side of the altar is a mural tablet to the memory of the Rev. Dr. Mant, many years rector of the parish. The living of Holy Rood parish is a discharged vicarage, rated in the king's books at £12. 1. 10½., and in the patronage of the Provost and Fellows of Queen's College, Oxford:

the church is an ancient structure in the High-street, with a tower and spire at the south-west angle, and has a portico in front, within which the hustings are erected at elections of members for the borough: among the monuments is one by Rysbrach to Miss E. Stanley, sister of the Rt. Hon. Hans Stanley, with an epitaph written by the poet Thomson, who has immortalized her memory in his poem of the Seasons. The living of St. John's is a discharged rectory, rated in the king's books at £6. 13. 4., and united to that of St. Lawrence: the church is demolished. The living of the parish of St. Lawrence is a discharged rectory, with that of St. John's annexed, rated in the king's books at £7. 10., endowed with £800 royal bounty, and £800 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Crown: the church is a small ancient building. The living of St. Mary's is a rectory, in the precinct of the town, rated in the king's books at £37. 5. 5., in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Rector, and in the patronage of the Bishop of Winchester: the church is modern, with a very extensive churchyard, which is the principal cemetery of the town. The living of St. Michael's is a discharged vicarage, rated in the king's books at £12. 11. 10½., endowed with £400 private benefaction, £400 royal bounty, and £400 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Crown: the church is an ancient and spacious structure, principally in the Norman style of architecture, with a tower between the nave and the chancel, surmounted by a lofty and well-proportioned octagonal spire: the interior has been recently repaired, and has undergone considerable alterations, with the addition of nine hundred seats, seven hundred of them free, by grant of £350 from the Incorporated Society for the enlargement of churches and chapels: the massive circular columns that supported the roof have been replaced with lighter octangular pillars, and sharply pointed arches; the windows are of a later style, and the tracery of the large west window has been carefully restored, and the upper compartments embellished with stained glass; a new window of elegant design has been placed by the corporation in the chapel of this church, in which, from time immemorial, the mayors have been sworn into office: the ancient font, of Norman character and highly enriched, has been removed from an obscure situation at the east end of the church, and placed in the central area underneath the tower: there are some ancient monuments, and in the chapel is an old cenotaph of Lord Chancellor Wriothsley, who in the reign of Henry VIII. passed sentence of death on Queen Anne Boleyn. St. Paul's, a proprietary chapel in the parish of All Saints, a handsome edifice in the later style of English architecture, has been recently erected, under the superintendence of a committee. There is a handsome and commodious place of worship for Independents; a neat one for Baptists; others for the Society of Friends and Wesleyan Methodists; one in which the liturgy of the Church of England is read, but the service is conducted by a dissenting minister; and a neat Roman Catholic chapel of recent erection.

The free grammar school was founded in the reign of Edward VI.: the master is appointed by the corporation, who have recently erected a convenient school-house, capable of accommodating forty boarders, on the site of an ancient edifice, called Westhall: the endowment produces not more than about £30 per annum:

among other eminent men who have been educated in this school was the celebrated Dr. Watts, a native of Southampton, whose father kept a boarding-school in the town. A charity school was founded, in 1760, for qualifying twenty boys for the sea service, by Alderman Taunton, of this town, who left considerable funds for charitable uses: the original number of scholars has, by a decree of the court of Chancery, been reduced to ten, who are permitted to choose any mechanical trade, if they prefer it, and receive an apprentice fee of £5, and, on the expiration of their indentures, a present of £5.5., on producing a certificate of good conduct: pensions of £10 per annum were also paid from these funds to six decayed persons of the town, of whom the number has been increased to sixteen by a bequest of the late Charles D'Aussy, Esq.; and £40 per annum is appropriated from the same funds, as a reward for female servants, and a portion on their marriage. A National school, in which are one hundred and fifty boys, and the same number of girls, and a Lancasterian school, in which nearly the same number of both sexes are educated, are supported by subscription. There are also several infant schools, and various Sunday schools in connexion with the established church and the dissenting congregations. The ancient hospital of Domus Dei, or God's House, was originally founded in the reign of Henry III., partly as a convent for nuns, and as a chapel to a neighbouring friary, which was burned by the French in the reign of Edward III., by whom it was given to Queen's College, Oxford; after various changes it was established as an hospital for a warden, four brothers, and four sisters, who, in addition to their residence, have an allowance of two shillings a week from the college, and an annual supply of coal from other bequests: the buildings are ancient, and retain much of their original character; the ancient chapel was long used as a place of worship by the French Protestants. The hospital of St. John, on the site of which the present theatre has been built, consisted of a master and six boys; the latter are now taught the woollen manufacture in the workhouse, a spacious building well adapted to that and other purposes. Thorner's almshouses, a neat and commodious range of building, receiving their name from the funds for erecting them having arisen from a bequest by Robert Thorner, Esq., in 1690, for gradual accumulation, were originally built in 1789, and have lately been enlarged: they now accommodate twenty-six widows, who are allowed four shillings a week each. The same benefactor also bequeathed funds for apprenticing a certain number of poor children, with a premium of £5 each, and a present of £5 on expiration of the term of apprenticeship. Almshouses in St. Mary's parish were founded, in 1565, by Richard Butler, mayor, and built on ground given by Thomas Lynton, mayor, in 1545. Six small unendowed tenements, near the workhouse, of which the origin is unknown, are appropriated by the corporation as residences for the poor. The penitentiary, or refuge for destitute females, supported by donations and subscription, is a spacious and commodious building, with a handsome chapel attached to it, recently erected in front of Kingsland-place, and conducted on a plan well calculated to reclaim and restore to society unfortunate females, who are here accustomed to regular and industrious habits, and qualified for employment as servants. The public dispensary was established in

VOL. IV.

1823, for the relief of poor invalids not receiving parochial aid, and is gratuitously attended by the physicians and surgeons of the town, who visit patients at their own houses: it is under the direction of a president and committee, and is liberally supported by subscription. The ladies' lying-in charity was established in 1812, and, under the direction of a committee of ladies, administers extensive relief and assistance to the poor at their own houses. Miss Elizabeth Bird bequeathed £1400 three per cents. to the mayor and corporation, in trust, for the annual payment of £5 each to six unmarried women, members of the church of England, and upwards of sixty years of age, who must appear every Sunday at church, wearing a silver medal with the device of the testator, and dine together, at a table prepared for them by the rector of All Saints' parish, to whom she bequeathed a sum for that purpose. There are a Royal Humane Society, and several benefit and friendly societies. A repository for the sale of works, drawings, and other productions of the necessitous, was established in 1828, under the patronage of Her present Majesty, when Duchess of Clarence: by this institution, fifty children are taught and employed in netting, till of an age to go to service; they pursue their employment in the cottages of their parents, and generally earn about five shillings a week. There are various charitable bequests for distribution among the poor. The ancient castle, which was repaired and strengthened by Richard II., was situated on the west side of the town: the walls included a semicircular area, the town wall towards the sea forming the chord; the keep was situated in the south part of the area. Of this fortress there are no vestiges: the ruins and the site became the property of the late Marquis of Lansdowne, who erected a handsome castellated mansion on the spot, at an expense of £70,000, which, after his death, was sold as building materials, and taken down, and a chapel and several tenements were erected on its site. At Bittern, about a mile and a quarter from the town, supposed to have been the old station Clausentum, numerous Roman antiquities have been discovered, among which were considerable vestiges of a fortification, and a portion of a Roman wall, coins from the reign of Claudius to those of Valentinian and Valens, tessellated pavements, bricks, fragments of pottery, urns, vases, and sculptured stones, on several of which were Roman inscriptions. Southampton gives the title of baron to the family of Fitzroy.

SOUTHAMPTON (COUNTY of), a maritime county on the southern coast, bounded on the east by the counties of Surrey and Sussex, on the north by that of Berks, on the west by Wiltshire and Dorsetshire, and on the south by the English Channel. Including the Isle of Wight, it extends from 50° 36' to 51° 23' (N. Lat.), and from 45' to 1° 53' (W. Lon.); and comprises an area of upwards of one thousand six hundred and twenty-eight square miles, or one million forty-one thousand nine hundred and twenty statute acres. The population, in 1821, was 283,298.

At the period of the invasion of Britain by Cæsar, the southern parts of this district formed a portion of the territory of the Regni; and the more northern tracts, part of that of the Belgæ, who had come over from Gaul, and violently dispossessed the former inhabitants. Under the Romans, it was included in the division called Britannia Prima. The Isle of Wight, called by the Romans Vectis, is mentioned by Suetonius as having been conquered by Vespasian, about the year 43: no other traces of Roman occupation have, however, been at any time discovered in it than a few coins. At a subsequent period, the inhabitants of this part of the country bravely defended themselves against the fierce invasions of the Saxons. In the year 501, about fifty years after the first arrival of Hengist in Kent, Cerdic made a descent upon these shores at Charford, and a band of his allies, under Porta, effected a landing, with the crews of two ships, at Portsmouth. On the establishment of the kingdom of Wessex, by Cerdic, a great part of the county was included within the limits of that kingdom, at the same time that a part of its southern shores, together with the Isle of Wight, was comprised in the Saxon kingdom of Kent. The only British king whom the Saxons mention in the battles that preceded the establishment of this West Saxon kingdom, was Natanleod, who appears only in one great battle, fought in the tract now constituting the New Forest, in 508, in which he fell, with five thousand of his men; and such was the extent of his disaster, that all the territory near the scene of conflict was afterwards called by his name. In 519, Cerdic and his son Cynric obtained a victory over the Britons at Cerdices-ford, and from this time the Saxon Chronicle dates the reign of the West Saxon kings. In 528, another conflict is mentioned at Cerdices-leah, but its issue is not stated; and, in 530, Cerdic and his son conquered the Isle of Wight with great slaughter. This chieftain, who died in 534, appears only to have maintained himself in the district where he landed, and Mr. Whitaker thinks that all his operations were confined to this county; but his posterity enlarged his settlement into a kingdom so powerful as finally to absorb every other similar establishment in the island: its capital city was Winchester. In the year 661, the Isle of Wight was subdued by Wulfere, King of Mercia, who bestowed it upon the king of the South Saxons; but Ceadwalla, King of Wessex, a descendent of Cerdic's, retook it about fifteen years afterwards.

The next remarkable occurrence upon record is, that a large fleet of the northern vikingr, or sea-kings, suddenly appeared off the coast of this county, in 860, and ravaged the country as far as Winchester, which city they plundered; but, being pursued on returning to their ships, they were overtaken, and defeated by the Earls of Hampshire and Berkshire. In 787, the Isle of Wight was seized by the Danes, who apparently designed to make it a place of retreat, whither they might retire with their plunder from the neighbouring coasts. How long they maintained themselves here is uncertain; but, in the reign of Alfred, they again landed on the island, and plundered the inhabitants. At Basing, in 870, the kings of Wessex, Ethelred and Alfred, were defeated by the North men. In 1001, in the reign of Ethelred, the Danes once more seized the Isle of Wight, and kept possession of it for many years after; and at Winchester, on November 13th, 1002, began the general massacre of that people, by Ethelred's order. In the reign of Edward the Confessor, the Isle of Wight was twice plundered by Earl Godwin, and again, in the reign of Harold, by Earl Tosti. The ancient British name of this district was Gwent, or Y Went, a term descriptive of its open downs; and hence the appellation Caer Gwent, or the city of the Gwentians, now Winchester. When the Saxon dominions in Britain were divided into shires, this district received the name of Hamtunscyre, from the ancient name of the present town of Southampton: this was afterwards corrupted into Hamptescyre, and hence its modern appellations of Hampshire and Hants. The name of the Isle of Wight is considered, by Mr. Whitaker and other antiquaries, to have been derived from the British word Guith, or Guict, signifying, the divorced or separated, and apparently indicating a supposition of its having once been connected with the main land: hence also arose its Roman name of Vectis, or the separated region: by the Saxons it was called Weet. It was off this island, in 1080, that William the Conqueror surprised his brother, the Bishop of Baieux, when setting out on his expedition to Italy; and in it he assembled the Norman chiefs, in whose presence he sentenced the bishop to imprisonment for quitting the realm without his permission.

Between the period of the battle of Hastings, in 1066, and the Norman survey in 1086, William laid waste a large tract of country, in the south-western part of Hampshire, for the purpose of making a royal chase, destroying a great number of villages, together with no fewer than thirty-six parochial churches. The accidents that occurred to the family of the Conqueror in the New Forest (as this extensive waste has ever since been called) were regarded, by the oppressed Saxons, with a sort of patriotic superstition, as judgments for the cruelty of which that monarch had been guilty in forming it. In 1081, Richard, son of William, died, in consequence of having been dashed against a tree by his horse, in this forest; in 1100, Richard, son of Duke Robert, and nephew to William Rufus, was killed there by an arrow discharged inadvertently; and William II. himself perished in this forest by a similar accident, in July of the same year. Winchester, from the earliest period of the Saxon kingdom of Wessex, had been the residence of the West Saxon monarchs; and, after the subjection of the other kingdoms of the Octarchy to the dominion of the sovereigns of Wessex, it continued to be one of the principal seats of the Saxon kings of England, as it was also of those of the Norman race, after the Conquest. The proximity of the New Forest to this city occasioned it to be the most frequented of the royal chases. Immediately on the death of William Rufus, his younger brother, Henry, hastened to Winchester, possessed himself of the royal treasure, and thence returned to London, where he was crowned. In 1101, however, Robert, Duke of Normandy, the Conqueror's eldest son, landed from the continent, with an army, at Portsmouth, to dispossess his brother of the crown which he had usurped, when an accommodation was effected through the mediation of the barons. At Portsmouth also, in 1140, the Empress Maud and her brother Robert, Earl of Gloucester, landed, with only one hundred and forty attendants, designing to wrest the crown from the usurper Stephen; and, in the internal commotions that ensued, this county was the scene of much bloodshed. At Winchester, the king's forces and those of the empress carried on active military operations against each other for the space of seven weeks, the latter being ultimately compelled to retreat into the castle, which was thereupon vigorously besieged: the empress escaped by stratagem, and fled to Gloucester; but her troops, marching out, were pursued by the royal army, and the Earl of Gloucester was taken prisoner at Stockbridge. On an exchange of prisoners (the earl being given up by one party, and King Stephen by the other), the earl again came to Winchester, but was compelled to abandon it by an army collected from the surrounding country.

King John, having been compelled to sign Magna Charta, at Runymede, retired to the Isle of Wight, where he remained pending his correspondence with the pope for absolution from the oaths that he had then taken, and whilst raising, on the continent, the mercenary troops which he afterwards employed to revenge himself on the barons. In 1016, in the sequel of the same contest, Odiham castle was defended for John, by only three officers and ten men, against Louis the Dauphin and his army, for the space of fifteen days. In the year 1338, the town of Southampton was plundered and burned by a force consisting of French, Spaniards, and Genoese; but the son of the king of Sicily, with three hundred of the invaders, was slain. In the year 1346, on July 6th, Edward III., and his son, Edward, the Black Prince, sailed from Southampton with the army with which they afterwards gained the victory of Crecy. In the reigns of Edward III. and Richard II., the Isle of Wight was several times assaulted by the French, and partially plundered. Carisbrooke castle, then the only fortress in it, was besieged by these invaders in the year 1377, but without success, and with great loss to the assailants. In this expedition, the French burned the village of Rye, and the towns of Yarmouth and Newtown, and levied a contribution of one thousand marks upon the inhabitants, whose non-resistance on oath they exacted in the event of their revisiting it within a year. In 1415, at Southampton, where Henry V. was preparing to embark with the army that afterwards distinguished itself on the plain of Agincourt, the conspiracy against the life of that monarch was discovered, for which the Earl of Cambridge and Sir Thomas Grey suffered death. The lordship of the Isle of Wight, in the 17th of Henry VI., came into the possession of Humphrey, Duke of Gloucester, to whom it had been granted in reversion, who seems to have enjoyed it until his death; although, two years previously to that event, Henry Beauchamp, Duke of Warwick, was made king of the Isle of Wight, by patent from Henry VI., the king himself assisting at the ceremony of his coronation: this nobleman died soon after, without male issue. At Beaulieu abbey, in 1471, Margaret of Anjou, and her son, Prince Edward, took sanctuary, on hearing of the defeat and death of the Earl of Warwick, until, being joined by the Duke of Somerset and other partisans, the queen was persuaded once more to enter the field. Sir Edward Widville, in the first of Henry VII., was made captain of the Isle of Wight; and, about three years afterwards, to ingratiate himself with the king, he persuaded the inhabitants to undertake an expedition to France, in aid of the Duke of Brittany, who was then in arms against the French monarch. From the numbers that flocked to his standard he selected about forty gentlemen and four hundred of the commonalty, and embarked with them for Brittany, in four vessels. In a battle fought at St. Aubin's, Sir Edward and all the English were slain, excepting one boy, who brought home the melancholy tidings. To encourage the population of the island, so much reduced by this slaughter, an act was soon afterwards passed, prohibiting any of the inhabitants from holding lands, farms, or tithes, above the annual rent of ten marks. Perkin Warbeck, after his repulse before Exeter, in 1498, took sanctuary at Beaulieu, whence he surrendered himself to Henry VII., on promise of his life being spared. In 1573, the Emperor Charles V., who had been entertained at Winchester by Henry VIII., embarked at Southampton to return to Spain. In the thirty-sixth of the same reign, the French landed two thousand men in the Isle of Wight, from the fleet commanded by D'Annebaut, who began to plunder and burn the villages, but were suddenly attacked by the captain of the island, Sir R. Worsley, and compelled to retreat to their ships, with the loss of their general and a considerable number of men: several forts were soon after constructed on different parts of the coast of this island. At Southampton, July 21st, 1554, Philip, Prince of Spain, afterwards Philip II., landed, and was united in marriage, on July 25th, at Winchester, to Mary, Queen of England. At Portsmouth, in 1628, George Villiers, Duke of Buckingham, whilst preparing to embark, as commander of an expedition to relieve the Protestants of Rochelle, was assassinated by Felton.

Early in the civil war of the seventeenth century, the parliament obtained possession of the Isle of Wight, by the removal of Jerome, Earl of Portland, who was attached to the royal cause; and, shortly after, Carisbrook castle was taken from the Countess of Portland and Col. Brett, to whom the king had entrusted it, by the Newport militia, aided by four hundred auxiliaries from vessels lying in the Medina river. The other forts in the island were also, in like manner, seized for the parliament, who appointed Philip, Earl of Pembroke, its governor; and it thenceforward happily escaped being a scene of that warfare which soon after desolated almost every other part of the kingdom: indeed, the security here enjoyed induced many families from the main land to take refuge in the island, until the period of the Restoration. In December 1643, in an engagement at Alton, in this county, the royalist Col. Bowles was killed, and his regiment taken prisoners, by the parliamentary forces under Sir William Waller; and, in October 1645, Basing House, which had been heroically defended by the Marquis of Winchester, from August 1643, was at length stormed and taken by Cromwell in person. In 1647, Charles I., after his escape from Hampton Court, remained in concealment at Titchfield House, in this county, until he there surrendered himself to Col. Hammond, then Governor of the Isle of Wight, by whom he was conveyed to Carisbrook castle. After having been detained there, first as guest, and afterwards as prisoner, for the space of thirteen months, he was removed in close custody to Hurst castle, by a detachment of the parliamentary army, on November 29th, 1648, whence he was shortly after conducted to London. At Portsmouth, on May 14th, 1662, landed Catherine, Infanta of Portugal, who was the next day given in marriage to Charles II. Bishop's Waltham and its neighbourhood, in the early part of the last century, were infested by a daring gang of depredators, who, from their custom of blacking their faces to prevent discovery, were termed "Waltham Blacks," and to repress whose excesses the famous Black Act was passed, in the 9th of George II., 1723. Shortly after the termination of the decisive campaign of 1815, His Majesty's ship Bellerophon appeared off Portsmouth, having on board Napoleon Buonaparte, who had submitted himself to the mercy of the British government.

William the Conqueror, on his accession to the throne of England, granted the lordship of the Isle of Wight, with a palatine jurisdiction, to his kinsman, William Fitz-Osbert. It afterwards several times escheated to, and otherwise became vested in, the crown, and was as often granted to different noble families. Whether the Sir Edward Widville in the time of Henry VII., before mentioned, had received a grant of the lordship of it, is uncertain; but since the period of his death it has remained in the possession of the Crown, although some lands annexed to the castle at Carisbrook continue to be holden by the governor jure officii. From the time that Edward I. purchased this lordship of Isabella de Fortibus, the defence of the island was generally entrusted to some person nominated by the crown, who was at first distinguished by the appellation of warden, afterwards by that of captain and, in later times, by that of governor.

This county is included in the diocese of Winchester, and province of Canterbury: the archdeaconry of Winchester is co-extensive with the county, and comprises the deaneries of Alresford, Alton, Andover, Basingstoke, Droxford, Fordingbridge, Sombourn, Southampton, Isle of Wight, and Winchester: the total number of parishes is three hundred and five, of which one hundred and fifty-four are rectories, seventy-two vicarages, and the remainder perpetual curacies. For purposes of civil government it is parcelled into the divisions of Alton (North), comprising the liberty of Alresford, and the hundreds of Alton, Bishop's Sutton, and Selborne; Alton (South), comprising the hundreds of East-Meon and Finch-Dean; Andover, comprising the hundreds of Andover, Barton-Stacey, King's-Sombourn, Thorngate, and Wherwell; Basingstoke, comprising the hundreds of Basingstoke, Bermondspit, Crondall, Holdshott, Mitcheldever, and Odiham; Fawley, comprising the hundreds of Bountisborough, Buddlesgate, Fawley, Mainsborough, and Mansbridge; Kingsclere, comprising the hundreds of Chutely, Evingar, Kingsclere, Overton, and Pastrow; New Forest (East), comprising the liberties of Beaulieu, Dibden, and Lymington, and the hundreds of New Forest (East), New Forest (North), and Redbridge, and parts of Ringwood and Bishop's-Waltham; New Forest (West), comprising the liberties of Breamore and Westover, and the hundreds of Christchurch, Fordingbridge, and part of Ringwood; Portsdown, comprising the liberties of Alverstoke with Gosport, and Havant, and the hundreds of Bosmere, Fareham, Hambledon, Meon-Stoke, Portsdown, Titchfield, and part of Bishop's-Waltham; and Isle of Wight, comprising the liberties of East and West Medina. It contains the city of Winchester; the borough, market, and sea-port towns of Christchurch, Lymington, Newport, Portsmouth, Southampton, and Yarmouth; the borough and market towns of Andover, Petersfield, Stockbridge, and Whitchurch; the borough and sea-port town of Newtown; the small sea-port towns of Emsworth (a dependency on the harbour of Portsmouth) and Brading; and the market towns of New Alresford, Alton, Basingstoke, Fareham, Fordingbridge, Gosport, Havant, Kingsclere, Odiham, Ringwood, Romsey, and Bishop's-Waltham. Two knights are returned to parliament for the shire, two representatives for the city of Winchester, and two for each of the boroughs: the county members are elected at Winchester. Hampshire is included in the western circuit: the assizes and quarter sessions are held at Winchester. There are one hundred and ten acting magistrates. The rates raised in the county for the year ending March 25th, 1827, amounted to £213,406.4.0., the expenditure to £210,526.13., of which, £184,928.18., was applied to the relief of the poor.

The form of the county, exclusively of the Isle of Wight, approaches nearly to a square, having a triangular projection at its south-western corner. The Isle of Wight is separated from the main land by a strait of unequal breadth, formerly called the Solent Sea, now the Sound, or, more usually, the West Channel, the distance across which, at its western extremity, is only about a mile, while, towards its eastern end, it is as much as seven miles. The form of the island is somewhat rhomboidal, the greatest diagonal breadth being twenty-three miles from east to west, and the transverse diameter, from north to south, about thirteen miles. The surface of the whole county is beautifully varied by gently rising hills and fruitful valleys, and, in some parts, with extensive tracts of woodland. In the southern districts, approaching the coast, the population is much more dense than elsewhere; the mildness of the seasons, the beauty of the landscapes, and the proximity to the ports, operating as strong inducements to the continued residence of many families, besides those engaged in commercial pursuits. The agricultural report drawn up by Charles Vancouver, Esq., for the consideration of the Hon. the Board of Agriculture, divides the main land into five districts. The first, called the woodland district, occupies the northern portion of the county, comprising an area of one hundred and three thousand nine hundred and forty-four acres, and may be separated from the other parts by a line passing from the borders of Surrey, near Farnham in that county, immediately to the south of Odiham, to the north of Basingstoke, and to the south of Kingsclere and Highclere, to the confines of Berkshire, near East Woodhay: this includes the woodlands and wastes of Bagshot, &c. Its soil and substrata are various: in the eastern part of it are some darkish-coloured sands and a gravelly mould of good depth resting upon a dry subsoil, but intermingled with a stronger and wetter brown loam. The borders of the streams have narrow tracts of meadow and pasture land, the soil of which is, for the most part, a dark-coloured sandy, or gravelly, loam, lying on a variety of substrata of clay, loam, peat, and gravel, and abounding in springs, which render it of a wet and spongy nature, and cause it to produce herbage of inferior quality. The great mass of this district, however, has a strong brown and grey loam, resting upon a tough blue and yellow clay, having generally an excess of moisture, with numerous unsound and boggy places. Ascending from the woodland valley northward, the soil becomes of a rather lighter quality; but, still proceeding northward, this improvement is lost on a thin sandy and gravelly mould, lying upon deep beds of white, red, and yellow sand and gravel, and a wet hungry loam, upon a moist, loose, white and yellow clay, which constitute the soil of part of Bagshot heath and Frimley common, in the county of Surrey. Along the southern side of this district, is a tract composed of a temperate mixed soil, situated between the heavy clays, just mentioned, and the chalk district, which will hereafter be described; upon this is found a large proportion of valuable grass land. Peat is got in the wastes, and in some of the enclosed grounds: a large quantity is annually dug on the commons of Cove, Farnborough, and Aldershot. The second district comprises the whole body of the county, from the borders of Wiltshire to those of Sussex and Surrey, being bounded, on the north, by the last-mentioned tract, and, on the south, by a line drawn from the vicinity of Sherfield-English, on the western confines of the county, near Lockerley, Mottisfont, Mitchelmarsh, and Hursley, to the south of Bishop's-Waltham, and to the north of Hambledon and Catherington, towards the eastern boundary: it is computed to contain four hundred and fifty-four thousand two hundred and ninety-five acres; and the higher parts of this large central district have much the appearance of an elevated plain, divided into many unequal portions, and intersected by deep hollows, through which the brooks and rivulets rising in these elevated tracts descend, for the most part in a southerly course, towards the sea. In these vallies are considerable tracts of meadow and pasture land, and by far the greater number of the habitations in this district is situated in them. The higher tracts are almost wholly in open and extensive sheep downs: the substratum is throughout a firm unbroken bed of chalk. The soil covering some of them is provincially called hazel-mould, being light, dry, friable, and arenaceous, resting upon a chalk rubble containing flint, and naturally producing a short, but excellent, pasturage for sheep: another kind of the down land consists of a black vegetable mould, resting on a nearly similar substratum: a third is a thin grey loam, lying immediately on a firm bed of chalk, and constituting a very great proportion of the downs: a fourth sort consists of a deep, strong, red, flinty loam, lying, at the various depths of from one to eight or ten feet, upon the firm chalk rock; this is usually found on the flat summits of the lesser eminences, of which the brows and acclivities are occupied by a fifth description, which is of a thin staple, and chiefly consists of decomposed chalk, being favourable to the production of turnips and sainfoin. Below these hills a deep, strong, grey loam frequently occurs, the tillage of which, together with that of the red loam, is very difficult: the crops of wheat produced upon it are great. In other parts of this district, soils of a darker colour, equally strong, are met with; and in the numerous hollows intersecting the whole, exclusively of the valleys traversed by running streams, the surface is formed of an assemblage of small flat flints, combined together by a proportionably small quantity of extremely tough loam. This is provincially termed shrave; and there is another sort of it, consisting of a coarse red pebbly gravel, mixed with a small proportion of tough red loam, or, more commonly, with a dry sand, or small gravel. The soil of the deeper valleys is a black vegetable mould, resting on a strong calcareous loam, in which occur large chasms occupied by masses of peat, which is occasionally dug for fuel, or to be burned for manuring the ground with its ashes; numerous trunks of trees are found in this earth. The third district is small, containing only forty-nine thousand five hundred and twenty-five acres, and including the forests of Woolmer and Alice-Holt, the hills of Binfield, Great and Little Worldham, Selborne, and Empshot, together with all the lower sides of the chalk hills surrounding and forming the vale of Petersfield, the soil of which is, for the most part, a grey sandy loam of good staple, lying on a kind of soft sand rock, being provincially termed malmy land. In the vale of Petersfield, formed by the chalk downs and the heaths of Woolmer Forest and its appendages, and traversed by a small branch of the river Loddon, the soil consists of a tough, brown, flinty clay, found at a certain distance from the chalk, interspersed with tracts of light sandy loam. Ascending from this valley, in a north-easterly direction from the town, from which it takes its name, is an extensive tract of sandy and gravelly heath, part of which has been applied to the culture of Scotch fir, and which extends along the borders of Sussex, within and upon the confines of Woolmer Forest. Still further, in the same direction, is found a considerable tract of convertible sandy loam, which forms good turnip land: small quantities of stronger soil are also found, while the vallies have a thin moory soil upon a clay of different colours: peat is obtained here also, chiefly upon the wastes, and in Woolmer and Alice-Holt Forests. The fourth district includes the whole southern part of the county situated on the main land (excepting a tract of twenty-six thousand eight hundred and ninety-five acres, at its south-eastern extremity), and comprises an area of three hundred and thirty-three thousand four hundred and eighty-nine acres. This large division, besides many extensive wastes and commons, comprehends the Forest of Bere, the New Forest, and Waltham Chase: its soils are various, but consist chiefly of light sandy and gravelly loams, intermixed with clay and brick-earth, and resting on substrata of argillaceous and calcareous marl. The heaths and commons chiefly comprise the higher lands between Gosport and Titchfield, between Titchfield, Bursledon, and Botley, and between the two latter places and the river Itchen: the cultivated district lying north of Southampton, Millbrook, and Redbridge, is also much contracted in extent by the extensive commons of Shirley and Southampton. Descending southward from the heaths, the surrounding country preserves a smooth and uniform appearance, until broken on the south-west by Hill-common and Tatchbury Mount, beyond which occurs a considerable extent of flat low ground, including Netley marsh, and thence extending towards Eling, and, for some distance westward, into the New Forest. Along the confines of the New Forest, and bordering upon the western side of Southampton water, the surface is much broken by hills. On the western side of the Avon the country rises suddenly, and spreads into extensive heaths and commons, upon which many plantations of forest trees have been made: a portion of Poole heath, so called from the vicinity of the town of Poole, in Dorsetshire, is included within the limits of Hampshire. Much peat and turf moor is found on the heaths, low grounds, and wastes. Hayling

Island, forming the south-western extremity of the county, and Portsea Island, containing the town of Portsmouth, together with the tracts on the main land immediately opposite to them, constitute the fifth district, comprising an area of twenty-six thousand eight hundred and ninety-five acres. In the islands and low grounds of the main land, a strong flinty and a tender hazel-coloured loam prevail. The soil and substrata of Portsdown hill, in the different degrees of its elevation, are similar to those of the chalk district. A large extent of Portsea Island is occupied as garden ground, and is very productive: on the coasts of this island, particularly on its eastern side, as well as on those of Hayling Island, is much loamy marsh land, subject to occasional inundation by spring tides, and chiefly appropriated as salterns. Its southern side is generally sandy, and the bed of shingles, on its south-eastern coast, affords large supplies of ballast to the coasting vessels, as well as an inexhaustible store of materials, of a good quality, for making and repairing the roads between Fareham and Chichester.

Some of the finest views in the main land are from Farley hill; Portsdown hill, on which a large fair is held on July 26th; Weyhill, on which is held another on October 11th; Danebury hill, Sidon hill, and Eaglehurst cliff. Through the centre of the Isle of Wight, from east to west, extends a range of lofty hills, affording only pasturage for sheep, and commanding views over every part of the island, with the ocean on the south, and the beautiful shores of Hampshire on the north. Its surface is otherwise much diversified: on the coast the land is, in some parts, very high, particularly on the south, where the cliffs are very steep, and vast fragments of rock, which the waves have at some time undermined, lie scattered below: on the northern side, the ground slopes to the water in easy declivities, excepting towards the Needles, or western extremity, where the rocks are bare, broken, and precipitous. The height of the cliffs, of which the Needles form the extreme point, is, in some places, six hundred feet above the level of the sea; in some parts they are perpendicular, and in others overhanging; they contain many deep caverns. The Needles derive their name from a lofty pointed rock rising to the height of about one hundred and twenty feet above low water mark, and severed, with others, from the main land, by the force of the waves: part of this rocky projection, about sixty years ago, having been undermined by the sea, fell, and totally disappeared. St. Catherine's hill, the highest point in the island, rises seven hundred and fifty feet above the level of high water mark, and commands magnificent prospects; as also do the Culver cliffs, at the eastern end of the island; Carisbrook castle, and Bembridge down. The soil and substrata of the Isle of Wight are extremely various. It may be said, generally, however, that the soil of the enclosed and depastured marshes and low grounds bordering on the Yarmouth river, on the inlets of Shalfleet and Newtown, on the Medina river between Newport and Cowes, on the Wootton and Ryde rivers, and of the embanked marshes above Brading haven, is composed of a tender hazel-coloured loam, lying, in some places, upon a blue, or rather black, sea-clay, but from which it is most frequently separated by a bed of coarse sand, or fine gravel. The surface mould of the low grounds and meadows, bordering the higher parts of the courses of these streams, is variable, in proportion to the quantity and quality of the adventitious matter washed down from the surrounding hills. On the whole northern side of the island, and for a considerable distance along its southern shores, the prevailing character of the soil is a rough strong clay, of different colours, in which are a blueish argillaceous marl, and a pure white shell marl. In the other parts are chiefly found tender red sand, and a gravelly mould, with argillaceous and calcareous marl, chalk, and its usual accompaniments, red loam and flints; and though the superior fruitfulness of most of these soils generally corresponds with the high estimation in which they are held by the inhabitants, yet some heaths and commons occur, and there are several small tracts of morass, the chief of which is on the western branch of the Medina river. The chalk downs of Brading and Arreton form an unbroken range from Culver cliff, on the eastern coast, to the valley that separates them from Staple's heath: those of Gatcombe and Shorwell are isolated from the western range by a highly-cultivated valley, extending from Shorwell to Newport, and terminating northward in the waste called Parkhurst Forest. From the vale of Shorwell to the western extremity of the island the high chalk downs are broken only by three gaps, or carriage-roads, one of which is the passage between the head of the Yarmouth river and the innermost cove of Freshwater bay. The tract of downs situated towards the southern extremity of the island terminates abruptly towards the sea, in a precipice of limestone rock, having the appearance, particularly when seen from a distance, of an immense stone wall, and overhanging the romantic tract called the Undercliff, which extends along the sea-shore for a distance of nearly six miles.

In the northern, or woodland, district of the county, and in that comprising the forests of Woolmer and Alice-Holt, &c., the climate is generally mild, but a considerable degree of cold damp is exhaled. The most prevalent winds in the former are from the south-west, and are frequently accompanied by fogs that last for several days. In the elevated and extensive chalk district the air is dry, thin, and healthy, and the westerly winds, which are by far the most frequent, are often experienced with great violence. In the lower tracts, approaching the coast, the climate is very mild, and the westerly winds are by much the most common and violent. Along the borders of the Southampton water agues are still experienced, though by no means to the extent that they formerly were. In the islands of Hayling and Portsea, and upon the surrounding shores, the same malady very commonly appears towards the close of summer; but the higher parts of this south-western district have a dry, and generally a keen, air. In the Isle of Wight is experienced all the variety of climate felt in other parts of the county: the air is, however, favourable to human health; and its mildness and salubrity are particularly remarkable on the southern borders, where much advantage is annually derived by invalids resorting thither for a short period, particularly by such as are afflicted with pulmonary diseases. The southern shores are much exposed to the fury of westerly gales, while the northern side, although in a great measure exempt from the like violent visitations, is, nevertheless, later in its seasons than the southern, by the space of ten days or a fortnight.

On the arable lands of the county, the rotations of crops are various: the grain generally cultivated consists of wheat, barley, oats, rye, peas, and beans. The early wheat is almost universally eaten off by sheep, in the month of March, and sometimes even a little later. The produce of this grain varies greatly: that of barley, sown after turnips, averages thirty-five bushels, and of the same corn sown after wheat, from four and a half to five bushels less per acre. Oats are generally cultivated as food for horses only: the common produce is little above thirty bushels per acre, and frequently less: the straw, as well as that of barley, is found of much value as winter food for cattle. Rye is chiefly grown as a corn crop in the valley of the Avon, and in the parish of Christchurch; the produce is about eighteen bushels per acre: in most other parts of the county it is cultivated for the purpose of being eaten green by cattle. Peas of different sorts are in common cultivation; but beans are not so frequently met with: the produce of both is uncertain: the bean crop is generally cut with a reaping-hook. Turnips and tares are commonly cultivated: coleseed, or rape, by which latter name this plant is here most generally designated, is cultivated as food for sheep only. Cabbages are seldom grown for the purpose of feeding cattle with them; but, as a vegetable, for supplying the large towns and the immense quantity of shipping resorting to the southern coast, they are extensively raised in all convenient situations: potatoes are largely cultivated for the like purpose. The most common artificial grasses are the common broad clover, ray-grass, trefoil, sainfoin, and lucern: burnet is a plant that forms a large portion of the herbage of the downs: a much larger and stronger species is found on many of the low grounds, and upon the cold clay loams, where, as upon the downs, it has every appearance of being indigenous. In the parish of Alton and its vicinity, upon the borders of Surrey, hops are grown to a great extent: the produce varies greatly, but may be estimated, on an average, at about five hundred weight per acre: their culture has been much encouraged by the reputation of the Farnham hops, that town, in Surrey, being situated only at the distance of a few miles. Hemp and flax are sometimes cultivated. Several of the manures employed are remarkable: the principal are, marl, which is found, of different colours and properties, in many of the parishes within, and upon the confines of, the New Forest, towards Lymington, and in some of the more cultivated parts, particularly on the northern side of the Isle of Wight, as well as on the wastes between Southampton water and the Beaulieu river; malme, a kind of marl, or chalky clay, found at Timsbury, above Romsey, and many other places along the valley of the Test, as high as the parish of Romsey, both of a black and of a white kind, as also in one or two other places; and chalk, which is extensively used, more especially on the strong lands, within a convenient distance of the Southampton water, to which it is brought from Fareham, from Portsdown hill, and even from the coasts of Kent and Essex. Much chalk is also employed in the islands of Portsea and Hayling, and in the northern, or woodland district; as are also turf, peat, and coal-ashes, in situations where they can be procured; on the sea-coast, rack, or sea-weed, is sometimes used. The most extensive and valuable tracts of meadow land are upon the borders of the various rivers: those of the best quality produce about thirty-six hundred weight of hay per acre. This county is particularly noted for its irrigated meadows, some of the principal of which are situated on the respective courses of the Test, the Anton, the Itchen, and the stream which passes through Titchfield to the sea, at Hilt Head. The green sward of the southern side of the Isle of Wight is, in numerous places, of a very rich quality: pastures of the same description are situated on the Medina river, above Newport, and upon some of the principal branches of the Brading river. The embanked marshes of Brading and Yaverland, in this island, form a valuable tract of rich feeding land: almost all the other embanked lands on the coasts of the islands, as well as of the main land of the county, have been appropriated as salterns for the manufacture of sea and medicinal salts: many of these salt-works are now abandoned, but the brine and bitumen with which the ground is saturated, prevent their being brought into tillage.

Hampshire possesses no particular breed of cattle: those of Sussex, Suffolk, Hereford, Glamorgan, and North and South Devon, are indiscriminately met with, and are generally preferred for draught: many cattle of the Leicester breed are also seen. In dairy establishments the same indiscriminate intermixture is observed. Many cows are kept, in different parts of the county, for the purpose of suckling calves to supply the markets of London, Portsmouth, Chichester, Winchester, Newbury, Reading, Salisbury, &c., with veal. The number of sheep kept is remarkably great. In the woodland district the heath sheep, or the Old Hampshire, or Wiltshire breed, were formerly the most common, but have now, in many places, given way to breeds crossed between the New Leicester and others. The South Down breed occupies a great extent of the county, particularly of the open downs of the chalk district: upon the chalk downs of the Isle of Wight it is equally prevalent, although in that island are found many of the Dorsetshire breed, sometimes intermingled with the New Leicester. Numerous hogs are fed for a few weeks, at the close of the autumn, upon the mast produced in the forest and other woodlands; and a superior mode of curing being practised, the Hampshire bacon has become famous for its excellence. The native hog is a coarse, raw-boned, flat-sided animal, now seldom met with, the common stock being either of the Berkshire breed, or of a mixed kind between that and different other breeds. The horses have generally a coarse and heavy appearance. Upon the heaths and forests vast numbers of light small horses are bred, generally about twelve hands high, and provincially termed heath-croppers, which propagate indiscriminately upon these wastes, where they succeed in maintaining an existence throughout the year. The cliffs, at the western extremity of the Isle of Wight, are frequented by an immense number of marine birds, such as puffins, razor-bills, willcocks, gulls, cormorants, and Cornish choughs, as well as by daws, starlings, and wild pigeons, some of which come only for a certain season, while others remain the whole year. Vipers, in this island, are very numerous, and many of them are caught for medicinal purposes; great quantities of poultry are bred for the supply of the outward-bound shipping. Gardening is carried on to a great extent in the vicinity of all the large towns, and Portsea island is considered to produce the finest brocoli in the kingdom. In the northern and middle parts of the county the orchards are few and small; but upon the marly and clayey substrata of the southern and south-western districts they are more numerous, and some cider is made. In the Isle of Wight most farmers make annually several hogsheads of cider, which is of excellent quality, and chiefly for home consumption. This county has long been celebrated for its honey, called heath honey and down honey, from the different districts in which the bees collect it; the latter being the more valuable. The woods are numerous and extensive: the coppices in different parts are cut at various ages: their produce is formed into hop poles, wattled hurdles, hoops, rafter poles, and bavons and fagots. From those of the southern district, a number of straight hoops are also exported to the West Indies: woods of this kind, in the northern woodland district, consist chiefly of birch, willow, alder, hazel, wild cherry, ash, and sometimes oak; in the chalk district, of hazel, willow, oak, ash, maple, white thorn, and a little beech and wild cherry; and, in the southern part of the county, of hazel, willow, alder, birch, holly, and some ash, beech, and wild cherry. The coppice wood of the north-eastern part of the Isle of Wight is overshadowed by a heavy growth of timber. In the northern district a very fine growth of oak is generally observed; but the annual produce of this timber, in the southern parts, has been greatly diminished. In almost every part of the chalk district beech woods and groves flourish with peculiar vigour; and the forests and other woodlands are found to contain large proportions of this timber. Ash is found in different parts; but elm is generally of scarce growth, although it is occasionally seen, more especially in the southern districts; the largest elms are much in demand at the Royal Dock-yard for keel-pieces. The abele and aspen poplar, the lime or linden tree, and the Turin, or Lombardy poplar, are frequently met with. Fir-trees of different kinds are seen to flourish in mixed plantations. In the Isle of Wight, the woods of Swainston are of considerable extent, and those of Wooton and Quarr occupy an area of a thousand acres.

The New Forest comprises a very extensive tract in the south-western part of the county. Its ancient boundaries, according to the oldest perambulation extant, which is dated 8th of Edward I., were, the Southampton river, on the east; the Sound and the British Channel, on the south; and the river Avon, on the west: northward, it extended as far as North Charford, on the west; and to Wade and Ower bridge, on the east. Different other perambulations are on record; but, according to that made in the 22nd of Charles II., the forest extends from Godshill, on the north-west, south-eastward to the sea, a distance of about twenty-three miles; and from Hardley, on the east, to Ringwood on the west, about fifteen miles; and contains ninety-two thousand three hundred and sixty-five statute acres. The extent of the woods and waste lands of this tract were, however, at that time, reduced to sixty-three thousand eight hundred and forty-five acres, by several manors and other freeholds within the perambulation, amounting to twenty-four thousand seven hundred and ninety-seven acres; by six hundred and twenty-five acres of copyhold, or customary lands, belonging to the king's manor of Lyndhurst; by one thousand and four acres of leasehold, granted for certain terms of years; by nine hundred and one acres of purprestures, or encroachments on the forest; and by one thousand one hundred and ninety-three acres of enclosed lands held by the master-keepers and groom-keepers, with their respective lodges. The remainder belonged to the crown, as it does at present, and in each kind of the property above mentioned, as being included within the limits of the forest, the king has also various rights and interests: in the freeholds he has certain rights relative to the deer and game; the copyholds are subject to quit-rents and fines, and the timber trees upon such property belong to the crown. The encroachments consist chiefly of cottages built by poor persons, with small parcels of enclosed land adjoining: such, however, as had been made by the proprietors of neighbouring estates, and had been held without any acknowledgment, the crown is authorised, by a modern act of parliament, to grant on lease, for valuable considerations, and provision is made against future encroachment. The forest lands, containing, as before stated, sixty-three thousand eight hundred and forty-five acres, are subject to certain rights of commonage, pasturage, pannage, and fuel, possessed by the proprietors of estates within, or adjacent to, the forest; which rights, and those of the crown, are defined by an act of the 9th and 10th of William III., for the increase and preservation of timber in the forest. By this act, the crown was empowered to enclose six thousand acres, as a nursery for timber, until the trees should be past danger of being injured by the deer or cattle, when the same should be thrown open, and an equal quantity might, in like manner, be enclosed, afterwards to be thrown open, in any other part of the forest. The crown has also the right of keeping deer in the unenclosed part of the forest, at all times and without limitation. In consequence of this act, the woodlands, which, according to surveys made at different periods, had been long remaining in a neglected state, received, for a while, some portion of attention; but that, ere long, was withdrawn from them, when the superintendence of the surveyor-general of the crown lands ceased, and the whole fell, by degrees, under the sole direction of a surveyor-general of the woods. For local purposes the New Forest is divided into nine bailiwicks, which are subdivided into fifteen walks. It is under the government of a lord-warden, who is appointed by letters patent under the great seal, during his Majesty's pleasure; and by his patent are granted to him the manor of Lyndhurst, and hundred of Redbridge, with various other privileges and emoluments; he appoints a steward for the king's house at Lyndhurst. A riding forester is appointed in the same manner as the lord-warden, whose office it is to ride before the king when he enters the forest. A bow-bearer, and two rangers, are appointed by the lord-warden, during pleasure. A woodward is appointed by letters patent from his Majesty, during pleasure, and acts by deputy. Four verderers, the judges of the swanimote and attachment courts, are chosen by the freeholders of the county, in pursuance of the king's writ. A high-steward, and an under-steward, are appointed by the lord-warden, during pleasure: the duty of the latter is to attend at and enrol the proceedings of the courts of attachment and swanimote, and hold the court leet for the hundred of Redbridge, and the courts baron for the manor of Lyndhurst. Twelve regarders are chosen by the freeholders of the county. There are, besides, nine foresters, or master-keepers, and an indefinite number of under-foresters, or groom-keepers, though commonly one to each walk. A purveyor of the navy acts also for the forest, whose office is a naval appointment, and whose duty is to assign timber for the navy, and to prevent any fit for that use from being cut for other purposes. The limits of the forest were finally ascertained, and disputed boundaries settled, by an act of parliament passed in the year 1800. Of the perquisites of the under-keepers, which, at the period of the investigation made in 1789, arose chiefly from deer, browse-wood, rabbits, and swine, only the first and last are now allowed them, and the rabbits are nearly destroyed. The forest courts are regularly held by the verderers, who preside in them at Lyndhurst. The scenery is remarkable for its sylvan beauty, presenting magnificent woods, extended lawns, and vast sweeps of wild heath, unlimited by artificial boundaries, together with numerous river views and the prospect of distant shores. In some parts also are extensive bogs, the most considerable of which is at a place called Longsdale, on the road between Brockenhurst and Ringwood, which extends for about three miles. The oaks seldom rise into lofty stems, and their branches, which are more adapted to what the ship-builders call knees and elbows, are commonly twisted into the most picturesque forms: this is supposed to be owing to the nature of the soil through which their roots have to penetrate, it being generally an argillaceous loam, tempered in different degrees with sand, or gravel. The advantage of water-carriage to the various royal or private dockyards in which its produce is employed, is superior to that of any other forest in the kingdom.

The forest of Bere, situated in the south-eastern part of the county, and extending northward from the Portsdown hills, which, according to the perambulation made in 1688, is now considered the boundary, comprises about sixteen thousand acres, upwards of one-third being enclosed. It is divided into two walks, named East and West, to each of which are annexed several smaller divisions, called purlieus, all of them being subject to the forest laws. Its officers are a warden, four verderers, two master-keepers, two under-keepers, a ranger, a steward of the swanimote court, twelve regarders, and two agistors. North-westward of it is the Chase of Bishop's-Waltham, containing about two thousand acres, which belongs to the see of Winchester. The forest of Alice-Holt and Woolmer, on the eastern border of the county, approaching the confines of Surrey and Sussex, and to the north-east of Petersfield, is divided into two parts by intervening private property: its limits comprehend fifteen thousand four hundred and ninety-three acres, of which, eight thousand six hundred and ninety-four belong to the crown: the division called Alice-Holt contains about two thousand seven hundred and forty acres of crown land. Parkhurst, or Carisbrooke forest, lying at a short distance to the north-west of Newport, in the Isle of Wight, occurs in Domesday-book under the appellation of the King's park, and was afterwards called the King's forest: it includes about three thousand acres, nearly destitute of valuable trees. The total quantity of waste land in Hampshire, exclusively of the forests, falls little short of one hundred thousand acres.

A sandy and gravelly character of soil prevails on the greater part of the heaths and commons, which produce ling, or heather, fern, coarse aquatic plants and grasses, furze, and dwarf alder: a superior kind of land occasionally found produces also a particularly sweet herbage for deer and cattle. Upon the inlets and southern coasts of the main land, as also of the Isle of Wight, are large tracts of sea mud, generally less elevated than the highest level of the spring tides, which consequently overflow them. A long range of this kind of marsh extends on the western side of Southampton river, through the parish of Fawley, and a like tract occurs between Calshot castle and the Salterns of Fawley: the extent of these, together with others situated higher up the Southampton river, is estimated at about two thousand acres. The rivers of Beaulieu and Lymington, and the harbour of Christchurch, present similar tracts; and about four thousand acres of this kind of mud are found along the shore, between Hurst castle and the mouth of the Beaulieu river. The inlet, or harbour, of Portsmouth comprises about three thousand acres, and about five thousand five hundred are included in the harbour of Langport, and the portion of that of Emsworth which is within the limits of this county. In the Isle of Wight, similar tracts of marsh are found bordering on the Yarmouth river, on the inlets of Shalfleet and Newtown, and in Brading haven, the area of which is stated at seven hundred and fifty acres. In this latter marsh, different small tracts have been at various periods embanked against the flow of the tide; and an attempt was made by Sir Bevis Thelwall, and Sir Hugh Middleton, the constructor of the New River, to exclude the sea entirely by an embankment thrown across its narrow outlet, which was completed; but in a wet season, when the inner part of the haven was full of water, and there was a high spring tide, the waters met under the bank, and made a breach, which was never repaired, and these marshes still remain in their ancient state, notwithstanding that the outlet is, at low water, only about twenty yards in width, and its surface appears for the most part to be more elevated than the embanked marshes lying westward of it, in the parishes of Brading and Yaverland. Throughout all the woodland parts of Hampshire the peasantry are tolerably well supplied with fuel; they obtained it formerly by a claim of snap-wood, meaning the fallen branches and such withered pieces as they could snap off by hand, or with a hook fastened at the end of a long pole, but having improperly exercised this privilege they have been deprived of it. Turf is pared on the heaths and commons, and peat is sometimes used. A vast quantity of furze is also cut on the waste lands, as fuel; and the parishes contiguous to the forests have generally a right of turbary in them: coal can only be procured, and that at a high price, at the ports, or along the canals.

The mineral productions are not numerous. On its southern shores, particularly near the mouth of the Beaulieu river, iron-stone is washed up by the sea, and was formerly gathered, and conveyed to the iron-works at Sowley, but these have been discontinued. It is also occasionally found in small quantities in different other parts of the county, particularly in the cliffs near Hordwell, which are upwards of one hundred feet high, and abound with nodules of iron-ore, together with pebbles, or flints, many of them containing fossil shells; or their impressions, of various and scarce species, found in a blueish kind of clay, or marl. A thin stratum of coal discovers itself at the foot of Bembridge cliff, in the Isle of Wight, and extends through the southern part of the island, appearing again at Warden Ledge, in Freshwater parish: near it is a stratum of fullers' earth. The range of chalk hills crossing the county from east to west, and occupying the central part of it, forms a portion of the vast formation that constitutes so considerable a feature in the geology of England. The strata constituting the southern part of the main land, and the northern part of the Isle of Wight, lie upon a depressed portion of the chalk beds, which, in geological language, is termed the Chalk Basin of the Isle of Wight. The chalk raised in this county is of two kinds, white and grey, both of them burned into lime of a good quality, that from the latter being also particularly serviceable as a cement under water, for which it is extensively employed. Between Milton and Christchurch is found a hard reddish stone, of which several ancient structures in that part of the county are built. The numerous strata of various kinds and formations, and exhibiting great diversity of position, of which the Isle of Wight consists, form a remarkably rich field of study for the geologist. At Alum-bay, at the north-western extremity of the island, is found a vein of white sand, in great demand for the glass-works of Bristol and Liverpool, as also for others situated on the western coasts of England and Scotland, and in Ireland. Eastward of this, along the northern foot of the downs, grist or quarry stone, of a yellowish grey colour, and very porous texture, is found in detached masses, and used for building. A strong liver-coloured building-stone, rising in cubical masses, encrusted with a brownish kind of ochre, and enclosing specimens of rich iron-stone, occurs on the southern side of the island; a rough calcareous freestone is frequently found in the marl pits, in loose detached pieces. Eastward of Staple's heath, and northward of Arreton downs, a close grey limestone is raised, the beds of which are separated from each other by small layers of marine shells, cemented together by alum, that substance being well known to pervade the western parts of the island. Freestone is sometimes found under marl in the northern districts of it: a plum-pudding stone exists in large quantities near Sandown fort, and is much used for paving and flooring. Potters' clay occurs in great variety, in different parts of the county; and ochres of divers colours in the Isle of Wight.

The manufactures are various, but not extensive; ship-building, however, in addition to the works of the royal dock-yard at Portsmouth, is extensively carried on in most of the numerous creeks and harbours. The other productions are chiefly woollen goods, bed-ticking, light silk articles, sacking, leather, and a coarse kind of earthenware. At Overton are very extensive silk-mills, and the young female peasantry in the vicinity are much employed in the platting of straw for bonnets, the straw-hat manufacture being carried on at many towns in the county. There are paper-mills in different parts of the county, those in the vicinity of Overton being of considerable importance. At Lymington is a manufacture of salt. The advantages for maritime commerce may be estimated from the following list of harbours and roadsteads viz.: Hayling and Portsmouth harbours, with their dependencies; the inlet of Southampton, with the mouths of the Itchen and Test rivers, their ship-yards, and the smaller havens of Redbridge, Eling, Hythe, Cadland, and Fawley, and of Botley, Bursledon, and Hamble, on the river Hamble; the Beaulieu river, with its dependencies, slips, and private dock-yards; Lymington, or Boldre water, with a number of small creeks through the salterns, including Keyhaven; and the harbour of Christchurch, with its branches, forming the mouth of the Avon and Stour rivers. In the Isle of Wight are the harbours of Hithe, Cowes, South Yarmouth, and Brading. The roadsteads separating that island from the rest of the county are those of St. Helen's, Motherbank, Spithead, Cowes, Southampton bay, and Yarmouth roads, the latter of which is terminated westward by the Needles, the passage, or channel, of which is contracted to the space of only about a mile, by a broad bank of shingles thrown up by the sea, which beats upon it with great violence: this bank, from the main land in the parish of Milton, projects south-eastward, and upon its furthest extremity stands Hurst castle, built in the reign of Henry VIII., and commanding the passage. The shores of this county, particularly of the Isle of Wight, are much resorted to during the summer for the purpose of sea-bathing, &c.: the most frequented places are, on the main land, Christchurch, Muddiford, Lymington, and Southampton; and in the Isle of Wight, Yarmouth, Cowes, Hythe, Brading, and Shanklin. Whatever may be yielded to the public by the exertions of the fishermen, a small portion only of the fish they take is consumed within the limits of the county, and that generally of an inferior quality, being such as would not pay for its carriage to the metropolis, for which purpose light vans are kept in constant use. In all the rivers and creeks that discharge their waters directly into the sea, salmon are caught: the fisheries of the Southampton water are particularly extensive, and the boats engaged in them often make long coasting voyages to procure other fish, which are taken thence to the markets of London, Oxford, Bath, &c. Several persons are employed on the flat and rocky shores of the Isle of Wight, in catching shrimps and prawns, and, on its bolder shores, in taking crabs and lobsters. Across the vallies and low places of the heaths of Farnborough, Cove, and Aldershot, the soil of which is very retentive of water, dams have been constructed for stopping the descending waters, and thus forming ponds of various extent, which are usually stocked with carp and tench, and are very profitable to their owners, who send nearly the whole of these fish to the London market.

The principal rivers are the Test, the Anton, the Itchen, the Avon, the Boldre water, and the Exe. The Test, rising in the vicinity of Whitchurch, and being, at the distance of about a mile below Wherwell, joined by the Anton, which rises in the north-western part of the county, and flows through Andover, takes a southerly course to Stockbridge, and thence through Romsey to Redbridge, below which it expands and forms the head of the Southampton water, an arm of the sea extending from the "Above Town" of Southampton to the Sound, at Calshot castle, and rendered exceedingly picturesque by its woody and irregular shores: the general direction of the Southampton water is from north-west to south-east. The Itchen, also called the Arbre, has its source at Chilton-Candover, near Alresford, and, being soon increased by the small river Alne, flows westward to King's Worthy, where it suddenly assumes a southerly course, which it pursues by Winchester, Twyford, and Bishop's Stoke, to the Southampton water, at the distance of about half a mile eastward of the town of Southampton: this river was brought into a regular channel, and made navigable up to Winchester, by Godfrey de Lacy, Bishop of Winchester, in 1215: towards its mouth it expands considerably. The Avon, traversing the projecting south-western portion of the county, in a direction from north to south, enters it from Wiltshire, a few miles above Fordingbridge, and meandering, frequently in separate channels, near the western border of the New Forest, is much increased by numerous rivulets rising in that district: from Fordingbridge it passes by Ringwood to Christchurch, near which town it receives the waters of the Stour, and soon falls into Christchurch bay: by an act passed in 1665, it was made navigable up to Salisbury, but the works having been swept away by a flood, the navigation was destroyed. The Boldre water is formed by several small streams rising in the New Forest, most of which unite above Brockenhurst, thence proceeding southward, by Boldre and Lymington, to the sea. The Exe, frequently called the Beaulieu river, from similar sources in the same district, flows south-eastwardly, and, beginning to expand near Beaulieu, opens into a broad æstuary to the sea, below Exbury. The principal river of the Isle of Wight is the Medina, anciently called the Mede, which rises near the bottom of St. Catherine's down, in the southern part of the island, and flowing directly northward, divides it into two equal parts, each constituting a liberty, which derives its name from its position on the eastern or western side of this stream: passing on the eastern side of the town of Newport, the Medina mingles its waters with those of the sea in Cowes harbour. The other principal streams of this island are the Yar, the Wooten, and the Ear; its shores are also indented by various creeks and bays. A navigable canal has been made, along the valleys of the Test and Anton, from Andover to the head of the Southampton water: from Barlowes-Mill, near Andover, its course is by Stockbridge and Romsey to its termination at Redbridge, in the parish of Millbrook: from Redbridge a branch proceeds directly to Southampton, and a collateral branch extends from it in a westerly direction, up the valley between East Dean, Lockerley, and East Tytherley, to Alderbury common, within two miles of Salisbury, but neither of them is navigable. The Andover canal is of considerable advantage to the inland districts through which it passes. From Basingstoke a canal has been made, under the authority of an act of parliament obtained in 1778, to the river Wey in Surrey, by which the navigation is maintained to the Thames: the total length of this canal, which from Basingstoke is carried directly eastward, in the vicinity of Odiham, and across the eastern borders of the county, is thirty-seven miles and a quarter: the cost of cutting it amounted to about £100,000, a large portion of which was expended in forming a tunnel through Grewill hill, near Odiham, which is arched with brick, and is nearly three quarters of a mile in length: the articles of traffic conveyed upon it are chiefly corn, flour, coal, and timber. The Winchester and Southampton canal is one of the oldest in the kingdom: the act for its construction was obtained in the reign of Charles I., but from the want of a suitable trade upon it, however advantageous to the city of Winchester and the surrounding country, it does not appear to have realized the expectations of the projectors.

At the north-eastern angle of the county, the London road branches off in two directions, each line crossing the county somewhat diagonally: the upper, or great western road, passing through Basingstoke, Whitchurch, and Andover, quits the county at Lobcomb Corner, seven miles east-north-east of Salisbury; from this a minor branch diverges at Basingstoke, which dividing at Popham Lane, a little beyond that town, one line proceeds through Winchester to Southampton, and the other passes through Stockbridge, and joins the great western road at Lobcomb Corner. The lower road passes through Farnham, Alton, New Alresford, and Winchester, to Southampton, whence the line is continued across the New Forest to Ringwood, a little beyond which town it quits the county. The road from London to Portsmouth enters this county at Seven Thorn, on its eastern side, and passes through Petersfield to the latter port. Various other turnpike-roads, in connexion with these, intersect the county in different directions, all of which are remarkably good. Within the limits of the county were the stations of Venta Belgarum, supposed to have been at Winchester; Vindonum, at Silchester; Clausentum, at Bittern; Brigæ, at Broughton; and Andaoreon, at Andover.

The principal remains of Roman occupation discoverable are at Silchester, approaching the confines of Berkshire, where gold coins and rings, Roman bricks, and pottery, &c., have been dug up. About three-quarters of a mile north of Lymington is Buckland Rings, the remains of a Roman camp. Traces of other encampments of different periods are visible in various parts; some of the most extensive and remarkable are those of the camp on Danebury hill, to the west and north-west of which are several barrows, many more of these monuments being found in different parts of the county. Three Roman roads branch from Silchester, one of them proceeding to the northern gate of Winchester; another, by Andover, to Old Sarum; and the third, northward, across Mortimer heath: from Winchester also was a road leading to Old Sarum. The number of ancient religious establishments was about fifty-three. There are still interesting remains of the abbey of Hide, Netley, Beaulieu, and Quarr; as also of the hospital of St. Cross, near Winchester. The cathedral of Winchester is one of the most interesting edifices in England: in that city the college, the cross, the west gate, and the episcopal palace of Wolvesey, are also remarkable for their antiquity. Among the finest ancient churches are those of Christchurch, Romsey, and St. Michael, Southampton. The most remarkable ancient fonts are those of Winchester cathedral; of the church of St. Michael, Southampton; and of that of East Meon. Some of the gates and other parts of the fortifications of the town of Southampton are still standing; as are also the castles of Hurst, Porchester, and Carisbrooke, in the Isle of Wight: there are remains also of the castles of Christchurch, Odiham, and Warblington. The modern seats of the nobility and gentry are extremely numerous, more especially the villas. The cottages of the peasantry are in general remarkable for their comfortable appearance. In many parts of the chalk district, and in that part of the county bordering on Dorsetshire, mud, or cob walls, as they are provincially termed, are very commonly used to form enclosures. Several chalybeate springs are found in different parts of the Isle of Wight: at Pitland is a spring impregnated with sulphur; and at Shanklin another, the water of which is slightly tinged with alum. The waters of the streams in the northern woodland part of the county are of a strong chalybeate quality: that which issues from the bogs and swampy ground is charged with a solution of iron. In the strong loam, woodland clay, and chalk, districts, the want of a regular supply of water during seasons of drought is severely felt. Fossil remains of different kinds are found in some of the strata of this county; among the natural curiosities of which may also be mentioned the immense chasms near the sea-shore in the Isle of Wight, called Blackgang Chine, Luccombe Chine, and Shanklin Chine; and there is a large natural cavern at Freshwater Gate, a small creek in the centre of Freshwater bay. Samphire grows in great plenty on some of the high cliffs of the Isle of Wight, and is gathered by the inhabitants.

SOUTHBOROUGH, a chapelry in the parish and lowey of TONBRIDGE, lathe of AYLESFORD, county of KENT, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. by W.) from Tonbridge, with which the population is returned. It is situated about midway between Tonbridge and the Wells, and consists of a number of scattered houses. A new district church, in the early style of English architecture, has been recently erected, and endowed at an expense of £8436, defrayed by subscriptions. It contains four hundred and eighty-six sittings, two hundred and eighty-six of which are free. The property is vested in five trustees, who have also the appointment of the minister. In 1785, premises for a school were erected by the Executors of the Rev. Edward Holmes, and endowed with £1050 four per cents., for the education of fifty children: it is managed by trustees.

SOUTH-BURN, a township in the parish of KIRK-BURN, Bainton-Beacon division of the wapentake of HARTHILL, East riding of the county of YORK, $3\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. W.) from Great Driffeld, containing 103 inhabitants.

SOUTHCHURCH, a parish in the hundred of ROCHFORD, county of ESSEX, 1 mile (N. N. E.) from South-End, containing 353 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury, rated in the king's books at £27. 0. 10. The parish is bounded on the south by the Thames; where are considerable oyster beds.

SOUTHCOATES, a township in the parish of DRY-POOL, middle division of the wapentake of HOLDERNESSE, East riding of the county of YORK, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (N. E. by E.) from Kingston upon Hull, containing 798 inhabitants.

SOUTHCOT, a tything in that part of the parish of ST. MARY, READING, which is in the hundred of READING, county of BERKS, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (W. S. W.) from Reading, containing 121 inhabitants.

SOUTHEASE, a parish in the hundred of HOLMSTROW, rape of LEWES, county of SUSSEX, $3\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. by E.) from Lewes, containing 112 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Lewes, and diocese of Chichester, rated in the king's books at £16. 0. 10., and in the patronage of the Rev. — Todd. The church is principally in the early style of English architecture, with a circular tower.

SOUTHEND, a hamlet in the parish of PRITTEWELL, hundred of ROCHFORD, county of ESSEX, $1\frac{3}{4}$ mile (S. S. E.) from Prittlewell, and 42 miles (E.) from London. This village, which has of late years risen into repute as a bathing-place, and considerably increased in size, is pleasantly situated on the declivity and at the base of a well-wooded hill, at the mouth of the Thames, directly opposite to the river Medway: it is divided into the Upper and the Lower town, the latter having been anciently a small fishing village, and consists of an irregular line of houses fronting the sea; of late years some handsome dwellings have been added, between which and the beach a small parade has been partly enclosed. Here are several neat rows of houses, and at the eastern extremity is a small but neat theatre, erected in 1804, and open during the season. The Upper town, which has received the appellation of New Southend, occupies an eminence fronting the sea: it is considered the more fashionable part of the town, being, both in situation and style of building, far preferable. A handsome range of houses, called the Terrace, has been finished, in a neat and uniform style. Adjoining is the Royal Hotel, which contains many good suites of apartments, an assembly-room sixty feet by twenty-four in dimensions, a music-gallery, and other apartments. On the brow of the hill is the library, an elegant building, partaking of the later English style, with a circular front, and adjoining it is a billiard-room. In front of the terrace is a fine broad gravel promenade, and between this and the sea is a shrubbery extending its whole length, and containing a neat cottage, in which are all the requisite accommodations for warm baths. A pier of frame-work has recently been constructed by an incorporated company of proprietors. The surrounding scenery is of a rich and picturesque character, and the views extend across the channel from the Isle of Thanet along the rich hills of the opposite county of Kent, and up the river Thames nearly to Gravesend, including also the Medway, and the government works and dock-yards at Sheerness. There is a place of worship for Independents.

SOUTHERNBY-BOUND, a township in the parish of CASTLE-SOWERBY, LEATH ward, county of CUMBERLAND, $11\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by W.) from Penrith, containing 160 inhabitants.

SOUTHERY, a parish in the hundred of CLACK-CLOSE, county of NORFOLK, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S.) from Downham-Market, containing 663 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £7. 10., and in the patronage of Robert Martin, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a very ancient structure, with a wooden screen separating the nave and chancel: it has lately received an addition of one hundred and twenty free sittings, the Incorporated Society for the enlargement of churches and chapels having granted £150 towards defraying the expense.

SOUTH-FIELDS, a liberty in the hundred of GUTHLAXTON, county of LEICESTER, containing 762 inhabitants.

SOUTHFLEET, a parish in the hundred of AXTON, DARTFORD, and WILMINGTON, lathe of SUTTON at HONE, county of KENT, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W.) from Gravesend, containing 577 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Rochester, rated in the king's books at £31. 15., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Rochester. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is principally in the decorated style of English architecture, and exhibits many marks of antiquity, including six stone stalls under pointed arches, a piscina, a window of stained glass, and a font much admired for its curious workmanship. This was a place of importance during the Octarchy, when it was called Sudfleta: from its proximity to the old Watling-street, its distance from the station Durobrivis (Rochester); and the numerous Roman relics found on the spot, it is supposed to occupy the site of the Vagniacæ of Antoninus. Among other antiquities a Roman military and a stone tomb, containing two leaden coffins, have been discovered in the parish. A school-house has been erected, and is endowed with a rent-charge of £20, bequeathed by the family of Sedley.

SOUTHGATE, a chapelry in the parish and hundred of EDMONTON, county of MIDDLESEX, 8 miles (N. by W.) from London. The population is returned with the parish. The name of this place is derived from its situation at the south gate, or entrance, of Enfield Chase, and it is still called South-street division. The village contains many handsome houses: the New River runs at its extremity. The neighbourhood is well wooded; the Duke of Buckingham and Chandos having a residence here, in the grounds of which is a very fine old oak tree, that covers with its shade nearly an acre of ground. The chapelry is within the jurisdiction of a court of requests held at Enfield, for the recovery of debts under 40s. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the Vicar of Edmonton. The chapel, built in 1615, at the sole expense of Sir John Weld, has been recently pulled down and rebuilt: it is endowed with an estate in Essex, called Orsett. There is a place of worship for Independents. A Lancasterian school was built by John Walker, Esq., and is supported solely by his widow. Mrs. Cowley left a sum of money to clothe nine boys and nine girls in this school. In an adjacent field, called 'Camp Field,' have been found several pieces of cannon, and a gorget belonging to Oliver Cromwell, having his initials handsomely inlaid with jewels, now in the British Museum; and in 1829, several ancient coins were dug up in the neighbourhood.

SOUTH-HAMLET, a hamlet in the parish of HEMPSTEAD, middle division of the hundred of DUDSTONE and KING'S BARTON, county of GLOUCESTER, containing 391 inhabitants.

SOUTH-HILL, a parish in the middle division of the hundred of EAST, county of CORNWALL, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. W.) from Callington, containing 534 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, with the perpetual curacy of Callington annexed, in the archdeaconry of Cornwall, and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £38, and in the patronage of Lord Clinton. The church is dedicated to St. Sampson. John Knill, in 1747, gave £5 per annum for teaching children and relieving the poor.

SOUTHILL, a parish in the hundred of WIXAM-TREE, county of BEDFORD, comprising the hamlets of Broom and Stanford, and the township of Southill, and containing 1165 inhabitants, of which number, 682 are in the township of Southill, 4 miles (S. W. by W.) from Biggleswade. The living is a discharged vicarage, with that of Old Warden annexed, in the archdeaconry of Bedford, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £11. 15., and in the patronage of W. H. Whitbread, Esq. The church, dedicated to All Saints, contains monuments of several of the Byng family, among which are those of the celebrated naval officer, Sir George Byng, the first Viscount Torrington, and of his son, Vice-Admiral the Hon. John Byng, who was executed for an alleged professional crime, though the inscription upon his coffin, engraved in brass, represents him to have fallen a martyr to political persecution. The Baptists have a place of worship here.

SOUTH-MEAD, an extra-parochial liberty, in the middle division of the hundred of DUDSTONE and KING'S BARTON, county of GLOUCESTER, adjacent to the south side of the city of Gloucester.

SOUTHOE, a parish in the hundred of TOSELAND, county of HUNTINGDON, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. by W.) from St. Neot's, containing 268 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, with the perpetual curacy of Hale Weston annexed, in the archdeaconry of Huntingdon, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £14. 2. $3\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Rev. R. Pointer. The church is dedicated to St. Leonard.

SOUTHOLT, a parish in the hundred of HOXNE, county of SUFFOLK, 5 miles (S. E. by S.) from Eye, containing 203 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the rectory of Worlingworth, in the archdeaconry of Suffolk, and diocese of Norwich. The church is dedicated to St. Margaret.

SOUTHORPE, an extra-parochial liberty, in the wapentake of CORRINGTON, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 7 miles (N. E.) from Gainsborough, containing 34 inhabitants.

SOUTHORPE, a hamlet in the parish of BARNACK, liberty of PETERBOROUGH, county of NORTHAMPTON, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. by E.) from Wansford, containing 117 inhabitants.

SOUTHOVER, county of SUSSEX.—See LEWES.

SOUTHPORT, a chapelry in the parish of NORTH MEOLS, hundred of WEST DERBY, county palatine of LANCASTER, 9 miles (N. W.) from Ormskirk, and 22 (N.) from Liverpool. The population is returned with the parish. This place, situated at the mouth of the Ribble, on the shore of the Irish sea, has of late years been much resorted to for sea-bathing, and possesses most of the usual accommodations for visitors: it consists of one principal street, formed by handsome houses of brick, with gardens in front, and is surrounded by meols, or sand hills, resembling small tumuli. A theatre, news-rooms, and libraries, with other places of public resort, supply the means of amusement and relaxation. An episcopal chapel, called Christ church, was built in 1820, the right of presentation to which belongs to — Hesketh, Esq. There are places of worship for Independents and Wesleyan Methodists. The Strangers' charity furnishes to the sick poor the means of obtaining the benefits of sea air and bathing; and a dispensary, erected in 1823, supplies the requisite medical aid.

SOUTHPORT, county of SOUTHAMPTON. — See PORTSEA.

SOUTHROP, a parish in the hundred of BRIGHTWELL'S BARROW, county of GLOUCESTER, 3 miles (N.) from Lechlade, containing 313 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Gloucester, rated in the king's books at £5. 16. 8., and in the patronage of the Warden and Fellows of Wadham College, Oxford. The church is dedicated to St. Peter.

SOUTHROP, a tything in the parish of HERRIARD, hundred of BERMONDSPIT, though locally in that of Odiham, Basingstoke division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 5 miles (N. W.) from Alton. The population is returned with the parish.

SOUTHROPE, a township in the parish of HOOK-NORTON, hundred of CHADLINGTON, county of OXFORD, containing 279 inhabitants.

SOUTHSEA, county of SOUTHAMPTON. — See PORTSEA.

SOUTH-TOWN, a parish in the hundred of MUTFORD and LOTHINGLAND, county of SUFFOLK, 1 mile (S. by W.) from Great Yarmouth, containing 1039 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, consolidated, in 1520, with the vicarage of Gorleston, in the archdeaconry of Suffolk, and diocese of Norwich. The church, now demolished, was dedicated to St. Nicholas. South-town, or Little Yarmouth, which forms a populous suburb to Great Yarmouth, extends from Yarmouth bridge about half a mile to the southward, along the western bank of the river, one side of the road being occupied by elegant private houses, and the opposite, by timber wharfs, docks, and yards for ship-building, which afford employment to a great number of shipwrights and others.

SOUTHWARK, county of SURREY. — See LONDON.

SOUTHWELL, a market town and parish, in the liberty of SOUTHWELL and SCROOBY, county of NOTTINGHAM, 14 miles (N. E.) from Nottingham, and 132 (N. N. W.) from London, containing 3051 inhabitants. This place, which is of great antiquity, derived its name from one of many large springs, or wells, that formerly existed in the neighbourhood, few of which are now remaining. It was distinguished, at a very early period, by the foundation of one of the first Christian churches in this part of the country, by Paulinus, who, at the request of Ethelburga, wife of Edwin, King of Northumberland, had been sent over to England by Pope Gregory VII., to preach the doctrine of Christianity, which she had herself embraced, and who, having converted Edwin to the Christian faith, was made Archbishop of York, in 627. The history of the town relates chiefly to the progress of its religious establishment, which flourished, under a succession of prelates, till the Conquest, at which time the church had become collegiate, had ample revenues, and contained ten prebends, the number of which was subsequently increased to sixteen. From the time of the Conquest till the period of the Reformation, the revenue of the church continued to increase, and the establishment to prosper, during the reigns of Henry I., Henry II., Henry III., Edward I., and other sovereigns, who contributed largely to its endowment. Popes Alexander III. and Urban III. were also beneficent patrons; every succeeding archbishop was anxious to promote its independence, and the zeal and liberality of its own members were constantly devoted to its improvement. Soon after the dissolution of the monasteries by Henry VIII., the archbishop, and the prebendaries of Southwell, surrendered the church into the possession of that monarch, by whom, at the request of Cranmer, Archbishop of Canterbury, the chapter was re-founded, in 1541, and Southwell subsequently erected into a see, of which, in 1543, Dr. Cox, afterwards translated to Ely, was appointed bishop. Edward VI., soon after his accession to the throne, dissolved the chapter, and granted the prebendal estates to John, Earl of Warwick, upon whose attainder, in 1553, they reverted to the crown, and were restored by Queen Mary, who re-established the chapter upon its ancient foundation, and the prebendal establishment was finally confirmed by Queen Elizabeth, in 1585, and a new code of laws instituted. During the parliamentary war, Charles I. was frequently at this town, and held his court generally at the archiepiscopal palace, and occasionally at the King's Arms Inn, now the Saracen's Head, at which latter place, on the 6th of May, 1646, he privately surrendered himself to the Scottish commissioners. The parliamentary troops, during their stay in the town, converted the church into a stable, broke the monuments, defaced the ornaments, and demolished the episcopal palace, in which Cardinal Wolsey resided during the summer previous to his death; the lands belonging to the see were sold for £4061. They destroyed all the ancient records, except the Registrum Album, or white book, which is still in the possession of the chapter, and contains most of the grants to the church, from the year 1109 to 1525.

The town is pleasantly situated on a gentle eminence richly clothed with wood, and surrounded by an amphitheatre of hills of various elevation, near the small river Greet, which is celebrated for the red trout abounding in it, and comprises the districts of the Burgage, the High Town, East Thorpe, and West Thorpe, together forming a considerable, though scattered, town: it is well paved and abundantly supplied with water: the houses are in general well built, and the town has a neat and prepossessing appearance. Assemblies are held in a commodious suite of rooms erected in 1806; a harmonic society, established in 1786, is well supported, and a small neat theatre was opened in 1816. A pleasant promenade has been formed on the north side of the churchyard, and planted with trees, called the Parade: the roads in the vicinity have been recently improved. The air is salubrious, and the environs afford some agreeable walks. There is not much trade carried on, and the only branch of manufacture is that of silk, for which a mill has been recently erected on the river Greet by a firm at Nottingham. The market is on Saturday: the fairs are on Whit-Monday, which is a pleasure fair, and October 21st, a statute fair. The town is under two separate jurisdictions, called the Burgage and the Prebendage: the former, denominated the Soke of Southwell cum Scrooby, includes twenty townships, for which quarterly courts of session are held by a Custos Rotulorum, and justices of the peace, nominated by the Archbishop of York and the Chapter of Southwell, and appointed by a commission under the great seal, for the trial of all but capital offenders. The prebendage includes twenty-eight parishes, over which the chapter, their vicar-general, exercise ecclesiastical jurisdiction, and all episcopal functions, except confirmation and ordination: the subdivisions of the town are under the superintendence of the constable, or bailiff, assisted by two thirdboroughs for each district. The house of correction for the county, a spacious and commodious building, which, after having been several times enlarged, was completed in 1829, comprises eleven wards, thirty-four work and day rooms, eleven airing-yards, and a tread-mill with four wheels, being well adapted to the classification of prisoners, who are employed in framework knitting, spinning yarn, shoe-making, &c., and receive a portion of their earnings on their discharge: the buildings consist of the governor's house, chapel, infirmary, baths, and the requisite offices.

The living is a discharged vicarage, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Chapter, and in the patronage of the Prebendary of Normanton in the Collegiate Church, rated in the king's books at £7. 13. 4., endowed with £200 private benefaction, £600 royal bounty, and £400 parliamentary grant. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, (both parochial and collegiate), is a spacious and magnificent cruciform structure, chiefly of Norman architecture, with some portions in the early, decorated, and later styles of English architecture, having a low central tower, and two others of the same height at the west end, of seven stages, richly ornamented, between which is the principal entrance, through a fine circular arch, with a large window above it, of the later style, highly enriched with elegant tracery. The nave and transepts are of Norman character; the former has a flat roof of panelled oak finely carved, and supported upon a range of low massive circular columns and arches, and is lighted by a range of clerestory windows of small dimensions, above a triforium of large and undivided arches. The roof of the aisles is finely groined in stone; the arches and piers supporting the central tower are strikingly beautiful, from the simplicity of their style, and the stateliness of their elevation: the choir and the eastern transepts are beautiful specimens of the early English style, perhaps unrivalled for their purity of design, and fidelity of minute detail; the former is lighted by two tiers of lancet-shaped windows, and is fitted up as a parochial church, with galleries; the stalls and the screen are in the later period of the decorated style. There are few monuments deserving notice, except that of Archbishop Sandys, in the south transept, the principal having been destroyed during the occupation of the church by the parliamentary troops. On the eastern side of the north transept was formerly a chantry, or singing school, which has been converted into a library for the college, containing a valuable and extensive collection of works, chiefly on divinity. On the north side of the church is the chapter-house, in the decorated style of English architecture: the entrance doorway, which is double, is elegantly enriched with foliage of a character not very prevalent in England; the tracery in the windows, and in the stalls under them, is very beautiful. The prebendal houses, and especially that for the residentiary prebendary, are handsome buildings. In the churchyard are some remains of the ancient collegiate buildings the establishment of which is still retained, consisting of sixteen prebendaries, six vicars choral, an organist, six singing men, six choristers, and six boys as probationers, with a registrar, treasurer, auditor, and other officers: two annual synods are held, at which all the Nottinghamshire clergy attend, over whom a certain number of the prebendaries are appointed by the archbishop to preside. There are places of worship for Baptists and Wesleyan Methodists.

The free grammar school, which occupies the site of the college of the chantry priests, is under the superintendence of the chapter of the collegiate church, by which body the master is appointed, subject to the approval of the Archbishop of York; it has two scholarships founded in St. John's College, Cambridge, by the Rev. Dr. John Keyton, Canon of Salisbury in the reign of Henry VIII., for boys who have been choristers in the collegiate church: the school, which has a small endowment, is open to all boys of the town for gratuitous instruction in the classics. In 1744, Mr. Thomas Bailsford bequeathed lands for teaching ten poor children; Mr. Richard Stenton, in 1771, left £150 for building a school-room; and, in 1775, Mr. John Leverock gave land for clothing and instructing children. There are Sunday schools in connexion with the established church and the dissenting congregations. Of the ancient episcopal palace there are considerable remains, consisting chiefly of the chapel and great hall, which are almost entire, and have been fitted up as a modern residence: in this portion of the building is a room lighted by the great west window of the hall, which is appropriated to the holding of the sessions: the quadrangle, once surrounded with offices, has been converted into a garden. Vestiges of a Roman fosse are perceptible on the Burgage hill. Of the springs which formerly distinguished this vicinity, and from one of which the town derived its name, St. Catherine's well, at West Thorpe, celebrated for the cure of rheumatism, and South well, about half a mile to the south-east of the town, are still open. The ruins of the palace, which are overspread with ivy, form an interesting and romantic ornament to the town: the northern portion of the building is nearly entire, and has been fitted up as a modern residence, and the extensive quadrangle converted into a garden. Near them were found, in 1780, a large ring of pure gold, on the inside of which was inscribed Mieu mouri que change ma foi, and, in 1828, a large brass seal, with the device of a female kneeling, and holding in her right hand a tilting spear bearing a breast-plate, out of which rises a unicorn's head, and in her left hand a shield, with the arms of Cavendish and Kemp quartered, and on a scroll encircling the device the legend Gorge Rygmayden, in Saxon characters: this seal is preserved in the museum at York.

SOUTHWELL-PARK, in the parish of HARGRAVE, hundred of THINGOE, county of SUFFOLK, 7 miles (W.

S. W.) from Bury-St. Edmund's. The population is returned with the parish.

SOUTHWICK, a township in the parish of MONK-WEARMOUTH, eastern division of CHESTER ward, county palatine of DURHAM, $1\frac{3}{4}$ mile (N. W. by W.) from Sunderland, containing 1004 inhabitants. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. On the banks of the Wear, in this township, are several limekilns, ship-yards, and earthenware and glass manufactories. Human bones, and sometimes entire skeletons, have been found on removing the soil above the limestone quarries on Southwick hills.

SOUTHWICK, a parish in the hundred of WILLYBROOK, county of NORTHAMPTON, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. N. W.) from Oundle, containing 109 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Northampton, and diocese of Peterborough, rated in the king's books at £8. 7. 6., and in the patronage of George F. Lynn, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

SOUTHWICK, a parish in the hundred of PORTSDOWN, Portsmouth division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. E. by E.) from Fareham, containing 711 inhabitants. The living is a donative, in the patronage of T. Thistlethwayte, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. James. A priory of Black canons, founded by Henry I., and originally established at Porchester, in 1133, was soon after removed hither, and flourished till the dissolution, when its revenue was valued at £314. 17. 10. per annum: it acquired some historical celebrity from its having been the scene of the marriage of Henry VI., with Margaret of Anjou; and there are still some small remains of the monastic buildings in Southwick Park. The manor-house is a large building of some antiquity, having two wings terminating in gables, and embattled. King Charles I. was on a visit to the owner of this mansion at the time when the Duke of Buckingham, whom he had accompanied thus far from London, was assassinated by Felton, at Portsmouth: George I. was also entertained here. The publicans at Southwick enjoy the peculiar privilege, under a charter of Queen Elizabeth, of having no soldiers billeted upon them, nor quartered in their houses. A fair for horses is held on April 5th; and here was formerly a market, granted to the priory, in 1235, but it has long been disused.

SOUTHWICK, a parish in the hundred of FISHERGATE, rape of BRAMBER, county of SUSSEX, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (E.) from New Shoreham, containing 374 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Lewes, and diocese of Chichester, rated in the king's books at £9. 13. 9½., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is principally in the Norman style, though the upper story of the tower and some smaller portions are of later date. John Gray, in 1751, left a small sum towards the support of a school.

SOUTHWICK, a chapelry in the parish of NORTH BRADLEY, hundred of WHORWELSDOWN, county of WILTS, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W. by S.) from Trowbridge, containing 1562 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the vicarage of North Bradley, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Salisbury, endowed with £1200 private benefaction, and £3400 parliamentary grant. There are places of worship for Baptists and Wesleyan Methodists.

SOUTHWOLD, a seaport, borough, market town, and parish, having separate jurisdiction, though locally in the hundred of Blything, county of SUFFOLK, 36 miles (N. E.) from Ipswich, and 104 (N. E.) from London, containing 1676 inhabitants. The ancient names of this place were Suwald, Suwalda, Sudholda, and Southwood, probably derived from an adjacent wood, the western confines still retaining the appellation of Wood's-end Marshes, and Wood's-end Creek. In the year 1659, a dreadful conflagration took place, which in a few hours consumed the town hall, market-house, prison, several other buildings, and two hundred and thirty-eight dwelling-houses, at an estimated loss of more than £40,000; the court baron rolls were all destroyed, and in consequence the copyholders under the corporation became freeholders. Another remarkable event was the memorable sea-fight between the English, under the command of His Royal Highness the Duke of York, and the Dutch under Admiral Ruyter, which took place in Sole bay, to the east of the town, on the 26th of May, 1672, in which, though the former proved victorious, many brave and distinguished officers were slain, among whom was the Earl of Sandwich, second in command. In 1747, the haven, which had become choked up with sand, was cleared out by act of parliament. In 1749, a pier was erected on the north side; and in 1751, another on the south side, by the same authority. The town is pleasantly situated on a hill overlooking the German Ocean, and is rendered peninsular by the sea and a creek, called the Buss creek, which runs into the river Blyth, over which there is a bridge, formerly a drawbridge, leading into the town: it consists principally of one paved street; the houses are mostly well built and of modern appearance, and the inhabitants are well supplied with water from numerous excellent springs. On St. Edmund's, commonly called Gun Hill, are six eighteen-pounders, presented by His Royal Highness the Duke of Cumberland, who landed here October 17th, 1745. There was formerly an ancient fort, probably in the possession of the Danes on their invasion of the country in 1010, of which the foss is still discernible. From the nature of its situation and the convenience of the beach, Southwold is admirably adapted for sea-bathing, and has for several years been much resorted to for that purpose: there is a good promenade; also a reading-room, called the Casino, on the Gun Hill, with an assembly-room: races are held annually. In consequence of the encroachments of the sea, a breakwater has been made under Gun Hill cliff, extending upwards of three hundred yards. The trade of the town consists in the home fishery, which employs several small boats; in the preparation and exportation of salt, for which there is a manufactory; and of red herrings, red sprats, and malt: the imports are coal and cinders: the coasting trade is chiefly in timber, lime, wool, and corn. The entrance into the haven is on the south side of the town: they superintendence of it is vested in commissioners, its revenue being about £1400 per annum, which is expended in repairing the piers and haven. The river Blyth is navigable to Halesworth, and, besides the bridge crossing it on the north, there is a ferry to Walberswick. The market is on Thursday, and fairs are held on Trinity-Monday and St. Bartholomew's day, for toys, &c.

The first charter of incorporation was granted by Henry VII., and confirmed, with extended privileges, by Henry VIII. and subsequent sovereigns: that under which it is now governed was granted by William and Mary. The government is vested in two bailiffs, a high steward, town clerk, coroner, and other officers. The bailiffs and the inferior officers are elected annually on the 6th of December: the bailiffs and high steward are justices of the peace, with exclusive jurisdiction, and hold regular sessions for the trial of felons and other offenders. A court of record, for the recovery of debts to any amount, is held every Monday, at which the bailiffs and the high steward preside. Here is also a court of admiralty, of which the bailiffs are the judges, its jurisdiction extending not further than the limits of the town, although those of the port reach from Covehithe to Thorpe-ness. The guildhall was erected by the corporation, at an expense of £800; and the old gaol having been taken down, a new one was built, in the year 1819. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the vicarage of Reydon, in the archdeaconry of Suffolk, and diocese of Norwich, endowed with £400 private benefaction, £600 royal bounty, and £1000 parliamentary grant. The church, dedicated to St. Edmund, and completed about 1460, is a very elegant structure, in the later style of English architecture, with a large and lofty tower, surmounted with a spire, and constructed with freestone intermixed with flint of various colours. At each angle of the east end of the chancel is a low hexagonal embattled tower, decorated with crosses: the south porch is very elegant, and above the clerestory roof is a light open lantern: the ceiling is handsomely painted: the interior was, in former times, very richly ornamented, as appears by the carved work of the rood-loft, screen, and the seats of the magistrates. On the south side of the churchyard are three gravestones, in memory of Thomas Gardner, the historian of Dunwich and Southwold, and his two wives and daughter, on which are some singular inscriptions. The church has lately received an addition of one hundred free sittings, towards defraying the expense of which the Incorporated Society for building and enlarging churches and chapels contributed £50. There are places of worship for Baptists, Independents, and Wesleyan Methodists. On a hill, called Eye cliff, at a small distance from the town, are vestiges of ancient encampments, and, in many parts, of circular tents, now called Fairy hills, most probably of Danish origin. Fossil remains of the elephant and mammoth are frequently found in the cliffs.

SOUTHWOOD, a parish in the hundred of BLOFIELD, county of NORFOLK, $3\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. by W.) from Acle, containing 40 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, annexed to the vicarage of Limpenhoe, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Norwich. The church is dedicated to St. Edmund.

SOUTHWORTH, a joint township with Croft, in the parish of WINWICK, hundred of WEST DERBY, county palatine of LANCASTER, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. E. by E.) from Newton in Mackerfield, containing 1257 inhabitants. The hall once belonged to the Roman Catholic college of Stonyhurst, and part of it is still used as a chapel by persons of that persuasion.

SOW, a parish partly in the Kirby division of the hundred of KNIGHTLOW, but chiefly in the county of the city of COVENTRY, county of WARWICK, 3 miles (E. N. E.) from Coventry, containing 1212 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Coventry, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, and in the patronage of the Crown. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, has lately received an addition of one hundred and eighty-one sittings, of which one hundred and sixty-six are free, the Incorporated Society for the enlargement of churches and chapels having granted £100 towards defraying the expense. Considerable coal-works are in operation in this parish, and many of the inhabitants are engaged in the riband manufacture, in connexion with the trade of Coventry.

SOWERBY, a joint township with Inskip, in the parish of St. MICHAEL, hundred of AMOUNDERNESS, county palatine of LANCASTER, $4\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. S. W.) from Garstang. The population is returned with Inskip.

SOWERBY, a chapelry in the parish of THIRSK, wapentake of BIRDFORTH, North riding of the county of YORK, 1 mile (S.) from Thirsk, containing 748 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Cleveland, and diocese of York, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Archbishop of York.

SOWERBY, a chapelry in the parish of HALIFAX, wapentake of MORLEY, West riding of the county of YORK, 4 miles (W. S. W.) from Halifax, containing, with Ramble, 6890 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of York, endowed with £200 private benefaction, £200 royal bounty, and £800 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Vicar of Halifax. The chapel, dedicated to St. Peter, contains a fine statue, erected about half a century ago, to the memory of John Tillotson, D.D., Archbishop of Canterbury, who was born at Haugh-End, his father having been a manufacturer, in 1630; he died in 1694. There are places of worship for Independents and Wesleyan Methodists. The manufacture of woollen and cotton goods is extensively carried on here. Paul Bairslow, in 1711, bequeathed £16 per annum for the support of a school. In 1678, a considerable number of Roman coins was ploughed up in the neighbourhood.

SOWERBY (CASTLE), a parish in LEATH ward, county of CUMBERLAND, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. E. by E.) from Hesket-Newmarket, containing, with the townships of Bustabeck, How-bound, Row-bound, Southernby-bound, and Stockleath-bound, 1012 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Carlisle, rated in the king's books at £17. 10. 5., and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Carlisle. The church is dedicated to St. Kentigern. At Birks-keugh are the remains of a chapel, formerly called Lady chapel; and in the township of How-bound is Castle Hill, the site of an ancient castle, from which the parish derives its distinguishing prefix. Four poor children are instructed for a rent-charge of £5, the bequest of John Sowerby, in 1783.

SOWERBY under COTLIFFE, a township in the parish of KIRBY-SIGSTON, wapentake of ALLERTON-SHIRE, North riding of the county of YORK, 3 miles (E. by S.) from North Allerton, containing 53 inhabitants.

SOWERBY (TEMPLE), a chapelry in the parish of KIRKBY-THORE, EAST ward, county of WESTMORLAND, 7 miles (N. W.) from Appleby, containing 371 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Carlisle, endowed with £500 private benefaction, and £400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Earl of Thanet. The chapel, dedicated to St. James, is a handsome structure of red freestone, with a square tower and portico, rebuilt and enlarged, in 1770, at the expense of the late Sir William Dalston. There is a place of worship for Independents. The village, situated on the river Eden, which is crossed by a bridge rebuilt in 1748, is considered to be the neatest in the county: it consists of two spacious streets of well-built houses, with several commodious inns, and near it are many handsome villas inhabited by genteel families. Fairs for sheep and cattle are held here on the last Thursdays in February, March, and October, and on the second Thursday in May. The Knights Templars had a preceptory here, which, when suppressed in 1312, was given to the Knights Hospitallers.

SOWERBY-BRIDGE, a chapelry in the parish of HALIFAX, wapentake of MORLEY, West riding of the county of YORK, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. W. by W.) from Halifax, with which the population is returned. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of York, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Vicar of Halifax. The old chapel being insufficient to accommodate the increased population of the place, a more commodious structure has been built, containing nearly one thousand sittings, of which three hundred and seven are free, the Incorporated Society for the enlargement of churches and chapels having granted £800 towards defraying the expense. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. Woollen and cotton goods are manufactured here to a considerable extent. There are also three large iron-foundries, and a great number of corn-mills on the Calder, which river and the Rochdale canal pass through this district. Great quantities of stone are obtained here.

SOWTON, a parish partly in the eastern division of the hundred of BUDLEIGH, but chiefly in that of WOLFORD, county of DEVON, 4 miles (E.) from Exeter, containing 339 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £11. 16. 3., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Exeter. The church is dedicated to St. Michael. Five poor children are instructed for a small annuity left by Thomas Weare, in 1691.

SOYLAND, a township in the parish of HALIFAX, wapentake of MORLEY, West riding of the county of YORK, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W. by W.) from Halifax, containing 3242 inhabitants, many of whom are employed in the manufacture of cotton and woollen goods.

SPALDING, a market town and parish in the wapentake of ELLOE, parts of HOLLAND, county of LINCOLN, 44 miles (S. E. by S.) from Lincoln, and 100 (N.) from London, containing, according to the last census, 5207 inhabitants, now supposed to amount to upwards of 6000. This place is said to have derived its name from a Spa, or spring of chalybeate water, in the market-place: it is of considerable antiquity, being mentioned at an early period of the Saxon annals as one of the points on the boundary line of the estate belonging to Crowland abbey, to which a subordinate cell for a prior and five monks was founded here, in 1051, by Thorold de Buckenhale; but at the Conquest, on the presentation of this manor to Ivo Talbois, Earl of Angiers, and nephew of the Conqueror, who built a castle here, the society was so harassed by their new neighbour as to be compelled to abandon their cell, which, falling into his hands, was given, in 1074, with the church of St. Mary and the manor, to the abbey of St. Nicholas at Angiers, whereupon some Benedictine monks were sent over, and it became an Alien priory to that monastery, being dedicated to St. Mary and St. Nicholas: it did not share the fate of other Alien houses, but was raised to the dignity of an abbey, and so continued until the general suppression, when its revenue was valued at £878. 18. 3. The town is situated on the river Welland, in a fenny district, but remarkably well drained: the streets are clean and well paved, the houses of neat appearance, and the inhabitants are well supplied with water. An Antiquarian Society was established here, many years ago, by Mr. Maurice Johnson, a native of the town, of which Sir Isaac Newton, Sir Hans Sloane, Dr. Stukeley, and several other distinguished persons, were members; many of the valuable books are still preserved, some in the vestry-room of the church, and others in the grammar school, as are also some manuscripts, relics of antiquity, and natural curiosities: the room is now used for a permanent subscription library. A literary club has also been recently established. The theatre, a small and neat edifice, is open about three weeks in the year: assemblies are occasionally held in commodious rooms in the town hall. The land in the vicinity is extensively appropriated to grazing; and the fenny tracts have been drained by means of steam-engines. Wool forms a principal article of trade, and some of the manufacturing towns of Yorkshire are supplied from this neighbourhood. Since the river Welland was made navigable to Crowland and Stamford, Spalding has acquired a considerable traffic in corn and coal; sloops of from fifty to seventy tons' burden come up to the centre of the town, and by these a regular coasting trade is maintained with London, Hull, Lynn, and other places: there is a quay for landing goods, with spacious storehouses for their reception. The port is a member of the port of Boston. The market, on Tuesday, is the largest in the county for cattle. Fairs are held April 27th, June 30th, August 28th, September 25th, and December 6th, chiefly for live stock. Spalding has been the principal seat of jurisdiction for the parts of Holland for many centuries. In the Saxon times the courts of law were held here by the earls, and subsequently to the Conquest the priors were invested with the judicial authority, and possessed the power of life and death. At present the quarter sessions for these parts are held here, and petty sessions for the wapentake every week. Courts of sewers, and of requests for the recovery of debts not exceeding £5, for the hundred of Elloe; and also courts leet and baron, at which the steward presides, are held. The town hall, situated at the north-west end of the market-place, was erected at the expense of Mr. John Hobson: the lower part is let for shops, and the rental given to the poor, according to the will of the donor. A new house of correction for the parts of Holland was built in 1824: it is an airy and commodious edifice, under very good regulations.

The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, and in the patronage of certain Trustees, who are seized of the rectory, which is of considerable annual value, in trust for the incumbent. The church, which is dedicated to St. Mary and St. Nicholas, is principally in the later style of English architecture, with a fine tower and crocketed spire: it was erected in 1284, instead of the conventual church, then pulled down, and considerable additions were made in 1466, amongst which was a very beautiful north porch. There are places of worship for Baptists, the Society of Friends, Independents, and Wesleyan Methodists. A free grammar school was erected in the reign of Elizabeth, and endowed, by the will of John Blanche, with eighty-nine acres of land, for the support of a master to instruct the children of householders born in the parish: the original endowment has been considerably augmented by Mr. Atkinson: the trustees are incorporated, and have a common seal. Another, called the Petit school, was founded, in 1682, by Thomas Willesley, and endowed with nearly sixty acres of land. The Blue-coat school, founded by one of the Gamlyn family, is supported by a small endowment of land, aided by voluntary contributions. An almshouse, for the reception of twenty-two poor persons, was founded and endowed, in 1590, by Sir Matthew Gamlyn; and another for eight poor widows, in 1709, by Mrs. Elizabeth Sparke. There are also considerable estates vested in trustees, called "Town Husbands," for the benefit of the poor. A portion of the abbey buildings yet remains, which has been partly converted into tenements, and is partly in ruins. Many relics of antiquity have at different periods been discovered in the neighbourhood, and others taken out of the river Welland.

SPALDINGTON, a township in the parish of BUBWITH, Holme-Beacon division of the wapentake of HARTHILL, East riding of the county of YORK, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by E.) from Howden, containing 361 inhabitants. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. Spaldington hall, formerly the seat of the ancient family of Vavasour, is a fine specimen of the Elizabethan style of architecture.

SPALDWICK, a parish in the hundred of LEIGHTONSTONE, county of HUNTINGDON, $3\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. E. by N.) from Kimbolton, containing 332 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the Prebendary of Longstowe in the Cathedral Church of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £12. 0. 10., and endowed with £200 royal bounty. The church is dedicated to St. James. There are places of worship for Baptists and Independents. Fairs for cattle are held on Whit-Monday and November 28th.

SPALFORD, a hamlet in the parish of NORTH CLIFTON, northern division of the wapentake of NEWARK, county of NOTTINGHAM, 7 miles (E. by S.) from Tuxford, containing 86 inhabitants.

SPANBY, a parish in the wapentake of AVELAND, parts of KESTIVEN, county of LINCOLN, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. N. E.) from Falkingham, containing 73 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, and in the patronage of Jerome Knapp, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Nicholas.

SPARHAM, a parish in the hundred of EYNSFORD, county of NORFOLK, 3 miles (S. W.) from Reepham, containing 330 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £9. 17. 11., and in the patronage of Edward Lombe, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

SPARKFORD, a parish in the hundred of CATSASH, county of SOMERSET, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. W. by S.) from Castle-Cary, containing 273 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Wells, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £12. 16. 3., and in the patronage of James Bennett, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. Mary Magdalene, has lately received an addition of sixty-seven sittings, of which sixty-two are free, the Incorporated Society for the enlargement of churches and chapels having granted £40 towards defraying the expense.

SPARSHOLT, a parish partly in the hundred of SHRIVENHAM, but chiefly in that of WANTAGE, county of BERKS, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (W.) from Wantage, containing, with the joint chapelry of Kingston-Lisle with Farlow, 817 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Berks, and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £20. 2. $3\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Provost and Fellows of Queen's College, Oxford. The church, dedicated to the Holy Cross, is principally in the Norman style: it contains three stone stalls, and a piscina, highly enriched with trefoil ornaments and crocketed pinnacles. The Wilts and Berks canal passes through the parish, and the Ikniel road through the vale of White Horse, to the southward of the village. Abraham Atkins, in 1788, gave a school-house, and endowed it with a moiety of the rents arising from a certain estate: the annual income is about £63, for which the master instructs all the children of the parish who apply. Eight others are taught for £2. 10. a year, the gift of Richard Edmondson, in 1713.

SPARSHOLT, a parish in the hundred of BUDDLESGATE, Fawley division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, $3\frac{3}{4}$ miles (W. N. W.) from Winchester, containing, with Lainson, 370 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Winchester, rated in the king's books at £16. 10. $2\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. Stephen. Sparsholt is within the jurisdiction of the Cheyney Court held at Winchester every Thursday, for the recovery of debts to any amount.

SPAUNTON, a township in the parish of LASTINGHAM, wapentake of RYEDALE, North riding of the county of YORK, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W.) from Pickering, containing 109 inhabitants.

SPAXTON, a parish in the hundred of CANNINGTON, county of SOMERSET, 5 miles (W.) from Bridgwater, containing 816 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Taunton, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £24. 8. 9., and in the patronage of the Rev. William Gordon. The church is dedicated to St. Margaret. The Rev. Joseph Cook, in 1708, bequeathed lands producing a liberal income for the maintenance of six poor persons in an hospital, for teaching poor children, and other charitable purposes.

SPECTON, a chapelry in the parish of BRIDLINGTON, wapentake of DICKERING, East riding of the county of YORK, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. W.) from Bridlington, containing 116 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of the East riding, and diocese of York, endowed with £800 royal bounty, and in the patronage of W. J. Denison, Esq.

SPEEN, a parish comprising the tythings of Benham and Church-Speen, in the hundred of KINTBURY-EAGLE, and the township of Wood-Speen with Bagnor, and the tything of Speenhamland, in that of FAIRCROSS, county of BERKS, and containing 2392 inhabitants, of which number, 600 are in the tything of Church-Speen, $\frac{3}{4}$ of a mile (W.) from Speenhamland. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Berks, and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £14. 0. 10., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Salisbury. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, contains some curious monumental figures. The parish is bounded on the south by the river Kennet and the Kennet and Avon canal, and on the north by the river Lambourn. This was the Spina of the Romans, a station on the road from Gloucester to Silchester. To the north of the church traces of an agger, or fortification, are distinctly visible; and on Speen moor a large urn was found under a tumulus of earth eight feet high; a Roman altar, consecrated to Jupiter, was also discovered, in 1730, at Fulsham, in this neighbourhood. This was the principal scene of the second battle of Newbury, fought October 27th, 1644, between what is now the castle and the village. Here was formerly a market on Monday, but it has been long disused.

SPEEN (WOOD), a joint township with Bagnor, in that part of the parish of SPEEN which is in the hundred of FAIRCROSS, county of BERKS, 2 miles (N. W. by N.) from Speenhamland, containing, with Bagnor, 594 inhabitants.

SPEENHAMLAND, a hamlet in that part of the parish of SPEEN which is in the hundred of FAIRCROSS, county of BERKS, adjoining the town of Newbury, containing 818 inhabitants. An almshouse was founded here, in 1664, by Mrs. Anne Watts, for two poor widows, with an allowance of two shillings each per week.

SPEKE, a township in the parish of CHILDWALL, hundred of WEST DERBY, county palatine of LANCASTER, 7 miles (S. S. W.) from Prescott, containing 462 inhabitants.

SPELDHURST, a parish partly in the hundred of SOMERDEN, lathe of SUTTON at HONE, but chiefly in the hundred of WASHLINGSTONE, lathe of AYLESFORD, county of KENT, 3 miles (N. W.) from Tonbridge-Wells, containing 2297 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Rochester, rated in the king's books at £15. 5., and in the patronage of R. Burgess, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, was struck by lightning and burned down in 1791; it was rebuilt in the following year, and has lately received an addition of one hundred and fifty free sittings, the Incorporated Society for the enlargement of churches and chapels having granted £150 towards defraying the expense. A branch of the river Medway runs through the parish, upon which there are several mills, and a large iron-foundry, called Barden Furnace. Iron-ore abounds here, and, in consequence, the springs are more or less chalybeate. Tonbridge-Wells, situated partly in this parish, is the place most resorted to for drinking these waters; for a detailed account of it, see the article on that place.

SPELSBURY, a parish in the hundred of CHADLINGTON, county of OXFORD, 5 miles (S. E. by S.) from Chipping-Norton, containing, with the hamlets of Dean, Ditchley, Fullwell, and Taston, 610 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, rated in the king's books at £9. 8. 9., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Dean and Canons of Christ Church, Oxford. The church, dedicated to All Saints, contains the remains of John, the celebrated Earl of Rochester. On an eminence near the village is an extensive triangular intrenchment, called Castle Ditches, enclosing a space of about twenty-four acres.

SPENNITHORN, a parish in the western division of the wapentake of HANG, North riding of the county of YORK, comprising the townships of Bellerby, Harmby, and Spennithorn, and containing 850 inhabitants, of which number, 249 are in the township of Spennithorn, 1 mile (N. E. by N.) from Middleham. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Richmond, and diocese of Chester, rated in the king's books at £20. 10. 5., and in the patronage of Marmaduke Wyvill, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Michael. John Hutchinson, a philosophical writer, was born here, in 1667.

SPERNALL, a parish in the Alcester division of the hundred of BARLICHWAY, county of WARWICK, 4 miles (N.) from Alcester, containing 113 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Worcester, rated in the king's books at £3. 18. $1\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Rev. F. Chambers. The church is dedicated to St. Leonard.

SPETCHLEY, a parish in the lower division of the hundred of OSWALDSLOW, county of WORCESTER, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E. by S.) from Worcester, containing 121 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Worcester, rated in the king's books at £6. 11. 3. The Rev. George Dineley was patron in 1811. The church, dedicated to All Saints, contains several monuments worthy of notice, particularly two very handsome ones to the Berkeley family.

SPETISBURY, a parish in the hundred of LOOSEBARROW, Shaston (East) division of the county of DORSET, 3 miles (S. E. by S.) from Blandford-Forum, containing 546 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, with the perpetual curacy of Charlton-Marshall annexed, in the archdeaconry of Dorset, and diocese of Bristol, rated in the king's books at £28. 18. $1\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of Thomas Rackett, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. John the Baptist. The navigable river Stour runs close past the village. Dr. Sloper, in 1728, founded and endowed with £20 per annum a school for teaching poor children. There is also a bequest by Bishop Hall, for supplying the poor with bibles. Here was a priory, a cell to the abbey of Preaux in Normandy, founded in the time of Henry I., but afterwards considered part of the cell of Monk Toftes in Norfolk, belonging to the same house. In the neighbourhood are the remains of a fortification, in which many coins and other relics of the Saxons have been found.

SPEXHALL, a parish in the hundred of BLYTHING, county of SUFFOLK, 2 miles (N. by W.) from Halesworth, containing 172 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Suffolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £14, and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. Peter.

SPILSBY, a market town and parish in the eastern division of the soke of BOLINGBROKE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 31 miles (E.) from Lincoln, and 133 (N.) from London, containing 1234 inhabitants. The town is situated upon an elevated spot of ground which commands an extensive south-easterly view of a tract of marsh and fen land bounded by Boston deeps and the North sea: it consists of four principal streets diverging from a spacious square, forming the market-place, which is ornamented on its east side by a cross, consisting of a plain octagonal shaft rising from a quadrangular base, and resting on five steps. A subscription library and news-room is connected with the principal inn. The market is on Monday; and fairs are held on the Monday before, and the two next after, Whit-Monday (when Whitsuntide falls in May, otherwise there is no fair on the latter day), and on the third Monday in July, for cattle and wearing apparel. The general quarter sessions for the south division of the parts of Lindsey are held here twice a year, in January and July. A court-house and house of correction, begun in June 1824, were completed within two years, at an expense of £25,000: the latter contains sixty-three cells, eighteen day-rooms, and nine apartments for the turnkeys, with an infirmary and yards for the prisoners, so arranged that the governor's house commands a complete view of the whole: the site occupies about two acres of ground, and is surrounded by a lofty brick wall, in which, in front of the building, is a handsome Doric portico.

The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, endowed with £600 royal bounty, and £1200 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Rector of Partney. The church, dedicated to St. James, is an ancient irregular stone edifice, with a handsome embattled tower at the west end, supposed to have been erected about the time of Henry VII., at a much later date than the body of the building. Amongst several ancient monuments is one in memory of the celebrated Lord Willoughby de Eresby, who, in the reign of Elizabeth, commanded four thousand English troops despatched to France, in aid of Henry IV., King of Navarre: he died in 1601, and was interred here. There are places of worship for Independents and Wesleyan Methodists, with Sunday schools attached. The grammar school, rebuilt in 1826, is endowed for the gratuitous education of thirty scholars. In 1735, the Duke of Ancaster and others endowed a school for the education and clothing of twenty poor boys. At Eresby, near this town, are extensive remains of the foundations of a chapel, made collegiate in 1349, for a master and twelve priests, by Sir John Willoughby, and dedicated to the Holy Trinity. At the same place was formerly an elegant mansion belonging to the late Duke of Ancaster, which, in 1769, was destroyed by fire, one pillar alone remaining.

SPINDLESTONE, a township in the parish of BAMBROUGH, northern division of BAMBROUGH ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by S.) from Belford, containing 97 inhabitants. Here was anciently a military station of considerable extent, vestiges of mounds and intrenchments being conspicuous.

SPITTAL on the STREET, a chapelry in the parish of GLENTWORTH, western division of the wapentake of ASLACOE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 10 miles (E.) from Gainsborough. The chapel is dedicated to St. Nicholas. An hospital for poor women, with a chapel dedicated to St. Edmund, existed here in the reign of Edward II., was augmented in that of Richard II., and is now under the superintendence of the Dean and Chapter of Lincoln.

SPITTLE, a joint township with Poulton, in the parish of BEBBINGTON, lower division of the hundred of WIRRAL, county palatine of CHESTER, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.E. by N.) from Great Neston. The population is returned with Poulton.

SPITTLE, or SPITTAL, a considerable fishing and sea-bathing village in the parish of TWEEDMOUTH, in ISLANDSHIRE, forming a part of the detached portion of the county palatine of DURHAM, locally northward of the county of Northumberland, 1 mile (S.E.) from Berwick upon Tweed. The population is returned with the parish. There is a place of worship for Presbyterians. This place, which is situated on the coast of the North sea, at the mouth of the river Tweed, consists of two principal streets. It was formerly inhabited by smugglers and others of disreputable character, but, since the enclosure of the adjacent common, these have gradually given place to honest and industrious fishermen. Here are six herring houses for curing red and white herrings, and good accommodation for persons who resort hither for sea-bathing and for drinking the water of a powerful chalybeate spring in the neighbourhood. On Sunnyside hill, half a mile from the village, is an extensive colliery, the property of the corporation of Berwick.

SPITTLE, a township in the parish of OVINGHAM, eastern division of TINDALE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, 11 miles (W. by N.) from Newcastle upon Tyne, containing 3 inhabitants.

SPITTLE, a township in the parish of FANGFOSS, Wilton-Beacon division of the wapentake of HARTHILL, East riding of the county of YORK, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.W.) from Pocklington. The population is returned with the parish.

SPITTLE-HILL, a township in that part of the parish of MITFORD which is in the western division of MORPETH ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, $1\frac{3}{4}$ mile (W. by N.) from Morpeth, containing 9 inhabitants. An hospital, dedicated to St. Leonard, was founded here, and endowed with lands by Sir William Bertram; the site is occupied by a modern mansion.

SPITTLEGATE, a township in that part of the parish of GRANTHAM which is in the wapentake of WINNIBRIGGS and THREO, parts of KESTEVEN, county of LINCOLN, 1 mile (S. by E.) from Grantham, containing 709 inhabitants.

SPIXWORTH, a parish in the hundred of TAVERHAM, county of NORFOLK, $4\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. by E.) from Norwich, containing 74 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £6. E. Longe, Esq. was patron in 1808. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, contains many monuments and inscriptions.

SPOFFORTH, a parish in the upper division of the wapentake of CLARO, West riding of the county of YORK, comprising the chapelry of Wetherby, and the townships of Follifoot, Linton, Plompton, Little Ribston, Spofforth, and Stockeld, and containing 3044 inhabitants, of which number, 895 are in the township of Spofforth, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N.W. by W.) from Wetherby. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £73. 6. 8., and in the patronage of the Earl of Egremont. The church is dedicated to All Saints. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. This was for several ages, prior to Alnwick, or Warkworth, the seat of the Percy family, who had a princely castle here, which was demolished by the Yorkists after the battle of Towton, in which the Earl of Northumberland and Sir Charles Percy, his brother, were slain. The grand hall of this once magnificent mansion, though in ruins, still remains; it is nearly seventy-six feet in length, and about thirty-seven in breadth, and is lighted by one of those large cathedral windows introduced subsequently to the reign of Edward I. A school for fifteen poor children is supported by an annuity of £5, the gift of the Earl of Egremont, in 1786, and another of £2. 10., by the Rev. Dr. Trip.

SPONDON, a parish in the hundred of APPLETREE, county of DERBY, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E. by S.) from Derby, containing, with the chapelry of Stanley, 1543 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Derby, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, rated in the king's books at £6. 14. 7., and in the patronage of the Executors of the late H. D. Lowe, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is in the decorated style of English architecture, and has in the chancel three stone stalls: it has lately undergone a thorough repair, at an expense of £1200, and received an addition of one hundred and eighty sittings, of which one hundred and two are free, the Incorporated Society for the enlargement of churches and chapels having granted £65 towards defraying the expense: in the churchyard is an antique stone, apparently Saxon. The Derby canal passes through the parish, which was formerly more extensive, the chapelries of Chaddesden, Lockhay, and Stanley, having been recently separated from it, and erected into distinct parishes. The village of Spondon, on a commanding eminence, overlooking the beautiful vale of Derwent, is of considerable size, and the residence of several highly respectable families. The inhabitants are principally employed at the extensive cotton-mills, established here, and in the manufacture of stockings, lace, and net, for the Nottingham market. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. A parochial library has been established. A free school for ten boys was endowed with a rent-charge of £3, by Thomas Gilbert, Esq., in 1657, and an annuity of £5, the gift of the Rev. George Stanhope, in 1727: the school-room was built in 1699. A National school is supported by subscription.

SPOONBED, a tything in the parish of PAINSWICK, hundred of BISLEY, county of GLOUCESTER, containing 880 inhabitants.

SPORLE, a parish in the southern division of the hundred of GREENHOE, county of NORFOLK, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.E. by E.) from Swaffham, containing, with the hamlet of Palgrave, 706 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £10. 3. $6\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Provost and Fellows of Eton College. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is an ancient and spacious building of flint, with a western tower, quoined and embattled with freestone, annexed to which is a large porch, also embattled, with a dilapidated room over it, supposed to have been once inhabited by a recluse. In the chancel are many old gravestones, stripped of their brasses, and on the north side a small chapel, separated from the aisle by screen-work. A priory of Black monks, a cell to the abbey of Saumers in Anjou, was founded here, as it is thought, by Henry II., in honour of the Blessed Virgin Mary, and at the suppression was granted, by Henry VI., towards the endowment of Eton College. Eight children are instructed for a small sum arising from the rent of certain land bequeathed by Sir Matthew Colworthy.

SPOTLAND, a chapelry, consisting of the townships of Spotland Further Side and Spotland Nearer Side, in that part of the parish of ROCHDALE which is in the hundred of SALFORD, county palatine of LANCASTER, $1\frac{1}{4}$ mile (N.W.) from Rochdale, containing 13,453 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chester, and in the patronage of the Vicar of Rochdale. This chapelry forms an extensive suburb to the town of Rochdale, and largely participates in the cotton and every other branch of trade and manufacture carried on there. It is in contemplation to erect a new chapel, his Majesty's commissioners for building churches having proposed a grant for that purpose. Samuel Taylor and Robert Jacques, in 1740, conveyed to trustees a school-house and sundry other property, for the free education of children; the annual income is about £31, which is paid to a schoolmistress, for teaching twenty girls. The premises were rebuilt in 1819, at an expense of £400, the amount of accumulations.

SPRATTON, a parish in the hundred of SPELHOE, county of NORTHAMPTON, $6\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N.N.W.) from Northampton, containing, with the hamlet of Little Creaton, 945 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Northampton, and diocese of Peterborough, rated in the king's books at £15, and in the patronage of John Bartlett, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. Luke, has a Norman tower, and the body presents a mixture of that and the early and decorated styles of English architecture.

SPREYTON, a parish in the hundred of WONFORD, county of DEVON, 8 miles (E. by N.) from Oakhampton, containing 398 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £10. 5. 8., and in the patronage of the Rev. Richard Holland. The church is dedicated to St. Michael. A lead mine has been opened here, but it has hitherto proved unsuccessful.

SPRIDLINGTON, a parish in the eastern division of the wapentake of ASLACOE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 9 miles (W.S.W.) from Market-Rasen, containing 199 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Stow, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £11. 10., and in the patronage of the Rev. Frederick Gildart. The church is dedicated to St. Hilary.

SPRINGFIELD, a parish in the hundred of CHELMSFORD, county of ESSEX, 1 mile (N. E.) from Chelmsford, containing 1450 inhabitants. The living is a rectory in two portions, called Bosworth's and Richard's, but consolidated by Bishop Sherlock, in the archdeaconry of Essex, and diocese of London, the former rated in the king's books at £11. 6. 8., and the latter at £11. 4. 9½., and in the patronage of the Earl of Arran. The church is dedicated to All Saints. The river Chelmer runs through the parish, which derives its name from an extraordinary number of springs within its limits. Dr. Goldsmith composed his "Deserted Village" whilst residing at a farm-house nearly opposite the church here. Joseph Strutt, the engraver and antiquary, was born here in 1749; he died in 1802.

SPRINGTHORPE, a parish in the wapentake of CORRINGHAM, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 4½ miles (E. by S.) from Gainsborough, containing 200 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Stow, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £14. 3. 4., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. George and St. Lawrence.

SPROATLEY, a parish in the Middle division of the wapentake of HOLDERNESS, East riding of the county of YORK, 7 miles (N. E. by E.) from Kingston upon Hull, containing 357 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of the East riding, and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £7. 0. 10., and in the patronage of the Earl of Cardigan. The church, dedicated to All Saints, was built in 1819, upon the site of the old edifice, which was dedicated to St. Swithin: it is of white brick, principally in the later style of English architecture, and has lately received an addition of one hundred free sittings, the Incorporated Society for the enlargement of churches and chapels having granted £150 towards defraying the expense. In laying the foundation of the church some antique tombstones were found, one of them bearing a Saxon inscription. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. Bridget Biggs, in 1733, gave an estate for the erection and support of a school for twenty children, and for apprenticing them: the income is about £90 per annum, for which sixteen boys and fifteen girls are educated and apprenticed.

SPROSTON, a township in that part of the parish of MIDDLEWICH which is in the hundred of NORTHWICH, county palatine of CHESTER, 2¼ miles (E.) from Middlewich, containing 148 inhabitants.

SPROTBROUGH, a parish in the northern division of the wapentake of STRAFFORTH and TICKHILL, West riding of the county of YORK, comprising the chapelry of Cateby and the township of Sprotbrough, and containing 487 inhabitants, of which number, 318 are in the township of Sprotbrough, 2¾ miles (W.S.W.) from Doncaster. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £44. 18. 9., and in the patronage of Sir J. Copley, Bart. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, contains monuments of the Fitzwilliams and Copleys: one of the former family founded an hospital here, before 1363, in honour of St. Edmund, the revenue of which at the dissolution was valued at £9. 13. 11.

SPROUGHTON, a parish in the hundred of SAMFORD, county of SUFFOLK, 3 miles (W. by N.) from Ipswich, containing 506 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Suffolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £20. 18. 9., and in the patronage of the Marquis of Bristol. The church is dedicated to All Saints. The Stow-Market and Ipswich navigation passes through the parish.

SPROWSTON, a parish in the hundred of TAVERHAM, county of NORFOLK, 3 miles (N. E. by N.) from Norwich, containing 832 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Norwich, endowed with £400 royal bounty, and £1000 parliamentary grant. The church, dedicated to St. Mary and St. Margaret, contains a mural monument of marble to the memory of Sir Miles Corbet, and Catharine his lady, a descendant of whom, Thomas Corbet, Esq., was one of the judges that signed the death warrant of Charles I., and, after the Restoration, was arrested and executed as a traitor, in 1661.

SPROXTON, a parish in the hundred of FRAMLAND, county of LEICESTER, 8 miles (N. E. by E.) from Melton-Mowbray, containing 372 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, consolidated with that of Saltby, in the archdeaconry of Leicester, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £7. 4. 4., endowed with £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Duke of Rutland. The church is dedicated to St. Bartholomew. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. The small river Eye runs through the parish.

SPROXTON, a township in the parish of HELMSLEY, wapentake of RYEDALE, North riding of the county of YORK, 1½ mile (S.) from Helmsley, containing 167 inhabitants.

SPURSTOW, a township in that part of the parish of BUNBURY which is in the first division of the hundred of EDDISBURY, county palatine of CHESTER, 4¼ miles (S. by E.) from Tarporley, containing 553 inhabitants. A mineral spring here, called Spurstow Spa, was formerly much frequented, and baths were erected by Sir Thomas Mostyn, for the accommodation of visitors; but the waters are not at present in much repute.

STADHAMPTON, a parish in the hundred of DORCHESTER, county of OXFORD, 8 miles (S.E. by E.) from Oxford, containing 254 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the jurisdiction of the peculiar court of Dorchester, endowed with £16 per annum private benefaction, £600 royal bounty, and £400 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of C. Peers, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. John the Baptist. Sundry benefactions, producing £10 a year, are applied for the education of nine poor children. The parish is bounded on the west by the river Thame. The Rev. John Owen, D.D., the celebrated and learned nonconformist, Dean of Christ Church, and Vice Chancellor of the University of Oxford, in the time of the Commonwealth, was born here.

STADMERSLOW, a township in the parish of WOLSTANTON, northern division of the hundred of PIREHILL, county of STAFFORD, containing 264 inhabitants.

STAFFIELD, or STAFFOL, a township in the parish of KIRK-OSWALD, LEATH ward, county of CUMBERLAND, 1½ mile (N.N.W.) from Kirk-Oswald, containing 309 inhabitants.

Arms.

is of great antiquity, was originally called Stadeford, or Stadford, from the Saxon Stade, signifying a place on a river, and the trajectus, or ford, across the river Sow, on which it is situated. It is said to have been, in 705, the devotional retirement of St. Bertelin, the son of a Mercian king, upon whose expulsion from his hermitage, at a spot called Bertelney, and Betheney, meaning the island of Bertelin, several houses were built, which formed the origin of the present town. In 913, Ethelfleda, Countess of Mercia, erected a castle on the north side of the river, and surrounded the town with walls and a fosse, of which the only vestige is a small portion of the East gate. Edward the Elder, brother of Ethelfleda, about a year after the erection of the castle, built a tower, the site of which Mr. Pennant supposes to have been the mount called, by Speed, Castle hill. From this period till the Conquest, the town appears to have increased considerably in extent and importance, and though it had not received any charter of incorporation, it is, in Domesday-book, called a city, in which the king had eighteen burgesses in demesne, and the Earls of Mercia twenty mansions. William, out of all the manors in the county, reserved this only for himself, and built a castle to keep the barons in subjection, appointing, as governor, Robert de Toeni, the progenitor of the house of Stafford, on whom he bestowed all the other manors, with the title of Baron de Stafford. The castle, after having been rebuilt by Ralph de Stafford, a celebrated warrior, in the reign of Edward III., remained till the parliamentary war, when it was garrisoned by the royal forces under the Earl of Northampton, but was at length taken by the parliamentary troops under the command of Sir William Brereton, and subsequently demolished by order of the parliament. The remains consisted chiefly of the keep, and were situated on the summit of a lofty eminence, about a mile and a half to the south-west of the town; the walls were eight feet thick, and at each angle was an octagonal turret, with a tower similarly shaped on the south-west side. About fifty years since, the only visible remains were part of a wall, which the late Sir William Jerningham underbuilt, to prevent it from falling; in doing which it was discovered, that the basement story lay buried under the ruins of the upper parts. Sir George Jerningham afterwards began to rebuild the castle on the old foundation, but has completed only one front, flanked with two round towers, in which are deposited some ancient armour and other curiosities. The town is pleasantly situated on the river Sow, about six miles distant from its confluence with the Trent: the entrance from the London road is by a neat bridge over the river, near which was one of the ancient gates:

STAFFORD, a borough, market town, and parish, having separate jurisdiction, locally in the southern division of the hundred of Pirehill, county of STAFFORD, of which it is the capital, 136 miles (N. W. by N.) from London, on the road to Chester, containing, with the township of Worston, 5759 inhabitants. This place, which the houses are in general well built of brick, and roofed with slate, and many of them are handsome and of modern erection; the streets are well paved, at the expense of the corporation, and the inhabitants are amply supplied with water. The environs are pleasant, abounding with noble mansions and elegant villas. Assemblies are held in a suite of rooms in the town hall; and races take place annually in May. The principal branch of manufacture is that of shoes, for supplying the London market, and for exportation; and the tanning of leather is carried on to a considerable extent. Stafford, in common with the neighbourhood, is also noted for the quality of its ale. The river Penk joins the Sow near Rudford bridge, an elegant structure of three arches, nearly a mile distant, and the Staffordshire and Worcestershire canal passes near the town. The market is on Saturday: the fairs are April 5th, May 14th, June 25th, October 3rd, and December 5th, principally for horses and cattle.

Corporate Seal.

The inhabitants first received a regular charter of incorporation in the reign of John, confirming all privileges previously enjoyed; it was dated one year prior to that of London, and seven years before the signing of Magna Charta. After various confirmations and additions, in the subsequent reigns, it became forfeited in 1826, by the common council neglecting to fill up vacancies in the body corporate; and, on petition, a new charter was granted by George IV., in 1827, restoring and confirming all previous rights and privileges, with the exception only of exemption from serving on juries for the county. By this charter, the government is vested in a mayor, ten aldermen, and ten principal burgesses, assisted by a recorder, town clerk, serjeants at mace, and subordinate officers. The mayor is annually elected by the aldermen and capital burgesses, who fill up vacancies in their respective bodies as they occur: the mayor and the two senior aldermen are justices of the peace within the borough. The freedom is inherited by birth, or obtained by servitude to a resident freeman. The corporation have power to hold quarterly courts of session within the borough, for all offences not capital; but they transfer to the judges travelling the circuit all causes requiring the decision of a jury: they have power also to hold a court of record, for the recovery of debts to any amount, but no process has issued from it for the last twenty years. The custom of Borough English prevails within the town and liberties. The assizes and sessions for the county, which had previously been held here, were restored by Queen Elizabeth, the inhabitants having represented to her, on visiting the town, that to their removal its decay, at that time, was, among other causes, to be attributed. The borough first exercised the elective franchise in the 23rd of Edward I., since which time it has regularly returned two members to parliament: the right of election is vested in all resident burgesses: non-residents, who are eligible to become burgesses, may vote on being sworn in, but if they continue to reside out of the borough, they lose their franchise, unless they again become inhabitants for six months before the election. The number of electors is upwards of eight hundred: the mayor is the returning officer. The county hall is a spacious and handsome modern building of stone, in the centre of the High-street, and occupying nearly the whole of one side of a spacious square, appropriated as a market-place, over part of which is a room for one thousand stand of arms, for the Staffordshire militia; towards its erection the corporation contributed £1050: it is one hundred and twenty feet in length, ornamented in the front with finely-sculptured figures of Justice and Peace, and contains several handsome apartments, with an assembly-room in the centre, elegantly fitted up, and occupying nearly the whole length of the front; on each side of it are the court-rooms for the assizes and sessions, approached by a central staircase, on the landing of which are the grand jury room and other apartments. The county gaol and house of correction is a spacious and substantial modern edifice, comprising the governor's house, an infirmary, a chapel (in which service is performed regularly every Sunday, and twice during the week), a school-room, nineteen wards, nineteen day-rooms, seventeen work-rooms and shops, and nineteen airing-yards, with two tread-mills, of which one is used for the grinding of corn, and the other for raising water for the supply of the prison, which is well adapted to the classification of prisoners, who are employed at their trades, and receive a portion of their earnings on discharge: the building occupies an airy and healthy situation, and is under excellent regulations, being calculated for the reception of two hundred prisoners in separate cells.

Stafford comprises the united parishes of St. Mary and St. Chad, in the archdeaconry of Stafford, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry. The living of St. Mary's is a rectory not in charge, in the patronage of the Crown: the church, formerly collegiate for a dean and thirteen prebendaries, is an ancient and spacious cruciform structure in the early style of English architecture, with a lofty octagonal tower rising from the intersection, the upper part of which is of later date: the north entrance is richly ornamented with delicate shafts, and bold hollows embellished with flowers and foliage: the interior is beautifully arranged; the piers and arches are of the early English, passing into the decorated, style, and, to the east of the transepts, diminish gradually in height; the windows are generally in the decorated style, though intermixed with others of the later English, of which the east window is an elegant specimen; the chancel is spacious, and the roof is supported on finely-pointed arches, and piers of clustered columns; in the north transept is an ancient font of great beauty, and highly ornamented with sculptured figures and animals; there are many ancient monuments, among which the most conspicuous are those of the family of Aston of Tixall. The living of St. Chad's is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the Prebendary of Pipa Minor in the Cathedral Church of Lichfield: the church is a small edifice, originally in the Norman style of architecture, with a tower of the later English style between the chancel and the nave; the former is still in good preservation, and, with the exception of a modern east window, retains its original character; but the nave is of more recent date. There are places of worship for the Society of Friends, Independents, Wesleyan Methodists of the Old and New Connexion, and a Roman Catholic chapel; which last, in that part of the environs called Forebridge, is a small but handsome edifice, erected by the late Edward Jerningham, Esq., and contains several of the ancient stone stalls removed from Lichfield cathedral.

The free grammar school, which, according to Leland, was originally established by "Sir Thomas, Countre Parson of Ingestre by Heywodde, and Syr Randol, a chauntre preste of Stafford," and further endowed with subsequent benefactions, was, on petition of the inhabitants, refounded by Edward VI., who augmented the endowment, in 1550: the income exceeds £370 per annum, of which two-thirds are paid to the headmaster, and the remainder to the usher, both of whom are appointed by the corporation, subject to the approval of the bishop of the diocese: the school is open to all boys of the town, of whom there are at present thirteen on the foundation. A Lancasterian school is supported by subscription; and there are Sunday schools in connexion with the established church and the dissenting congregations. The institution for the relief of the widows and orphans of poor clergymen of the "Archdeaconry, the several Peculiars, and County, of Stafford," is supported by liberal donations and annual subscription, and has also an income arising from property vested in old South Sea stock, amounting to £2400: such clergymen as are disabled by age, sickness, or infirmity, and have not an income sufficient for the necessary support of themselves and their families, participate also in the benefits of this institution. The county infirmary was instituted in 1766, and the present building erected in 1772: the premises, situated in the Foregate, were considerably enlarged a few years since, and are well adapted to the reception of eighty patients, who receive professional assistance from two physicians, three surgeons, and a chaplain attached to the institution, which is under the superintendence of a president and committee: the average number of patients admitted in the course of a year is six hundred, and about eight hundred out-patients receive the benefit of medical assistance at their own dwellings: attached to it is a house of recovery from fever, recently erected, designed for the reception of twenty-four patients: this institution has funded property, amounting to £2347, and is further supported by donations and annual subscriptions: within the last few months it has received the name of hospital, and confers, on pupils who have attended it, the same advantages and privileges as the hospitals of London. The county general lunatic asylum was established in 1818, for patients from all parts of the kingdom, upon moderate terms, regulated according to the circumstances of the patients; those from the county are received upon lower terms than others, and in all cases the deficiency is made up from the funds of the institution, which is liberally supported by subscription, and has funded property to the amount of £2351. 15. in the three per cent. consols. It is admirably conducted, and ranks among the principal establishments of this kind in the kingdom. The buildings are spacious, and well adapted to the health and comfort of the patients; the gardens and pleasure grounds comprise thirty acres, in which they may take exercise, and every kind of rational amusement is afforded them; a small stream runs through the enclosure, and warm air is introduced into the buildings, which are well ventilated, arranged according to the rank and condition of the patients, and provided with warm and cold baths; one hundred and seventy patients may be received into the institution. Almshouses for twelve aged and infirm persons were erected, in 1640, by Sir Martin Noel, at an expense of £1000; twenty poor families at present reside in them, and receive among them fifteen shillings and sixpence weekly, paid by the corporation from the rental of land in the Coton fields; which sum will be increased with £12 per annum, arising from the Marston tithes, and the interest of £50 left by Dr. Binns: these houses are in a very dilapidated state; two of them have been repaired by Lord Talbot, who appoints two inmates, the rest being nominated by the corporation. A priory of Black canons was founded by Richard Peche, Bishop of Coventry and Lichfield, in 1181, and dedicated to St. Thomas à Becket, the revenue of which at the dissolution was £198. 0. 9.: a small portion of the buildings now converted into a farm-house remains, about two miles east of the town. A house of Friars Eremites, of the order of St. Augustine, was founded in the suburb of Forebridge, by Ralph, Lord Stafford, to which, on the suppression of the priory of Stone, the monuments of the Stafford family were removed; it continued till the dissolution, at which time these splendid monuments were destroyed. A priory of Franciscan friars was founded at the north end of the town walls by Sir James Stafford of Sandon, in the reign of Edward I., the revenue of which at the dissolution was £35. 13. 10. In addition to these were a free chapel, in the castle, dedicated to St. Nicholas; a free chapel, or hospital, of St. John, near the river, in Forebridge, for a master and poor brethren, the revenue of which at the dissolution was £10; and a free chapel, or hospital, dedicated to St. Leonard, of which the revenue was £4. 12. 4. Several silver coins, of a later date than the reign of Edward VI., a silver cross, the lower portion of an ancient font or piscina, a cannon ball, and two small millstones, were found, on repairing the walls of the castle, some few years since. Among eminent natives were, John de Stafford, a Franciscan monk; Edmund Stafford, Bishop of Exeter, and Chancellor of England, in the reigns of Richard II. and Henry IV.; Thomas Ashebourn, a strenuous opponent of Wickliffe; Thomas Fitz-herbert, a learned Roman Catholic divine of the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries, and principal of the English college at Rome; and Izaak Walton, the well-known author of the treatise on the art of angling. Stafford gives the title of baron to the family of Jerningham, and that of marquis to the family of Gower.

STAFFORD, a hamlet in the parish of BARWICK, hundred of HOUNDSBOROUGH, BERWICK, and COKER, county of SOMERSET, 2 miles (S. by E.) from Yeovil. The population is returned with the parish.

STAFFORD (WEST), a parish in the hundred of CULLIFORD-TREE, Dorchester division of the county of DORSET, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S.E. by E.) from Dorchester, containing 184 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, with that of Frome-Billet united, in the archdeaconry of Dorset, and diocese of Bristol, rated in the king's books at £10. 8. $1\frac{1}{2}$. Mrs. Elizabeth Floyer was patroness in 1820. The church, by the date 1640 over the porch, seems to have been rebuilt in that year. At Bingham Court are the remains of a free chapel, which has been long desecrated. Frome-Billet was formerly a parish, but the church having been destroyed, and the parish becoming almost depopulated, the living was united, about the middle of the fifteenth century, to that of West Stafford.

STAFFORDSHIRE, an inland county, bounded on the north and north-west by Cheshire, on the west by Shropshire, on the south by Worcestershire and a detached portion of Shropshire, on the south-east by Warwickshire, and on the east and north-east by a small projecting portion of the county of Leicester, and by Derbyshire. It extends from $52^{\circ} 23'$ to $53^{\circ} 14'$ (N. Lat.), and from $1^{\circ} 33'$ to $2^{\circ} 22'$ (W. Lon.); and includes an area of one thousand one hundred and forty-eight square miles, or seven hundred and thirty-four thousand seven hundred and twenty statute acres. The population, in 1821, was 341,040. Its ancient British inhabitants were the Cornavii, whose territory, on its subjection by the Romans, was included in the division called Flavia Casariensis. On the completion of the Anglo-Saxon Octarchy, it was included in the powerful kingdom of Mercia, several of the principal towns of which were situated within its limits. In the year 705, a battle was fought between Cenred, King of Mercia, and Osred, King of Northumbria, near Maer, in this county. Staffordshire shared largely in the calamitous results of the Danish invasions. The Danes, however, were defeated with great slaughter by the Saxons in a battle fought in the reign of Edward the Elder, early in the tenth century, either near Tettenhall, or at Wednesfield, in the south-western part of the county. In the reign of Henry I., Robert de Belesme, Earl of Shrewsbury, in open revolt, in support of the claim of Robert Duke of Normandy to the English crown, committed great ravages in Staffordshire. In the year 1322, Thomas, Earl of Lancaster, in rebellion against Edward II., was defeated at Burton upon Trent, whence he was pursued to Pontefract. During the sanguinary struggle between the houses of York and Lancaster, the Earl of Salisbury, proceeding, with a body of about five thousand men, to join the Duke of York, who then lay at Ludlow, was intercepted at Blore heath by the royal army, amounting to ten thousand men, under the command of Lord Audley: an engagement ensued, in which, by a skilful manœuvre, the earl succeeded in gaining the victory, and Lord Audley himself was slain, together with two thousand four hundred of his men, almost all from Cheshire: Margaret of Anjou, consort of Henry VI., who beheld the contest, fled to Eccleshall castle. In the great civil war of the seventeenth century, both parties had numerous active supporters in this county. In 1643, a smart action occurred on Hopton heath, near Stafford, between a small party of royalists, under the Earl of Northampton, and some parliamentary forces, under Sir John Gell and Sir William Brereton: the royalists gained some advantage, but the earl, being too eager in the pursuit, was surrounded and slain. Stafford soon after surrendered to the parliament, as also did the town of Wolverhampton and the castle of Eccleshall, the latter only after a severe siege, during which Sir William Brereton signally defeated a party of royalists under Col. Hastings, who attempted its relief: in the early part of this contest also, Sir William Brereton had reduced the castle of Tutbury, after a vigorous siege. In 1643, Burton upon Trent was plundered by the parliamentary army, who left a garrison in it. Lichfield Close, the fortified part of that city, which was held by the royalists, was first besieged in March 1643, by Lord Brook, who, being slain in the course of the operations, was succeeded in the command by Sir J. Gell, to whom the place shortly after surrendered; but the parliamentary garrison left by this commander, after a brave resistance, was, on the 21st of the following month, compelled to deliver it up to Prince Rupert, who advanced hither from the reduction of Birmingham: this place remained in the hands of the royalists until about twelve months after the decisive battle of Naseby. From Lichfield Prince Rupert proceeded to Burton, and gained possession of it, leaving a garrison, which was soon compelled to surrender the town to Lord Grey. In 1644, Dudley castle, locally situated just within the southern confines of the county, after being besieged for the space of three weeks by the parliamentarians, was relieved, on July 11th, by a party of the king's forces from Worcester. Stourton castle surrendered to the king this year; and the parliamentarians were also defeated by Col. Bagot, in an attack upon Lord Paget's manor-house, near Burton upon Trent. In the course of the year 1646, the fortresses held by the royalists were surrendered to the opposite party. In 1745, the Scotch rebels halted at Leek, while the army under the Duke of Cumberland was drawn up on Stone field, near the town of Stone, to oppose them; the rebels, however, resumed their retreat, closely followed by the duke's forces.

Staffordshire is in the diocese of Lichfield and Coventry (excepting the two parishes of Brome and Clent), and in the province of Canterbury: it forms an arch-deaconry, containing the deaneries of Tamworth, Tutbury, Lapley, Treizull, Alveton, Leek, Newcastle under Line, and Stone, and comprises one hundred and forty-six parishes, of which forty-five are rectories, forty-four vicarages, and the remainder perpetual curacies. For purposes of civil government it is divided into the hundreds of Cuttlestone (East and West), Offlow (North and South), Pirehill (North and South), Seisdon (North and South), and Totmonslow (North and South). It contains the city of Lichfield; the borough and market towns of Newcastle under Line, Stafford, and Tamworth; and the market towns of Burslem, Burton upon Trent, Cheadle, Eccleshall, Hanley, Lane-End, Leek, Longnor, Penkridge, Rugeley, Stone, Uttoxeter, Walsall, Wednesbury, and Wolverhampton. Two knights are returned to parliament for the shire, two representatives for the city of Lichfield, and two for each of the boroughs. This county is included in the Oxford circuit: the assizes and quarter sessions are held at Stafford. There are sixty-two acting magistrates. The rates raised in the county for the year ending March 25th, 1827, amounted to £165,518. 12., and the expenditure to £158,808. 13., of which £124,958. 19. were applied to the relief of the poor.

Its surface is various. The northern part rises into hills, called the Moorlands, constituting the southern extremity of the long mountainous range which extends hence through the north of Derbyshire, and along the western confines of Yorkshire, towards the mountainous borders of Scotland. These moorlands are situated to the north of a supposed line drawn from Uttoxeter to Newcastle under Line, and comprise large tracts of waste and uncultivated land, appropriated almost entirely to the pasturage of sheep. A large portion of them has been enclosed with stone walls, almost the only fence to be seen in this part of the county; but these enclosures have not been subdivided, and large breadths have never undergone the least improvement. The pleasant vale, in which is situated the town of Cheadle, in this part of the county, is bounded, in the vicinity of that town, by high barren hills, composed of huge heaps of gravel: the wastes upon these hills, and others equally dreary and barren, extending both northward and westward of Cheadle, are extensive; almost their only produce being heath, broom, whortleberries, and mountain cinquefoil. Eastward of this town also, approaching the borders of Derbyshire, are similar desolate wastes, one of which, near the banks of the Dove, is called Oak-moor, from its being nearly covered with dwarf oaks. A little to the north of this commences an extensive tract of limestone country, included between the rivers Dove and Churnet, extending westward as far as Ipstones, and northward as far as Longnor, and comprising an area of fifty or sixty square miles: this is the most valuable part of the moorlands, the soil naturally producing a fine herbage: many of the hills, which are composed of immense masses of limestone, rise to a very considerable height, and in various places present huge perpendicular cliffs: the Weaver hills, in the southern part of it, of very considerable extent, rise, in common with some other of the highest peaks of the moorlands, to the height of a thousand feet and upwards above the level of the tide in the Thames at Brentford, and command remarkably extensive views, in which are included the Peak hills of Derbyshire; these are almost covered with irregular excrescences, clothed with moss or lichens. Large tracts of the other parts of the moorlands, notwithstanding their great superiority of elevation, are entirely wet peat moors, or mosses; such are Morrage, Axedge, the Cloud heath, High Forest, Leek Frith, and Mole Cop. The summits of some of the hills terminate in huge cliffs, particularly those called Leek Rocks, or Roches, composed of a coarse gritstone; and Ipstones' Sharp Cliffs, large rugged rocks piled in remarkably striking forms, and overhanging a precipice, at the base of which are scattered prodigious masses, which have fallen from the rocks above. Indeed, one of the greatest obstacles to the improvement of much of the moorlands consists in the immense quantities of stones lying on, or of rocks rising above, the surface soil: some of the most striking of these masses, besides those just mentioned, are Wetley rocks, those to the west of Flash, and others on High Forest, the Cloud heath, and Mole Cop common, with the waste to the north of it. The scenery of Dove Dale is celebrated for its romantic beauty; and in the limestone part of the moorlands are various narrow, deep, and picturesque vallies, bounded on each side by precipices of rock, among the principal of which are Mill Dale, near Allstonefield, and the vale of the small river Manifold.

The middle and southern parts of the county are level, or diversified only by gently rising eminences. The following tracts, however, are exceptions to this observation, viz., the limestone hills of Dudley and Sedgley; the parish of Rowley-Regis, principally composed of an isolated mountain, terminating in various peaks, the loftiest of them, called Turner's Hill, being the highest spot of ground in the south of Staffordshire, rising to the height of nine hundred feet above the level of high water in the Thames at Brentford; the hills of Clent, in the detached portion of the county lying to the south of Stourbridge in Worcestershire, and nearly equal in height to those of Rowley; Bar-beacon, rising to the height of six hundred and fifty-three feet, and many others of less elevation; all of which command striking and extensive prospects over this and some of the neighbouring counties. The soil of the Rowley hills is a strong marly loam, through which the rocky substratum frequently rises in innumerable fragments; that of the Clent hills is of the kind commonly called stone-brash, the lower parts being of stronger staple than the summits: much of these latter hills consists of sheep-walks of good herbage. Magnificent views may also be obtained from Beaudesert park, Sherholt park, Tamworth castle, and Tutbury castle. The lowest points of land are supposed to be the banks of the Severn at Upper Arely, which are only sixty feet above the level of high water at Brentford; and the banks of the Trent, at its junction with the Dove below Burton, about one hundred feet above the same level: those of the Tame at Tamworth are fifty feet higher than the last-mentioned. The lakes are neither numerous nor very extensive: the principal is Aqualate meer, on the borders of Shropshire, near Newport in that county, which is one thousand eight hundred and forty-eight yards long, and six hundred and seventy-two broad; the extent of Ladford Pool is about sixty acres. The climate, in its general character, is cold and wet; in the moorlands the very great quantity of rain that falls is attributed to the attractive force of the mountains acting upon the passing vapours; and in this district the snow, which is here always of greater depth than elsewhere in the county, continues upon the ground for a very long time; and its fences, being almost entirely uncemented stone walls, do not at all mitigate the piercing coldness of the atmosphere. The average annual quantity of rain which falls in Staffordshire is estimated at thirty-six inches.

The arable soils have been distinguished, by Mr. Pitt, in his general view of the agriculture of the county, into four species, viz.: first, strong, or clayey soils, which are of two kinds, the harsh, stiff, and untractable, and the more mild and friable, both of them commonly resting on a substratum of marl, with a hard stone rock underneath. Lands of this nature occupy a very extensive tract, stretching across the middle of the county, from the border of Derbyshire to that of Shropshire, but excluding the extensive waste of Cannock heath, and the country to the east of Stafford, between that town and the Trent. That part of the county lying eastward of the river Tame has the same kind of soil, as also have several parishes in the southwestern extremity approaching the banks of the Severn. Secondly, loose, light, sandy land, adapted to the culture of turnips, and occupying a tract bounded on the north by the Trent, on the east by the Tame, on the south by the confines of the county, and on the west by an imaginary line drawn from the village of Armitage, near the Trent, southward by Longdon, Hammerwich, Aldridge, and a short distance eastward of Walsall, to the verge of the county, near Birmingham: of the same kind also are, a considerable tract lying to the south-west of Dudley and Wolverhampton, extending from the border of Worcestershire to that of Shropshire; and another, of much smaller size, extending westward from Brewood, and including the village of Sheriff-Hales. Thirdly, the calcareous soils, or those resting on a substratum of limestone; such are the soils of the great northern limestone district before described, as also of one of very small extent to the north and north-west of Dudley, and of another to the north-east of Walsall. Fourthly and lastly, mixed soils and loams, formed of the above in different proportions, frequently with the addition of gravel and various adventitious matter, and occupying the remaining extensive portions of the county: the substrata are various, including sand, gravel, clay, marl, and stone of different kinds. In some of the uncultivated tracts, and in one or two other places, are found small pieces of ground of a thin light black earth of a peaty nature, generally lying upon gravel. The meadow soils are in many places similar to those of the adjoining arable lands, with the addition, when within reach of natural inundation, of the accumulating sediment so deposited; and in others composed of peat-earth, varying in thickness, sometimes to the depth of several feet, and containing trunks of trees. This kind of land, which must be drained on converting it to meadow, or pasture land, for which it is very valuable, sinks several inches during that process.

The quantity of land devoted to agricultural purposes is estimated at six hundred thousand acres, of which five hundred thousand are arable, the rest meadow, or pasture. Of the arable lands, two hundred thousand acres are of the clayey, or of the more friable of the mixed loams; an equal quantity is of gravelly or sandy loam, or of the calcareous soils, while the remaining hundred thousand acres are, for the most part, of light sandy or gravelly loams, suitable for turnips. The courses of crops are various: it may be observed, however, that the famous Norfolk system, including the rotation of turnips, barley, clover, and wheat, is in common practice on the light soils. The crops of grain and pulse commonly cultivated are wheat, barley, oats, beans, and peas: the average of what are considered good crops of wheat is twenty-five bushels per acre; of barley, thirty; and of oats, from thirty to forty: that of peas and beans varies greatly. Rye is little grown, though some is sown as early spring food for sheep. On the moorlands oats are almost the only grain ever cultivated, and are commonly sown for three succeeding years, after which the ground is laid down for grass: a considerable quantity of oaten bread is eaten in the moorlands. Buck-wheat, here called French wheat, is sometimes cultivated, both as a crop and for ploughing under as manure. Hemp and flax are also grown, though upon a small scale; and many leases are subject to restrictions to prevent the cultivation of these plants to any great extent. Cabbages are a common agricultural crop in many parts of the county. The common and the Swedish turnip are both extensively grown, as also are vetches and rape. The common artificial grasses are red clover, white clover, trefoil, and ray-grass: burnet and rib-grass are sown in considerable quantities, as are also mixed hay-seeds. The low lands adjoining the rivers and brooks consist of meadows and pastures, as also do considerable tracts of flat land, which, by the backing on of water in former times, have acquired a stratum of peaty earth upon their surface. Considerable tracts of meadow land, lying near the larger streams, are rendered very productive by the occasional overflow of their waters, which, however, sometimes sweep away, or greatly damage, the produce. The meadows on the banks of the Dove, in the higher part of its course, before it is joined by the Churnet, are rendered proverbially fertile by the calcareous particles deposited by the overflowing of that river, the plain within reach of which is in some places nearly a mile broad. There is a considerable extent of grass land in the vicinity of all the principal towns: the vale of the Trent is regarded as the richest tract in the county for its extent: there are several irrigated pieces of meadow land in different parts of the county. Lime is extensively applied as manure upon all kinds of land: an extraordinary quantity of marl also is used for the same purpose, being found under the loamy soils, and in gravelly land; numerous marl-pits, the formation of which is of unknown date, occur in most parts where that substance is to be found.

The feeding of cattle is not practised extensively, although there are more bred than are consumed: the surplus is sold to dealers for the London market. The cattle are for the most part of the long-horned breed: the dairies, to which they are almost all appropriated, vary in size, containing from ten to forty, and, in some instances, even to seventy cows each: the few oxen that are bred are scarcely ever worked. Staffordshire contains the following distinct native breeds of sheep. First, the grey-faced, without horns, which is the native breed of Cannock heath, and the neighbouring commons. Secondly, the black-faced horned sheep, with fine wool, which are peculiar to the commons on the western side of the county, towards Drayton in Shropshire. Thirdly, the white-faced polled breed, with long combing wool, peculiar to the eastern parts of the moorlands. Fourthly, the mixed waste-land breed, which is found upon the wastes and uncultivated enclosures of the western parts of the moorlands, and is much inferior to the last-mentioned. The sheep on the commons of the southernmost part of the county are also of mixed breeds; their wool is tolerably fine, and of a clothing quality. Lastly, the pasture flocks, of various sorts and crosses, but chiefly of the Old and New Leicester breeds: those of the Cotswold, Wiltshire, and Dorsetshire, are also occasionally met with. Hogs are fattened upon most farms, both for pork and bacon: the breed most esteemed is a cross between the large slouch-eared kind and a dwarf breed, which is finer boned, broad, and plump: part of the consumption of bacon, which is very great in this county, is supplied from Shropshire and North Wales. Rabbits are very abundant upon the sandy parts of the waste lands. The gardens and orchards are not remarkable either for their extent or the nature of their productions, except that in the parish of Tettenhall, near Wolverhampton, great quantities of a peculiar kind of pear, called from the name of the place where it is produced, are grown: a great quantity of fruit is brought to the markets of this county from Worcestershire. The woods, wastes, and impracticable lands, are supposed to occupy an extent of upwards of one hundred thousand acres. The county is well stocked with almost every species of thriving English timber, growing on the numerous estates of the nobility and gentry. Plantations to a great extent have been made on various parts of the steep moorland hills, particularly those of Dilhorne, Kingsley, and Oakmoor: from the underwood of these, many rods and staves, to make crates for the use of the potteries, are cut. Needwood Forest, in the eastern part of the county, situated between the rivers Trent and Dove, before the passing of an act of enclosure about the commencement of the present century, was an entirely wild tract of nearly ten thousand acres, presenting much romantic and beautiful scenery, and affording pasturage to numerous herds of deer: it was also subject to a common-right for cattle and horses. Of the wastes at present remaining, Cannock heath is far the most extensive: it contains upwards of twenty-five thousand acres, and is situated near the centre of the county, lying chiefly to the north and east of the small town of Cannock, whence it extends to the southern banks of the Trent. The northern and western parts of this common have for the most part a light soil, but the eastern and southern are of a cold, wet, gravelly nature; the best sheep-land is a tract on the western side, towards Tiddesley, and another in the northern part of it, near Rugeley and Beaudesert Park, to which may also be added the vicinity of Hedgford: the southern and eastern parts are in a great measure barren, producing little besides heath, whortleberries, lichens, and mosses. Although now a bleak and dreary tract, entirely devoid of trees, this waste in former times is asserted to have been covered with a profusion of majestic oaks, and to have been a favourite chase of the Saxon monarchs of Mercia. In addition to Walsall wood, Whittington heath, and the Weeford Flats, the other principal waste lands are those of Swindon and Wombourne, and that near Stewponey, on the south; those of Morrage, Wetley moor, Stanton moor, Hollington heath, and Caverswall common, in the north; and, in the middle districts, those of Essington wood, Snead common, Wyrley and Pelsal commons, Tirley, Ashley, Maer, Swinnerton, Tittensor, and Shelton heaths, Houlton, Milwich, Hardwick, and Fradswell commons, and others of smaller extent, chiefly used as sheep-walks. Most of them bear evident marks of ancient cultivation. Fuel is very plentiful, the principal article being coal from the numerous mines of the county; on the moorlands a good deal of peat is dug, particularly on Morrage and Axedge commons.

The mineral productions are numerous and valuable, consisting chiefly of coal, iron, lead, copper, marble, alabaster, and stone of various kinds. The coal strata have been found to exist to a superficial extent of fifty thousand acres. The coal district of the southern part of the county extends in length from Cannock heath, a part of which it includes, to near Stourbridge in Worcestershire; and in breadth from Wolverhampton to Walsall. In the north of the county this mineral is raised in abundance, in the neighbourhood of New-castle and the Potteries, near Lane-End and Holly-bush, and again in the vicinity of Cheadle and Dilhorne: the thickness of the strata in the southern district is frequently as much as eight, ten, and even twelve yards: these and all the other beds of this formation dip westward towards the red sandstone, which occupies a tract twelve miles in breadth between this and the Shropshire coal formation. In the colliery of Birch hill, near Walsall, occurs a bed of trap, or greenstone, as it is here called, lying upon indurated sandstone, and covered by a bed of slaty clay: the effect it has upon the coal is that of depriving it of its bitumen, and thus reducing it to what is called blind coal: the whole of the strata of this mine are interrupted faults, as the miners call them, of this greenstone. A singular species of coal, called peacock-coal, from the prismatic colours it exhibits, is raised at Hanley. In the district called the Potteries, the strata intervening between the beds of coal consist chiefly of clays of different kinds, some of which make excellent fire-bricks for building the kilns, and making the saggers, or cases in which the ware is burned. Iron-ore abounds in all the coal-mines: the strata of it that are found in the neighbourhood of Wednesbury, Tipton, Bilston, in part of the parish of Sedgley, and to the west of Newcastle, are very extensive, lying generally under a vein of coal: the iron-ore found on Cannock heath is of a peculiar kind, called Cannockstone, of very little value. In the numerous mines of coal and iron, and in the foundries, blast-furnaces, slitting-mills, and other iron manufactories, an immense number of workmen are employed: the works on the banks of the Birmingham canal are particularly numerous and extensive. The other metallic ores obtained are those of copper and lead, of both which considerable quantities are raised at Ecton, near Warslow, approaching the north-eastern border of the county: a copper-mine is also worked at Mixon, within a few miles of Leek; and a lead mine near Stanton moor, in the same part of the county. Limestone forms the substratum of a very great extent of country, already described: an immense quantity of it is raised for burning into lime; the lime-works on Caldon Low, and in the neighbourhood of the Weaver hills, are particularly extensive. Under several of the limestone hills, in the southern part of the county, that are perforated by tunnels, large caverns have been hollowed out, without disturbing the surface soil, some of them penetrating to a distance of three hundred yards from the canal. The limestone of this county, in different places, has some of the qualities of marble, and is susceptible of a high polish; in others it is composed, in a great measure, of petrified marine substances. The kind of marble called rance-marble, which is white, with red veins formed of shining gritty particles, and takes so good a polish, as to be frequently used for chimney-pieces and monuments, is found in great abundance in Yelpersley Tor and the adjoining hills: there is a considerable quantity of grey marble at Stansop, and at Powke hill is obtained a very hard black marble. In the great limestone district, particularly on the banks of the river Dove, are some veins of alabaster, which is also dug between Needwood Forest and Tutbury: many of the moulds used in the potteries are composed of this material, after it has been ground. Extensive quarries of excellent freestone are numerous: at Bilston is obtained a particularly fine kind: Gornall, near Sedgley, has different quarries of a coarser sort; and among the numerous other places where freestone is obtained may be specified, more particularly, Tixall, Wrottesley, Brewood park, and Pendeford. The hills of Rowley have for their basis a peculiar kind of quartzose stone, devoid of any gritty quality, called Rowley rag-stone, a great quantity of which is carried to Birmingham and elsewhere, for paving, &c.: this stone lies in no regular strata, but in rude heaps and masses, which sometimes project above the surface. Clays of almost every description are found in this county: potters' clay, of several sorts, abounds chiefly in the vicinity of Newcastle under Line, where the pottery wares were formerly manufactured from it. At Amblecot, in the southern part of the county, is a clay of a dark blueish colour, of which glass-house pots of a remarkably superior quality are made, great quantities of them being sent to different parts of the kingdom, and many consumed in the neighbouring glass-works. Yellow and red ochre are also found in Staffordshire; and a blue clay, obtained at Darlaston near Wednesbury, is used by glovers. A kind of black chalk exists, in beds of grey marble, in Langley-close; and a fine reddish earth, little inferior to the red chalk of France, is obtained near Himley hall.

The manufactures are various and extensive: that of hardware, in the southern district, is very important, and affords employment to many thousand persons. At Wolverhampton, and in its vicinity, are made locks of every kind, edge-tools, files, augers, japanned goods, and a great variety of other articles of the same material. The town and neighbourhood of Walsall are famous for the manufacture of saddlers' ironmongery, such as bridle-bits, stirrup-irons, spurs, &c., sent thence to every part of the kingdom. The manufacture of nails employs many thousand persons in some of the most populous parishes in this part of the county, particularly in those of Sedgley, Rowley, West Bromwich, Smethwick, Tipton, Wombourne, and Pelsall, and in the Foreign of Walsall: many women and children are employed in making the lighter and finer sorts. The other kinds of hardware produced are chiefly plated, lackered, japanned, and some enamelled goods, toys, tobacco and snuff boxes, of iron and steel; and machinery for steam-engines. Some places also partake of the manufacture of guns; and there are several works for making brass, and for preparing tin plates, chiefly in the northern part of the county. In those parts of Staffordshire situated in the vicinity of Stourbridge and Dudley, in Worcestershire, are a number of large glass-houses, where the manufacture is carried on to a great extent. The manufacture of china and earthenware, in the north-western part of the county, is the most extensive and important in the kingdom: the district called the Potteries consists of numerous scattered villages occupying an extent of about ten square miles, and containing about twenty thousand inhabitants; it is crossed by the Trent and Mersey, or Grand Trunk, canal. This manufacture, though of very ancient establishment in this part of the country, was of inferior importance until the latter part of the eighteenth century, when, chiefly by the exertions of the late Josiah Wedgwood, Esq., it was raised to such a pitch of excellence, as confers honour upon that gentleman's ingenuity and taste; and in consequence, several of the villages of this district, particularly Burslem and Hanley, have grown rapidly into populous market towns. The several species of ware invented by Mr. Wedgwood, varied by the industry and ingenuity of the manufacturers into an infinity of forms, and variously painted and embellished, constitute nearly the whole of the fine earthenwares at present manufactured in England, which are the object of a very extensive traffic. They are chiefly the following, viz., the Queen's ware, which is composed of the whitest clays from Derbyshire and Dorsetshire, and different other parts of England, mixed with a due proportion of ground flint; terra cotta, resembling porphyry, granite, and other stones of the silicious, or crystalline, order; basaltes, or black ware; porcelain biscuit, of nearly the same properties as the natural stone of that name; a white porcelain biscuit, of a smooth wax-like surface, of the same properties as the preceding; jasper, a white porcelain biscuit of exquisite beauty and delicacy, possessing the general properties of the basaltes, together with the singular one of receiving, through its whole substance, from the mixture of metallic calces with other materials of the same colours which those calces communicate to glass, or enamels, in fusion, a property that no other porcelain, or earthenware, of either ancient or modern composition has been found to possess; bamboo, or cane-coloured porcelain biscuit, possessing the same qualities as the white porcelain biscuit; and a porcelain biscuit, remarkable for great hardness, little inferior to that of agate: the glazes are of vitreous composition. A very great number of persons is constantly employed in raising and preparing the raw materials for this manufacture in different parts of the kingdom, more especially upon the southern coasts, from Norfolk round to North Devon, and on the shores of Wales and Ireland. Vessels, which in the proper season have been employed in the Newfoundland fishery, convey these materials coastwise to the most convenient ports, whence they are forwarded by the inland small craft to the Potteries. Notwithstanding that almost every part of the kingdom receives supplies of pottery from this manufacture, yet by far the greater portion of its produce is exported to foreign countries. The exports of earthenware and china to the United States alone amount to sixty thousand packages annually. The quantity of wool manufactured is small; nearly the whole of the produce of the county being sold to the clothing and hosiery districts. The cotton manufacture is considerable; the works at Rochester and other places near the Dove are on a large scale, as are also those at Fazeley, and Tutbury. The town of Leek and its neighbourhood has a considerable manufacture of silk, and mohair, the articles being chiefly sewing-silk twist, buttons, ribands, ferrets, shawls, and handkerchiefs. Tape is manufactured at Cheadle and Tean, affording employment to many of their inhabitants. Stafford has manufactures of shoes and boots, for exportation and home consumption; tanning and hat-making are carried on to a great extent in several of the towns. This county is also celebrated for its ale, particularly that made at Burton upon Trent.

The principal rivers are the Trent, the Dove, the Tame, the Blythe, the Penk, and the Sow: the Severn also, though not considered a Staffordshire river, takes its navigable course by the parish of Upper Arely, at the south-western extremity of the county. The Trent, which ranks as the third largest river in England, rising from New Pool, near Biddulph, on the borders of Cheshire, flows southward through the district of the Potteries to Trentham, and thence south-eastward by the town of Stone: having received the waters of the Penk and the Sow, near the centre of the county, its winding course gradually assumes an easterly direction, and, as it approaches Derbyshire, it forms several islands: having been joined by the Tame from the south, the Trent almost immediately becomes the boundary between this county and that of Derby, which it continues to be, pursuing a north-north-easterly direction, and passing by the town of Burton, where it becomes navigable, and a little below which, being joined by the Dove, it wholly enters Derbyshire, after a course, through this county and bordering upon it, of upwards of fifty miles. During its progress through Staffordshire the Trent is a bold, clear, and rapid stream, bordered by luxuriant meadows, the banks of which are in several places adorned with fine seats and ornamented grounds. The Dove, which, throughout its course, forms the boundary between this county and that of Derby, rises in the moorland hills, near the point to the north-west of Longnor, at which the three counties of Stafford, Derby, and Chester, meet: not far from its source it enters the beautiful and sequestered Dove Dale, flowing through it, in a southerly direction, to the vicinity of Ashbourn in Derbyshire, whence it proceeds south-westward towards Uttoxeter, near which town it assumes a south-easterly direction, by Tutbury, to its junction with the Trent to the north-east of Burton: from the great inclination of the bed of this river its waters flow with great rapidity, in some places dashing over rugged masses of rock, in others forming gentle cascades. Near the village of Ilam, in this county, the Dove is greatly augmented by the waters of the rivers Manifold and Hamps: the former, rising near the source of the Dove, takes a very circuitous route through a romantic vale situated in the north-eastern part of the county, and, sinking into the earth to the south of Ecton hill, between the villages of Butterson and Wetton, it emerges again at Ilam, shortly before its junction with the Dove, and at the distance of about four miles from the spot where it sinks into the ground: this stream is joined during its subterraneous transit by the Hamps, which in like manner passes under ground for a considerable distance. A little below Rochester, and a few miles above Uttoxeter, the Dove is joined from the north-west by the powerful stream of the Churnet, formed by the junction of two moorland rivulets near Leek. The Tame rises from several sources in the vicinity of Walsall, whence it takes a south-easterly direction, and enters Warwickshire near Aston juxta Birmingham: after making a sweep through the northern part of that county it re-enters Staffordshire at Tamworth, after having formed the boundary of the county for a short distance above that town, whence its course, though irregular, is generally in a northerly direction towards the Trent, with which river it forms a junction immediately before it reaches Derbyshire. The Blythe rises near Watley moor, in the northern and mountainous part of the county, and takes a course nearly parallel with the Trent to its junction with that river near King's Bromley. The Penk, rising near the western border of the county, and flowing northward, a little to the east of Brewood, by the town of Penkridge, forms a junction with the Sow, which descends by Eccleshall and Stafford, at a short distance to the eastward of the latter town, whence their united waters proceed directly to the Trent. The small river Dane, rising near the source of the Dove, but assuming an irregular westerly course, forms the boundary between this county and Cheshire for upwards of ten miles. Several streams from the south-western part of the county take their course to the Severn: the principal of these is the Stour.

The extent of artificial navigation for the ready transport of the produce of the mines, manufactures, &c., is remarkably great. The Grand Trunk canal, which was planned, and in a great measure executed, by the celebrated engineer Brindley, enters this county from Cheshire, near Lawton, and almost immediately passes through the Harecastle tunnel, which is two thousand eight hundred and eighty yards long: hence it proceeds in the vicinity of Newcastle under Line, and soon gaining the valley of the Trent, it closely follows the course of that river by Stone and Rugeley, crossing it several times: a few miles below the latter town, however, it makes an extensive sweep, leaving the Trent some miles to the north, but afterwards again crosses it, along the northern bank of which it proceeds, at a little distance to the north of Burton, until it quits the county for Derbyshire. The highest level of this canal is at Harecastle, near which it enters Staffordshire, and from which, on the south-eastern side, there is a fall of three hundred and sixteen feet, the greater part of which occurs in this county: the ordinary breadth of it is twenty-nine feet at the top, and sixteen at the bottom, and its usual depth four feet and a half, but in the part of its course below Burton it is several feet broader, and five feet and a half deep. The Staffordshire and Worcestershire canal branches from this, at Haywood, near the confluence of the rivers Sow and Trent, up the valley of the former of which it proceeds for some miles in a westerly direction, and then assumes a course nearly southerly, which it pursues by Penkridge and near Wolverhampton, quitting the county, in its course to the Severn, a short distance to the south of Kinver: this canal, with the Grand Trunk, completes the communication between the ports of Bristol, Liverpool, and Hull. The Coventry and Oxford canal branches from the Grand Trunk at Fradley heath, whence it takes a circuitous route, in a south-south-easterly direction, by the village of Whittington, to that of Fazely, near which it enters Warwickshire: from Fazely, a branch proceeds to Birmingham, and is called the Birmingham and Fazely canal. The Wyrley and Essington canal, commencing at a place called Wyrley Bank, passes through Oldfield, over Essington wood and Snead commons, and across the road from Wednesfield to Bloxwich, soon after which it turns westward to Wednesfield, and a little beyond that village, near Wolverhampton, forms a junction with the Birmingham canal: its branches are, one from the vicinity of Wolverhampton to Stow heath, another from Pool-Hayes to Ashmore Park, and a third from Lapley-Hayes to Ashmore Park. At Huddlesford commences a branch from the Coventry canal, called the Wyrley and Essington Extension, which, proceeding to the south of Lichfield, and over part of Cannock heath, forms a junction with the Wyrley and Essington canal, near Bloxwich: on the western side of this part of Cannock heath, a branch is carried southward, by Walsall wood, to the lime-works at Hayhead; its whole extent, including the branches, is thirty-four miles and a half; and from Cannock heath to the Coventry canal it has a fall of two hundred and sixty-four feet. The Birmingham canal, from that town in Warwickshire, takes a north-westerly course, and soon enters this county, proceeding to the north-east of the town of Dudley in Worcestershire, and by Tipton and Bilston to Wolverhampton, and thence to the Staffordshire and Worcestershire canal, a little to the north of the latter town, after a course of twenty-two miles. Of the very numerous branches of this canal, one proceeds northward, over Ryder's Green, to the collieries of Wednesbury, and the vicinity of Walsall; while another, commencing about a mile from Dudley, passes south-westward by Brierly-Hill, and to the left of Brockmore Green joins a canal which, commencing in a large reservoir at Pensett's Chase, and passing nearly in a straight line by Wordsley, crosses the river Stour, and joins the Staffordshire and Worcestershire canal, a few miles to the west of Stourbridge in Worcestershire, to which town there is a small branch. The cut which connects the Dudley canal with that of Birmingham, called the Dudley Extension canal, has part of its course in this county. Sir Nigel Gresley's canal extends from the Grand Trunk, near Newcastle under Line, past that town, to the coal-mines in Ape-dale.

Several large single stones at Cannock are supposed to be Druidical, as also are the eight upright stones, called "the Bridestones," near Biddulph, on the north-western border of the county; and on Drood, or Druid, heath, where there are several singular earth-works, Mr. Shaw, the historian of this county, considers the chief seat of the Arch-Druid of Britain to have been situated. Thyrsis, or Thor's house, a cavern, situated in the side of a lofty precipice in the vale of the Manifold, near the village of Wetton, is also supposed to have been the scene of Druidical rites. Some very ancient artificial caves have been discovered at Biddulph. The encampment of Billington, about three miles to the west of Stafford, and that on Castle hill, near Beaudesert park, in the vicinity of Rugeley, are of ancient British formation. Under the Roman dominion, the tract now constituting Staffordshire contained the stations of Etocetum, at Wall, near Lichfield; and Pennocrucium, now Penkridge. Sheriff-Hales, near the confines of Shropshire, is supposed by some antiquaries to have been the site of the station Uxacona, or Usacona. Two of the great prætorian ways also crossed Staffordshire: the Watling-street, entering it from Warwickshire, near Tamworth, proceeded westward across the southern part, and quitted it for Shropshire, to the west of the town of Brewood: the Ikniel-street, which entered from Warwickshire, at the village of Handsworth, near Birmingham, proceeded thence, in a north-north-easterly direction, to a little beyond Shenstone, where it crossed the Watling-street, and afterwards pursued a north-easterly course, entering Derbyshire at Monks' Bridge, on the Dove. Roman domestic remains, and traces of their roads, are discoverable in different places; and Roman earth-works are visible at Arely wood, Ashton heath, Ashwood heath, near Kinver at Oldbury, near Sharesill, and in Tiddesley park. Near Maer are intrenchments supposed to have been thrown up by Cenred, in the progress of his hostilities against Osred, King of Northumbria; and on Sutton-Coldfield there is a camp, considered to be of Danish formation. The number of religious houses in this county, including free chapels, hospitals, and colleges, was about forty. Remains of the abbeys of Burton and Croxden, and of the priories of Rowton, Stafford, and Stone, are still visible. The present religious edifices most worthy of notice for beauty or antiquity are, the cathedral of Lichfield, St. Chad's church in that city, and the churches of Armitage, Audley, Barton, Burslem, Bushbury, Caverswall, Checkley, Colwich, Clifton-Campville (remarkable for its magnificent spire), Draycott Elford, Gayton, Gnosall, Kinver, Madeley, Mavesyn-Ridware, Muckleston, Pipe-Ridware, Rushall, Sandon, St. Mary's and St. Chad's at Stafford, Stoke, Tettenhall, Trysull, Wednesbury, and Wolstanton. The most remarkable fonts are those of Armitage, Ashley, St. Chad's in Lichfield, Pipe-Ridware, Norton under Cannock, St. Mary's at Stafford, Tettenhall, and Wolverhampton. The remains of ancient castles are chiefly those of Alveton, Caverswall, Chartley, Dudley, Healy, or Heyley, castle, Tamworth, and Tutbury. Among the most remarkable ancient mansions are Bentley hall and Moseley hall, in both which Charles II. remained concealed for some time after the battle of Worcester. Staffordshire contains numerous modern seats of the nobility and gentry, many of which are elegant, and several magnificent: among the most distinguished are Trentham, the property and residence of the Marquis of Stafford; and Beaudesert, that of the Marquis of Anglesey. Most modern houses of the ordinary class are built of brick, and roofed with tile or slate, the latter brought along the canals, chiefly from Wales and Westmorland: near Newcastle, and in one or two other places, large quantities of a peculiar kind of blue tiles are made, which, owing to their superior durability, are in great demand. Salt springs exist in different places; the principal are in the parish of Weston; and there are other mineral springs of various qualities, the most remarkable being that near Codsall, formerly famous for the cure of leprosy; St. Erasmus' well, between Ingestre and Stafford; and that at Willoughby. Numerous fossil remains occur in different parts of the strata of this county, more particularly in some of the limestone beds. At Bradley, a hamlet immediately adjoining the village of Bilston, to the east of Wolverhampton, a stratum of coal, about four feet thick, and eight or ten yards below the surface, having been set on fire, burned for about fifty years, and has reduced a considerable extent of land to a complete calx, used for the mending of roads: sulphur and alum are found in its vicinity. Some of the most remarkable plants and shrubs occasionally found growing wild are, the wild teasel, on moist ground; the reseda luteola, or dyers' weed; the periwinkle; the daffodil; geraniums of various sorts; the black currant; the ribes alpinum, or mountain currant, on the moorlands; the cranberry, on the moist parts of Cannock heath; and the barberry. The original calendar of the Norwegians and Danes was, till lately, used by many of the inhabitants of this county, where it has the appellation of the Staffordshire Clog: this is a quadrangular piece of wood, on each of the four sides of which are contained three months of the year, the days being expressed by notches, to which are added the symbols of the several saints, to denote the day of their festival, &c.

VOL. IV.

STAGBATCH, a hamlet in the parish of LEOMINSTER, hundred of WOLPHY, county of HEREFORD, 2 miles (W.S.W.) from Leominster. The population is returned with the chapelry of Ivington.

STAGSDEN, a parish in the hundred of WILLEY, county of BEDFORD, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by S.) from Bedford, containing 542 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Bedford, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £8, endowed with £200 royal bounty. Lord Hampden was patron in 1811. The church is dedicated to St. Leonard.

STAINBROUGH, a chapelry in the parish of SILKSTONE, wapentake of STAINCROSS, West riding of the county of YORK, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S.W.) from Barnesley, containing 194 inhabitants. Here is a school, founded by the family of Cutler, with a house for the master, and an endowment of £8 per annum, which, with an annuity of £2 from F. T. V. Wentworth, Esq., is applied for teaching fifteen children.

STAINBURN, a township in the parish of WORKINGTON, ALLERDALE ward above Darwent, county of CUMBERLAND, 1 mile (E.) from Workington, containing 138 inhabitants. Here was formerly an oratory, subordinate to the priory of St. Bees.

STAINBURN, a chapelry in the parish of KIRKBY-OVERBLOWS, upper division of the wapentake of CLARO, West riding of the county of YORK, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N.E. by E.) from Otley, containing 364 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the court of the honour of Knaresborough, endowed with £12 per annum private benefaction, and £400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Vicar of Kirkby-Overblows.

STAINBY, a parish in the wapentake of BELTISLOE, parts of KESTIVEN, county of LINCOLN, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. S.W.) from Colsterworth, containing 158 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, with that of Gunby annexed, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £6. 6. 8., and in the patronage of the Earl of Harborough. The church is dedicated to St. Peter.

STAINDROP, a parish in the south-western division of DARLINGTON ward, county palatine of DURHAM, comprising the market town of Staindrop, and the townships of Hilton, Langley-Dale with Shotton, Raby with Keverstone, Wackerfield, and Woodland, and containing 2047 inhabitants, of which number, 1273 are in the town of Staindrop, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.E. by E.) from Barnard-Castle, and 244 (N.N.W.) from London. This place, formerly called also Stainthorp, or the stony town, is of great antiquity, having been granted by King Canute, who had a mansion at Raby, in this parish, to the monastery at Durham. The town is pleasantly situated in a valley, and consists chiefly of one long well-built street. Here is a subscription library and news-room. In Langley-dale are very extensive works for smelting lead-ore. A weekly market on Saturday, and fairs annually on the Vigil of St. Thomas the Martyr and the two following days, were granted in 1378, by Bishop Hatfield, which, after a time, fell into disuse, but the market has been revived, and is well supplied with provisions. The magistrates hold petty sessions every alternate Saturday; and a court leet and court baron for the lordship of Raby are held at Michaelmas by the lord of the manor, at which constables are sworn in at the former, and debts under 40s. are recoverable at the latter: the jurisdiction extends over the other townships in the parish. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the rectory of Cockfield, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Durham, endowed with £400 royal bounty, and £400 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Marquis of Cleveland. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, was formerly collegiate: it is a handsome structure, exhibiting portions in the early, decorated, and later styles of English architecture, with a square embattled tower rising from the centre, and contains some ancient and handsome monuments. The Society of Friends, Independents, Wesleyan Methodists, and Presbyterians, have each a place of worship here. A charity school, for the education of thirty poor children, is endowed with £15 per annum, arising from land left by Mr. Granger. A collegiate establishment was founded here, in the reign of Henry IV., by Ralph Nevill, Earl of Westmorland, in honour of the Virgin Mary, for a master, six priests, six clerks, six decayed gentlemen, six poor officers, and other poor men: its revenue at the dissolution was estimated at £170. 4. 6.

STAINES, a market town and parish, in the hundred of SPELTHORNE, county of MIDDLESEX, 10 miles (W. S. W.) from Brentford, and 17 (W. S. W.) from London, containing 1957 inhabitants. This place has by some been conjectured to derive its name from a Roman milliarium, which is stated to have been placed here, and the traces of a Roman road pointing towards Staines' bridge, mentioned by Dr. Stukeley, who also states the town to have been surrounded by a ditch, may in some degree strengthen this conjecture; but the more general opinion is, that its name is owing to a stone which, standing on the banks of the river near it, marks the extent of the jurisdiction of the Lord Mayor of London, as conservator of the Thames; the inscription on it bears date 1284. An army of Danes, on their way from Oxford (which they had burned) to their ships, crossed the river here, in 1009, on hearing that an army was marching from London to oppose them. The town, which has been much improved of late years, consists principally of one wide street, containing some good houses, terminating at the river Thames, across which is an iron bridge of one arch. In lieu of this, which has been considered unsafe, a handsome stone bridge has been erected, and a new street formed in a line with it, which will avoid the sharp turn over the former, where many accidents have occurred. The market is on Friday: the market-house, standing near the bridge, is a small building surmounted by a spire. There are fairs on May 11th and September 19th. The living is a vicarage, with the perpetual curacies of Ashford and Laleham annexed, in the archdeaconry of Middlesex, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £12. 3. 4., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, erected in 1631, by Inigo Jones, has been recently rebuilt; it is a neat structure, with a square embattled tower; the interior, which is well arranged and handsomely fitted up, contains three hundred and forty-four free sittings, towards defraying the expense of which, the Incorporated Society for the building and enlargement of churches and chapels granted the sum of £250. There are places of worship for Baptists, the Society of Friends, and Independents. Here are a National and a Lancasterian school for boys, and a National school and a school of Industry for girls. Duncroft House, in which King John is said to have slept, the night after he signed Magna Charta at Runymede, is in this parish. A forest anciently extended from Staines to Hounslow, but part of it, consisting of about three hundred acres, has been enclosed.

STAINFIELD, a chapelry in the parish of HACCORBY, wapentake of AVELAND, parts of KESTIVEN, county of LINCOLN, 3½ miles (N. N. W.) from Bourne, containing 58 inhabitants.

STAINFIELD, a parish in the western division of the wapentake of WRAGGIE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 4 miles (S. W. by S.) from Wragby, containing 103 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to that of Apley, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, endowed with £600 royal bounty, and £200 parliamentary grant. A priory of Benedictine nuns was founded here, in the reign of Henry II., by Henry Percy, which at the dissolution possessed a revenue of £112. 5.

STAINFORTH, a township in the parish of GIGLESWICK, western division of the wapentake of STAINCLIFFE and EWCROSS, West riding of the county of YORK, 2 miles (N.) from Settle, containing 235 inhabitants.

STAINFORTH, a township in the parish of HATFIELD, southern division of the wapentake of STRAFORTH and TICKHILL, West riding of the county of YORK, 3¼ miles (W. S. W.) from Thorne, containing, with South Bramwith, 694 inhabitants. There are places of worship for Wesleyan Methodists and Unitarians. Henry Travers, in 1706, bequeathed certain land, directing the rental to be applied for teaching poor children.

STAININGHALL, a parish in the hundred of TAVERHAM, county of NORFOLK, 2 miles (S. W. by S.) from Coltishall. The population is returned with the parish of Horstead. The living is a discharged rectory, annexed to that of Frettenham, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £1. 13. 6½. The church is desecrated.

STAININGTON, a chapelry in the parish of ECCLESFIELD, northern division of the wapentake of STRAFORTH and TICKHILL, West riding of the county of YORK, 4 miles (W. by N.) from Sheffield. The chapel, erected under the late act for promoting the building of additional churches, &c., was finished in November 1829, at an expense of £2607. 19. 3., defrayed by the parliamentary commissioners: it is in the later style of English architecture, with a cupola, and contains seven hundred and twenty-two sittings, of which three hundred and sixty-six are free.

STAINLAND, a township in the parish of HALIFAX, wapentake of MORLEY, West riding of the county of YORK, 4½ miles (S. by W.) from Halifax, containing 2814 inhabitants, who are extensively employed in the manufacture of worsted, woollen cloth, cotton, and paper. There is a place of worship for Independents. Various Roman coins have been found in the neighbourhood.

STAINLEY (NORTH), a joint township with Sleningford, in that part of the parish of RIPON which is in the liberty of RIPON, West riding of the county of YORK, 4½ miles (N. W. by N.) from Ripon, containing, with Sleningford, 385 inhabitants. It is within the peculiar jurisdiction of the Archbishop of York.

STAINLEY (SOUTH), a parish in the lower division of the wapentake of CLARO, West riding of the county of YORK, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N.E. by N.) from Ripley, containing, with the township of Clayton, 232 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the court of the honour of Knaresborough, endowed with £200 private benefaction, £800 royal bounty, and £300 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of Horner Reynard, Esq., and the heirs of the late Mrs. Gibson.

STAINMORE, a chapelry in the parish of BROUGH, EAST ward, county of WESTMORLAND, 4 miles (E. S. E.) from Brough, containing 616 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Carlisle, endowed with £400 private benefaction, and £400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Earl of Thanet. The chapel was erected as a school-house in 1594, consecrated for divine service in 1608, and repaired, in 1699, by Thomas, Earl of Thanet, who built the school-house adjoining, in which about thirty children are instructed, but the only permanent income attached to it is an annuity of £8, devised by Sir Cuthbert Buckle, Knt., in 1594. At a place called Maiden Castle is a Roman fort, and there is another at Rere Cross, which, according to tradition, was erected, in the first or second century, by Marius, a petty king of the Britons, in memory of a victory which he obtained there over the Picts.

STAINSBY, a township in the parish of AULT-HUCKNALL, hundred of SCARSDALE, county of DERBY, $5\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. E.) from Chesterfield. The population is returned with the parish.

STAINSIKER, or STAINSACRE, a joint township with Hawsker, in the parish of WHITBY, liberty of WHITBY-STRAHD, North riding of the county of YORK, $1\frac{3}{4}$ mile (S. E.) from Whitby. The population is returned with Hawsker.

STAINTON, a township in that part of the parish of STANWIX which is in CUMBERLAND ward, county of CUMBERLAND, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (N. W.) from Carlisle, containing 71 inhabitants.

STAINTON, a township in the parish of DACRE, LEATH ward, county of CUMBERLAND, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. W. by W.) from Penrith. The population is returned with the parish. Eight children of this township are instructed for the dividends arising from £100 three per cents., the gift of Mark Scott, in 1758.

STAINTON, a township in the parish of URSWICK, hundred of LONSDALE, north of the sands, county palatine of LANCASTER, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (S. E.) from Dalton. The population is returned with the parish.

STAINTON, a chapelry in the parish of HEVERSHAM, KENDAL ward, county of WESTMORLAND, 4 miles (S. by E.) from Kendal, containing 397 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Richmond, and diocese of Chester, endowed with £400 private benefaction, and £800 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Vicar of Heversham. The chapel, called Cross-Crake chapel, was founded, in the reign of Richard II., by Anselm de Furness, son of the first Michael le Fleming; it was rebuilt in 1773, and had a burial-ground attached in 1823. There is a place of worship for Independents. The Lancaster canal passes through the parish, and on a rivulet, tributary to the Belo, are two flax-mills and a woollen-mill: the manufacture of bobbin is also carried on. Cross-Crake school, adjoining the chapel, has been lately rebuilt by subscription; it has an endowment by Mr. Threlfall of £5 per annum, which, with small quarterages, is paid to the school-master for teaching about seventy children.

STAINTON, a township in the parish of DOWN-HOLME, western division of the wapentake of HANG, North riding of the county of YORK, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W. by W.) from Richmond, containing 54 inhabitants.

STAINTON, a parish in the western division of the liberty of LANGBAURGH, North riding of the county of YORK, comprising the townships of Hemlington, Ingleby-Barwick, Maltby, Stainton, and Thornaby, and containing 968 inhabitants, of which number, 356 are in the township of Stainton, 5 miles (N. W. by N.) from Stokesley. The living is a vicarage, with the perpetual curacy of Thornaby annexed, in the archdeaconry of Cleveland, and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £5. 14. 2., and in the patronage of the Archbishop of York. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is an ancient structure, partially repaired and modernised about 1820. Six poor children are taught for a rent-charge of five guineas, the gift of Mary Burdon, in 1817.

STAINTON, a parish in the southern division of the wapentake of STRAFFORTH and TICKHILL, West riding of the county of YORK, 7 miles (S. by W.) from Doncaster, containing, with the township of Hellaby, 218 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £5. 15., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Earl of Scarborough. The church is dedicated to St. Winifred.

STAINTON (GREAT), a parish in the north-eastern division of STOCKTON ward, county palatine of DURHAM, comprising the townships of Elstols and Great Stainton, and containing 154 inhabitants, of which number, 126 are in the township of Great Stainton, 7 miles (N. E. by N.) from Darlington. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Durham, rated in the king's books at £12. 13. 4., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to All Saints. A school was founded and endowed, in 1749, by the Rev. Thomas Nicholson, and has since received considerable donations, chiefly from Lord Crewe's charity. Mr. Hubbock of Stainton-Grange gave £60 for the instruction of three or four children from Little Stainton.

STAINTON by LANGWORTH, a parish in the western division of the wapentake of WRAGGOE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 5 miles (W.) from Wragby, containing, with the hamlets of Newball and Reasby, 182 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £4. 18. 4., and in the patronage of the Earl of Scarborough. The church is dedicated to St. John the Baptist.

STAINTON (LITTLE), a township in the parish of BISHOPTON, south-western division of STOCKTON ward, county palatine of DURHAM, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E.) from Darlington, containing 62 inhabitants.

STAINTON (MARKET), a parish in the northern division of the wapentake of GARTREE, parts of LIND-SEY, county of LINCOLN, 7 miles (E. by N.) from Wragby, containing 131 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, endowed with £800 royal bounty, and £200 parliamentary grant. — Dickenson, Esq. was patron in 1818. The church is dedicated to St. Michael. Here was formerly a market on Monday, and an annual fair on October 29th; the latter was removed to Horncastle in 1768, the sum of £200 having been paid in compensation to the lord of this manor.

STANTON le VALE, a parish in the southern division of the wapentake of WALSHCROFT, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 6 miles (N. E.) from Market-Rasen, containing 121 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £4. 17. 6., endowed with £200 royal bounty. J. Angerstein, Esq. was patron in 1819. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew.

STANTON-DALE, a township in the parish of SCALBY, PICKERING lythe, North riding of the county of YORK, $8\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by N.) from Scarborough, containing 294 inhabitants.

STALBRIDGE, a market town and parish in the hundred of BROWNSHALL, Sturminster division of the county of DORSET, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by N.) from Sherborne, and 111 (W. S. W.) from London, containing, with the tythings of Gomershay, Thornhill, and Weston, 1571 inhabitants. The name of this place, in Domesday-book, is written Staplebridge, and at the time of the Conquest it belonged to the abbey of Sherborne. The town and the greater part of the parish are situated upon a rock, which supplies building materials for the neighbourhood; the streets are not regularly paved, but are partially lighted by subscription, and the inhabitants are well supplied with water. From the south end of the main street another diverges, and at the intersection is an ancient stone cross, thirty feet in height, including the pedestal (ornamented on the sides with sculptured emblematical figures), from which rises the frustum of a pyramid, twelve feet high, with fluted angles, and decorated on one of the faces with a figure of our Saviour with a lamb at his feet, and at the bottom with shields of arms, and surmounted with canopied shrines, in one of which is a representation of the Crucifixion; above these are enriched canopies, terminating in a crocketed pinnacle, formerly surmounted by a cross, the whole being supported on three octagonal flights of steps, which diminish in the ascent. In the park formerly belonging to the manor-house the Anglesea cricket club is held: a building has been erected for the accommodation of the members, who meet weekly during the season, but the rest is converted to agricultural purposes, and is surrounded by a wall five miles in circumference. Stalbridge was formerly noted for the manufacture of stockings: several of the inhabitants are now employed in winding silk. A branch of the river Stour, and the Dorsetshire and Somersetshire canal, pass through the parish. In the reign of Edward I., a grant of a market and fair was made to the abbot of Sherborne; the present market is on Tuesday, and on every alternate Tuesday is a great market for cattle: fairs are held May 6th and September 4th. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Dorset, and diocese of Bristol, rated in the king's books at £27. 4. 7., and in the patronage of the Senior Bachelor of Christ's College, Cambridge. The church, which is dedicated to St. Mary, is a spacious and ancient structure, with a lofty embattled tower; on the capitals of the pillars supporting the chancel are figures of angels holding scrolls inscribed with texts of Scripture: it contains some ancient monuments. There is a place of worship for Independents. A National school for children of both sexes is supported by subscription.

STALHAM, a parish in the hundred of HAPPING, county of NORFOLK, $7\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. E. by E.) from North Walsham, containing 492 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £5, endowed with £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Marquis of Cholmondeley. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

STALISFIELD, a parish in the hundred of FAVERSHAM, lathe of SCRAY, county of KENT, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. N. E.) from Charing, containing 340 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Canterbury, rated in the king's books at £5. 6. 8., and in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a large, handsome, and ancient cruciform structure.

STALLINGBOROUGH, a parish in the eastern division of the wapentake of YARBOROUGH, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $7\frac{1}{4}$ miles (W. N. W.) from Great Grimsby, containing 343 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £11. 10. 10., endowed with £400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Bishop of Lincoln. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, with its tower, fell down in 1746; the chancel, and the burial-place of the Ayscough family, were afterwards rebuilt. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. Four poor children are instructed for a trifling annuity, the bequest of John Appleby.

STALLING-BUSK, a chapelry in the parish of Aysgarth, western division of the wapentake of HANG, North riding of the county of YORK, 17 miles (W. by S.) from Middleham. The population is returned with the parish. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Richmond, and diocese of Chester, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £800 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Vicar of Aysgarth. The river Ure here forms a fine cataract.

STALMINE, a chapelry in that part of the parish of LANCASTER which is in the hundred of AMOUNDERNESS, county palatine of LANCASTER, 5 miles (N. N. E.) from Poulton, containing, with the township of Stanall, 507 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Richmond, and diocese of Chester, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Vicar of Lancaster. The chapel is dedicated to St. James.

STALYBRIDGE, a market town and chapelry, partly in the township of HARTSHEAD, parish of ASHTON under LINE, hundred of SALFORD, county palatine of LANCASTER, partly in that of DUCKINFIELD, parish of STOCKPORT, and partly in that of STALYBRIDGE, parish of MOTTRAM in LONGDEN DALE, hundred of MACCLESFIELD, county palatine of CHESTER, 8 miles (N. E. by N.) from Stockport, containing upwards of 12,000 inhabitants; which population is included in the returns for the several townships in which it is situated. It is on the banks of the Tame, and derives its name, which was originally Staveleigh, from the family of the Staveleighs, who formerly had their residence here, which is still in existence, and the addition from the bridge, which has been recently rebuilt, at an expense of £4000, and, crossing the river here, connects the two palatine counties of Lancaster and Chester: it is partially paved and lighted with gas, and considerable improvements are in progress, under an act of parliament for that purpose obtained in 1828; it is well supplied with water. The principal market day is Saturday, and there is a fair for pedlary on the 5th of March. The court of requests, held at Ashton under Line, for the recovery of debts under £5, comprises this place within its jurisdiction. The advance of the trade and population of the town has been singularly rapid; the first cotton-mill was erected in 1776, into which a steam-engine was introduced in 1795, and in 1828 there were twenty-four factories, worked by thirty-three steam-engines and by six water-wheels, of the aggregate power of eight hundred and ninety-eight horses, which turned three hundred and ninety-eight thousand one hundred and sixteen spindles, and worked two thousand nine hundred power-looms, giving employment to about six thousand four hundred persons; besides which, other mills are in progress of erection, which will add, when completed, nearly one hundred thousand spindles. Upwards of eight hundred houses have been erected within the last three years: large quantities of excellent fire-bricks are manufactured. The new road from Manchester to Sheffield runs on the north side of the town, and the Huddersfield canal, passing in the vicinity, affords great facility to commerce.

The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chester, endowed with £800 royal bounty, and £1600 parliamentary grant, subject to the rector of Ashton under Line, and in the patronage of the Earl of Stamford. The chapel, dedicated to St. George, is a handsome octagonal structure, occupying an elevated site. There are places of worship for General and Particular Baptists, Wesleyan Methodists, and Methodists of the New Connexion, to which Sunday schools are attached, affording instruction to upwards of two thousand children. A Society for Mutual Instruction has been established here, with a library and apparatus for lecturing, and there are also a news-room, and several benefit societies. A temporary place of confinement, termed a "Lock-up," has been recently erected. The neighbourhood, formerly much covered with wood, presents some bold scenery; and from the "Wild Bank," which rises one thousand three hundred feet above the level of the sea, the prospect is extensive.

STAMBORNE, a parish in the hundred of HINCKFORD, county of ESSEX, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. W. by W.) from Castle-Hedingham, containing 432 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the jurisdiction of the Commissary of Essex and Herts, concurrently with the Consistorial Court of the Bishop of London, rated in the king's books at £15, and in the patronage of the King, as Duke of Lancaster. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. There is a place of worship for Independents. A school is supported by annual subscription.

STAMBRIDGE (GREAT), a parish in the hundred of ROCHFORD, county of ESSEX, $1\frac{3}{4}$ mile (E.) from Rochford, containing 401 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Essex, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £20, and in the patronage of the Governors of the Charter-house, London. The church is dedicated to St. Mary and All Saints.

STAMBRIDGE (LITTLE), a parish in the hundred of ROCHFORD, county of ESSEX, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (N. E. by N.) from Rochford, containing 100 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Essex, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £12, and in the patronage of the Crown.

STAMFORD, a borough and market town, having separate jurisdiction, though locally in the wapentake of Ness, parts of KESTIVEN, county of LINCOLN, 46 miles (S. by E.) from Lincoln, and 89 (N. by W.) from London, containing 5050 inhabitants. Its original name, which was Steanforde, is derived from the Saxon stean, a stone, and forde, from the passage across the river Welland being paved with stones; it was afterwards called Stanford, which was subsequently changed to its present name. The town is of very remote antiquity, its origin being ascribed by tradition to a period long before the Christian era; but the earliest authentic account respecting it is by Henry of Huntingdon, who records it as the place where the Picts and Scots, after having ravaged the country to Stamford, were defeated, in a battle fought betwixt them and the Britons, assisted by the Saxons under the command of Hengist, who had been called to the assistance of the Britons by their king Vortigern. It was one of the five cities into which the Danes were distributed by Alfred the Great, when, after defeating them, he allowed that people, with Guthrum their prince, to settle in the kingdom, and who were thence called Fif-burgenses, or Five-burghers (the other places being Derby, Nottingham, Leicester, and Lincoln), and subsequently Seafen-burgenses, on the addition of two more cities, namely, Chester and York. A castle was erected by Edward the Elder, early in the tenth century, on the bank of the river, opposite the town, to check the incursions of the Danes, and of the Five-Burghers and other internal enemies, but every vestige of it has long since disappeared. Another castle, on the north-west of the town, the foundations of which are still visible, was fortified by Stephen, during the war with the Empress Matilda, but was captured by Henry of Anjou, her son, afterwards Henry II., and the town appears to have been at this period surrounded by a wall, of which no traces are discernible. The barons met at Stamford in the 17th year of the reign of John, to concert those measures which led to the signing of Magna Charta by that monarch. In the reign of Henry III., the Carmelites and members of other religious establishments here commenced giving lectures on divinity and the liberal arts, which being attended by a great number of youths of good family, led to the erection of colleges, and Stamford became celebrated as a place for education; insomuch that, from dissensions occurring in the reign of Edward III., in the University of Oxford, amongst the students from the southern and those from the northern parts of England, a considerable number of the latter, with several professors, removed hither; but they soon returned to Oxford, in consequence of a royal proclamation, and statutes were passed by both Universities, by which any person taking a degree at either of them bound himself by oath not to attend any lectures at Stamford: a part of the gate of Brasenose College, standing in St. Paul's street, is all that now remains of its university. The town suffered much during the war between the houses of York and Lancaster, a great portion of it having been burnt and otherwise destroyed about the year 1461, and it never afterwards regained its former importance.

The town is pleasantly situated on the side of a hill, rising gradually from the northern bank of the Welland, across which a stone bridge of five arches connects it with Stamford-Baron, or St. Martin's, in Northamptonshire: the houses are chiefly built of freestone, obtained from the neighbouring quarries of Ketton and Barnoak, and covered with slate: the streets are partially paved, and lighted with gas, the works for which were erected in 1824, at an expense of upwards of £9000: it is well supplied with water, which is brought by pipes from Wothorpe, about a mile distant, and the approach from the south is pleasing and picturesque. The theatre, erected in 1768, is a neat and commodious edifice, lighted with gas, and there are assembly-rooms in St. George's square. Races are held in March and July, on a good course, a mile in circumference, on Wittering heath, near the town. On the banks of a stream are excellent cold and hot water baths. The trade is principally in coal, rafts, malt, and beer, and is much promoted by the Welland being navigable hither for boats and small barges. There was formerly a school for spinning and winding raw silk, which has been discontinued. The market days are Monday and Friday, the latter being noted for corn: the butchers' and fish markets were erected, in 1807, by the corporation. The fairs are on Tuesday before February 13th, Monday before Mid-Lent, Mid-Lent Monday, Monday before May 12th, Monday after the festival of Corpus Christi, and November 8th. At the time of the Conquest, Stamford was governed by lagemen, or aldermen, but was not incorporated by charter until the 1st of Edward IV. In 1663, a charter was granted by Charles II., in which the chief magistrate is first styled mayor; it was confirmed in 1685 by James II., being that under which the town is now governed. The corporation consists of a mayor, twelve aldermen, and twenty-four capital burgesses, who appoint a recorder, coroner, town clerk, and subordinate officers. The mayor and aldermen are elected annually by the members of the corporation, and the office of coroner is held in succession to that of mayor. The mayor and aldermen are justices of the peace, and hold quarter sessions, and a court of record for the recovery of debts to the amount of £40, contracted within the limits of the borough, every Thursday; they have also the privilege of trying for capital offences, but this they do not exercise. The freedom is acquired by birth, apprenticeship, purchase, or gift of the corporation. The custom of Borough English prevails here, by which, when the father dies intestate, the youngest son inherits the lands and tenements, to the exclusion of the elder branches of the family. The town hall, wherein the business of the corporation is transacted, was rebuilt in 1776; it is a large and handsome detached building, standing in the main street, near the end of the bridge, and containing a sessions-room, house of correction, gaol, guard-room, and other apartments. This borough first sent members to parliament in the reign of Edward I., and continued to do so, with occasional intermissions, until that of Edward IV., since which period it has exercised this privilege without interruption: the right of voting is vested in the resident inhabitants paying scot and lot, and not receiving alms: the number of voters is about eight hundred, and the mayor is the returning officer: the prevailing influence is exercised by the Marquis of Exeter.

Stamford formerly contained fourteen parish churches, but several of those in the liberties were destroyed by the northern soldiers, in 1461; and the number was again reduced, in 1538, at the dissolution of the monastic institutions: by an act of parliament, passed in 1547, five were allowed to remain, which still continue, the livings being in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln. The living of All Saints' is a vicarage, with the rectory of St. Peter consolidated, rated in the king's books at £12. 7. 8., and in the patronage of the Crown for one turn, and the Marquis of Exeter for two: the church is a large and handsome structure, combining some fine specimens of the early and later styles of English architecture, with a lofty embattled tower surmounted by an elegant octangular crocketed spire, in the later English style; it was built, about 1465, at the expense of Mr. John Brown, a merchant at Calais, who was buried in it. The living of St. George's is a discharged rectory, with that of St. Paul's consolidated, rated in the king's books at £5. 3. 11½., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Marquis of Exeter: the church, a spacious plain edifice with a square embattled tower, was rebuilt in 1450, by William Bruges, Esq., the first Garter King at Arms. The living of St. John's the Baptist is a rectory, with that of St. Clement's consolidated, rated in the king's books at £8. 8. 6½., and in the patronage of the Mayor and Corporation for one turn, and the Marquis of Exeter for two: the church, rebuilt about the year 1452, is principally in the later English style; it has a neat embattled tower, adorned with pinnacles, and a handsome porch at the south end; the screen separating the chancel from the nave and aisles, and the roof, are both very handsome. The living of St. Mary's is a discharged rectory, rated in the king's books at £4. 18. 9., endowed with £400 private benefaction, and £600 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Marquis of Exeter: this handsome church, supposed to have been built about the end of the thirteenth century, is considered the mother church; it is principally in the later English style, with some portions, particularly a very fine tower and spire, of early English architecture. The living of St. Michael's is a discharged rectory, with the vicarage of St. Andrew's and the rectory of St. Stephen's consolidated, rated in the king's books at £8. 14. 2., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the King, as Duke of Lancaster, for one turn, of the Mayor for one, and of the Marquis of Exeter for two: the church, situated near the centre of the town, is probably the oldest, having been built early in the thirteenth century; it has been much altered and modernised, the embattled tower at the west end having been erected in 1761. There are places of worship for Independents, Wesleyan Methodists, and Roman Catholics.

The free grammar school was founded by Alderman William Radcliffe, about the year 1500, and endowed by him with estates now producing £470 per annum: the election of the master is, by an act of parliament passed in 1548, vested in the aldermen of Stamford, with the advice and consent of the Master of St. John's College, Cambridge; a house is provided for him, and he receives the whole income, from which he pays the salary of the under-master, and keeps in repair the school-house, which is situated in St. Paul's street, and has been recently rebuilt by subscription. The school is open to all boys of the town and its vicinity, but at present there are only a few on the foundation: it is entitled to one of the twenty-four scholarships at St. John's College, Cambridge, augmented by the first Lord Burghley, who was educated here, and Thomas, Lord Exeter, who, in 1613, also founded three fellowships and eight scholarships at Clare Hall, Cambridge, directing by his will that the Master and Fellows should, when vacancies occurred, prefer candidates educated at Stamford school, provided they are equally qualified in other respects with their competitors. Mr. Thomas Truesdale, in 1700, vested £50 in trust of the corporation for scholars going to the university, and £12 per annum was bequeathed by Mr. Marshall, for an exhibition for a scholar from the grammar school of Southwark, or Stamford. The Blue-coat school was established, in 1704, by subscription among the inhabitants, with which an estate at Hogsthorpe was purchased, the proceeds, aided by other contributions, affording instruction and clothing to about forty boys. Wells', or the petty school, was endowed in 1604. A National school for girls was established, in 1815, from the surplus fund of a lying-in charity, assisted by voluntary contributions.

The charitable institutions are numerous and liberally endowed. The principal is the hospital, or bead-house, founded and largely endowed by William Browne, in 1493, for a warden, confrater, twelve poor aged men, and a nurse, who are incorporated, and have a common seal: the edifice, situated in the cattle market, is now appropriated for decayed tradesmen of the town and neighbourhood, each of whom receives a weekly allowance, and some clothing once a year. Truesdale's hospital, in Scot-gate, was founded in 1700, and eight poor men, with their wives, are lodged in it, receiving a weekly allowance of five shillings, and some coal and clothing annually; and as, on the decease of any male inmate, his widow must quit the hospital, the sum of five shillings a week was bequeathed by H. Fryer, Esq. to each widow so leaving it, for the remainder of her life. Snowden's hospital, endowed in 1604, affords an asylum to eight poor women, with a small weekly allowance of two shillings. Williamson's callis, or almshouse, has apartments for ten poor women, with a weekly allowance of five shillings, arising from various legacies. All Saints' callis, for men and women, is supported by incidental legacies, and by subscriptions from the corporation; and Peter's Hill callis, for an unlimited number of poor women, is endowed by the corporation with the interest of £200, arising from the Black Sluice drainage. The principal bequests for charitable purposes are, one of £1800, by John Warrington, Esq., for the benefit, in equal proportions, of the poor widows of All Saints' callis and Snowden's hospital; £3000, left by Mr. Fryer, for the poor of Snowden's hospital and Peter's Hill callis; the rent of four houses, left by Mrs. Williamson, to be paid, in sums of three shillings and sixpence a week, to six poor women; and an estate producing £50 per annum, left by Mr. W. Wells for the education of children under ten years of age, belonging to the parish of All Saints. A handsome infirmary, for Stamford and the county of Rutland has recently been erected near the town, by subscription, which receives thirty-two patients, and towards the support of which, upwards of £7000 stock was bequeathed by Mr. Henry Fryer, and £2000 collected by the ladies at a bazaar; it is further supported by voluntary contributions. A Benedictine priory, dedicated to St. Leonard, and valued at the dissolution at £36. 17. per annum, is supposed to have been founded here in the seventh century, and refounded in the time of William the Conqueror, when it was made a cell to the monastery of Durham; the site is a small distance from the town, though formerly included within it; a portion of the conventual church still remains. Of the Carmelite friary, founded in 1291, the west gate exists, and is a handsome specimen of the architecture of that period; the infirmary occupies a portion of the site. Part of an outer wall, and a postern, are the only remains of the convent of Grey friars, founded by Henry III. A Dominican priory was founded prior to the year 1240; a Gilbertine priory in 1291; an Augustine priory before 1346; and an hospital, or house of lepers, in 1493. A custom, called bull-running, is practised here on St. Brice's day (the 13th of November), and is said to have originated in William, Earl of Warren, having, in the reign of King John, granted a meadow for the common use of the butchers of the town, on condition that they should find a bull to be hunted and baited annually on that day, for the diversion of the inhabitants. Stamford gives the title of earl to the family of Grey of Groby.

STAMFORD, a township in the parish of EMBLETON, southern division of BAMBROUGH ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, 5 miles (N. E. by N.) from Alnwick, containing 120 inhabitants.

STAMFORD-BARON, county of NORTHAMPTON.—See MARTIN'S (ST.) STAMFORD-BARON.

STAMFORD-BRIDGE (EAST), a township partly in the liberty of St. PETER of YORK, but chiefly in that part of the parish of CATTON which is in the Wilton-Beacon division of the wapentake of HARTHILL, East riding of the county of YORK, 8 miles (E. N. E.) from York, containing 298 inhabitants.

STAMFORD-BRIDGE (WEST), a joint township with Scoreby, in that part of the parish of CATTON which is in the wapentake of OUZE and DERWENT, East riding of the county of YORK, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. N. E.) from York, containing, with Scoreby, 151 inhabitants. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. The river Derwent separates this township from that of East Stamford. Christopher Wharton, in 1787, gave £600 in support of a school, for twelve boys and six girls; the annual income is about £30, and the expense of the school-house, erected in 1795, was defrayed out of previous accumulations. The celebrated battle between Harold and Tosti, in 1066, was fought near this place.

STAMFORD-HILL, county of MIDDLESEX.—See HACKNEY.

STAMFORDHAM, a parish (formerly a market town) in the north-eastern division of TINDALE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, $12\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. N. W.) from Newcastle upon Tyne, comprising the chapelry of Ryall, and the townships of Bitchfield, Blackheddon, Cheeseburn-Grange, Fenwick, Hawkwell, Heugh, Ingoe, Kearsley, East Matfen, West Matfen, Nesbit, Ouston, and Walridge, and containing 1827 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Northumberland, and diocese of Durham, rated in the king's books at £14. 18. $1\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. There is a place of worship for Presbyterians. Lime and coal abounds within the parish. The market has fallen into disuse, but the market cross, erected by Sir John Swinburne, Bart., in 1735, is still standing. Fairs, for the sale of cattle, pigs, &c., are held on the second Thursday in April, and on the 14th of August, if on Thursday, if not, on the Thursday following; there are also statute fairs for hiring servants, on the Thursdays before Old May-day and November 14th, and on the last Thursday in February. A free school was founded, in 1663, by Sir Thomas Widdrington, Knt., who endowed it with property now producing about £220 per annum.

STANALL, a township in that part of the parish of LANCASTER which is in the hundred of AMOUNDERNESS, county palatine of LANCASTER, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. by E.) from Poulton. The population is returned with the chapelry of Stalmine.

STANCILL, a joint township with Wellingley and Wilsick, in the parish of TICKHILL, southern division of the wapentake of STRAFFORTH and TICKHILL, West riding of the county of YORK, 3 miles (N. N. E.) from Tickhill, containing, with Wellingley and Wilsick, 54 inhabitants.

STANDBRIDGE, a chapelry in the parish of LEIGHTON-BUZZARD, hundred of MANSHEAD, county of BEDFORD, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E. by S.) from Leighton-Buzzard, containing 407 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Prebendary of Leighton-Buzzard in the Cathedral Church of Lincoln, endowed with £800 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Vicar of Leighton-Buzzard. The chapel is dedicated to St. John the Baptist.

STANDBRIDGE, county of DORSET.—See HINTON (PARVA).

STANDERWICK, a parish in the hundred of FROME, county of SOMERSET, 4 miles (E. N. E.) from Frome, containing 86 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, annexed to that of Beckington, in the archdeaconry of Wells, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £2. 9. 7.

STANDFORD, a parish in the hundred of STOUTING, lathe of SHEPWAY, county of KENT, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W.) from Hythe, containing 229 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the rectory of Lyminge, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Canterbury. The church is dedicated to All Saints. The ancient Stanestreet passes through the village. A trifling bequest from the Rev. Dr. Lynch, in 1789, is applied for the education of two poor children.

STANDGROUND, a parish in the hundred of NORMAN-CROSS, county of HUNTINGDON, 1 mile (S. E. by S.) from Peterborough, containing, with the chapelry of Farcett, 1024 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Huntingdon, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £6. 6. $10\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Master and Fellows of Emanuel College, Cambridge. The church is dedicated to St. John the Baptist.

STANDHILL, a hamlet in the parish and hundred of PIRTON, county of OXFORD, 3 miles (W. S. W.) from Tetsworth. The population is returned with the parish.

STANDISH, a parish in the upper division of the hundred of WHITSTONE, county of GLOUCESTER, 6 miles (N. W.) from Stroud, containing 525 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Gloucester, rated in the king's books at £44. 2. $8\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Gloucester. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is principally in the decorated style of English architecture.

STANDISH, a parish in the hundred of LEYLAND, county palatine of LANCASTER, comprising the chapelry of Coppull, and the townships of Adlington, Anderton, Charnock-Heath, Charnock-Richard, Duxbury, Shevington, Standish with Langtree, Welsh-Whittle, and Worthington, and containing 7616 inhabitants, of which number, 2065 are in the township of Standish with Langtree, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. W. by N.) from Wigan. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chester, rated in the king's books at £45. 16. 8., and in the patronage of Sir R. Perryn, Knt. The church, dedicated to St. Wilfrid, was built in 1584, by the Rev. Richard Moodie, the first Protestant rector; it is an elegant structure of the Tuscan order. The free grammar school, founded in 1603, by Mary Langton, is endowed with lands, &c., producing an annual income exceeding £100, for the support of a master and an usher. Mary Smalley, in 1794, bequeathed £1000 for the endowment of a school, in which twenty poor girls are taught and clothed: the income amounts to £50 per annum. Fairs for horses, cattle, toys, &c., are held on June 29th and November 22nd. Two of the twelve ancient castles of Lancashire, viz., Standish and Penwortham, stood here, but their sites only can now be distinguished.

STANDLAKE, a parish in the hundred of BAMP- TON, county of OXFORD, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. S. E.) from Witney, containing, with part of the hamlet of Brighthampton, 643 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, rated in the king's books at £16. 10. 10., and in the patronage of the President and Fellows of Magdalene College, Oxford. The church is dedicated to St. Giles. Twelve poor children are instructed for about £8. 10. per annum, arising from the united gifts of William Plaisterer, in 1711, and John Chambers, in 1732.

STANDLINCH, a parish in the hundred of DOWN- TON, county of WILTS, $4\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. E. by S.) from Salisbury, containing 42 inhabitants. It is bounded on the west and south-west by the river Avon. A chantry was founded here by Queen Elfrida, in expiation of the murder of Edward the Martyr, on the site of which a small chapel was erected in 1147, and rebuilt in 1677; but, though still in existence, no living is attached to it, nor is it used for divine service, except occasionally by the family of the lord of the manor, Earl Nelson, of Trafalgar House.

STANDON, a parish (formerly a market town) in the hundred of BRAUGHIN, county of HERTFORD, 8 miles (N. E.) from Hertford, containing 2135 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Middlesex, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £14. 13. 4., and in the patronage of the Rev. Henry Law. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a large ancient building, with a tower on the north side. There are places of worship for Baptists and Wesleyan Methodists. About five miles from Ware, on the Cambridge road, in this parish, is St. Edmund's College, established for the education of the sons of the English nobility, clergy, and gentry, of the Roman Catholic religion. The building was erected in 1795, under the direction of Mr. James Taylor, architect, and consists of a range of buildings four stories high, and, with its two wings, three hundred feet long; more than eighty students can be conveniently accommodated. The course of education is commercial, classical, and theological: the institution is under the management of a president and vice-president, and there are eight professors and masters. The usual period for continuing at college is twelve years; the first seven are devoted to history, the mathematics, the ancient and modern languages, &c., and the remaining five are appropriated to logic, metaphysics, theology, and divinity. The occasion of founding this institution was the expulsion of the English Roman Catholics from their college at Douay, at the commencement of the French Revolution. A free school for the instruction of poor children was endowed with £33 per annum, by Thomas Fisher, in 1612, and other benefactions. The market, which was on Friday, was granted by Charles II., together with two fairs; a pleasure fair is held on the 25th of April. The ancient Ermin-street runs through this parish.

STANDON, a parish in the northern division of the hundred of PIREHILL, county of STAFFORD, 4 miles (N. N. W.) from Eccleshall, containing 415 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Stafford, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, rated in the king's books at £6. 18. 4., and in the patronage of the Rev. Thomas Walker. The church is dedicated to All Saints. The river Sow bounds the parish on the south. Ten poor children are taught to read for £6 a year, the interest of bequests by Ann Tagg and Margaret Plant.

STANE, a parish in the Marsh division of the hundred of CALCEWORTH, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 6½ miles (N.) from Alford. The population is returned with Witherne. The living is a rectory, united to that of Mablethorpe, St. Mary, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £5. 6. 8. The church is dedicated to All Saints.

The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Essex, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £26. 13. 4., and in the patronage of the King, as Duke of Lancaster. The church is dedicated to St. Margaret. There is a place of worship for Independents. A workhouse for eleven contiguous parishes is now being erected.

STANHOE, a parish in the hundred of SMITHDON, county of NORFOLK, 4 miles (S. W. by S.) from Burnham-Westgate, containing, with Barwick, 445 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £16, and in the patronage of Mr. and Mrs. Hoste. The church is dedicated to All Saints.

STANHOPE, a parish in the north-western division of DARLINGTON ward, county palatine of DURHAM, comprising the townships of Forest-Quarter, Newland-Side, Park-Quarter, and Stanhope-Quarter, and containing 7341 inhabitants, of which number, 1584 are in the township of Stanhope-Quarter, 5¾ miles (W. N. W.) from Walsingham. The village is situated on the north bank of the river Wear, and many of the inhabitants are employed in the adjacent lead mines, which are very extensive. The magistrates hold here petty sessions every alternate Friday; and at Frosterley, in this parish, a court baron is held occasionally. In 1421, a charter was obtained from Bishop Langley for a market and two annual fairs: fairs only are now held on the Wednesday before Easter, the second Friday in September, and December 21st, the last for the sale of cattle. A savings' bank has been established. Adjacent to the western extremity of the village is Stanhope hall, formerly the mansion of the Fetherstonhaugh family, an ancient edifice, regularly protected by a curtain. The living is a rectory, with the perpetual curacy of Weardale St. John's annexed, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Durham, rated in the king's books at £67. 6. 8., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Durham. The church, which stands on elevated ground to the north of the town, is dedicated to St. Thomas the Apostle. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists, with a Sunday school attached. Stanhope school was endowed, in 1681, by Richard Bainbridge, which was increased in 1724, by the Rev. William Hastwell, for the education of ten poor children: the income is about £25 per annum, and one hundred boys and girls are educated: the latter likewise bequeathed a small estate to supply funds for apprenticing two poor boys. A National school, with which a subscription library is connected, was erected at the expense of Bishop Barrington, and endowed with a portion of the interest of £2000 given by that prelate for the support of six schools in this parish: it is further supported by annual subscriptions and a small quarterage from the children. On the incursion of the Scots, in the reign of Edw. III., that sovereign encamped his forces in this neighbourhood, but the enemy retired without coming to an engagement: the remains of an ancient fortress are visible to the west of the village, on a lofty eminence one hundred and eighty-eight feet above the river. Several altars and Roman antiquities have been dug up here. A little northward are some natural excavations, called Hetherburn Caves, and, except on the banks of the Wear, the neighbourhood is rugged and mountainous; on this river, a little above the town, are the extensive lead-works of the London Company. A tenth of the produce of the mines belongs to the rector, which renders the living exceedingly valuable. This parish also abounds with limestone.

STANION, a parish in the hundred of CORBY, county of NORTHAMPTON, 4¾ miles (S. E.) from Rockingham, containing 297 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the vicarage of Brigstock, in the archdeaconry of Northampton, and diocese of Peterborough. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

STANLEY, a chapelry in the parish of SPONDON, hundred of APPLETREE, though locally in that of Morleston and Litchurch, county of DERBY, 6 miles (N. E. by E.) from Derby, containing 357 inhabitants. The chapel is dedicated to St. Andrew. This parish is entitled to one-fifth of the benefits of West Hallam school, founded by John Scargill.

STANLEY, a township in that part of the parish of LEEK which is in the northern division of the hundred of TOTMONSLOW, county of STAFFORD, 5 miles (S. W. by W.) from Leek, containing 113 inhabitants. The Rev. Richard Shaw bequeathed £10 a year for teaching poor children.

STANLEY, a chapelry in the parish of WAKEFIELD, lower division of the wapentake of AGRIGG, West riding of the county of YORK, 1¾ mile (N. N. E.) from Wakefield, containing, with the township of Wrenthorp, 4620 inhabitants. A lunatic asylum for paupers has been established in this township. This was the site of a Roman station, where a vast quantity of Roman crucibles, moulds, and silver and copper coins, has been found; of the latter forty pounds weight was dug up in 1812. Many of these relics are deposited in the British museum and other similar establishments. The scene of the battle fought by Robin Hood, Scarlet, and Little John, against the Pindar of Wakefield, is laid here, according to the ancient ballad.

STANLEY (KING'S), a parish in the lower division of the hundred of WHITSTONE, county of GLOUCESTER, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (W. by S.) from Stroud, containing 2269 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Gloucester, rated in the king's books at £18. 15. 2 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Master and Fellows of Jesus College, Cambridge. The church is dedicated to St. George. There are places of worship for Baptists and Wesleyan Methodists. Three small schools, conducted by females, in different parts of the parish, are partly supported with £18 a year, arising from several bequests. Here are vestiges of an ancient encampment, at some distance from which eight Roman altars, a large brass of Alexander Severus, and other relics, were discovered some years since.

STANLEY (ST. LEONARD), a parish (formerly a market town) in the lower division of the hundred of WHITSTONE, county of GLOUCESTER, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (W. S. W.) from Stroud, containing 757 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Gloucester, endowed with £700 private benefaction, and £400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of Mrs. Cumberland. The church, dedicated to St. Swithin, is an ancient cruciform structure, partly in the early, and partly in the later, style of English architecture, with a low tower in the centre, singularly constructed with double walls, and a passage and recesses between them: it formerly belonged to a priory of Benedictine monks, founded here in 1146, and dedicated to St. Leonard, as a cell to the abbey of St. Peter, Gloucester, which at the dissolution possessed a revenue of £126. 0. 8. There are considerable remains of the conventual buildings, of which, the kitchen has been converted into a dairy. Stanley, before 1686, when a great fire destroyed most of its buildings, was a considerable town, with two fairs, on St. Swithin's day and November 6th, which are still held, but the market, which was on Saturday, under a grant of Edward II., renewed in 1620, has been discontinued. There is an extensive manufacture of woollen cloth in the village; the houses in which are now scattered and irregular. Thomas Vobes, in 1708, bequeathed certain lands, which, with sundry smaller bequests, now produce an annual income of about £41, for the education of forty children. There is also a Sunday school, erected and supported by voluntary contributions.

STANLEY-PONTLARGE, a parish in the lower division of the hundred of KIFTSGATE, county of GLOUCESTER, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. W.) from Winchcombe, containing 48 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the vicarage of Toddington, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Gloucester.

STANLOW-HOUSE, an extra-parochial liberty, in the higher division of the hundred of WIRRAL, county palatine of CHESTER, 8 miles (N. by E.) from Chester, containing 16 inhabitants. An abbey of Cistercian monks was founded here, in 1178, by John Lacy, constable of Chester, which, on account of the inundations of the Mersey in 1296, was removed to Whalley in Lancashire, a cell being left at this place: some small remains of the conventual buildings are visible in a farm-house.

STANMER, a parish in the hundred of RINGMER, rape of PEVENSEY, though locally in that of Lewes, county of SUSSEX, 4 miles (N. N. E.) from Brighton, containing 123 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, united to the vicarage of Falmer, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Archbishop of Canterbury, rated in the king's books at £16. The church is an ancient structure in the early English style.

STANMORE (GREAT), a parish in the hundred of GORE, county of MIDDLESEX, 10 miles (N. W.) from London, containing 990 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the jurisdiction of the Commissary of London, concurrently with the Consistorial Court of the Bishop of London, rated in the king's books at £10, and in the patronage of George Drummond, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. John the Evangelist. There is a place of worship for Independents. The first meeting, after the conclusion of the late war, of the Prince Regent and his illustrious guests, the Emperor of Russia and the King of Prussia, with Louis XVIII., took place here. The celebrated Dr. Parr kept a school on the site of a house now belonging to Mr. Barren. Here is a monument in memory of Cassibelaunus, also a mound called Belmont, thrown up at the expense of the late Duke of Chandos.

STANMORE (LITTLE), a parish in the hundred of GORE, county of MIDDLESEX, $\frac{1}{2}$ a mile (N. W.) from Edgware, containing, with part of the village of Edgware, 712 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the jurisdiction of the Commissary of London, concurrently with the Consistorial Court of the Bishop of London, and in the patronage of G. Drummond, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. Lawrence, stands about half a mile from the village, and was rebuilt, with the exception of the tower, about 1715, by the Duke of Chandos, whose splendid mansion of Canons was in this parish, but the internal decorations were not completed until 1720: the ceiling and walls were painted by Laguerre; on each side of the altar is a painting of the Nativity, and a dead Christ, by Belluchi; and behind it is a recess for the organ, supported by columns of the Corinthian order; in the back ground are paintings of Moses receiving the Law, and Christ preaching. Handel, who resided at Canons as chapel-master, is said to have composed his sacred drama of Esther for its consecration; the anthems used in it were composed by him, and the morning and evening services by Pepusch. On the 25th of September, 1790, a grand miscellaneous concert of sacred music, selected from Handel's works, was performed to his honour in this church. A vault was constructed on the north side of the chancel by the Duke of Chandos, for the interment of his family, and in a large chamber over it is a monument of his ancestor, James, first Duke of Chandos. The free grammar school was founded and endowed by Sir Lancelot Lake, in 1656; the income is derived from a field producing £50 per annum, of which £30 is paid to the master, and the remainder applied to charitable purposes. Almshouses were founded, in 1640, by Dame Mary Lake, for seven poor persons, having an endowment of about £45 per annum; and this parish is entitled to send three poor persons to the almshouses in Edgware, founded in 1828, by Charles Day, Esq.

STANNEY (GREAT), a township in the parish of STOKE, higher division of the hundred of WIRRAL, county palatine of CHESTER, $6\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N.) from Chester, containing 18 inhabitants. The Chester canal passes through this township. A court leet is occasionally held. Excellent marl, composed of alluvial matter, abounds here, and large trees have been dug up in the meadows.

STANNEY (LITTLE), a township in the parish of STOKE, higher division of the hundred of WIRRALE, county palatine of CHESTER, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.) from Chester, containing 228 inhabitants.

STANNINGFIELD, a parish in the hundred of THEDWESTRY, county of SUFFOLK, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. by E.) from Bury-St. Edmunds, containing 290 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Sudbury, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £8. 0. $2\frac{1}{2}$. T. A. Cook, Esq. and others were patrons in 1809. The church is dedicated to St. Nicholas. Mrs. Inchbald, an ingenious novelist and dramatic writer, was a native of this place: she died at Kensington in 1821.

STANNINGTON, a parish in the western division of CASTLE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, 5 miles (S. by E.) from Morpeth, containing, with the townships of Blagdon, and Plessey with Shotton, 963 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Northumberland, and diocese of Durham, rated in the king's books at £5. 13. 4., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Durham. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is an ancient structure; it had formerly a chantry, and the windows exhibit some fine old specimens of stained glass. There are places of worship for Wesleyan Methodists and Unitarians. The river Blythe runs through the parish, which abounds with coal. Here is an extensive manufacture of oil-cloth. Mrs. Grey, in 1720, gave a rent-charge of £2, and John Moor, in 1813, bequeathed the interest of £200, which, together amounting to £11 per annum, is applied for teaching eleven poor children.

STANNINGTON, a chapelry in the parish of ECCLESFIELD, northern division of the wapentake of STRAFFORTH and TICKHILL, West riding of the county of YORK, 4 miles (W.) from Sheffield. The population is returned with the parish. The chapel has been recently completed, at the expense of £2607. 19. 3., defrayed by the parliamentary commissioners, and contains seven hundred and twenty-two sittings, of which, three hundred and sixty-six are free; it is in the patronage of the Vicar of Ecclesfield. The manufacture of cutlery is here extensive.

STANSFIELD, a parish in the hundred of RISBRIDGE, county of SUFFOLK, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. by E.) from Clare, containing 451 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Sudbury, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £11. 9. $4\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to All Saints.

STANSFIELD, a township in the parish of HALIFAX, wapentake of MORLEY, West riding of the county of YORK, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W.) from Halifax, containing 7275 inhabitants. It is bounded on the south by the river Calder. Here is the site of a manor-house, formerly belonging to the Warrens; and the rocky height above was once crowned with a castle.

STANSTEAD, a parish in the hundred of WROTHAM, lathe of AYLESFORD, county of KENT, 2 miles (N.) from Wrotham, containing 292 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the vicarage of Wrotham, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Archbishop of Canterbury. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

STANSTEAD, a parish in the hundred of BABERGH, county of SUFFOLK, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. E. by E.) from Clare, containing 341 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Sudbury, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £10, and in the patronage of the Rev. S. Sheen. The church is dedicated to St. James.

STANSTEAD (ABBOTS'), a parish in the hundred of BRAUGHIN, county of HERTFORD, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N.E. by E.) from Hoddesdon, containing 950 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Middlesex, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £10, and in the patronage of the Rev. T. Feilde. The church, dedicated to St. James, situated on an eminence one mile south-east from the village, was built, in 1578, by Ralph Baesh, Esq. The parish is bounded on the west by the navigable river Lea, on the north by the Ashe, and on the east and south-east by the navigable river Stort, being nearly insulated. The Rye House, noted for the plot laid there, in 1683, against the lives of Charles II. and James, Duke of York, was built, in the reign of Henry VI., by Andrew Ogard. It was formerly surrounded by a moat, but the only remains of the structure now existing is an embattled gate-house of brick, with a handsome stone doorway, long since converted into a workhouse for the parish. Almshouses for six poor widows were founded, in 1636, by Sir Edward Baesh, who endowed them with certain lands and a rent-charge of £25, for the payment of two shillings per week to each; the residue to be applied for apprenticing poor children. He also founded a free grammar school, with an endowment of £20 per annum, and gave a small cottage for the use of the parish clerk.

STANSTED-MOUNTFITCHET, a parish partly in the hundred of CLAVERING, but chiefly in that of UTTLESFORD, county of ESSEX, 18 miles (N. W.) from Chelmsford, containing, with the hamlet of Bentfield, 1518 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the jurisdiction of the Commissary of Essex and Herts, concurrently with the Consistorial Court of the Bishop of London, rated in the king's books at £13. 6. 8., and in the patronage of E. F. Maitland, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, has lately received an addition of two hundred free sittings, the Incorporated Society for the enlargement of churches and chapels having granted £200 towards defraying the expense. There is a place of worship for Independents. A Sunday school, attended by about one hundred children, is supported by voluntary contributions. Here are slight remains of a castle erected by William Gernon, surnamed Montfichet; and about two miles from the church was the priory of Thremhall, founded by Richard de Montfichet, and dedicated to St. James.

STANTHORNE, a township in the parish of DAVENHAM, hundred of NORTHWICH, county palatine of CHESTER, $1\frac{1}{4}$ mile (W. N. W.) from Middlewich, containing 148 inhabitants.

STANTON, a chapelry in that part of the parish of YOULGRAVE which is in the hundred of HIGH PEAK, county of DERBY, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.) from Winster, containing 710 inhabitants. It is in the honour of Tutbury, duchy of Lancaster, and within the jurisdiction of a court of pleas held at Chapel en le Frith every third Tuesday, for the recovery of debts under 40s.

STANTON, a joint township with Newhall, in the parish of STAPENHILL, hundred of REPTON and GRESLEY, county of DERBY, 3 miles (S. S. E.) from Burton upon Trent, containing, with Newhall, 1099 inhabitants. It is in the honour of Tutbury, duchy of Lancaster, and within the jurisdiction of a court of pleas held at Tutbury every third Tuesday, for the recovery of debts under 40s.

STANTON, a parish in the lower division of the hundred of KIFTSGATE, county of GLOUCESTER, $4\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. E. by N.) from Wincheombe, containing 269 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, with the perpetual curacy of Snowhill annexed, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Gloucester, rated in the king's books at £17. 11. $5\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Rev. R. Wynniatt. The church is dedicated to St. Bartholomew. The navigable river Wye bounds the parish on the north, and the Monmouth railway passes on the south.

STANTON, a township in the parish of LONGHORSELEY, western division of MORPETH ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, 6 miles (N. W. by W.) from Morpeth, containing 168 inhabitants. Here are a colliery, several quarries of limestone, and kilns for burning lime. The ancient manor-house has been converted into a poor-house: a chapel which stood a little to the northward of it has quite disappeared. From the foundations in the neighbourhood, Stanton seems to have been once a considerable place.

STANTON, a township in the parish of ELLASTONE, southern division of the hundred of TOTMONSLOW, county of STAFFORD, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W.) from Ashbourn, containing 373 inhabitants. It is in the honour of Tutbury, duchy of Lancaster, and within the jurisdiction of a court of pleas held at Tutbury every third Tuesday, for the recovery of debts under 40s.

STANTON, a parish in the hundred of BLACKBOURN, county of SUFFOLK, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. E.) from Ixworth, containing, with Stanton St. John, 939 inhabitants. The living comprises the united discharged rectories of All Saints and St. John, in the archdeaconry of Sudbury, and diocese of Norwich, rated jointly in the king's books at £18. 10. 10. Capel Lofft, Esq. was patron in 1811.

STANTON upon ARROW, a parish partly in the hundred of STRETFORD, but chiefly in that of WIGMORE, county of HEREFORD, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. N. E.) from Kington, containing 385 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Hereford, rated in the king's books at £5. 17. 10., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. Peter.

STANTON under BARDON, a chapelry in the parish of THORNTON, hundred of SPARKENHOE, county of LEICESTER, 9 miles (W. N. W.) from Leicester, containing, with the township of Horsepool, 302 inhabitants. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. It is within the jurisdiction of the peculiar court of the lord of the manor of Groby.

STANTON (ST. BERNARD), a parish in the hundred of SWANBOROUGH, county of WILTS, $5\frac{3}{4}$ miles (E. by N.) from Devizes, containing 332 inhabitants.

The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Wilts, and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £7, and in the patronage of the Earl of Pembroke. The church is dedicated to All Saints.

STANTON by BRIDGE, a parish in the hundred of REPTON and GRESLEY, county of DERBY, $6\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. by E.) from Derby, containing 190 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Derby, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, rated in the king's books at £6. 12. $8\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of Sir George Crewe, Bart. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is partly in the Norman and partly in the decorated style of architecture. The distinguishing appellation arises from the ancient bridge over the Trent, termed Swarkeston bridge, which connects these two parishes.

STANTON by DALE, a parish in the hundred of MORLESTON and LITCHURCH, county of DERBY, 9 miles (E. by N.) from Derby, containing, with the township of Weston-Underwood, 686 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Derby, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Earl of Stanhope. The church is dedicated to St. Michael. The Erewash and the Nutbrook canals pass through the parish. Almshouses for six poor persons were founded, in 1711, by a bequest from Joseph Middlemore, with an endowment of more than £100 per annum. The inhabitants are entitled to the benefit of the free school at Risley. Stanton is in the honour of Tutbury, duchy of Lancaster, and within the jurisdiction of a court of pleas held at Tutbury every third Tuesday, for the recovery of debts under 40s.

STANTON (FEN), county of HUNTINGDON. — See FEN-STANTON.

STANTON (ST. GABRIEL), a chapelry in the parish and hundred of WHITCHURCH-CANONICORUM, Bridport division of the county of DORSET, 4 miles (W. by S.) from Bridport, containing 112 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the vicarage of Whitchurch-Canonicorum, in the archdeaconry of Dorset, and diocese of Bristol. There is a signal station on the coast of the English channel, which forms the southern boundary.

STANTON upon HINE-HEATH, a parish in the Whitchurch division of the hundred of BRADFORD (North), county of SALOP, comprising the townships of Booley, Harcourt, High Hatton, Moston, and Stanton, and containing 700 inhabitants, of which number, 273 are in the township of Stanton, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E. by E.) from Wem. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Salop, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, rated in the king's books at £5. 10. 10., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty. The Rev. R. Hill was patron in 1819. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew.

STANTON (ST. JOHN'S), a parish in the hundred of BULLINGTON, county of OXFORD, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E. by E.) from Oxford, containing 468 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, rated in the king's books at £16. 9. $4\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Warden and Fellows of New College, Oxford. The church is dedicated to St. John the Baptist. Lady Elizabeth Holford, in 1717, gave £500 in support of a charity school for the children of this parish and that of Forest Hill: this bequest, having accumulated to £1550 Old South Sea annuities, produces an annual dividend of about £46. 10., which is applied for teaching fifty children, in a school-house erected in 1767.

STANTON (LACY), a parish in the hundred of MUNSLOW, county of SALOP, 3 miles (N.N.W.) from Ludlow, containing 1267 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Salop, and diocese of Hereford, rated in the king's books at £16, and in the patronage of the Earl of Craven. The church is dedicated to St. Peter.

STANTON (LONG), a parish in the hundred of MUNSLOW, county of SALOP, $7\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S.W. by S.) from Much-Wenlock, containing 261 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Salop, and diocese of Hereford, rated in the king's books at £7, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Hereford. The church is dedicated to St. Michael.

STANTON (LONG) ALL SAINTS, a parish in the hundred of NORTHSTOW, county of CAMBRIDGE, $6\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N.W. by N.) from Cambridge, containing 370 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Ely, rated in the king's books at £13. 13. $4\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Ely, whose predecessors had a palace here, at which Queen Elizabeth was entertained on the day after her visit to the University of Cambridge, in August 1564. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

STANTON (LONG) ST. MICHAEL, a parish in the hundred of NORTHSTOW, county of CAMBRIDGE, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.W. by N.) from Cambridge, containing 134 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Ely, rated in the king's books at £6. 12. $8\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Master and Fellows of Magdalene College, Cambridge. The church is a small thatched building.

STANTON (ST. QUINTIN), a parish in the hundred of MALMESBURY, county of WILTS, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. by W.) from Chippenham, containing 285 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Wilts, and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £10. 5. $7\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Earl of Radnor. The church, dedicated to St. Giles, has lately received an addition of eighty free sittings, the Incorporated Society for the enlargement of churches and chapels having granted £40 towards defraying the expense. Good slate, limestone, and a very hard blue stone for building, abound within the parish. Here were formerly the ruins of an ancient castle, but they have entirely been removed within the last few years.

STANTON on the WOLDS, a parish in the northern division of the wapentake of RUSHCLIFFE, county of NOTTINGHAM, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E. by S.) from Nottingham, containing 119 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Nottingham, and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £2. 13. 4. The Rev. John Hallward was patron in 1819. The church is dedicated to All Saints. The parish is bounded on the east by the old Fosse road.

STANTON-BURY, a parish in the hundred of NEWPORT, county of BUCKINGHAM, 3 miles (W. by S.) from Newport-Pagnell, containing 40 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Buckingham, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £7. 6. 8., endowed with £200 royal bounty, and £400 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of Earl Spencer. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, exhibits many Norman remains, particularly a fine and richly decorated arch between the nave and the chancel.

STANTON-DREW, a parish in the hundred of KEYNSHAM, county of SOMERSET, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (W. by S.) from Pensford, containing 622 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, with the perpetual curacy of Pensford annexed, in the archdeaconry of Bath, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £7. 2. $8\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Archdeacon of Bath. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. The river Chew runs through the parish, and is crossed by a stone bridge. Richard Jones, in 1688, bequeathed two-fifths of the proceeds of an estate for educating and apprenticing poor children: the income is £60 a year, and about thirty boys have the benefit of it. Six poor girls are instructed for £5 per annum, the gift of Elizabeth Lyde, in 1772. The neighbourhood abounds with various objects of interest to the antiquary, the most prominent of which are, Maes Knoll Tump, a stupendous barrow, and an extensive Druidical temple of three circles of stones, whose diameters are respectively one hundred and twenty, forty-three, and thirty-two yards, spreading itself over ten acres of ground: the stones, which are of amazing proportions, were apparently brought from the neighbouring quarries; many of them, however, now lie prostrate on the ground. The name of Belton, or Belluton, a hamlet at nearly an equal distance from each of these British monuments, is thought to be a corruption of Belgeton, a town of the Belgæ, being situated on the line of Wansdyke, the ancient boundary of their territory.

STANTON-FITZWARRREN, a parish in the hundred of HIGHWORTH, CRICKLADE, and STAPLE, county of WILTS, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S.W. by W.) from Highworth, containing 262 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Wilts, and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £10. 2. 6., and in the patronage of the Rev. Dr. Trenchard. The church is dedicated to St. Leonard.

STANTON-HARCOURT, a parish in the hundred of WOOTTON, county of OXFORD, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E.) from Witney, containing 606 inhabitants. This place was granted by Queen Adeliza, second wife of Henry I., to her kinswoman Milicent, wife of Richard de Camville, whose daughter Isabel married Robert de Harcourt. It is situated near the confluence of the small river Windrush with the Thames. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, rated in the king's books at £16. 13. 4., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Bishop of Oxford. The church is dedicated to St. Michael; in the ancient tower are three chambers above each other, in good repair, the uppermost of which retains the name of Pope's study, being the room in which the poet translated his fifth volume of Homer: in the church are two epitaphs written by Pope, one by Congreve, and one by Dr. Friend; in the Harcourt aisle are some good monuments. Here is a kitchen, which bears marks of remote antiquity; the date of its erection is uncertain, but it was repaired about the reign of Henry IV., and has a great resemblance to the abbot's kitchen at Glastonbury. A school for the education of poor children is supported by the proceeds of various benefactions; the income is £18 per annum, and from thirty to forty children are instructed at small charges. Some ancient remains, called the Devil's Quoits, were probably placed here to commemorate a victory of the Saxon Princes Cynegil and Chwicheim over the Britons, on which occasion about two thousand of the latter were slain.

STANTON-PRIOR, a parish in the hundred of KEYNSHAM, county of SOMERSET, 5 miles (W. S. W.) from Bath, containing 158 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Bath, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £10. 1. 10½., and in the patronage of W. G. Langton, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Lawrence. On a long isolated eminence, called Stanton Bury, are the remains of an ancient intrenchment, enclosing more than thirty acres: it has been thought a work of the Romans, some of their coins having been found near it; but being situated on the Wansdyke, it had probably a more remote origin, and might have been subsequently occupied by them. Gilbert Sheldon, Archbishop of Canterbury, was born here, in 1598; he died in 1677.

STANTON-STONEY, a parish in the hundred of SPARKENHOE, county of LEICESTER, 4¼ miles (E. by N.) from Hinckley, containing 533 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Leicester, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £14. 13. 1½., and in the patronage of the Marquis of Hastings. The church is dedicated to St. Michael.

STANWAY, a parish in the Colchester division of the hundred of LEXDEN, county of ESSEX, 4 miles (W. by S.) from Colchester, containing 479 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Colchester, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £10. 17. 6., and in the patronage of the President and Fellows of Magdalene College, Oxford. The church, dedicated to All Saints, has lately received an addition of eighty sittings, of which fifty are free, the Incorporated Society for the enlargement of churches and chapels having granted £50 towards defraying the expense. A number of large bones and other remains, probably of elephants brought over by Claudius in 43, was found here, in 1764, lying in a stratum of sea-sand and shells.

STANWAY, a parish in the upper division of the hundred of TEWKESBURY, county of GLOUCESTER, 3½ miles (N. E.) from Winchcombe, containing 415 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Gloucester, rated in the king's books at £9, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Earl of Wemyss and March. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. Limestone is obtained in the parish. The Earl of Wemyss supports two schools for the education of poor children.

STANWELL, a parish in the hundred of SPELTORNE, county of MIDDLESEX, 2¾ miles (N. E. by N.) from Staines, containing, with a portion of the town of Colnbrook, which is in this parish, 1225 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Middlesex, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £9, and in the patronage of the Crown. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is principally in the later style of English architecture. There is a place of worship for Independents.

STANWICK, a parish in the hundred of HIGHAM-FERRERS, county of NORTHAMPTON, 2¼ miles (N. N. E.) from Higham-Ferrers, containing 424 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Northampton, and diocese of Peterborough, rated in the king's books at £12. 9. 4½., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church, dedicated to St. Lawrence, exhibits portions in the early, decorated, and later, styles of English architecture; it has an octangular tower of the former character, surmounted by an enriched spire, in the decorated style. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. Mrs. Pacey, in 1784, bequeathed a rent-charge of £10 for teaching poor children, and £5 yearly for clothing five of them. Richard Cumberland, the dramatist, was born here, in 1732.

STANWICK (ST. JOHN), a parish in the western division of the wapentake of GILLING, North riding of the county of YORK, comprising the townships of Aldbrough, Caldwell, East Layton, and Stanwick St. John, and containing, exclusively of a portion of the township of Stapleton, which is in this parish, 928 inhabitants, of which number, 59 are in the township of Stanwick St. John, 7½ miles (N. by E.) from Richmond. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Richmond, and diocese of Chester, rated in the king's books at £6. 13. 4., and in the patronage of John Wharton, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a very ancient stone structure, and contains two fine marble statues to the memory of Sir Hugh and Lady Smithson. In this parish is a most extensive intrenchment, enclosing an area of nearly one thousand acres: it has been ascribed to the Romans, and also to the Scots; but Whitaker, the learned antiquary, considers it the site of an ancient camp, or city, of the Britons.

STANWIX, a parish comprising the townships of Cargo, or Craghow, and Stainton, in CUMBERLAND ward, and the townships of Etterby, Houghton, Linstock, Rickerby, Stanwix, and Tarraby, in ESKDALE ward, county of CUMBERLAND, and containing 1592 inhabitants, of which number, 400 are in the township of Stanwix, ½ a mile (N.) from Carlisle. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Carlisle, rated in the king's books at £9, and in the patronage of the Bishop of Carlisle. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is an ancient edifice, built upon the site and out of the ruins of the Congavata of the Romans, of which station Severus' Wall formed the northern rampart, and near which many altars and inscriptions have been found. The parish is bounded on the south by the river Eden, which is crossed by a handsome stone bridge, connecting it with the city of Carlisle: the village is beautifully situated on the northern bank of that river. A soft freestone abounds in the neighbourhood.

STAPELEY, a township in the parish of WYBUNBURY, hundred of NANTWICH, county palatine of CHESTER, 1¾ mile (S. E.) from Nantwich, containing 329 inhabitants.

STAPELEY, a joint tything with Rye, in the parish and hundred of ODIHAM, Basingstoke division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 2½ miles (S. S. W.) from Hartford-Bridge. The population is returned with the parish.

STAPENHILL, a parish in the hundred of REPTON and GRESLEY, county of DERRY, 1 mile (S. E.) from Burton upon Trent, containing, with the chapelry of Cauldwell, and the township of Stanton with Newhall, 1791 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Derby, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, rated in the king's books at £5. 6. 0½, and in the patronage of the Marquis of Anglesey. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. There is a place of worship for Baptists. The river Trent runs through the parish, in which there are very extensive collieries. Stapenhill is in the honour of Tutbury, duchy of Lancaster, and within the jurisdiction of a court of pleas held at Tutbury every third Tuesday, for the recovery of debts under 40s. John Hieron, an eminent nonconformist divine and critic, was born here, in 1608.

STAPLE, a tything in the parish of TISBURY, hundred of DUNWORTH, county of WILTS. The population is returned with the parish.

STAPLE next WINGHAM, a parish in the hundred of DOWNHAMFORD, lathe of St. AUGUSTINE, county of KENT, 1¾ mile (E. by S.) from Wingham, containing 467 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the rectory of Adisham, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Canterbury. The church is dedicated to St. James.

STAPLE-FITZPAINE, a parish in the hundred of ABDICK and BULSTONE, county of SOMERSET, 5 miles (S. E. by S.) from Taunton, containing 385 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, with the perpetual curacy of Bickenhall annexed, in the archdeaconry of Taunton, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £17. 14. 2., and in the patronage of E. B. Portman, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Peter.

STAPLEFORD, a parish in the hundred of THRIPLow, county of CAMBRIDGE, 5¼ miles (S. S. E.) from Cambridge, containing 408 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Ely, rated in the king's books at £7. 18. 9., and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Ely. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew.

STAPLEFORD, a parish in the hundred and county of HERTFORD, 3¼ miles (N. by W.) from Hertford, containing 212 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Huntingdon, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £8. 8. 6½, and in the patronage of Samuel Smith, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. The river Bean runs through the parish, and there is a large watercourse, called the New Cut, made at the expense of S. Smith, Esq., to diminish the violence of the floods.

STAPLEFORD, a parish in the hundred of FRAMLAND, county of LEICESTER, 4 miles (E. by S.) from Melton-Mowbray, containing 218 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Leicester, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £13, and in the patronage of the Earl of Harborough. The church, dedicated to St. Mary Magdalene, was erected in 1783, and contains some fine monuments of the Sherard family, among which is one by Rysbrach, in memory of the first Earl of Harborough. The river Wreake and the Melton-Mowbray and Oakham canal run through the parish. Here is an endowed hospital.

STAPLEFORD, a parish in the lower division of the wapentake of BOOTHBY-GRAFFO, parts of KESTOVEN, county of LINCOLN, 6½ miles (N. E. by E.) from Newark, containing 213 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, annexed to that of Carlton le Moorland, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £5. 3. 4., endowed with £600 royal bounty. The church is dedicated to All Saints.

STAPLEFORD, a parish in the southern division of the wapentake of BROXTOW, county of NOTTINGHAM, 5¾ miles (W. S. W.) from Nottingham, containing 1104 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Nottingham, and diocese of York, and in the patronage of the Crown. The church, dedicated to St. Helen, underwent a thorough repair in 1785. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. The river Erewash bounds the parish on the west and north-west: the stocking manufacture is here carried on to a considerable extent. There is a school for a limited number of girls, endowed by Lady Warren; also a National school, supported by subscription. An obelisk, apparently of Saxon construction, and a Druidical monument, called the Hemlock Stone, are the only remains of antiquity here. Stapleford Hall was the residence of that distinguished admiral, Sir John Borlase Warren.

STAPLEFORD, a parish in the hundred of BRANCH and DOLE, county of WILTS, 4½ miles (N. N. W.) from Wilton, containing 305 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £10, endowed with £15 per annum and £200 private benefaction, and £600 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Dean and Canons of Windsor. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

STAPLEFORD (ABBOT'S), a parish in the hundred of ONGAR, county of ESSEX, 5¾ miles (S. E. by S.) from Epping, containing 458 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Essex, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £16. 15., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. There is a school-house, endowed with three old cottages and £25 a year, in which forty boys are instructed.

STAPLEFORD (BRUEN), a township in that part of the parish of TARVIN which is in the second division of the hundred of EDDISBURY, county palatine of CHESTER, 4½ miles (W. N. W.) from Tarporley, containing 268 inhabitants. At Hargrave Stubbs, in this township, is a grammar school, founded by Sir Thomas Moulson, Bart., who endowed it with a rent-charge of £20 on certain lands then given by him for charitable uses, and now let for £155 per annum.

STAPLEFORD (FOULK), a township in that part of the parish of TARVIN which is in the lower division of the hundred of BROXTON, county palatine of CHESTER, 5½ miles (W.) from Tarporley, containing 263 inhabitants.

STAPLEFORD (TAWNEY), a parish in the hundred of ONGAR, county of ESSEX, 3¾ miles (S. E. by E.) from Epping, containing 283 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, with that of Mount-Thoydon united, in the archdeaconry of Essex, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £15. 8. 9., and in the patronage of Sir Thomas Smyth, Bart. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

STAPLEGATE, an extra-parochial district, forming the northern suburb of the city of Canterbury, in the hundred of WESTGATE, lathe of St. AUGUSTINE, county of KENT, containing 257 inhabitants.

STAPLEGROVE, a parish in the hundred of TAUNTON and TAUNTON-DEAN, county of SOMERSET, $1\frac{3}{4}$ mile (N. W.) from Taunton, containing 403 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Taunton, and diocese of Bath and Wells, and in the patronage of Vincent Stuckey, Esq. It was separated from Taunton, and made a distinct parish, in 1554. The church has lately received an addition of one hundred sittings, of which sixty are free, the Incorporated Society for the enlargement of churches and chapels having granted £30 towards defraying the expense. A gift of land, producing a trifling sum, is applied for teaching poor children.

STAPLEHURST, a parish partly in the hundred of CRANBROOKE, and partly in that of MARDEN, lathe of SCRAY, county of KENT, 4 miles (N. by E.) from Cranbrook, containing 1513 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Canterbury, rated in the king's books at £26. 5. 10., and in the patronage of the Master and Fellows of St. John's College, Cambridge. The church is dedicated to All Saints. There is a place of worship for Independents. Three schools are supported here for about £60 per annum, arising from the united bequests of Lancelot Bathurst, in 1539, and John Gibbon, Esq., in 1707. A fair for cattle, corn, and hops, is held on October 11th.

STAPLETON, a parish in ESKDALE ward, county of CUMBERLAND, comprising the townships of Belbank, Solport, Stapleton, and Trough, and containing 1127 inhabitants, of which number, 487 are in the township of Stapleton, 10 miles (E. N. E.) from Longtown. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Carlisle, rated in the king's books at £1. 8. 11 $\frac{1}{2}$., endowed with £200 royal bounty, and £600 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Earl of Carlisle for one turn, and Sir J. R. G. Graham, Bart., for two. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. The river Line, which is here crossed by a bridge, runs through the parish, and on its northern bank are the ruins of Shank castle. Limestone abounds here, and a colliery has been lately opened in the vicinity. A small school is endowed with £2 per annum.

STAPLETON, a parish in the hundred of BARTON-REGIS, county of GLOUCESTER, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E. by N.) from Bristol, containing 2137 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Bishop of Bristol, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of Sir John Smith, Bart. The church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, has lately received an addition of seven hundred sittings, of which five hundred and seventy-four are free, the Incorporated Society for the enlargement of churches and chapels having granted £500 towards defraying the expense. Mary Webb, in 1729, bequeathed £450, which, with other subsequent donations, produces an annual income of £42. 10., for teaching thirty children, and for the maintenance of three poor women in an almshouse adjoining the school, both of them founded by the above testatrix.

VOL. IV.

STAPLETON, a joint township with Frog-Street, in that part of the parish of PRESTEIGNE which is in the hundred of WIGMORE, county of HEREFORD, containing, with Frog-Street, 150 inhabitants.

STAPLETON, a parish in the hundred of CONDOVER, county of SALOP, 6 miles (S. by W.) from Shrewsbury, containing 240 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Salop, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, rated in the king's books at £6. 7. 6., and in the patronage of Mrs. Downs. The church is dedicated to St. John.

STAPLETON, a township partly in the parish of St. JOHN STANWICK, western division, but chiefly in the parish of CROFT, eastern division, of the wapentake of GILLING, North riding of the county of YORK, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. W.) from Darlington, containing 113 inhabitants.

STAPLETON, a township in the parish of DARRINGTON, upper division of the wapentake of OSGOLD-CROSS, West riding of the county of YORK, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. E. by E.) from Pontefract, containing 109 inhabitants.

STARBOTTON, a township in the parish of KETTLEWELL, eastern division of the wapentake of STAINCLIFFE and EWCROSS, West riding of the county of YORK, 17 miles (N. E. by N.) from Settle. The population is returned with the parish.

STARCROSS, a small sea-port in the parish of KENTON, hundred of EXMINSTER, county of DEVON, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (W. by N.) from Exmouth. The population is returned with the parish. The chapel, recently erected, contains five hundred sittings, of which three hundred and fifty are free, the Incorporated Society for promoting the building of additional churches, &c., having contributed £400 towards the expense. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. Starcross is a pleasant watering-place, situated on the western side of the mouth of the river Exe, south of Powderham castle, and opposite to Exmouth. The trade consists principally in the importation of coal and timber, for landing which there is a convenient quay. A fair is held on the Wednesday in Whitsun-week. On an eminence in the neighbourhood is a conspicuous landmark, called Belvidere, consisting of a lofty triangular tower, with an hexagonal turret rising from each corner: it was erected, in 1773, by Lord Courtenay, and commands interesting views of the rich and diversified scenery of the vicinity, including Powderham castle, erected by Isabella, the last of the great family of Rivers, in the reign of Edward I., the park, grounds, and plantations of which are nearly ten miles in circumference.

STARSTON, a parish in the hundred of EARSHAM, county of NORFOLK, $1\frac{1}{4}$ mile (N. N. W.) from Harleston, containing 437 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £15, and in the patronage of the Duke of Norfolk, who appoints a Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge.

vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Richmond, and diocese of Chester, rated in the king's books at £4. 0. 10., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Earl of Lonsdale. The church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, is of great antiquity.

STATFOLD, a parish in the southern division of the hundred of OFFLOW, county of STAFFORD, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N.E.) from Tamworth, containing 29 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the vicarage of St. Mary, Lichfield, in the archdeaconry of Stafford, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry. The church, now used only as a chapel for interment, is in decent repair. Statfold, under its ancient name Stotfold, is one of the prebends in the Cathedral Church of Lichfield, the revenues of which have been formed by act of parliament into a "Fabric Fund," for repairs, &c., no prebendary being appointed.

STATH DIVISION, a tything in the parish of STOKE ST. GREGORY, hundred of NORTH CURRY, county of SOMERSET, containing 267 inhabitants.

STATHERN, a parish in the hundred of FRAMLAND, county of LEICESTER, $8\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. by E.) from Melton-Mowbray, containing 456 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Leicester, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £16. 3. $1\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Master and Fellows of Peter House, Cambridge. The church is dedicated to St. Guthlake. The Grantham canal passes through the parish. There is a trifling endowment for a school, the gift of Joseph Westley, in 1735.

STAUGHTON (GREAT), a parish comprising the divisions of North Side and South Side, in the hundred of TOSELAND, county of HUNTINGDON, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S.E. by S.) from Kimbolton, and containing 1173 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Huntingdon, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £20, and in the patronage of the President and Fellows of St. John's College, Oxford. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew. There are two small bequests in support of a school, by Elizabeth Conyers, in 1709, and John Poachby, in 1727.

STAUGHTON (LITTLE), a parish in the hundred of STODDEN, county of BEDFORD, 4 miles (S. by E.) from Kimbolton, containing 406 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Bedford, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £13. 8. 4., and in the patronage of the President and Fellows of Corpus Christi College, Oxford. The church is dedicated to All Saints. There is a place of worship for Baptists.

STAUNTON, a joint township with Streatlam, in that part of the parish of GAINFORD which is in the south-western division of DARLINGTON ward, county palatine of DURHAM, $1\frac{3}{4}$ mile (N.E. by N.) from Barnard-Castle, containing, with Streatlam, 251 inhabitants.

STAUNTON, a parish in the hundred of ST. BRIAVELLS, county of GLOUCESTER, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by N.) from Monmouth, containing 200 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Gloucester, rated in the king's books at £7, and in the patronage of Lord Viscount Gage. The church is dedicated to All Saints.

STAUNTON, a parish in the southern division of the wapentake of NEWARK, county of NOTTINGHAM, $6\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S.) from Newark, containing, with portions of the chapelry of Flawborough, and the hamlet of Alverton, 227 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Nottingham, and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £16. 13. $11\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Rev. Dr. Staunton. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

STAUNTON, a parish forming, with the parishes of Chaseley and Eldersfield, a distinct portion of the lower division of the hundred of PERSHORE, county of WORCESTER, 6 miles (N.E. by E.) from Newent, containing 308 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Worcester, rated in the king's books at £11. 5., and in the patronage of Joseph Hill, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. James, is partly in the decorated, and partly in the later, style of English architecture, with a tower and spire.

STAUNTON upon WYE, a parish in the hundred of GRIMSWORTH, county of HEREFORD, $8\frac{3}{4}$ miles (W. N.W.) from Hereford, containing 514 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Hereford, rated in the king's books at £13. 13. 4., and in the patronage of the Dean and Canons of Christ Church, Oxford. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

STAUNTON-HARROLD, a chapelry in the parish of BREEDON, western division of the hundred of GOSCOTE, county of LEICESTER, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.N.E.) from Ashby de la Zouch, containing 329 inhabitants. The chapel, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, is a domestic chapel belonging to Earl Ferrars. Staunton is in the honour of Tutbury, duchy of Lancaster, and within the jurisdiction of a court of pleas held at Tutbury every third Tuesday, for the recovery of debts under 40s.

STAVELEY, a parish in the hundred of SCARSDALE, county of DERBY, $4\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N.E. by E.) from Chesterfield, containing, with the chapelry of Barlow, 2759 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Derby, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, rated in the king's books at £12. 7. 6., and in the patronage of the Duke of Devonshire. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, contains several monuments of the Frecheville family, and the east window exhibits some stained glass presented by Lord Frecheville in 1676. The river Rother runs through the parish; and the Chesterfield canal, and several rail-roads, pass between it and the neighbouring collieries. A considerable quantity of iron-stone, obtained here, is smelted near the village, where are two blast furnaces. A free grammar school was founded at Netherthorp, in 1537, by Judge Rodes, in support of which and of two scholarships in St. John's College, Cambridge, he bequeathed £20 per annum. A new house was erected by subscription, in 1804, for the master, whose annual income, including the bequests of Margaret Frecheville, in 1599, Lord James Cavendish, in 1742, and the Rev. Francis Gisborne, in 1796, is about £30 a year. There are also some smaller donations for the education of girls. An hospital for four aged persons of each sex was erected at Woodthorpe, in 1632, by Sir Peter Frecheville, who endowed it with £4 per annum to each of the inmates; but Richard Robinson, in 1777, having augmented the original endowment with a donation of £18 per annum, the allowances have been since doubled. Staveley was for many generations the chief seat of the Frechevilles.

In the reign of Charles I., Sir John Frecheville, an active royalist, strongly fortified his house here with twelve pieces of cannon, but capitulated in August 1644.

STAVELEY, a chapelry in the parish of CARTMEL, hundred of LONSDALE, north of the sands, county palatine of LANCASTER, 9 miles (N. E.) from Ulverstone, containing 350 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Richmond, and diocese of Chester, endowed with £800 royal bounty, and in the patronage of Lord G. Cavendish.

STAVELEY, a parish in the lower division of the wapentake of CLARO, West riding of the county of YORK, 3 miles (S. W. by S.) from Boroughbridge, containing 331 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Honour court of Knarborough, rated in the king's books at £8. 17. 11., and in the patronage of the Rev. G. Astley. The church is dedicated to All Saints.

STAVELEY (NETHER), a township in that part of the parish of KENDAL which is in KENDAL ward, county of WESTMORLAND, $4\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. W. by N.) from Kendal, containing 189 inhabitants.

STAVELEY (OVER), a chapelry in that part of the parish of KENDAL which is in KENDAL ward, county of WESTMORLAND, 5 miles (N. W. by N.) from Kendal, containing 312 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Richmond, and diocese of Chester, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £600 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Inhabitants. The manufacture of woollens and bobbin is carried on to some extent. Edward III. granted a charter for a market on Friday, and an annual fair on the festival of St. Luke, but both have been long disused. George Jopson, in 1696, gave two tenements, now let for £40 per annum, to the minister, provided he should instruct all the children of the chapelry; at present about forty partake of the benefit of this charity.

STAVERTON, a parish in the hundred of HAYTOR, county of DEVON, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. by W.) from Totness, containing 1042 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £32. 14. 9 $\frac{1}{2}$. The church, dedicated to St. George, contains some good screen-work. This parish is bounded on the south and south-west by the river Dart, and is famous for its cider: there are about forty presses, and the average quantity produced annually is seven thousand hogsheads. In the neighbourhood are quarries of blue and grey marble, slate, and excellent limestone. The Rev. Thomas Baker, in 1802, gave £200 for charitable uses, of the proceeds of which £8 is applied to the instruction of young children; and Thomas Bradridge, in 1805, gave a trifling annuity for the education of four.

STAVERTON, a parish in the lower division of the hundred of DEERHURST, county of GLOUCESTER, $4\frac{3}{4}$ miles (W. by N.) from Cheltenham, containing 262 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Bishop of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £12, and in the patronage of the Crown by reason of lunacy. The church is dedicated to St. John the Baptist. The Gloucester and Cheltenham rail-road passes through the parish.

STAVERTON, a parish in the hundred of FAWSLEY, county of NORTHAMPTON, 2 miles (W. S. W.) from Daventry, containing 474 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Northampton, and diocese of Peterborough, and in the patronage of the Dean and Canons of Christ Church, Oxford. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. The Rev. Francis Baker, in 1767, gave certain land, now producing an annual income of £44, which is applied to the instruction of twenty-five children in a house occupied by the master, and purchased with a bequest of £100 by Catharine Burbidge, in 1767. There is also a Sunday school, supported by the annual proceeds of a legacy of £200, bequeathed by the late Rev. Sir John Knightley.

STAVERTON, a chapelry in the parish of TROWBRIDGE, hundred of MELKSHAM, county of WILTS, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.) from Trowbridge, with which the population is returned. The chapel has lately received an addition of one hundred and twenty sittings, of which one hundred are free, the Incorporated Society for the enlargement of churches and chapels having granted £125 towards defraying the expense. Here is a large cloth manufactory.

STAWELL, a chapelry in the parish of MOORLINCH, hundred of WHITLEY, county of SOMERSET, 5 miles (E. by N.) from Bridg-water, containing 200 inhabitants.

STAWLEY, a parish in the hundred of MILVERTON, county of SOMERSET, 3 miles (S. W. by S.) from Wiveliscombe, containing 195 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Taunton, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £8. 8. 6 $\frac{1}{2}$. G. Hyde, Esq. was patron in 1819. The church is dedicated to St. Michael.

STAXTON, a township in the parish of WILLERBY, wapentake of DICKERING, East riding of the county of YORK, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. by W.) from Scarborough, containing 213 inhabitants. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

STAYLEY, a township in the parish of MOTTRAM, in LONGDEN-DALE, hundred of MACCLESFIELD, county palatine of CHESTER, 1 mile (N. E.) from Ashton under Line, containing, with a part of the town of Stalybridge, (which is described under its own head), 1609 inhabitants. The Huddersfield canal passes through the township.

STAYTHORPE, a township in the northern division of the wapentake of THURGARTON, county of NOTTINGHAM, containing 69 inhabitants.

STEAN, a parish in the hundred of KING'S SUTTON, county of NORTHAMPTON, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. W.) from Brackley, containing 33 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, with that of Hinton in the Hedges, in the archdeaconry of Northampton, and diocese of Peterborough, rated in the king's books at £5. 9. 7., and endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £400 royal bounty. The church is dedicated to St. Peter.

STEARSBY, a hamlet in the parish of BRANSBY, wapentake of BULMER, North riding of the county of YORK, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. N. E.) from Easingwold. The population is returned with the parish.

STEBBING, a parish in the hundred of HINCKFORD, county of ESSEX, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. E. by E.) from Great Dunmow, containing 1311 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the jurisdiction of the Commissary of Essex and Herts, concurrently with the Consistorial Court of the Bishop of London, rated in the king's books at £12. Thomas Batt, Esq. was patron in 1802. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, has lately received an addition of one hundred and forty free sittings, the Incorporated Society for the enlargement of churches and chapels having granted £30 towards defraying the expense. There is a place of worship for Independents.

STEDHAM, a parish in the hundred of EASEBOURNE, rape of CHICHESTER, county of SUSSEX, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (W. N.W.) from Midhurst, containing 453 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, with that of Heyshot united, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chichester, rated in the king's books at £17. 18. $6\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of Lord Selsey. The church is dedicated to St. James.

STEEP, a parish in the hundred of EAST MEON, Alton (South) division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, $1\frac{3}{4}$ mile (N.) from Petersfield, containing, with the tythings of North Ambersham and South Ambersham, 808 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the vicarage of East Meon, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Winchester. Steep is within the jurisdiction of the Cheyney Court held at Winchester every Thursday, for the recovery of debts to any amount.

STEEP-HOLMES ISLAND, in the parish of UP-HILL, hundred of WINTERSTOKE, county of SOMERSET, 2 leagues (W. by N.) from Uphill. It is a vast rock, about a mile and a half in circumference, rising perpendicularly out of the Bristol channel to the height of four hundred feet above the level of the sea, and inaccessible at all points except two. A few rabbits burrow here, and great numbers of sea-fowl build their nests within the recesses of its overhanging rocks. A house was erected, in 1776, for the accommodation of fishermen, who occasionally make this island their resort. A priory is supposed to have been founded here, about the reign of Edward II., by Maurice, Lord Berkeley.

STEEPING (GREAT), a parish in the Wold division of the wapentake of CANDLESHEOE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 3 miles (E. S.E.) from Spilsby, containing 278 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, united to the rectory of Firsby, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £7. 18. 4. The church is dedicated to All Saints. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. The parish is bounded on the south by the river Steeping. The remains of an old mansion, surrounded by a moat, are now occupied as a farm-house, and a moated enclosure in the neighbourhood is said to have been the site of a monastery.

STEEPING (LITTLE), a parish in the eastern division of the soke of BOLINGBROKE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $3\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S.E. by E.) from Spilsby, containing 278 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £9. 19. 4., and in the patronage of Lord Gwydir. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew.

STEEPLE, a parish in the hundred of HASILOR, Blandford (South) division of the county of DORSET, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (W. by S.) from Corfe-Castle, containing 233 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, united by act of parliament in the 8th of George I. to that of Tyneham, in the archdeaconry of Dorset, and diocese of Bristol, rated in the king's books at £9. 15. 5., and in the patronage of W. Richards, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, has a plain but lofty tower. The hamlet of West Creech, in this parish, formerly belonged to the abbey of Bindon, and had the privileges of a market and fair, granted by Henry III.

STEEPLE, a parish in the hundred of DENGIE, county of ESSEX, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. S.W.) from Bradwell near the Sea, containing 533 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage with Stanesgate, in the archdeaconry of Essex, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £15. 18., and in the patronage of J.K. and T. Hunt, Esqrs., and Miss Hunt. The church is dedicated to St. Lawrence and All Saints. Blackwater river is navigable on the north side of the parish. At Stanesgate, a priory of Cluniac monks, subordinate to that of Lewes, existed before 1176; it was dedicated to St. Mary Magdalene, and at the dissolution had a revenue of £38. 18. 3.

STEEPLE-MORDEN, county of CAMBRIDGE.—(See MORDEN STEEPLE.)

STEEPLETON-PRESTON, formerly a parish, now considered extra-parochial, in the hundred of PIMPERNE, Blandford (North) division of the county of DORSET, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. N. W.) from Blandford-Forum, containing 23 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Dorset, and diocese of Bristol, rated in the king's books at £6. 18. 4., endowed with £200 royal bounty. P. Beckford, Esq. was patron in 1810. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

STEETON, a township in the parish of BOLTON-PERCY, ainsty of the city, and East riding of the county, of YORK, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by N.) from Tadcaster, containing 83 inhabitants.

STEETON, a joint township with Eastburn, in the parish of KILDWICK, eastern division of the wapentake of STAINCLIFFE and EWCROSS, West riding of the county of YORK, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. W.) from Keighley, containing, with Eastburn, 753 inhabitants. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. William Laycock, in 1612, gave a rent-charge of £3. 6. 8. in support of a school.

STELLA, a township in the parish of RYTON, western division of CHESTER ward, county palatine of DURHAM, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by N.) from Gateshead, containing 421 inhabitants. There is a Roman Catholic chapel at Stella hall. The navigable river Tyne runs past the village, where is a wharf belonging to the London Lead Company, and a coal-staith. A considerable English army was defeated here, August 28th, 1640, by the Scots, who passed the Tyne under cover of several pieces of cannon, which they had planted in Newburn church.

STELLING, a parish partly in the hundred of LONINGBOROUGH, but chiefly in that of STOUTING, lathe of SHEPWAY, county of KENT, 6 miles (S. by W.) from Canterbury, containing 295 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the rectory of Upper Hardres, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Canterbury. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. The parish is bounded on the west by the ancient Stane-street.

STELLING, a township in the parish of BYWELL ST. PETER, eastern division of TINDALE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, $8\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by N.) from Hexham, containing 12 inhabitants.

STENIGOT, a parish in the northern division of the wapentake of GARTREE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $5\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. W. by W.) from Louth, containing 107 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £7. 12. 3 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of Mrs. Arlington. The church is dedicated to St. Nicholas.

STENSON, a township in that part of the parish of BARROW which is in the hundred of APPLETREE, county of DERBY, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. S. W.) from Derby. The population is returned with the chapelry of Twyford. The inhabitants are entitled to the benefit of Alsop's school at Findern.

STEPHENS (ST.), a parish in the northern division of the hundred of EAST, county of CORNWALL, $\frac{3}{4}$ of a mile (N. N. W.) from Launceston, containing, with the borough of Newport, 977 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Cornwall, and diocese of Exeter, endowed with £200 private benefaction, £600 royal bounty, and £800 parliamentary grant. John Horwell, in 1717, bequeathed funded property amounting to £1705. 15. 2., to be applied for teaching poor children.

STEPHENS (ST.), a parish in the hundred of CASHIO, or liberty of St. ALBANS, county of HERTFORD, 1 mile (S. W.) from St. Albans, containing, with Park, Smallford, and Windridge wards, 1580 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of St. Albans, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £15, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of—Cator, Esq. The church, situated on the Roman Watling-street, occupies the site of that built, in the reign of King Eldred, by Ulsinus, sixth abbot of St. Albans. A fine brass eagle with expanded wings, on an ornamented pedestal of the same metal, was dug up some years ago in the churchyard, and is now used as a stand in the chancel for Fox's Martyrology. The rivers Ver and Colne run through the parish, in which many Roman coins have been found.

STEPHENS (ST.), county of KENT.—See HACKINGTON.

STEPHENS (ST.) in BRANNEL, a parish in the eastern division of the hundred of POWDER, county of CORNWALL, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by N.) from St. Austell, containing 2479 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed, with that of St. Denis, to the rectory of St. Michael Carhaise, in the archdeaconry of Cornwall, and diocese of Exeter, and in the patronage of Lord Grenville. The church is an ancient building, principally in the Norman style, with a detached square tower. There is a place of worship for Independents. A school is endowed with a small annual income. Several tin and copper mines have been opened in the neighbourhood, but have been found unproductive, except one, called Strawberry mine, which is worked on a small scale. The parish abounds with moorstone, which is much used in building, and with a species of fine white clay. In the clay-works are found a black kind of spar, and some beautiful transparent regular polygonal chrystals, called Cornish diamonds. Here are vestiges of a circular intrenchment, surrounded by a foss, comprising about an acre.

STEPHENS (ST.) by SALTASH, a parish in the southern division of the hundred of EAST, county of CORNWALL, 1 mile (W. by S.) from Saltash, containing, with the borough of Saltash, 2873 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Cornwall, and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £26, endowed with £15 per annum private benefaction, £200 royal bounty, and £700 parliamentary grant. Thomas Edwards, Esq. was patron in 1815. In this parish are considerable remains of the ancient castle of Trematon, in a beautiful situation on the banks of the Lyner: the area covered more than an acre of ground, and was enclosed by embattled walls; the keep is situated on the summit of a conical elevation, and is approached by a circular arched doorway; the principal gateway consists of three arches, supporting a square embattled tower, containing a museum for natural curiosities: this castle was erected prior to the Conquest.

STEPNEY, a parish in the Tower division of the hundred of OSSULSTONE, county of MIDDLESEX, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E.) from London, comprising the hamlets of Mile-End New Town, Mile-End Old Town, and Ratcliff, and containing, according to the last census, 36,940 inhabitants, which number has since been progressively increasing, and at present may be estimated at nearly 80,000. This parish, called in various ancient records Stebunhithe and Stebenhythe, occurs in Domesday-book under the name Stibenhede, from which its present appellation is obviously deduced. It anciently included a widely extended district, comprising, in addition to its present parochial limits, the hamlets of Stratford le Bow, Limehouse, Poplar and Blackwall, Shadwell, St. George's in the East, Wapping, Spitalfields, Whitechapel, and Bethnal-Green, which, owing to their increased extent and importance, have been successively separated from it, and erected into distinct parishes, at present constituting some of the most populous districts in the vicinity of the metropolis. The present parish of St. Paul, Shadwell, was separated from Stepney in 1666; St. Mary's, Whitechapel, in 1673; St. John's, Wapping, in 1694; St. Mary's, Stratford le Bow, in 1717; the parishes of Christchurch (Spitalfields) and St. George in the East, in 1729; St. Anne's, Limehouse, in 1730; St. Matthew's, Bethnal-Green, in 1743; and the parish of All Saints', Poplar, including Blackwall, in 1817. According to Stowe, Edward I. held a parliament at Stepney, in the mansion of Henry Walleis, mayor of London, in which he conferred several valuable privileges on the citizens. The manor was, in 1380, annexed to the see of London, and the bishops had a palace, called Bishop hall, now included in the parish of Bethnal-Green, in which they continued to reside till 1550, when it was alienated from the see by Bishop Ridley, who gave it to Edward VI. In the rebellion under Jack Cade, in the reign of Henry VI., the insurgents who attacked the metropolis, encamped for some time at the hamlet of Mile-End; and, in 1642, at the commencement of the parliamentary war, fortifications were constructed in this parish for the defence of the city.

From the then pleasantness of its situation, and the beauty of its scenery, which are noticed in a letter from Sir Thomas More to Dean Colet, Stepney was formerly the favourite residence of many persons of distinction. Isabel, Countess of Rutland, had a seat here in the latter part of the sixteenth century, at which time Sir Thomas Lake, secretary of state in the reign of James I., was also a resident; but there are no vestiges of the houses which they occupied. Henry, the first Marquis of Worcester, had a mansion near the parsonage-house, of which the gateway, handsomely built of brick, with a turret at one of the angles, is still remaining, and forms part of a house wherein Dr. Richard Mead was born, and where he resided for many years: the site of the ancient mansion is now occupied by an academy for the education of young men intended for ministers of the Baptist denomination. Sir Henry Colet, father of Dean Colet, the founder of St. Paul's school, lived in a spacious residence to the west of the church, called the Great Place, the site being now partly occupied by a place of public entertainment, called Spring Gardens; on two sides of the pleasure grounds, traces are still discernible of the moat that surrounded the ancient mansion. During part of the seventeenth century, Stepney suffered severely from the ravages of the plague, of which two thousand nine hundred and seventy-eight persons died in the year 1625; and in the year 1665, not less than six thousand five hundred and eighty-three. In the course of the latter year, one hundred and sixteen sextons and grave-diggers, belonging to this parish, died of the plague, and so greatly was the parish, then principally inhabited by sea-faring men, depopulated, that it is recorded, in the Life of Lord Clarendon, that "there seemed an impossibility to procure seamen to fit out the fleet." In 1794, a most calamitous and destructive fire, occasioned by the boiling over of a pitch kettle in a barge-builder's yard, broke out, and consumed more than half of the hamlet of Ratcliff, communicated to the shipping in the river, and destroyed several ranges of warehouses, among which was one belonging to the East India Company, containing more than two hundred tons of saltpetre. Of one thousand two hundred houses then in that hamlet, only five hundred and seventy escaped the conflagration, and thirty-six warehouses, chiefly stored with articles of combustion, were totally consumed. By this dreadful calamity several hundred families were reduced to the utmost distress, deprived of shelter, and made dependent for subsistence on the public benevolence. One hundred and fifty tents, furnished by government from the Tower, were pitched for their reception in an enclosed piece of ground near the churchyard, and provisions were daily supplied to them from the vestry-room of the church. A public subscription was opened at Lloyd's coffee-house, by which, together with the contributions of thousands who came to visit the extensive ruins caused by this desolating conflagration, more than £16,000 was collected for the relief of the sufferers.

The parish is situated on the northern bank of the Thames, and is chiefly inhabited by persons connected with the shipping: it extends for a considerable distance from the river to the principal road leading into Essex, and comprises many handsome ranges of building, among which are Tredegar-square on the north, and Beaumont-square on the south, side of the Mile-End road, together with numerous handsome houses in detached situations. The commercial-road, leading from Whitechapel to the East and West India docks, passes through the parish: this road, which is seventy feet wide, with a pavement on each side eight feet in width, was begun in 1802, and towards the fund for making it and keeping it in repair, all houses within the distance of one hundred feet on each side pay a contribution of two shillings and ninepence in the pound. On the south side of this road, a tram-road has been laid down within the last year, at a very great expense. The basin, or dock, at the junction of the Regent's canal with the Thames, capable of containing one hundred ships, occupies a portion of the east side of the hamlet of Ratcliff. The ancient house in which Dean Colet resided, after his resignation of the vicarage of Stepney, and which he gave to the head-master of St. Paul's school, as a place of retirement, has been converted into two handsome houses, now called "Collet Place," the front of which is ornamented with a bust of the dean: the greater portion of the buildings in this part of the parish are of modern date, having been erected subsequently to the fire in 1794. The parish is paved, and lighted with gas, under the superintendence of commissioners appointed by act of parliament, and supplied with water by the East London Company, from their works at Old Ford, about two miles distant, the reservoir of which, excavated in 1827, and covering ten acres of ground, is situated to the north of the high road. On the banks of the Regent's canal, which crosses the Mile-End road under a stone bridge, are several coal and timber wharfs; in the hamlets of Mile-End Old Town and Mile-End New Town are some extensive breweries, a large distillery, an extensive floor-cloth manufactory, a manufactory for tobacco-pipes, and a very spacious nursery-ground; in the hamlet of Ratcliff there are extensive manufactories for sail-cloth, sails, chain-cables, and mooring-chains, steam-engines, and machinery connected with the docks and shipping, and large establishments belonging to coopers for the West India trade, timber and hoop merchants, ship-chandlers, sugar-bakers, rope-makers, and various other trades, for which its situation renders it peculiarly favourable. The market, granted by Charles II., in 1664, is now held at Whitechapel; and the fair, granted at the same time, and originally held on Mile-End green, was afterwards removed to Stratford le Bow, and subsequently suppressed.

Stepney is within the jurisdiction of the county magistrates, who sit at the police-office in Lambeth-street, Whitechapel, for the despatch of business relating to the hamlets of Mile-End Old and New Towns; and at the Thames police office, Wapping, for the hamlet of Ratcliff: its local affairs are under the superintendence of twelve trustees, who, pursuant to the provisions of an act passed in 1810, are annually elected by the inhabitants, at the town hall in White Horse-street, on Easter-Monday; where also, at the same time, the churchwardens, two overseers, a constable, and fourteen headboroughs, are chosen. It is within the limits of the new police establishment, and under the jurisdiction of the court of requests for the "Tower Hamlets," held in Osborne-street, Whitechapel, for the recovery of debts under 40s. A notion has for many years been very generally entertained, that all persons born at sea are, from that circumstance alone, parishioners of Stepney; to counteract the influence of this error, which has subjected the parish to serious expense, the overseers, in 1813, applied for a criminal information against a magistrate of the county of Chester, for having removed a vagrant, who stated that he was born at sea, from the parish of Stockport to Stepney. On this occasion Lord Ellenborough observed, that "this was a great blunder on the part of the magistrate;" and in the hope that the promulgation of his lordship's decision, that "certainly it must be understood, that all these sea-born persons are not to be marched off, at the pleasure of the magistrate, to the parish of Stepney," would produce the desired effect, the overseers forbore to press further proceedings.

The church of Stepney, together with the manor, was appropriated to the see of London, in 1380, and the bishops of that diocese appointed to the rectory, which was a sinecure, the rectors being patrons of the vicarage: in 1544, the great tithes were impropriated, and the impropiator presented both to the rectory and to the vicarage; in 1708, they were purchased by the Principal and Fellows of Brasenose College, Oxford, which purchase was afterwards confirmed by act of parliament, and they were annexed to the vicarage, subject to an annual payment of £40 to the college, and divided into moieties, of which the incumbents were styled portionists of Church-Stepney and Spitalfields-Stepney. After the separation of the several parishes, and the consequent diminution of the value of the benefice, the arrangement was altered, and the living became vested in one person. It is a rectory, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Commissary of London, concurrently with the Consistorial Court of the Bishop, rated in the king's books at £73. 6. 8., and in the patronage of the Principal and Fellows of Brasenose College, Oxford. The church, dedicated to St. Dunstan and All Saints, is a spacious structure of flint and stone, principally in the later style of English architecture, with a low broad tower, strengthened with buttresses, and surmounted by a turret crowned with a small dome. Near the western entrance is a bas-relief, indifferently executed and much decayed, representing the Virgin and Child, with a female figure in the attitude of supplication; and over the south door is a rudely-sculptured representation of the Crucifixion, in tolerable preservation. The nave is separated from the aisles by clustered columns and pointed arches; and on the south side of the chancel are two arched recesses. There are many ancient monuments in the church; on the north side of the chancel is the altar-tomb of Sir Henry Colet, Knt., under an arched canopy, finely groined, and near it a monument to Benjamin Kenton, Esq., on which is a finely sculptured representation of the Good Samaritan, by Westmacott: this benevolent individual, who died in 1800, at the advanced age of eighty-three, bequeathed to different charitable institutions the sum of £63,550. On the east wall is a monument to Lady Dethic, and on the south, a tablet to Sir Thomas Spert, Knt., founder and first master of the corporation of the Trinity: the church was thoroughly repaired and beautified in 1828. The churchyard is spacious, and the various walks are shaded with double rows of elm-trees; there are numerous monuments to distinguished persons who have been buried here, among whom were, the Rev. Matthew Mead, who was ejected from the living of Shadwell for nonconformity; Admiral Sir John Leake, Knt., a distinguished officer in the reign of Queen Anne; and various others. A church in the later style of English architecture, containing one thousand three hundred and thirty-eight sittings, of which nine hundred and thirty are free, was erected in 1822, towards the expense of which, the parliamentary commissioners granted the sum of £3500. There are places of worship for Baptists, the Society of Friends, those in the connexion of the late Countess of Huntingdon, Calvinistic Methodists, and three for Independents; of one of which, near the church, founded by the lecturer, the Rev. Wm. Greenhill, and built in 1674, the Rev. Matthew Mead became the first minister.

The charity schools at Ratcliff were established in 1710, and the school-house was erected in 1719; the endowment of this institution, originally for the clothing and instruction of thirty boys and twenty girls, consists of an estate at Edmonton, given to the school by Mr. Wakeling; a legacy of £500, by Edward Turner, Esq., and other benefactions, amounting in the whole to £2000: the school was enlarged in 1814, and adapted to the instruction, on the National system, of two hundred additional boys and one hundred and twenty girls, of whom forty boys and twenty-five girls are annually clothed in green, and apprenticed. The charity school at Mile-End Old Town was established by subscription in 1714, and has been subsequently endowed with various benefactions, producing £143. 16. per annum: one hundred and sixty boys, and one hundred and five girls, are instructed on the National plan; a school-room for the girls, and other apartments, were erected at Stepney Green, in 1786, behind which is a school for the boys. The Stepney Meeting charity school, in which one hundred and thirty boys and sixty girls are instructed, partly on the National and partly on the Lancasterian plan, was founded in 1783, and the present building erected in 1828: it has an endowment of £188 per annum, arising from various benefactions, and is further supported by subscription. The charity school for Mile-End New Town was established by subscription, in 1785, for the instruction of thirty boys and thirty girls; the permanent income arises from £715, vested in the four per cents., the deficiency being supplied by subscription. There are also Sunday schools in connexion with the established church and the dissenting congregations. In School-house-lane, Ratcliff, are the almshouses of the Coopers' Company, founded in 1538, by Toby Wood, Esq., and Mr. Cloker, members of that company, for fourteen aged persons of both sexes, who were to receive £1. 6. 8. each per annum. Adjoining them is a free grammar school, largely endowed by Nicholas Gibson, Esq., master of the company, and sheriff of London, in the reign of Henry VIII., for the instruction of thirty boys; in this school Bishop Andrews, and several other distinguished persons, received the rudiments of their education. These premises were destroyed by the fire of 1794, but were rebuilt in 1796, and the almshouses more liberally endowed by the company; they now afford an asylum to sixteen men and six women, who receive each £15, and a chaldron and a half of coal yearly: in the school there are at present fifty boys, who are instructed in reading, writing, and arithmetic, by a master whose salary is £73. 10. per annum, with a house and an allowance of coal, and the privilege of receiving private pupils: the buildings occupy three sides of a quadrangle, with a chapel in the central range.

The almshouses belonging to the Vintners' Company, originally founded in Thames-street, in 1357, were destroyed in the great fire of London, in 1666, and were afterwards rebuilt at Mile-End; they were taken down and rebuilt in 1802, upon a larger scale, in appropriation of a bequest of £2250 by Mr. Benjamin Kenton of Stepney; they consist of twelve separate tenements and a chapel, and are endowed for twelve widows of freemen of the Vintners' Company, who receive £36 per annum each; a chaplain performs divine service weekly, and has a stipend of £52. 10. per annum. Almshouses, erected by the Brethren of the Trinity House, comprise twelve sets of apartments, with a handsome chapel in the centre, in the front windows of which are some armorial bearings in stained glass. Francis Bancroft, in 1727, bequeathed in trust to the Drapers' Company, property then worth £28,000, for the erection and endowment of twenty-four almshouses for aged men, members of that company, and a school for one hundred boys: the present income, arising from £40,800 three per cent. consols., £33,400 three per cent. reduced annuities, and from landed property, exceeds £4000 per annum; the almsmen receive each £20 per annum, and a chaldron and a half of coal, with a gown every third year. The head-master of the school receives a salary of £120 per annum, and the second master one of £90, with houses free of rent, taxes, and repairs, and four chaldrons of coal annually; the boys are instructed in reading, writing, and arithmetic, and on leaving school receive an apprentice fee, or a sum of £2. 10. to fit them out for service. The buildings, in the Mile-End-road, consist of two ranges of houses occupying two sides of a quadrangular area, of which the school-room, chapel, and other apartments form the third side. A chaplain, who is appointed by the Master and Wardens of the Drapers' Company, has an annual stipend of £31. 10., and performs divine service in the chapel every Sunday morning, and on Christmas-day and Good Friday. Mr. John Fuller, in 1592, founded twelve almshouses, which he endowed with £50 per annum, for twelve aged and unmarried men. Near the churchyard are the Mercers' almshouses, founded in 1691, by Dame Jane Mico, relict of Sir Samuel Mico, which she endowed for ten aged widows, who receive each £30 per annum. Mrs. Bowry, in 1715, bequeathed a leasehold estate and a sum of money in the South Sea annuities, amounting to £2636. 13., for the erection and endowment of eight almshouses between Mile-End and Stratford le Bow, for decayed seamen and their widows, of this parish. Cap. James Cook, and his widow, Dame Alice Row, founded four almshouses in the Grove-road, Mile-End, for widows of seamen of Stepney, to which the hamlet of Mile-End exclusively presents, on condition of keeping them in repair. Eight almshouses were erected in Mile-End Old Town, in 1698, by Mr. John Pennell, who endowed them for aged widows, of whom four are to be widows of seamen belonging to the Hon. East India Company's service; each of the inmates receives an allowance of six shillings and eightpence per month, seven sacks of coal yearly, and a gown every alternate year. The East London Institution for lying-in women, established by subscription, is well supported and judiciously regulated. At Mile-End Old Town is the Jews' hospital for aged poor, and for the education and employment of children, founded in 1806, and enlarged in 1818: the building, which is on the south side of the road, is spacious, and ornamented in front with a central pediment and Ionic pilasters. Nearly opposite is the hospital for Spanish and Portuguese Jews, established in 1747, for the reception of sick poor and lying-in women, and intended also as an asylum for the aged and infirm. On the north side of the high road are two spacious cemeteries belonging to the Portuguese Jews, and a third for German or Dutch Jews, in which several of the Rabbins, and other eminent individuals of that class are interred.

STEPPINGLEY, a parish in the hundred of RED-BORNESTOKE, county of BEDFORD, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S.W. by S.) from Ampthill, containing 323 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Bedford, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £6. 16. 3., and in the patronage of the Duke of Bedford. The church is dedicated to St. Lawrence.

STERNDAL (EARL), a chapelry in the parish of HARTINGTON, hundred of WIRKSWORTH, county of DERBY, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S.E. by S.) from Buxton, containing, with Middle Quarter, 417 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Dean's court for the manor of Hartington, endowed with £400 private benefaction, £600 royal bounty, and £1300 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Vicar of Hartington. The chapel was erected in 1829, at the expense of £1000. The Peak Forest and Cromford rail-road passes through the chapelry. Four poor children are instructed for £2 a year, the gift of James Hill, in 1712.

STERNFIELD, a parish in the hundred of PLOMESGATE, county of SUFFOLK, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (S.S.E.) from Saxmundham, containing 180 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Suffolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £8. 14. $4\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of C. Long, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Mary Magdalene.

STERT, a parish in the hundred of SWANBOROUGH, county of WILTS, 2 miles (S.E.) from Devizes, containing 193 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the vicarage of Urchfont, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Bishop of Salisbury. The church is dedicated to St. James.

STETCHWORTH, a parish in the hundred of RADFIELD, county of CAMBRIDGE, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. by W.) from Newmarket, containing 462 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Ely, rated in the king's books at £10. 12. 1. R. Eaton, Esq. was patron in 1809. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. An almshouse for two poor persons of each sex was founded here, in 1700, by Lord and Lady Gorges, who endowed it with £30 per annum.

STEVENAGE, a market town and parish in the hundred of BROADWATER, county of HERTFORD, 12 miles (N.W. by N.) from Hertford, and 31 (N.N.W.) from London, containing 1664 inhabitants. The ancient name of this town was Stigenhaght, signifying the hills by the highway, evidently derived from six barrows, or hills, near the road side, half a mile south of the town: about the period of the Octarchy it was called Stigenhace, and in Domesday-book Stevenach, or Stevenadge. It formed a part of the demesne of the Saxon kings, and was given, by Edward the Confessor, to the abbey of Westminster, on the suppression of which it was granted, by Edward VI., to the see of London, to which the manor still belongs. The town is pleasantly situated on the great North road from London to Edinburgh, and consists principally of one long and spacious street, with two or three smaller ones, comprising some well-built brick residences, and a few good shops, and is well supplied with water. The trade is principally that of carcass butchers, who dispose of the slaughtered cattle principally at Hertford, and in the London market. The platting of straw furnishes employment to many of the females in the town and its vicinity. In the reign of James I., Montaigne, Bishop of London, procured the grant of a weekly market, and three fairs annually, which was confirmed, with liberty to alter the market-day, by a charter of William and Mary; but, from the contiguity of other towns, in which large markets are held, that of Stevenage has fallen into disuse; and the fairs, except one on the 22nd of September, have also been nearly discontinued. Petty sessions for the division are held here, and a manorial court annually by the Bishop of London.

The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Huntingdon, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £33. 6. 8., and in the patronage of William Baker, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is situated on a chalky eminence about half a mile from the town, approached by a fine avenue of trees; it is a neat well-built edifice, with a square tower at the west end, surmounted by a spire covered with lead; attached to the chancel are two small chapels. There are places of worship for Independents and Wesleyan Methodists. The free school was founded, in the reign of Queen Mary, by the Rev. Thomas Allen, who devised all his estates to the Society of Trinity College, Cambridge, for certain charitable uses, amongst which was an endowment of £13. 6. 8. per annum to this school, which has been increased by subsequent benefactions. The master is appointed by the Master and Fellows of that college, and the trustees are chosen from among the gentlemen in the neighbourhood: the poor children of the parish pay two shillings and sixpence a quarter, and those out of it five shillings. The school-room is at the northern extremity of the town, and upon it is an inscription in old English characters directing, by authority of the king's commissioners in 1632 and 1640, that the master, having the income of the school, shall teach the poor children of the parish, or those resorting to it. Near it stands a commodious house, with garden and orchard attached, for the master, who formerly received a considerable number of boarders. The almshouse for three poor persons, called "All Christians' Souls' House," was founded by Stephen Hellard, in 1501, who directed that the inmates should daily repeat a certain prayer for his soul, and for all Christian souls. There are various other bequests to the poor. Henry Trigg, an eccentric inhabitant of this town, by his will, dated in 1724, directed his body after death to be deposited on a floor, to be erected in one of the outbuildings of his house, leaving his property to his brother on condition that he complied with this direction, which was accordingly done, the corpse still remaining where it was deposited. The six barrows supposed to give name to the town have been conjectured to be sepulchral monuments, although in those that have been opened no human remains were discovered. It is generally supposed that they were erected by the Danes, several battles having been fought between them and the Saxons in this county, some fields, at the distance of about three-quarters of a mile, still retaining the name of Danes' Blood. In a wood about half a mile eastward of the barrows, called Humbley wood, are the apparent remains of an intrenched camp, or fortification, of unknown construction, consisting of a large and perfectly square area, surrounded with a deep moat containing water, with only one entrance on the north side. Richard de Stevenage, abbot of St. Albans at the dissolution, was a native of this place.

STEVENTON, a parish in the hundred of Ock, county of BERKS, 5 miles (S. W. by S.) from Abingdon, containing 652 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Berks, and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £9. 5. 2½., and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Westminster. The church is dedicated to St. Michael. There is a place of worship for Baptists. The Berks and Wilts canal passes through the parish. In the village is an ancient cross, consisting of a tall shaft rising from a base of several steps. A castle was formerly erected here by Baldwin Wake, in 1281, of which there are no vestiges. A priory of Black monks, a cell to the abbey of Bec in Normandy, was founded in the time of Henry I., which, at the suppression of Alien houses, was bestowed upon the abbot and convent of Westminster. Twelve children are instructed daily, and a Sunday school is partly supported, for about £11 per annum, arising from the sum of £210, bequeathed by John Anns, in 1811.

STEVENTON, a parish in the hundred of BASINGSTOKE, Basingstoke division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 6¼ miles (E.) from Whitchurch, containing 151 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Winchester, rated in the king's books at £11. 4. 7., and in the patronage of Edward Knight, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Nicholas. The manor-house has a very antiquated appearance, and bears evident marks of former grandeur.

STEVEINGTON, a parish in the hundred of WILLEY, county of BEDFORD, 5½ miles (N. W. by W.) from Bedford, containing 485 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Bedford, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £12. 13. 4., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Duke of Bedford. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

STEWKLEY, a parish in the hundred of COTTESLOE, county of BUCKINGHAM, 6 miles (E. by S.) from Winslow, containing 933 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Buckingham, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £9. 9. 7., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Oxford. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is one of the most enriched and complete specimens of the Norman style of architecture now remaining. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

STEWTON, a parish in the Wold division of the hundred of LOUTH-ESKE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (E.) from Louth, containing 63 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £7. Dudley North, Esq. was patron in 1817. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew.

STEYNING, a borough, market town, and parish, in the hundred of STEYNING, rape of BRAMBER, county of SUSSEX, 24 miles (E. by N.) from Chichester, and $49\frac{1}{2}$ (S. by W.) from London, containing 1324 inhabitants. The name is supposed to be derived from the Steyne-street, an ancient road which passed through this part of the county from Arundel to Dorking. Camden considers it to have been mentioned in Alfred's will by the name of Steyningham. It appears in the Saxon age to have been a place of considerable note; a church, or monastery, having been here built, wherein St. Cadman was buried; and in the Catalogue of Religious Houses, ascribed to Gervase of Canterbury, in the time of Richard I., mention is made of a Dean and Secular canons. It is more certain that King Edward the Confessor gave lands to the monastery of Feschamp in Normandy, which included this place; these being taken away by Earl Godwin, and restored by William the Conqueror, some Benedictine monks were sent from that house, who erected an Alien priory here, which was given to the monastery of Sion by Edward IV., and continued part of its possessions till the dissolution. Speed says, the conventual church was dedicated to St. Mary Magdalene, and contained the sacred relics of St. Cuthman (Cadman), and Ethelwulph, father of Alfred the Great: here anciently was also a parochial church of St. Cuthman. Camden speaks of its market as well frequented in his time: the town afterwards became reduced, and is, in the Magna Britannia, a century later, mentioned as "a mean, contemptible place, with hardly a building fit to put a horse in," being said then to have contained not more than one hundred and fifty families; but since that period it has been considerably enlarged. It stands at the foot of a lofty hill near the river Adur, over which is a bridge, and consists of four streets, crossing each other. It is supplied with water by a celebrated spring, issuing from a mountain half a mile distant, its stream turning two mills belonging to the town. Great improvement in the buildings and general appearance of the town has been lately made, through the liberality of the Duke of Norfolk. Here were extensive barracks for infantry, which have been pulled down; and within one mile of the town, on the downs, is a race-course, but races have not been held for the last fifty years. The land in the vicinity of the town is fertile, and the adjoining downs afford good pasturage for sheep. The chief traffic is in cattle, for which there is a monthly market: great numbers are also sold at the fairs. The market is on Wednesday: the fairs are June 9th, September 20th, and October 10th; at the Michaelmas fair more than three thousand head of Welch oxen alone have been disposed of, exclusively of other kinds, together with sheep, horses, hogs, wheat, seeds, &c. Steyning is a borough by prescription, under the authority of a constable, appointed at the court leet of the lord of the manor. It sends two members to parliament: the right of election, which has been frequently contested, is in the inhabitant householders paying scot and lot, about eighty in number: the constable is the returning officer. The members were formerly elected in conjunction with Bramber, but at present each town is entitled to return two representatives, although one part of Bramber is in the centre of Steyning.

The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chichester, rated in the king's books at £15, and in the patronage of Sir J. C. Honywood, Bart. The church, which is dedicated to St. Andrew, consists of the nave only of a larger cruciform structure, presenting beautiful specimens of the Norman style of architecture. The interior is magnificently enriched: four diagonally ornamented circular arches, surmounted, or terminated, each with a small round-headed window, form the south side of the nave, have, for their beauty and variety, been copied in the repairs of Arundel Castle; the side aisles are much and disproportionably lower. At the east end, where the transept is intersected, are clusters of columns, and arches for supporting a central tower: a lofty Norman arch leads into the chancel. The present tower on the west, of more modern date, is of flint and rubble stone, laid chequer-wise, with angular buttresses. The free school was founded and endowed, in 1614, by William Holland, a native and alderman of Chichester, who bequeathed for that purpose to trustees a garden and messuage, called "Brotherhood Hall," then used as a school-house, together with his manor of Festoes, &c., to pay from the proceeds of the latter £20 yearly to a schoolmaster, for the instruction of children of persons dwelling within Steyning and its liberty; the master not to board more than six pay-scholars: the income is £81 10. per annum, and ten boys receive a classical education. Brotherhood Hall is still standing, and most likely received its name from having been the hall of some guild, or fraternity, prior to the dissolution. It consists of a centre, with a large arched entrance and two wings, the roofs split into five divisions and pointed, with large square windows of the time of Henry VIII. No children have been elected to this foundation for some years. A National school is supported by voluntary contributions. John Pell, the mathematician, was educated here.

STIBBARD, a parish in the hundred of GALLOW, county of NORFOLK, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E. by S.) from Fakenham, containing 426 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, annexed to that of Colkerk, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £11. 13. 4. The church is dedicated to All Saints.

STIBBINGTON, a parish in the hundred of NORMAN-CROSS, county of HUNTINGDON, 1 mile (E. by S.) from Wansford, containing, with the hamlet of Sibson, 374 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Huntingdon, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £7. 13. $6\frac{1}{2}$, and in the patronage of the Duke of Bedford. The church is dedicated to St. John the Baptist.

STICKFORD, a parish in the western division of the soke of BOLINGBROKE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W.) from Spilsby, containing 343 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £6. 3. 6., endowed with £800 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Bishop of Lincoln. The church is dedicated to St. Helen. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

STICKNEY, a parish in the western division of the soke of BOLINGBROKE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by N.) from Bolingbroke, containing 763 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £13. 11. 3., and in the patronage of the Rev. R. Loxham. The church is dedicated to St. Luke. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. A grammar school was founded, in 1678, by William Lovell, who endowed it with land producing a liberal income to the master.

STIDD, or STEDE, an extra-parochial liberty, in the lower division of the hundred of BLACKBURN, county palatine of LANCASTER, 7 miles (N. N. W.) from Blackburn. The population is returned with Ribchester. Here are the ruins of an ancient chapel, in the early style of English architecture, endowed with £25 a year, to preserve which stipend, service has occasionally been performed within its walls since the Reformation, by the vicar of Ribchester.

STIFFKEY, a parish in the northern division of the hundred of GREENHOE, county of NORFOLK, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E.) from Wells, containing 350 inhabitants. The living comprises the united rectories of St. John and St. Mary, with the rectory of Morston annexed, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £25, and in the patronage of Marquis Townshend. The old hall, having been in a state of dilapidation for some years, is now used as a farm-house. It was built, in 1604, by Sir Nicholas Bacon, Knt., Lord Keeper of the Great Seal, and the west front, flanked by two embrasured towers, still remains. To the westward of the village is Warborough hill, on the summit of which is a circular camp.

STIFFORD, a parish in the hundred of CHAFFORD, county of ESSEX, $1\frac{3}{4}$ mile (N. by W.) from Gray's Thurrock, containing 206 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Essex, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £15, and in the patronage of the Master and Fellows of Pembroke College, Oxford. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

STILLINGFLEET, a parish partly in the ainsty of the city of YORK, partly in the liberty of St. PETER of YORK, but chiefly in the wapentake of OUZE and DERWENT, East riding of the county of YORK, comprising the townships of Acaster-Selby, Kelfield, and Stillingfleet with Moreby, and containing 878 inhabitants, of which number, 404 are in the township of Stillingfleet with Moreby, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. by W.) from York. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Cleveland, and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £9. 7. 6., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of York. The church, dedicated to St. Helen, is an ancient structure, exhibiting some portions in the Norman style; attached to it is a chapel, in which is a cross-legged figure in armour, of one of the ancient family of Moreby. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. Four poor children are instructed for an annuity of £1. 10., the bequest of the Rev. Mr. Turey.

STILLINGTON, a chapelry in the parish of RED-MARSHALL, south-western division of STOCKTON ward, county palatine of DURHAM, 8 miles (N. W. by W.) from Stockton upon Tees, containing 49 inhabitants.

STILLINGTON, a parish in the liberty of St. PETER of YORK, East riding, though locally in the wapentake of Bulmer, North riding of the county of YORK, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. S. E.) from Easingwold, containing 698 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the Prebendary of Stillington in the Cathedral Church of York, rated in the king's books at £4. 15. 5., and endowed with £200 royal bounty. The church is dedicated to St. Nicholas. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. A National school has been established in the village. The celebrated Laurence Sterne held this living, and resided at Sutton in the neighbourhood.

STILTON, a parish (formerly a market town) in the hundred of NORMAN-CROSS, county of HUNTINGDON, $12\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. W.) from Huntingdon, containing 710 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Huntingdon, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £11. 5. 10., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Lincoln. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. Stilton gives name to the famous cheese so called, great quantities of which are sold here, though it is made in Leicestershire, twenty miles off. There is a small charitable endowment for poor widows. The place takes its name from Stivecle, signifying stiff clay, according to Stukeley, and is situated upon the Roman road, Ermin-street; though formerly a market town, it has dwindled into comparative insignificance. There is a fine spring about a quarter of a mile from the town, at one period celebrated for the cure of ulcerated legs, which properties are said to have ceased; and to the south-east are the remains of an ancient circular encampment.

STINCHCOMBE, a parish in the upper division of the hundred of BERKELEY, county of GLOUCESTER, 2 miles (W. by N.) from Dursley, containing 432 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Gloucester, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Bishop of Gloucester. The church is dedicated to St. Cyr.

STINSFORD, a parish in the hundred of GEORGE, Dorchester division of the county of DORSET, $1\frac{1}{4}$ mile (E. N. E.) from Dorchester, containing 337 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Dorset, and diocese of Bristol, rated in the king's books at £12. 17. 1., and in the patronage of the Earl of Ilchester. The church is dedicated to St. Michael.

STIRCHLEY, a parish in the Wellington division of the hundred of BRADFORD (South), county of SALOP, 3 miles (W. by S.) from Shiftnall, containing 172 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Salop, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, rated in the king's books at £6. 5. 10., and in the patronage of John Oakeley, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. James. The Shropshire canal passes through the parish.

STIRTON, a joint township with Thorlby, in the parish of KILDWICK, eastern division of the wapentake of STAINCLIFFE and EWECROSS, West riding of the county of YORK, $1\frac{1}{4}$ mile (N. W.) from Skipton, containing, with Thorlby, 168 inhabitants.

STISTED, a parish in the hundred of HINCKFORD, county of ESSEX, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. N. E.) from Braintree, containing 790 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury, rated in the king's books at £22. The church is dedicated to All Saints.

STITHIANS, a parish in the hundred of KERRIER, county of CORNWALL, $4\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. W. by W.) from Penryn, containing 1688 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, with the perpetual curacy of Perran-Arworthal annexed, in the archdeaconry of Cornwall, and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £14. 0. 10., and in the patronage of the Earl of Falmouth. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

STITTENHAM, a township in the parish of SHERIFF-HUTTON, wapentake of BULMER, North riding of the county of YORK, $8\frac{1}{4}$ miles (W. S. W.) from New Malton, containing 81 inhabitants.

STIVICHALL, a parish in the county of the city of COVENTRY, $1\frac{3}{4}$ mile (S. by W.) from Coventry, containing 96 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Coventry, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, endowed with £400 private benefaction, £800 royal bounty, and £300 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of Francis Gregory, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. James.

STIXWOULD, a parish in the southern division of the wapentake of GARTREE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $6\frac{3}{4}$ miles (W. S. W.) from Horncastle, containing 214 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £7. 10., endowed with £400 royal bounty, and £200 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of Edmund Turnor, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. A convent of Cistercian nuns, in honour of the Blessed Virgin, was founded here, in the reign of Stephen, by the Countess Lucy, relict of Ranulph, first Earl of Chester, which at the dissolution possessed a revenue of £163. 1. 2.

STOBOROUGH, a liberty in the parish of the HOLY TRINITY, borough of WAREHAM, Blandford (South) division of the county of DORSET, $\frac{3}{4}$ of a mile (S.) from Wareham, containing 280 inhabitants. It was formerly governed by a mayor, chosen annually at Michaelmas; but the inhabitants declining to qualify themselves, when the Schism act came into operation, in 1714, the office no longer exists, but a bailiff is appointed in the same manner as the mayor was, viz., by a jury at the court held by the lord of the manor.

STOCK, a parish in the hundred of CHELMSFORD, county of ESSEX, 3 miles (N. N. E.) from Billericay, containing 610 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, with that of Ramsdon-Bellhouse annexed, in the archdeaconry of Essex, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £10, and in the patronage of John Unwin, Esq. The church is dedicated to All Saints.

STOCK, a hamlet in the parish of FLADBURY, middle division of the hundred of OSWALDSLOW, county of WORCESTER, $6\frac{3}{4}$ miles (E. S. E.) from Droitwich. The population is returned with the chapelry of Bradley.

STOCK-DENNIS, a tything in the parish and hundred of TINTINHULL, county of SOMERSET, containing 10 inhabitants. This was formerly a parish, the living of which was a rectory, valued in 1294 at £20, but the church having been destroyed, and the parish almost depopulated, it has long since lost its parochial rights.

STOCK-GAYLAND, a parish in the hundred of BROWNSHALL, Sturminster division of the county of DORSET, 7 miles (E. S. E.) from Sherborne, containing 63 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Dorset, and diocese of Bristol, rated in the king's books at £5. 7. 1. The Rev. H. F. Yeatman was patron in 1819.

STOCKBRIDGE, a borough, market town, and parish, having separate jurisdiction, though locally in the hundred of King's Sombourn, Andover division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 18 miles (N. by W.) from Southampton, and 66 (W. S. W.) from London, containing 715 inhabitants. This small town is situated on the great western road from London to Exeter, and consists of one long street, which is intersected at the west end by the river Test, and at the east by the Andover canal, over each of which is a bridge; that over the former was rebuilt in 1799, and is a handsome structure: five smaller streams cross the street in the intermediate space, with bridges over them: it is lighted at the expense of Earl Grosvenor, and watched by subscription, and the inhabitants are supplied with excellent water. On Houghton down, about two miles west of the town, was formerly a race-course; but a new one has been formed, immediately adjoining it, in the parishes of Wallop and Longstock, under Danebury hill, from the area and intrenchments of which the whole of it may be seen: a stand is being erected, which is also intended for the members of the Bibury Racing club, which is to be removed to Danebury down from Gloucestershire: races are held in June, and, for some years past, a plate has been given by Earl Grosvenor. The streams are particularly favourable for trout-fishing, the principal nobility and gentry of this and the adjoining counties meeting here three or four times a year, and spending several weeks in this favourite recreation during the season. The preparation of parchment and glue affords employment to a few persons. Some thousand bushels of peat ashes are annually disposed of to the neighbouring farmers for manure, that article being much used for fuel by the inhabitants, though they are also well supplied with coal by means of the canal. The market, on Thursday, is well attended, and a large and handsome market-room, adjoining the Grosvenor Arms, has been built, at the expense of Earl Grosvenor: there were formerly three fairs, of which one only is now held, on the 10th of July, which is one of the largest in the county for lambs, several thousands being annually sold.

Stockbridge is a borough by prescription, under a bailiff and a constable, who are elected annually by the jury, at the court leet of the manor, held by the steward on Easter-Wednesday, the constable for the year preceding being generally made bailiff for the following year: the jury are summoned by a serjeant at mace. Petty sessions are held monthly. The town hall, a neat edifice, is situated near the centre of the town, and was rebuilt in 1810, on the site of the previous structure, at an expense of £1500, defrayed by the inhabitants. It first sent representatives to parliament in the 1st of Elizabeth: the right of election is vested in the inhabitant householders paying scot and lot: the number of resident voters is about one hundred: the bailiff is the returning officer, and the influence of Earl Grosvenor is predominant. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the vicarage of King's Sombourn, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Winchester. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. There is a place of worship for Independents. About two miles and a half from the town is Danebury hill, a circular intrenchment, in good preservation, enclosing an extensive area, with very high ramparts. On the north and west are several barrows, one of which is named Canute's barrow. On the east, at the distance of about one mile and a half, is another circular intrenchment, with a high rampart, enclosing an area of about twenty acres, called Woolberry, on the east side of which is the representation of a white horse, cut, many years since, at the expense of W. P. Powlett, Esq., of Sombourn House. Robert, Earl of Gloucester, natural brother of the Empress Matilda, was taken prisoner in this town on his flight from Winchester: according to tradition, he took refuge in the church, after having effected the escape of the empress, who was conveyed thence in funeral procession through the besieging army, under the pretence of her being dead, but, having arrived at a certain distance, she mounted a horse, and reached Gloucester in safety.

STOCKBURY, a parish in the hundred of EYHORNE, lathe of AYLESFORD, county of KENT, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by S.) from Milton, containing 594 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Canterbury, rated in the king's books at £9. 11. 0 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Rochester. The church, dedicated to St. Mary Magdalene, is a spacious cruciform structure, in the early English style, the columns and arches of which, on the north side, are of Bethersdon marble, and peculiarly elegant. There are several streets of straggling houses in the parish, namely, Stockbury-street, Yelsted-street, South-street, North-dean, and Hill Green, an eminence commanding extensive views of the surrounding country, with the sea in the distance. A fair for toys, &c., is held on August 2nd. Mrs. Jane Bentley, in 1752, bequeathed an annuity of £2. 10. a year, for teaching three children of each sex, and £2 every fourth year to purchase bibles and prayer-books for their use. A dreadful tempest, attended with the most destructive effects, happened here in 1746.

STOCKELD, a township in the parish of SPOLFORTH, upper division of the wapentake of CLARO, West riding of the county of YORK, 2 miles (W.) from Wetherby, containing 69 inhabitants. On the margin of a lake, within this township, is a rock of a peculiar form, sixty-five feet in girth, and in height thirty, which probably gave name to the place, Stockheldt being the Dutch term for a misshapen figure of stone.

STOCKERSTON, a parish in the hundred of GARTREE, county of LEICESTER, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (W. S. W.) from Uppingham, containing 50 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Leicester, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £13, and in the patronage of the Master and Fellows of St. John's College, Cambridge. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. Near it, John Boyville, Esq., in 1465, obtained leave of Edward IV. to erect, in honour of the Blessed Virgin, an almshouse for a chaplain and three poor persons, and to settle lands upon them in mortmain, of the annual value of £10.

STOCKHAM, a township in the parish of RUNCORN, hundred of BUCKLOW, county palatine of CHESTER, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E.) from Frodsham, containing 52 inhabitants.

STOCKHILL, a joint township with Sandholme, in that part of the parish of ST. JOHN which is within the liberties of the borough of BEVERLEY, East riding of the county of YORK, $1\frac{3}{4}$ mile (N. E.) from Beverley, containing, with Sandholme, 48 inhabitants.

STOCKHILL, a joint township with Middleton, in that part of the parish of ILKLEY which is in the upper division of the wapentake of CLARO, West riding of the county of YORK, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W.) from Otley. The population is returned with Middleton.

STOCKINGFORD, a hamlet in the parish of NUNEATON, Atherstone division of the hundred of HEMLINGFORD, county of WARWICK, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (W.) from Nuneaton. The population is returned with the parish.

STOCKLAND, a parish forming a detached portion of the hundred of WHITCHURCH-CANONICORUM, Bridport division of the county of DORSET, though locally in the county of Devon, $6\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. E. by E.) from Honiton, containing 1147 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Dorset, and diocese of Bristol, rated in the king's books at £15. 13. 11 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Freeholders and Inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a large ancient structure. The parochial school is well supported by annual donations.

STOCKLAND-BRISTOL, a parish in the hundred of CANNINGTON, county of SOMERSET, 7 miles (N. W. by N.) from Bridg-water, containing 199 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Taunton, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £6. 9. 4., and in the patronage of the Mayor and Corporation of Bristol. The church has lately received an addition of one hundred and twenty sittings, of which eighty are free, the Incorporated Society for the enlargement of churches and chapels having granted £50 towards defraying the expense.

STOCKLEWATH-BOUND, a township in the parish of CASTLE-SOWERBY, LEATH ward, county of CUMBERLAND, 8 miles (S. by W.) from Carlisle, containing 213 inhabitants. Castle-Steads, a Roman camp, one hundred and eighty-eight yards long, and one hundred and sixty broad, is within this township: it has an inner and an outer rampart, and is placed in a triangular position with, and at an equal distance from, two other fortifications, called Whitestones and Stoneraise, the latter of which, it is supposed, was originally a burial-ground of the Druids, afterwards occupied by the Romans. About a mile from these are vestiges of a Druidical temple, where three stone coffins, containing human bones and other relics, have been found; and a little to the southward are fragments of a large rocking-stone, to which an avenue of stones seems to have once led.

STOCKLEY, a township in the parish of BRANCEPETH, north-western division of DARLINGTON ward, county palatine of DURHAM, $4\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. W. by W.) from Durham, containing 103 inhabitants.

STOCKLEY-ENGLISH, a parish in the western division of the hundred of BUDLEIGH, county of DEVON, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. by E.) from Crediton, containing 127 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £7, and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

STOCKLEY-POMEROY, a parish in the western division of the hundred of BUDLEIGH, county of DEVON, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. E. by E.) from Crediton, containing 226 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £15. 6. 8., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Exeter. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is partly of Norman architecture, having an enriched doorway in that style.

STOCKLINCH (MAGDALENE), a parish in the hundred of ABDICK and BULSTONE, county of SOMERSET, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N.E.) from Ilminster, containing 79 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Taunton, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £4. 4. 7., endowed with £200 private benefaction, £200 royal bounty, and £300 parliamentary grant. Robert Dent, Esq. and others were patrons in 1803. The church is dedicated to St. Mary Magdalene.

STOCKLINCH (OTTERSAY), a parish in the hundred of ABDICK and BULSTONE, county of SOMERSET, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E.) from Ilminster, containing 140 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Taunton, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £6. 9. 2., and in the patronage of Jefferys Allen, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

STOCKPORT, a parish in the hundred of MACCLESFIELD, county palatine of CHESTER, comprising the market town of Stockport, the chapelries of Disley, Marple, and Norbury, and the townships of Bramhall, Bredbury, Brinnington, Duckinfield, Hyde, Offer-ton, Romilly, Torkington, Wernith, and part of that of Etchells, and containing, according to the last census, 44,957 inhabitants (since greatly increased), of which number, 21,726 are in the town of Stockport, 39 miles (N. E. by E.) from Chester, and 179 (N. W. by N.) from London. This place, from its situation near a common centre from which several Roman roads diverged, is supposed to have been a Roman military station, and the fort to have occupied the summit of Castle hill, on the site of which the Saxons subsequently erected a baronial castle; from which, expressive of its situation in the woods, the town derived its name, Stokeport, or Stockport. Though not mentioned in Domesday-book, it is of considerable antiquity, and, till the Conquest, was a military station of some importance, most probably one of those laid waste by the Normans on their conquest of the island. In confirmation of this opinion may be adduced the name of an adjacent vill, called Portwood, also omitted in the survey, the first notice of it occurring in the records of the lands of the Baron of Dunham, under the name of Brinnington, or the burnt town. In 1173, the castle of Stokeport was held by Geoffrey de Costentyn, against Henry II., but whether in his own right, or not, is uncertain. The first baron appears, from the best authority, to have been Ranulph le Dapifer, the progenitor of the family of the De Spencers, from whom it passed to Robert de Stokeport, who, in the reign of Henry III., made the town a free borough. In 1260, it obtained the grant of an annual fair for seven days, commencing on the festival of St. Wilfrid, and a weekly market on Friday. It is not distinguished by many events of historical importance: during the parliamentary war, it was garrisoned for the parliament; but Prince Rupert advancing against it with a party of the royal troops, expelled the garrison, and took possession of it for the king; it was subsequently retaken by the parliamentarians, who retained it till the termination of the war. In 1745, Stockport was twice visited by the troops under the Pretender, on their approach to Derby, and in their retreat: on the latter occasion, the bridge over the Mersey was destroyed, and the rebels, with Prince Charles, were compelled to wade through the river, in order to effect their escape. Of the ancient castle not a vestige can be traced; a circular brick building was erected on the site, by the late Sir George Warren, as a hall for the sale of muslin, for which article of manufacture it was his wish to make this town a mart; but since the failure of that project, the building has been converted into an inn.

Stockport is romantically situated on elevated ground of irregular and precipitous ascent, on the south bank of the river Mersey, which here sweeps round its eastern and northern boundary, and is joined by the Tame: from the banks of the former the houses rise in successive tiers round the sides of the hill, from the base to the summit, and the numerous extensive factories elevated above each other, and spreading over the extent of the town, present, when lighted during the winter months, an appearance strikingly impressive. The most ancient part surrounds the church and market-place, on the high ground overlooking the Mersey, from the bank of which several steep streets, ascending the acclivity, lead into the market-place, whence various other streets diverge in different directions: many of the houses at the base of the hill have apartments excavated in the rock, which is of soft red sand-stone. The principal street, here called the Underbank, follows the direction of the old Roman road, leading southward to Buxton, and contains an ancient timber and brick mansion, formerly occupied by the family of Arderne of Harden and Alvanley, now a banking house. On the summit of the hill is a range of houses surrounding the market-place, and to the north of the church is the site of the ancient castle, and of the Roman military works. The town extends, on the south-east, a very great distance along the road to Chester; and on the north-east, by a bridge over the Mersey, to Portwood; on the west towards Cheadle, and towards Manchester by another bridge across the Mersey on the north, on which side of the river is the township of Heaton-Norris, forming part of this town, though in the county of Lancaster. To prevent the inconvenience and delay of travelling through the narrow and hilly part of the town, the trustees of the Manchester and Buxton turnpike-roads applied, in 1824, for an act of parliament to empower them to construct a new line of road from Heaton-Norris chapel, on the north side of the Mersey, to Bramhall-lane, at the southern extremity of the town, through an open and airy situation, affording eligible sites for the erection of houses, and an admirable opportunity for improving and extending the town. This important work was commenced in the same year, and completed under the superintendence of Mr. Thomas Broadhurst, general surveyor and architect for the trustees. Its especial object was, to cross the river without the necessity of descending from the high grounds on each side to the level of the vale of the Mersey, which has been accomplished by the construction of a noble bridge, of eleven arches, across the valley and the river, of which nine are on the Cheshire, and two on the Lancashire, side of the Mersey. The arch over the river has a span of more than ninety feet, and an elevation of forty feet above the water, and is built of hard white stone from the Saddleworth and Runcorn quarries; the two arches on the Lancashire side are of brick, each nine yards in span: those on the Cheshire side are carried over several of the streets, the thoroughfare being continued underneath, and others are closed up, forming commodious warehouses. From the last of them the road is carried for a considerable distance over an artificial embankment, formed of earth cut from the hill through which it passes, to its junction with the Warrington road, near which it again joins the old road at Heaviley, at the distance of three miles from its commencement. The whole expense of this work, which was completed in less than two years, was £40,000: the road throughout is twenty-four yards in width, and it was opened to the public in 1826, with a splendid procession, on the anniversary of the battle of Waterloo, in reference to which event it has been called the Wellington road. Between this and the Lancashire bridge, a foot bridge, termed Vernon bridge, over the Mersey, forming an intermediate and more direct communication between the town and the township of Heaton-Norris, has been built by subscription, the first stone having been laid in 1828.

The town is well paved, and lighted with gas, and the inhabitants are amply supplied with water. An act of parliament for incorporating a gas company, and another for the construction of water-works, were obtained in 1825, and in the following year an act for the general improvement of the town was passed, under which commissioners are appointed for that purpose. A handsome library and news-room was erected, in 1830, by Mr. W. Turner; this institution, which combines the two subscription libraries formerly established, is liberally supported by numerous proprietary subscribers: there is also a neat theatre, which is open for four months during the winter. The surrounding scenery is richly diversified with hill and dale, wood and water. The winding and throwing of silk, for which mills were first established here upon the Italian plan, have been nearly superseded by the introduction of the cotton manufacture, which has for some years been the staple trade of the town: of the former there are still some respectable factories; but the latter, since its introduction, has been rapidly increasing, and has attained, both for its extent and the perfection to which it has been brought, a very high degree of celebrity. There are within the town, including Heaton-Norris and Portwood, not less than fifty cotton factories, worked by sixty-five steam-engines, of the aggregate power of one thousand nine hundred and eighty horses, and by water-wheels; and in the manufacture of the different cottons and calicos, six thousand three hundred and fifty power-looms are constantly employed: the printing of calico is carried on to a very great extent, and there are many large establishments and dye-houses in the vicinity. Of these the most extensive, belonging to Messrs. Marsland and Son, which is also connected with the blue dye-works, has paid to Government duties in one year amounting to more than £100,000. The weaving of calico has spread over all the neighbouring villages, which in some instances have become virtually a part of the town. The manufacture of hats has been long established, and is carried on to a very considerable extent for the supply of the London, and many of the principal country, markets. The manufacture of a very superior kind of woollen cloth, equal in the smoothness of its texture and the silkiness of its surface to the best cloths of France, was established by the late Peter Marsland, Esq. with great success, and is deservedly encouraged: there are also several extensive thread manufactories. Connected with the various branches of manufacture, the construction of machinery affords employment to a great number of persons, and of several additional steam-engines, others again being used in grinding corn and for other purposes. The importance of Stockport, as a manufacturing town, has been materially promoted by the facility and the abundance of its supply of coal from Poynton, Worth, and Norbury, and the neighbouring districts on the line of the Manchester and Ashton canal, which joins the Peak Forest canal, a branch of the latter extending to this town, and affords also a direct communication with the principal towns in the kingdom. The market, on Friday, is more abundantly supplied with corn, meal, and cheese, than any other market in the county: in the higher part of the town (the Hillgate), extensive and convenient shambles, covering an area of two thousand square yards, have been built for the inhabitants of the vicinity. The fairs are March 4th and 25th, May 1st, and October 23rd, for cattle. Stockport was anciently incorporated: it still retains the office of mayor, which, however, is merely nominal, and it is now within the jurisdiction of the county magistrates, who sit daily at the court-house, and hold a petty session every alternate week. The police is regulated by commissioners appointed by act of parliament in 1826, for this and the general improvement of the town. Courts leet and baron are held twice in the year; at the Michaelmas court the mayor is chosen, by the jury, from four burgesses, nominated by the lord of the manor, who appoints two constables and other officers, to the number of fifty, who are sworn into office at an adjourned court. The churchwardens are appointed by the four lords of the manors of Bramhall, Bredbury, Brinnington, and Norbury, who from time immemorial have represented the parish in ecclesiastical matters. The ancient court baron, for the recovery of debts under 40s., has fallen into disuse; and a court for the recovery of debts not exceeding £5 has been established, by an act passed in the 46th of George III., the jurisdiction of which extends over the townships of Stockport and Brinnington, and the hamlets of Edgeley and Brinksway.

The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chester, rated in the king's books at £70. 6. 8., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Hon. Frances Maria Warren. The ancient church, dedicated to St. Mary, and supposed to have been erected in the fourteenth century, having been built of the soft red sand-stone in the neighbourhood, and fallen to decay, was, with the exception of the chancel, rebuilt, at an expense of £30,000, by act of parliament passed in the 50th of George III., and an extensive cemetery added to it. The present structure, situated on the eastern side of the market-place, is a handsome building in the later style of English architecture, with a lofty square tower, crowned with a pierced parapet and pinnacles; the pillars of the nave are carried up to the roof, producing an unusual, but impressive, effect from the loftiness of their elevation (an arrangement affording ample accommodation for galleries, which the increasing population of the parish rendered highly necessary). The chancel, which was in the decorated style of English architecture, has undergone considerable alteration, but still retains some of the ancient stone stalls, which are of elegant design, and the original window has been removed only within the last few years. Several of the ancient monuments have been preserved, and are distributed in various parts of the church. St. Peter's chapel, a neat edifice of brick, was erected in 1768, at the sole expense of William Wright, Esq., of Mottram, St. Andrew, to whom a handsome mural monument has been erected in the centre of the north aisle. The living is a perpetual curacy, endowed with £120 per annum, arising from lands in Mobberley, £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of Lawrence Wright, Esq. The church dedicated to St. Thomas, containing one thousand nine hundred and ninety-two sittings, of which nine hundred and seventy-two are free, was erected in 1825, by grant from the parliamentary commissioners, at an expense of £14,555. 13.: it is a handsome structure, in the Grecian style of architecture, with a tower surmounted by a cupola; the principal entrance is at the east end, through a noble portico of six lofty Ionic pillars: the interior is handsomely decorated; from the panelled pedestals that support the galleries rises a beautiful range of fluted Corinthian columns, sustaining the roof; corresponding with which is a series of pilasters of the same order, supporting a handsome entablature and cornice; the ceilings are panelled in large compartments; and above the altar, which occupies the whole central breadth, is a pediment, resting on Ionic pillars, and surmounted on the apex by a gilt cross. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the Hon. Frances Maria Warren. There are three places of worship for Independents, three for Wesleyan Methodists, and one each for the Society of Friends, Primitive Methodists, Methodists of the New Connexion, Unitarians, and Roman Catholics.

The free grammar school was founded, in 1482, by Sir Edmund Shaa, or Shaw, citizen and goldsmith of London, who endowed it with £10 per annum, to which several subsequent benefactions have been added. The Goldsmiths' Company, who are patrons, have erected, on the Wellington road, a handsome and extensive school-room, with a house for the master, in the later style of English architecture, at an expense of £4000, on a site of land comprising seven hundred and fifty square yards, presented for that purpose by the Hon. Frances Maria Warren, Lady Vernon. The National school was established in 1826, and is supported by subscription; the school-rooms are a handsome and spacious edifice of brick, fronted with stone, and well adapted to the purpose; there are two thousand five hundred children of both sexes instructed in this establishment. A school upon a very extensive and comprehensive plan, admitting children of all denominations, was established in 1805, and a very extensive building of brick, four stories high, was erected for its use, at an expense of £10,000, raised by subscription; there are four thousand children belonging to this institution, who are instructed by three hundred gratuitous teachers: attached to it are four branch schools, in the vicinity of the town, erected at an expense of £6000, in which one thousand five hundred children are taught, who cannot conveniently attend the parent establishment. These and some others, all supported by subscription, afford instruction to more than ten thousand children. Sunday schools are also supported in connexion with the established church and the several dissenting congregations. On the eastern side of the old churchyard are six almshouses, founded by an ancestor of the late Sir George Warren, in 1685, for six aged men. The allowance was augmented to £1. 5. by Humphrey Warren, Esq., who died in the middle of the last century, and the late Lady Bulkeley bequeathed £1200, vesting it in trustees, for the same purpose, and £1000 for the poor of Stockport. A dispensary was established, and a commodious building erected, by subscription, in 1797, to which nine fever wards were added in 1799: it is liberally supported, and affords relief to two thousand patients annually. There is a bequest by Mr. Wright, for apprenticing four children, besides some other bequests for distribution among the poor.

STOCKSFIELD-HALL, a township in the parish of BYWELL ST. ANDREW, eastern division of TINDALE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, 9 miles (E. by S.) from Hexham, containing 23 inhabitants. It is bounded on the north by the Tyne.

STOCKTON, a township in the parish of MALPAS, higher division of the hundred of BROXTON, county palatine of CHESTER, $1\frac{3}{4}$ mile (S. S. W.) from Malpas, containing 32 inhabitants.

STOCKTON, a parish in the hundred of CLAVERING, county of NORFOLK, 3 miles (N. W. by N.) from Beccles, containing 92 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £8. Philip Rundell, Esq. was patron in 1816. The church is dedicated to St. Michael.

STOCKTON, a parish in the Shiffnall division of the hundred of BRIMSTREE, county of SALOP, $4\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. by E.) from Bridgenorth, containing 500 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, with the perpetual curacy of Boningale, in the archdeaconry of Salop, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, rated in the king's books at £13. 11. 3. T. Whitmore, Esq. was patron in 1811. The church is dedicated to St. Chad.

STOCKTON, a parish in the Southam division of the hundred of KNIGHTLOW, county of WARWICK, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. E. by E.) from Southam, containing 344 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Coventry, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, rated in the king's books at £10. 7. 1., and in the patronage of the Warden and Fellows of New College, Oxford. The church is dedicated to St. Michael. The Warwick and Napton canal passes in the vicinity. The Rev. Charles Crane, in 1807, gave a house towards the support of a school, in which fifty children are instructed for £12 a year, arising from the church lands.

STOCKTON, a parish forming a detached portion of the hundred of ELSTUB and EVERLEY, county of WILTS, $6\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N.E.) from Hindon, containing 267 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £18. 2. 1., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Winchester. The church is dedicated to St. John the Baptist.

STOCKTON, a parish in the lower division of the hundred of DODDINGTREE, county of WORCESTER, $7\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S.W.) from Bewdley, containing 168 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Salop, and diocese of Hereford, rated in the king's books at £5. 13. $11\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Rev. T. Houlbrooke. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew. The river Teme runs through the parish.

STOCKTON on the FOREST, a parish partly within the liberty of ST. PETER of YORK, East riding, and partly in the wapentake of BULMER, North riding, of the county of YORK, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N.E.) from York, containing 357 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the Prebendary of Bugthorpe in the Cathedral Church of York, endowed with £600 royal bounty, and £200 parliamentary grant. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

Corporate Seal.

STOCKTON upon TEES, a parish in the south-western division of STOCKTON ward, county palatine of DURHAM, comprising the incorporated market town and port of Stockton upon Tees, and the townships of Hartburn and Preston upon Tees, and containing 5184 inhabitants, of which number, 5006 are in the town of Stockton upon Tees, 20 miles (S. S. E.) from Durham, and 244 (N. by W.) from London. This place is of considerable antiquity, and the discovery of a Roman coin, near the site of the castle, has led to the conjecture that it was a Roman station, but nothing farther to confirm this opinion is recorded: it formed a part of the possessions of the see of Durham at an early period, and the castle was occupied by Hugh de Pudsey, Bishop of that diocese in the reign of Richard I. His successor Philip de Poitou entertained King John here in 1214, and the charter granted by that monarch to the burgesses of Newcastle bears date at Stockton. It continued to be the occasional residence of the Bishops of Durham, and seems to have escaped in a great measure the commotions and border feuds which then agitated this part of England, with the exception of an inroad of the Scots in 1322, who plundered and burnt the town. At the period of the parliamentary war the castle was taken possession of by the royalists, some importance being attached to its commanding the old passage of the Tees; it was afterwards surrendered to the parliamentary forces, and in 1645 was garrisoned by the Scots but delivered by them to the English; in 1647 it was ordered by the parliament to be dismantled, and about five years afterwards its complete destruction was accomplished, no part of the structure now remaining, although the fosse may still be traced. The town is said to have felt the shock of an earthquake in 1780, and to have suffered severely from the overflowing of the river in 1771, 1783, and 1822. It is situated on an eminence on the northern bank of the Tees, and has advanced rapidly in prosperity since the middle of the seventeenth century, at which period it consisted principally of mean hovels, the better houses being constructed with "post and pile," and not one built of brick. It is now one of the cleanest and handsomest towns in the northern part of the kingdom: the main street, which is about half a mile in length, is broad, and contains some good houses, chiefly of brick, the few of stone having been erected with the materials of the dilapidated castle: from this street smaller ones branch off towards the river, and on the western side of the town a great number of new houses has been recently built: the streets are well paved, and lighted with gas, under the authority of an act of parliament passed in 1822. A handsome stone bridge crosses the river, which was commenced in 1764, and completed in 1769, at an expense of £8000, raised by subscription on shares; it has five elliptical arches, the span of the central arch being seventy-two feet, and its height from low water mark twenty-three: an annuity of £90 per annum, with £3 for every acre of land occupied by the road leading to the bridge, was directed, by the act of parliament under which it was constructed, to be paid to the Bishop of Durham, as a compensation for the tolls of the ferry which existed previously; land was purchased for the bishop in lieu of this annuity, and the debt having been paid off, the tolls ceased in 1820. The theatre, in Green Dragon yard, Finkle-street, is a neat building. A Mechanics' institute and library was established in 1824; it contains upwards of three hundred volumes, with apparatus for lecturing, and the members are increasing annually in number: there is also a subscription library and news-room. Races are held annually in August, a week after those of York, on the Carrs, on the opposite side of the river; and assemblies occasionally in a room in the town hall.

The situation of Stockton, on a river navigable ten miles above it, and within the same distance of the sea, affords it many commercial advantages, and the increased shipping, and amount of duties, evince the progressive extension of its mercantile interests. The port is a member of that of Newcastle upon Tyne; the dues are the property of the bishop, and are held on lease by the corporation, vessels from the cinque-ports being exempted from the payment of them. Ships of large size were formerly obliged to receive and unload their cargoes at Portrack, a mile down the river, or at Cargo-Fleet, or Cleveland Port, a mile lower on the Yorkshire side; but, in 1808, a company was incorporated by act of parliament, called the "Tees Navigation Company," and a canal was cut from Portrack to the town, capable of admitting vessels of three hundred tons' burden, which has greatly benefited the trade of the town, and amply repaid the shareholders: another act was recently obtained for the extension of this canal to Newport, a distance of nearly two miles. In 1815, this port was made a bonding-port for certain goods: its principal trade coastwise is with London, Hull, Leith, Sunderland, &c., and comprises the exportation of most articles of agricultural produce, linen and worsted yarn, and more particularly lead, of which many hundred tons, brought chiefly from Yorkshire and the borders of Durham and Northumberland, are annually shipped; it also forms the chief article of exportation in its foreign trade, which is with the Baltic, Holland, Hamburg, and the British and American colonies, whence it receives in return materials for ship-building, timber for other purposes, tallow, &c. Two shipping companies in the London, and two in the foreign, trade have been established. The principal branches of manufacture are those connected with the shipping, there being two ship-builders' yards, five manufactories for sail-cloth, two rope-walks, two iron-foundries, and a block and pump manufactory; there are also three breweries, some corn-mills, a mill for spinning yarn, and one for worsted. The fishery of the Tees was formerly a great source of prosperity to the town, but it has considerably declined; eastward of the bridge it belongs to the bishop, but is open to poor fishermen under certain regulations. A rail-road from Witton Park and other collieries, by Darlington, to this place, was constructed in 1825, and is productive of great advantage: by a recent act of parliament the line has been extended to Middlesbro', about four miles lower down the river, where commodious staiths have been erected. On the decline of Hartlepool, in 1680, Stockton was selected as the port for the establishment of the principal officers of the customs, and three legal, or free, quays were appointed. The custom-house, a plain commodious building, was erected, in 1730, by the corporation, on the site of the old building; the out-stations are Hartlepool and Seaton. The market, granted by Bishop Anthony Beck, in 1310, is on Wednesday and Saturday, and is well attended; and the shambles, erected in 1825, in front of the town hall, form a neat range of enclosed brick buildings: a handsome stone column, of the Doric order, thirty-three feet high, stands in the centre of the market-place. Fairs are held on the last Wednesday before the 13th of May, and the 23rd of November, which are general and statute fairs, and there are cattle fairs on the last Wednesday in every month.

The period at which Stockton was incorporated is uncertain, but is supposed to be about the commencement of the thirteenth century; the last charter was granted by Bishop Cosin, in 1666. The corporation consists of a mayor and an indefinite number of aldermen and burgesses, assisted by a recorder, steward of the borough court, town serjeant, and inferior officers. The mayor, who must be an admitted burgess, is chosen annually, at a court leet held on the first Tuesday after the 29th of September, by a majority of burgesses; there is no specific nomination of aldermen, but the burgesses who have served the office of mayor are so denominated. The mayor is a justice of the peace; his jurisdiction on the river, under the bishop, empowers him to levy a duty on all vessels entering the harbour;

it extends from the bar to the Wathstead, betwixt Aislaby and Middleton St. George. The town comprises two constablewicks, one called the Borough, including that part which is wholly freehold, and the other called the Town, consisting of that portion which is held by copy of court roll under the Bishop of Durham; they form, however, but one township, uniting in the maintenance of the poor. The bishop is lord of the borough, and holds courts leet and baron by his steward, who is generally the recorder; suits of trespass and debts under 40s. are cognizable by these courts, the jurisdiction of which is limited to the borough. A halmote court is also held twice a year, in which similar causes are tried as in the court baron. Petty sessions for Stockton ward are holden here. The municipal business is transacted in the town hall, built in 1735, and enlarged in 1744: it stands nearly in the centre of the main street, and is a handsome quadrangular brick building, surmounted by a light clock-tower and a spire, with a piazza stretching along the lower story on its north side; the upper part of the building contains a courtroom, an assembly-room, and other apartments, and the lower part is disposed in shops, &c.

Stockton was formerly a chapelry in the parish of Norton, from which it was separated by an act of parliament obtained in 1713, and constituted a distinct parish. The living is a vicarage not in charge, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Durham, and in the patronage of the Bishop of Durham. The ancient chapel, supposed to have been built about the year 1237, was taken down, and the building of the present church was completed in 1712, at an expense of about £1600: it is dedicated to St. Thomas, and is a neat and commodious edifice of brick, with a tower, eighty feet high, at the western end; in the vestry-room is a small library, chiefly of theological works. There are places of worship for Particular Baptists, the Society of Friends, Independents, Primitive and Wesleyan Methodists, Unitarians, and Roman Catholics, several of which have Sunday schools attached. A charity school was founded, in 1721, by subscription; and since that period has been supported by various benefactions, which have been chiefly laid out in the purchase of land, aided by voluntary contributions. The building, comprising separate school-rooms for the boys and the girls, and a dwelling-house for the master and the mistress, was erected in 1786, George Browne, Esq. having given £1000 for that purpose; twenty boys and twenty girls are clothed, and upwards of two hundred boys and sixty girls instructed, in this establishment. A school of industry for girls, instituted in 1803, is supported by voluntary subscription; it affords instruction to about forty children. In 1785, a room for a grammar school was erected by subscription; it possesses no endowment, but the corporation give a small annual stipend towards its support. Stockton, in conjunction with Norton, is entitled to a scholarship at Brasenose College, Oxford, with an endowment of £8 per annum, founded by Dr. Claymond, formerly vicar of Norton. The almshouses were originally erected about the year 1682, and were rebuilt in 1816, from a bequest of £3000 by George Browne, Esq.; they contain eighteen apartments, in which thirty-six poor persons are lodged, who are appointed by the overseers, and a committee for managing the affairs of the poor, and have a small endowment; there are some other trifling bequests for the benefit of the poor. The dispensary, founded in 1792, and revived in 1815, occupies a part of the workhouse. The savings' bank, established in 1815, is held in a room in the almshouses. There are several benefit societies in the town. Stockton is the birthplace of Joseph Ritson, a refined critic, and author of "Ancient Songs and Metrical Romances;" of Brass Crosby, Lord Mayor of London at the period of the commotions occasioned by the prosecution of Wilkes, who was committed to the Tower for refusing to allow a warrant, issued by the Speaker of the House of Commons, to be executed in the city; and of Joseph Reed, a dramatic poet.

STOCKWELL, a chapelry in the parish of LAMBETH, eastern division of the hundred of BRIXTON, county of SURREY, 3 miles (S. S. W.) from London. The population is returned with the parish. The streets are lighted with gas, and the inhabitants are supplied with water from the South London water-works. Here is an extensive ale brewery. The chapel, erected by certain proprietors, is dependent on the mother church at Lambeth, and has been repaired within the last few years. There are places of worship for Baptists and Independents. A National school, for one hundred and eighty boys and one hundred and twenty girls, is supported by voluntary contribution; the school-house was erected in 1818. This chapelry is within the jurisdiction of the court of requests held in the borough of Southwark, and within the limits of the new police act.

STOCKWITH (EAST), a hamlet in the parish of GAINSBOROUGH, wapentake of CORRINGHAM, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $3\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. N. W.) from Gainsborough, containing 224 inhabitants. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

STOCKWITH (WEST), a chapelry in the parish of MISTERTON, North-clay division of the wapentake of BASSETLAW, county of NOTTINGHAM, 4 miles (N. N. W.) from Gainsborough, containing 618 inhabitants. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. Ten poor children are instructed for £10 a year, paid by the trustee of the late William Huntington. It is within the peculiar jurisdiction of the manorial court of Gringley on the Hill.

STOCKWOOD, a parish in the liberty of SUTTON-POINTZ, Dorchester division, though locally in the Sherborne division, of the county of DORSET, 8 miles (S. S. W.) from Sherborne, containing 33 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Dean of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £5. 13. 4., and in the patronage of Thomas Bellamy, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Edwold.

STODDAY, a joint township with Ashton, in that part of the parish of LANCASTER which is in the hundred of LONSDALE, south of the sands, county palatine of LANCASTER, 2 miles (S. S. W.) from Lancaster. The population is returned with Ashton.

STODMARSH, a parish in the hundred of DOWNHAMFORD, lathe of ST. AUGUSTINE, county of KENT, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. N. E.) from Canterbury, containing 122 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Canterbury, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Archdeacon of Canterbury. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is in the early style of English architecture.

STODY, a parish in the hundred of HOLT, county of NORFOLK, 3 miles (S. W. by S.) from Holt, containing 125 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, with that of Hunworth united, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £6. 3. 4., and in the patronage of Lord Suffield. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. Three pounds per annum, the gift of a Mr. Symonds, is applied for teaching poor children.

STOGUMBER, a parish in the hundred of WIL-LITON and FREEMANNERS, county of SOMERSET, 7 miles (N. by E.) from Wiveliscombe, containing 1281 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Taunton, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £11. 18. $7\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Wells. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. There is a place of worship for Baptists. A market was formerly held on Saturday, and fairs are still held on May 6th and Aug. 1st. Roman coins have been discovered here.

STOGURSEY, or STOKE-COURCY, a parish in the hundred of CANNINGTON, county of SOMERSET, $8\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by W.) from Bridg-water, containing, with the hamlet of Fairfield, 1362 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, with the perpetual curacy of Lilstock annexed, in the archdeaconry of Taunton, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £16. 7. 6., and in the patronage of the Provost and Fellows of Eton College. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew. The parish is bounded on the north by the Bristol channel. Ten children are instructed for a rent-charge of £2, bequeathed by Mr. Daniel, in 1764. A Benedictine priory, a cell to the abbey of L'Onley in Normandy, was founded here in the reign of Henry II., which at the suppression was valued at £58 per annum, and granted by Henry VI. to Eton College.

STOKE, a township in the parish of ACTON, hundred of NANTWICH, county palatine of CHESTER, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W.) from Nantwich, containing 137 inhabitants. The Chester canal passes through the township.

STOKE, a parish in the higher division of the hundred of WIRRAL, county palatine of CHESTER, comprising the townships of Great Stanney, Little Stanney, and Stoke, and part of that of Whitby, and containing 461 inhabitants, of which number, 129 are in the township of Stoke, $4\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. by E.) from Chester. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chester, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of Sir H. E. Bunbury, Bart. The church, which is the burial-place of the Bunbury family, has a Norman doorway, some ancient wooden screen-work, and a small chapel attached to the south side of the chancel: it was partially rebuilt in 1827, and has received an addition of fifty-five free sittings, the Incorporated Society for the enlargement of churches and chapels having granted £50 towards defraying the expense. A school, founded here about 1670, by Sir Thomas Bunbury, Bart., is endowed with the interest of £200.

STOKE, a parish in the county of the city of COVENTRY, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (E.) from Coventry, containing 572 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage not in charge, with that of Sow, or Walsgrave, annexed, in the archdeaconry of Coventry, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, and in the patronage of the Crown. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, has lately received an addition of forty-four free sittings, the Incorporated Society for the enlargement of churches and chapels having granted £20 towards defraying the expense. The Coventry canal passes through the parish.

STOKE, a township in the parish of HOPE, hundred of HIGH PEAK, county of DERBY, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (N. E.) from Stoney-Middleton, containing 74 inhabitants. It is in the honour of Tutbury, duchy of Lancaster, and within the jurisdiction of a court of pleas held at Chapel en le Frith every third Tuesday, for the recovery of debts under 40s.

STOKE, a parish in the hundred of Hoo, lathe of AYLESFORD, county of KENT, 8 miles (N. E.) from Rochester, containing 350 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Rochester, rated in the king's books at £8. 11. 8., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty. B. Duppa, Esq. was patron in 1811. The church is dedicated to St. Peter.

The church is dedicated to St. Andrew. There is a place of worship for Independents. Ten poor children are taught for £14. 7. 8. a year, arising from a bequest by the Rev. Griffith Higgs, D.D., in 1659.

STOKE (SOUTH), a parish in the hundred of BATH-FORUM, county of SOMERSET, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S.) from Bath, containing 258 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, with the perpetual curacy of Moncton-Combe annexed, in the archdeaconry of Bath, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £7. 18. 9., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Rev. John Wood. The church is dedicated to St. James. The river Avon and the Radford canal run through the parish; the former is crossed by a bridge near its junction with the Kennet.

STOKE (SOUTH), a parish in the hundred of AVISFORD, rape of ARUNDEL, county of SUSSEX, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.N.E.) from Arundel, containing, with the tything of Offham, 115 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chichester, rated in the king's books at £11. 15. 10., and in the patronage of the Duke of Norfolk. The river Arun forms part of the boundary line of this parish.

STOKE upon TERN, a parish in the Drayton division of the hundred of BRADFORD (North), county of SALOP, comprising the townships of Eaton, Ollerton, Stoke, and Westanswick, and containing 985 inhabitants, of which number, 541 are in the township of Stoke, 6 miles (S.W. by S.) from Drayton in Hales. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Salop, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, rated in the king's books at £20, and in the patronage of — Corbet, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, contains a handsome monument of alabaster to the memory of Sir Reginald Corbet, a judge of the Common Pleas in the reign of Elizabeth. The ancient mansion-house of the Corbets has been demolished, and a farm-house erected upon its site.

STOKE upon TRENT, a parish in the northern division of the hundred of PIREHILL, county of STAFFORD, $1\frac{3}{4}$ mile (E.) from Newcastle under Line, comprising the chapelries of Hanley, Lane-End, and Shelton, with part of Cobridge and Etruria, the townships of Bagnall, Botteslaw, Bucknall, Eaves, Fenton-Calvert, Fenton-Vivian, Longton, Penkhul with Booth, and part of that of Seabridge, and the liberty of Clayton, and containing 29,233 inhabitants. This extensive parish, in common with others in this part of the county, owes its increase to the establishment of numerous potteries, for which its situation on the Trent renders it favourable, and for which it has been for many years particularly distinguished. The streets are paved with brick, and the town is lighted with gas from works established at Shelton, and amply supplied with water. The principal articles of manufacture are china and earthenware in all their various branches, of which there are many extensive factories, employing more than one thousand eight hundred men; of these, the principal is that of Messrs. Spode. On the banks of the Trent and Mersey canal, which passes through the parish, and is carried over the river Trent by an aqueduct near the village, are numerous wharfs and warehouses, from which great quantities of the manufactures are sent by boats daily to all parts of the kingdom. Connected with the works are several mills for the preparation of flint, of which a considerable quantity is used in the manufacture of the finer articles of china, material improvement having been effected by its introduction. The market is on Saturday, and is well supplied with provisions of every kind. The parish is within the jurisdiction of the county magistrates, and the police is under the superintendence of commissioners appointed by act of parliament in 1825, and amended in 1828, under the provisions of which also a chief bailiff is elected, who convenes and presides at all public meetings of the inhabitants.

This parish, at present including a district of more than seventeen square miles, was originally much more extensive, having at different times been subdivided and parts of it formed into independent parishes. In 1807, an act of parliament was obtained for separating from it the chapelries of Newcastle under Line, Burslem, Whitmore, Bucknall with Bagnall, and Norton on the Moors, and erecting them into distinct parishes. In 1818, the perpetual advowson of the remaining parish of Stoke upon Trent, comprising Botteslaw, Clayton, part of Cobridge, Etruria, Fenton-Calvert, Fenton-Vivian, Hanley, Longton with Lane-End, Penkhul with Booth, Seabridge, and Shelton, was purchased from the trustees under the will of the late Rev. William Robinson, by the present patron, John Tomlinson, of Cliff Ville, Esq., who in 1827 obtained an act of parliament authorising the sale, to the respective landowners, of all the tithes and rectorial dues belonging to the present rectory, and for endowing two new churches, which the parliamentary commissioners had agreed to build, one at Longton, and the other at Shelton, the livings to be distinct rectories; the same act contains also a provision for converting the chapelries of Lane-End and Hanley into distinct rectories.

The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Stafford, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, rated in the king's books, for the original parish, at £41. 0. 10., and in the patronage of J. Tomlinson, Esq. The old church, dedicated to St. Peter, a very ancient structure, having probably been built at the time of the Conquest, is mentioned in the taxation of Pope Nicholas, in 1291, at which time it was, with its several dependent chapels, valued at sixty marks. Being not only too small but also in a state of decay, a new church was erected in 1826, near the site of the former, which is intended to be pulled down, partly by subscription among the inhabitants (towards which £3000 was given by the Rev. John C. Woodhouse, Dean of Lichfield, and rector of the parish, and £500 by Josiah Spode, Esq.), by a parochial rate, and by contributions (spontaneously bestowed) arising from the extra labours of the workmen employed in the potteries: it is a handsome edifice in the later style of English architecture, containing one thousand six hundred sittings. In the chancel of the old church is a mural tablet and bust of the late Josiah Wedgwood, of Etruria, Esq. There are places of worship for Baptists, Independents, Wesleyan Methodists, and Methodists of the New Connexion. A National school, in which seven hundred children of both sexes are instructed, is supported by subscription, and there are also similar schools in the various hamlets. Dr. John Lightfoot, an eminent Hebrew scholar, and one of the principal persons employed in finally arranging the liturgy of the church of England, was born at Stoke, in 1602.

STOKE (WEST), a parish in the hundred of BOSHAM, rape of CHICHESTER, county of SUSSEX, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W.) from Chichester, containing 92 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chichester, rated in the king's books at £9. 11., and in the patronage of the Crown.

STOKE-ABBAS, a parish in the hundred of BEAMINSTER-FORUM and REDHONE, Bridport division of the county of DORSET, 2 miles (W. by S.) from Beaminster, containing 615 inhabitants. The living is

The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Northampton, and diocese of Peterborough, rated in the king's books at £13. 6. 8., and in the patronage of Lord Sondes. The church is dedicated to St. Botolph.

STOKE-ASH, a parish in the hundred of HARTISMERE, county of SUFFOLK, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W.) from Eye, containing 330 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Sudbury, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £11. 1. 3., and in the patronage of the Rev. John Ward. The church is dedicated to All Saints. There is a place of worship for Baptists. A branch of the river Waveney flows through the parish.

STOKE-BARDOLPH, a township in the parish of GEDLING, southern division of the wapentake of THURGARTON, county of NOTTINGHAM, 5 miles (E. N. E.) from Nottingham, containing 173 inhabitants.

STOKE-BLISS, a parish partly in the upper division of the hundred of DODDINGTREE, county of WORCESTER, but chiefly in the hundred of BROXASH, county of HEREFORD, $6\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N.) from Bromyard, containing, with the chapelry of Little Kyre, 303 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Hereford, rated in the king's books at £6. 16. 8., and in the patronage of the Crown.

STOKE-BRUERNE, a parish in the hundred of CLELEY, county of NORTHAMPTON, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. N. E.) from Towcester, containing, with the chapelry of Shuttlehanger, 732 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Northampton, and diocese of Peterborough, rated in the king's books at £30, and in the patronage of the Principal and Fellows of Brasenose College, Oxford. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. The Grand Junction canal passes through a tunnel two miles long, partly in this parish, and partly in that of Blisworth. Ten pounds a year, the bequest of Elizabeth Prowse, is applied in support of a day and a Sunday school chiefly maintained by the Dowager Lady Morant.

STOKE-CANNON, a parish in the hundred of WONFORD, county of DEVON, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. E.) from Exeter, containing 337 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Exeter. The church, dedicated to St. Mary Magdalene, has a curious ancient font. It was given, with the manor, by King Athelstan to the Cathedral of Exeter. The rivers Exe and Culm flow through the parish.

STOKE-CHARITY, a parish in the hundred of BUDDLESGATE, Fawley division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. by E.) from Whitchurch, containing 144 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Winchester, rated in the king's books at £15. 13. $6\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the President and Fellows of Corpus Christi College, Oxford. The church is dedicated to St. Michael. This parish is within the jurisdiction of the Cheyney Court held at Winchester every Thursday, for the recovery of debts to any amount.

STOKE-CLIMSLAND, a parish in the northern division of the hundred of EAST, county of CORNWALL, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.) from Callington, containing 1524 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Cornwall, and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £40, and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is a very spacious structure, with a fine tower. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. The parish is bounded on the north by the river Inney, which runs into the Tamar on the east, and near the romantic and picturesque rocks of Carthamartha. A fair for cattle is held on May 29th. There are two small sums, bequeathed by Ralph Tope, in 1718, and Joan Clarke, in 1783, in support of a school.

STOKE-D'ABERNON, a parish in the second division of the hundred of ELMBRIDGE, county of SURREY, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (S. E. by E.) from Cobham, containing, with the hamlet of Oakshot, 317 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Surrey, and diocese of Winchester, rated in the king's books at £13. 11. 3. — Smith, Esq. was patron in 1801. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

STOKE-DAMERALL, a parish in the hundred of ROBOROUGH, county of DEVON, adjoining the borough of Plymouth, containing 33,578 inhabitants. This parish, which includes Devonport and Morice Town, is one of the most extensive in the county: the village occupies an elevated site, and comprises several rows of excellent houses, a crescent, and some private mansions of more than ordinary beauty. Among the important public structures are, the immense reservoir of the Devonport Water Company, which supplies the government establishments and the neighbourhood in general; the military hospital, a spacious edifice of grey marble, erected in 1797, on the west side of Stonehouse creek, comprising four large square buildings, of similar size and form, connected by a piazza of forty-one arches; and the Blockhouse, occupying an eminence north of the village, surrounded by a fosse and drawbridge, commanding a most magnificent prospect: in addition to the military use of this fortress, it forms an admirable land-mark for ships entering the Sound. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Totness, and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £18. 18. 9., and in the patronage of Sir John St. Aubyn, Bart. The church is a spacious edifice, with a low square tower. A new church is in progress of erection by His Majesty's commissioners. There are places of worship for Independents, and Calvinistic and Wesleyan Methodists. On the eastern bank of the Hamoaze, in this parish, is Morice Town, so named from the former lord of the manor, now commonly called the New Passage, where a ferry was established in 1800, to communicate with Cornwall, at Torpoint, on the opposite shore; it consists of four principal streets. The sides of the harbour are lined with various wharfs, and in the town is a large establishment, called the Tamar Brewery. At a short distance is the powder magazine, which, although it covers an area of five acres, was insufficient in time of war, when line-of-battle ships were fitted up as floating magazines. A fair is held here on Whit-Monday. In the vicinity, at Cross hill, is a very extensive quarry of slate of a durable quality.

STOKE-DOYLE, a parish in the hundred of NAVISFORD, county of NORTHAMPTON, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (S. W. by S.) from Oundle, containing 141 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Northampton, and diocese of Peterborough, rated in the king's books at £20. 2. 11., and in the patronage of Sir J. Langham, Bart. The church is dedicated to St. Rumbald.

STOKE-EDITH, a parish in the hundred of RADLOW, county of HEREFORD, $7\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E.) from Hereford, containing, with the chapelry of Westhide, 495 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, with the perpetual curacy of Westhide annexed, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Hereford, rated in the king's books at £15, and in the patronage of Edward Foley, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. A school is supported by small annual donations. An ancient sword, some curious beads, several human skeletons with their faces downwards, and other relics, were found at Radlow Bush some years ago.

STOKE-FERRY, a market town and parish in the hundred of CLACKCLOSE, county of NORFOLK, 38 miles (W. by S.) from Norwich, and $88\frac{1}{2}$ (N. N. E.) from London, containing 703 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, endowed with £400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of G. Nightingale, Esq. The church, dedicated to All Saints, had formerly a square tower. This town is situated on the banks of the river Wissey, on the turnpike-road from London to Newmarket. In the reign of Henry III. it obtained a grant for holding a weekly market and an annual fair, which was confirmed by Henry VI.: the market was for a long period disused, but has been recently revived, and is now held on Friday, principally for corn; and the fair on December 6th, for cattle. The population has considerably increased since the last census, and now exceeds nine hundred persons, many of whom are employed in the very extensive malting establishments of Messrs. Whitbread and Co., whose superintendent has successfully adopted a superior plan for drying the malt, and has obtained a patent for his improvements. Twenty-five boys of Stoke-Ferry and Wretton are gratuitously educated in a school founded by the late James Bradfield, Esq.

STOKE-FLEMING, a parish in the hundred of COLERIDGE, county of DEVON, 2 miles (S. S. W.) from Dartmouth, containing 686 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Totness, and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £31. 6. $0\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of Charles Farwell, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, contains some interesting monuments.

STOKE-GABRIEL, a parish in the hundred of HAYTOR, county of DEVON, 4 miles (S. E. by E.) from Totness, containing 638 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Bishop of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £16. 11. $10\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of Sir Stafford Northcote, Bart., the Rev. John Templar, and the Rev. F. Belfield, alternately. The church contains an ancient wooden screen, and at Watton there was formerly a chantry chapel. There is a place of worship for Baptists. The navigable river Dart bounds the parish on the south. Capt. John Davies, the discoverer of Davies' Straits, was born here.

STOKE-GIFFORD, a parish in the upper division of the hundred of HENBURY, county of GLOUCESTER, 5 miles (N. N. E.) from Bristol, containing 376 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Bishop of Bristol, rated in the king's books at £6, endowed with £275 private benefaction, and £600 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Duke of Beaufort. The church is dedicated to St. Michael. John Silcocks, in 1741, bequeathed £200, directing the interest to be applied for teaching poor children of this parish and those of Almondsbury, Filton, and Winterborne; and a school is supported, partly by this charity, and partly by the Dowager Duchess of Beaufort, in which twelve boys and twenty-four girls are educated.

STOKE-GOLDING, a chapelry in the parish of HINCKLEY, hundred of SPARKENHOE, county of LEICESTER, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. W.) from Hinckley, containing 594 inhabitants. The chapel is dedicated to St. Margaret. The Ashby de la Zouch canal passes through the chapelry.

STOKE-GOLDINGTON, a parish in the hundred of NEWPORT, county of BUCKINGHAM, 4 miles (W. S. W.) from Olney, containing 818 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, united in 1736 to that of Gayhurst, in the archdeaconry of Buckingham, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £14. 6. 3. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. The river Ouse runs through the parish, in which lime and other stone abound. There was formerly a chapel at Eakley, which is said to have been once a distinct parish.

STOKE-HAMMOND, a parish in the hundred of NEWPORT, county of BUCKINGHAM, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S.) from Fenny-Stratford, containing 320 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Buckingham, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £19. 9. $4\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Lincoln. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. John Hillersdon, in 1707, founded a free school, and endowed it with land producing upwards of £11 per annum.

STOKE-LACY, a parish in the hundred of BROXASH, county of HEREFORD, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. W. by S.) from Bromyard, containing 358 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Hereford, rated in the king's books at £8, and in the patronage of the Rev. T. Apperley. The church is dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul. A court leet is held once in seven years. Limestone abounds in the neighbourhood. The late Archdeacon of Hereford bequeathed property for the erection and endowment of a free school for children of both sexes, which gift has recently been augmented by Mr. Brown, of Evington, with £20 per annum, and £50 towards the building of the school-house.

STOKE-LANE, or STOKE (ST. MICHAEL), a parish in the hundred of WHITESTONE, county of SOMERSET, 4 miles (N. E.) from Shepton-Mallet, containing 1000 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the vicarage of Doultling, in the archdeaconry of Wells, and diocese of Bath and Wells. The church is dedicated to St. Michael. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

STOKE-LYNE, a parish in the hundred of PLOUGHLEY, county of OXFORD, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. by W.) from Bi-cester, containing, with the hamlets of Bainton and Fewcot, 509 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford. John Coker, Esq. was patron in 1812. The church is dedicated to St. Peter.

STOKE-MANDEVILLE, a parish in the hundred of AYLESBURY, county of BUCKINGHAM, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. W. by W.) from Wendover, containing 402 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the vicarage of Bierton, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Dean and Chapter of Lincoln. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

STOKE-ORCHARD, a chapelry in the parish of BISHOP'S CLEEVE, hundred of CLEEVE, or BISHOP'S CLEEVE, county of GLOUCESTER, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. E.) from Tewkesbury, containing 239 inhabitants. It is within the peculiar jurisdiction of the Rector of Bishop's Cleeve.

The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Taunton, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £4. 10. 10., endowed with £400 private benefaction, and £600 royal bounty, and in the patronage of John Quick, Esq. The rusty appearance of the water among the hills indicates the probability of iron-ore lying beneath. Dunkry Beacon, a large and lofty mountain, is partly in the parishes of Cutcombe, Luccombe, Wotton-Courtney, Stoke-Pero, and Exford: its base is about twelve miles in circuit, and its height above the sea at high water is one thousand seven hundred and seventy feet, being the highest eminence in the western part of England: it serves as a distant landmark, but the summit is often obscured by clouds. On the top are many loose stones of large dimensions, and among them the ruins of three large fire-hearths, the remains of beacons. Collinson says, when the air is serene and clear, the line which bounds the horizon cannot be less than five hundred miles in circumference.

STOKE-POGES, a parish in the hundred of STOKE, county of BUCKINGHAM, 2 miles (N.) from Slough, containing, with a part of the town of Slough, 1073 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Buckingham, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £7. 17., and in the patronage of Lord F. G. Osborne. The church is dedicated to St. Giles. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. A fair is held here on Whit-Tuesday. A school, now conducted on the National system, was erected, at the expense of the parishioners, in 1798, and is supported by sundry bequests, including one by Lady Elizabeth Hatton, in 1645, the whole producing an annual income of about £30. "The hospital of Stoke-Poges," now containing a master, four poor men, and two women, was founded, in 1557, by Lord Hastings of Sloughborough, who endowed it with a rent-charge of about £53, for the support of a chantry priest and four bedesmen. It was originally built in Stoke park, and its noble founder, becoming one of its inmates, ended his days within its walls, and was buried in the chapel attached. The ancient building having been pulled down, in 1765, in pursuance of an act obtained by Mr. Penn, who also augmented the endowment, the hospital was refounded on its present site. The vicar is eligible STOKESAY, a parish in the hundred of MUNSLOW, county of SALOP, 7 miles (N. W.) from Ludlow, containing 564 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Salop, and diocese of Hereford, rated in the king's books at £4. 13. 4., and in the patronage of William Smith, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. John the Baptist. A small endowment in land, the gift of Roger Powell, in 1716, is applied in support of the poor, and for teaching children: there is also a bequest of £5 per annum, by Mary Pierce, in 1761, for purchasing books.

STOKESBY, a parish in the eastern division of the hundred of FLEGG, county of NORFOLK, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E.) from Acle, containing, with the parish of Herringby, 294 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, with that of Herringby united, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £13. 6. 8., and in the patronage of William Downes, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

STOKESLEY, a parish in the western division of the liberty of LANGBAURGH, North riding of the county of YORK, comprising the market town of Stokesley, and the townships of Great and Little Busby, Easby, and Newby, and containing 2290 inhabitants, of which number, 1897 are in the town of Stokesley, 41 miles (N. by W.) from York, and 242 (N. by W.) from London. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Cleveland, and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £30. 6. 10 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Archbishop of York. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. There are places of worship for Independents and Primitive and Wesleyan Methodists. This place is situated on the northern bank of the river Leven, in the centre of the fruitful tract called Allertonshire, which, at the distance of about five miles from the town, is bounded by the Cleveland hills, forming a vast and majestic amphitheatre. The houses are neatly built in a modern style, and are ranged chiefly in one spacious street, from east to west: the market, which is held on Saturday, is abundantly supplied with provisions. There are fairs for horses, cattle, &c., on the Saturdays before Trinity and Palm Sundays, and before Old Lammas-day. The trade is principally in linen; one of the mills for its manufacture is worked by a powerful steam-engine. A court leet is held annually, and the magistrates hold petty sessions every week. Two National schools, one for each sex, have been established, in connexion with the diocesan schools, and are partly supported by subscription, and partly by the dividends arising from £2780. 1. 5. five per cents., bequeathed, in 1805, by John Preston. The Society for the Promotion of Christian Knowledge, in 1818, established a depository of books in the vestry-room of the church, from which many thousand volumes have been since distributed.

STOKINGHAM, a parish in the hundred of COLERIDGE, county of DEVON, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E. by S.) from Kingsbridge, containing 1487 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, with the perpetual curacies of Chivelstone and Sherford annexed, in the archdeaconry of Totness, and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £48. 7. 8 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church, dedicated to St. Barnabas, has an ancient wooden screen. There is a place of worship for Independents.

STONALL (OVER), a chapelry in the parish of SHENSTONE, southern division of the hundred of OFFLOW, county of STAFFORD, 6 miles (S. W.) from Lichfield. The population is returned with the parish. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Stafford, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, endowed with £2000 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Vicar of Shenstone.

STONAR, a parish in the hundred of RINGSLOW, or Isle of THANET, lathe of ST. AUGUSTINE, county of KENT, $\frac{3}{4}$ of a mile (N. by E.) from Sandwich, containing 44 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Canterbury, rated in the king's books at £3. 6. 8., and in the patronage of the Crown, by lapse. The church has been destroyed. It is supposed that the site of this place, in the time of the Romans, was entirely covered with water. On the sea retiring from Ebbs-fleet, it became a common landing-place, at an early period, and, in consequence, a town and port of considerable importance, having, in 1090, so increased, that the seignior of Stonar was claimed by the citizens of London, as subject to that port. After sustaining repeated injuries from the Danes and other marauders, as well as from inundations of the sea, it began, about the reign of Richard II., to decay. Leland, who wrote in the time of Henry VIII., describes it as "sometime a pretty town," but then "having only the ruin of the church, which some people call Old Sandwich." Abundant remains of former dwellings may be traced, though at present there are not more than four or five inhabited houses. Salt-works are carried on near the site of the church, the produce of which serves all the purposes of bay salt.

STONDON (LOWER), a hamlet in that part of the parish of SHITLINGTON which is in the hundred of CLIFTON, county of BEDFORD, 3 miles (S. by E.) from Shefford, containing 135 inhabitants.

STONDON (UPPER), a parish in the hundred of CLIFTON, county of BEDFORD, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S.) from Shefford, containing 33 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Bedford, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £6. 6. 10 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Rev. Mr. Hull. The church is dedicated to All Saints.

STONDON-MASSEY, a parish in the hundred of ONGAR, county of ESSEX, 2 miles (E. S. E.) from Chip-ping-Ongar, containing 230 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Essex, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £13. 6. 8., and in the patronage of the Rev. J. Oldham. The church is dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul.

STONE, a parish in the hundred of AYLESBURY, county of BUCKINGHAM, 3 miles (W. S. W.) from Aylesbury, containing 716 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Buckingham, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £9, and in the patronage of the Rev. Sir G. Lee, Bart. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is partly in the Norman, and partly in the early English, style of architecture. There are two places of worship for Methodists. The parish is separated from Waddesdon by the river Thame. The manufacture of lace, which was formerly more considerable, is still carried on. A National school has been erected and is supported by the parishioners.

STONE, a chapelry in the parish and upper division of the hundred of BERKELEY, county of GLOUCESTER, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. by W.) from Berkeley. The population is returned with the tything of Ham. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Gloucester, endowed with £10 per annum private benefaction, £200 royal bounty, and £400 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Bishop of Gloucester, by lapse. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is partly in the early, and partly in the later, style of English architecture.

STONE, a parish in the hundred of OXNEY, lathe of SHEPWAY, county of KENT, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E.) from Ten-terden, containing 425 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Canterbury, rated in the king's books at £8. 14. $4\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Canterbury. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a spacious and handsome structure. The Grand Military canal passes through the parish. A fair is held here on Holy-Thurs-day. A free school is supported by voluntary contributions.

STONE, a parish in the southern division of the hundred of PIREHILL, county of STAFFORD, comprising the market town of Stone, and the liberties of Beech, Hilderstone, Kibblestone, and Normicott, and containing 7251 inhabitants, of which number, 2855 are in the town of Stone, 7 miles (N. by W.) from Stafford, and 141 (N. W. by N.) from London. The name is traditionally reported to be derived from a monumental heap of stones, which, according to the custom of the Saxons, had been placed over the bodies of the Princes Wulford and Rufinus, who were here slain by their father Wulfhere, King of Mercia, on account of their conversion to Christianity. The king himself becoming subsequently a convert, founded, in 670, a college of Secular canons, dedicating it to his children, in expiation of his crime, and to this establishment the town is supposed to owe its origin. The canons having been expelled, during the war with the Danes, the college fell into the possession of some nuns, who established themselves here. No mention is made of it in Domesday-book, but it appears to have been granted by Henry I. to Robert de Stafford, who displaced the nuns, and made it a cell to the monastery of Kenilworth, which it continued to be until 1260, when it became independent, with the exception of paying a small sum annually to that monastery, and an acknowledgment of its patronage; its revenue was valued, at the dissolution, at about £119. The town is situated on the high road from London to Liverpool, on the eastern bank of the river Trent, over which there is a bridge to Walton, and is paved, and well supplied with water: it consists chiefly of one long street, with several others branching off. The Trent and Mersey canal (commonly called the Grand Trunk) passes through the town, running parallel for several miles with the river; and the principal office of the Company of Proprietors of this prosperous and important navigation is here. Races are occasionally held in the neighbourhood, and assemblies sometimes in the town. The prevailing branch of manufacture is that of shoes, and there are two considerable breweries: on a stream which falls into the Trent are also several flour and flint mills. The market is on Tuesday: about fifty years since, a great deal of business in corn was transacted at it, but it has very much declined, owing probably to the rapidly increasing population, and additional markets, in the neighbouring potteries. The fairs are on the Tuesday after Mid-Lent, Shrove-Tuesday, Whit-Tuesday, August 5th, and the Tuesday next before the Feast of St. Michael, the two last only being much frequented. Petty sessions are held by the county magistrates every fortnight, and two constables are annually chosen at the court leet of the lord of the manor. The house of industry, erected about forty years since, is governed by the directors and guardians of the parish, under the authority of an act of parliament: the paupers manufacture their own clothing and a few other articles.

The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Stafford, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, endowed with £13 per annum private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Crown. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a modern structure in the later English style, with a square tower: the altar-piece is a fine painting, by Sir William Beechey, of St. Michael binding Satan. The old church fell down about the middle of the last century, occasioned, it is said, by the undermining of one of the pillars in digging a vault; in consequence of which, no interment is allowed to take place within the walls of the present edifice. There are places of worship for Independents and Wesleyan Methodists, and a Roman Catholic chapel at Aston Hall, in this parish. The free school was founded and endowed with a small annual income by the Rev. Thomas Alleyn, in 1558. The master and Fellows of Trinity College, Cambridge, are the trustees, and appoint the master: the school-house adjoins the churchyard, but there are no boys on the foundation. A bequest of £100 per annum to ten poor widows, charged on the Stone Park estate, is paid by Viscount Granville, though void by the mortmain act; there are other small charitable endowments. The remains of the abbey adjoin the churchyard, and consist of one perfect arch and rather extensive cloisters. On clearing away some of the rubbish, in 1828, a stone coffin was discovered under the foundation of one of the walls, with the remains enclosed, in a tolerably perfect state. In a field, now allotted to the poor, at a short distance from the town, the army under the Duke of Cumberland was encamped, in 1745, expecting the Pretender to pass that way, but he avoided them by taking the route by Leek. The late celebrated naval commander, Earl St. Vincent, was born at Meaford, in this parish, and is buried in the churchyard here.

STONE, a parish in the lower division of the hundred of HALFSHIRE, county of WORCESTER, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S.E. by E.) from Kidderminster, containing 464 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Worcester, rated in the king's books at £15, and in the patronage of the Crown. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, contains, over the northern door, some small remains of Norman architecture: this was formerly a chapelry in the parish of Chaddesley-Corbet. There are two spinning-mills in the parish. The free school, founded pursuant to the will of the Rev. Mr. Hill, B. D., is endowed with upwards of twenty acres of land, and a house for the master. This parish possesses a valuable charity of unknown origin, consisting of some land, near Stourbridge, containing clay for making fire-bricks, and producing, on an average, nearly £700 per annum, which, with the dividends of about £5000 three per cent. stock, is applied to repairing the church, and for charitable purposes.

STONE near DARTFORD, a parish in the hundred of AXTON, DARTFORD, and WILMINGTON, lathe of SUTTON at HONE, county of KENT, 2 miles (E. by N.) from Dartford, containing 514 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Rochester, rated in the king's books at £26. 10., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Rochester. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is much admired as being a peculiarly fine specimen of the later style of English architecture: it contains several ancient stalls, remarkable for the elegance of their workmanship and the delicacy of their pillars, which are of crown marble. The river Thames bounds the parish on the north. Stone Castle stands to the south of the high Dovor road, and is said to be one of the one hundred and fifteen castles which were not dismantled in accordance with an express stipulation to that effect between Stephen and Henry II. From the rents of the lands attached to it twenty-six sermons are annually preached, one on each Wednesday during summer, alternately at Gravesend and Dartford, agreeably to the will of Dr. Plume, founder of the Plumian Professorship at Cambridge.

STONE next FAVERSHAM, a parish in the hundred of FAVERSHAM, lathe of SCRAY, county of KENT, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by N.) from Faversham, containing 75 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Canterbury.

STONE-DELPH, a joint township with Almington, in that part of the parish of TAMWORTH which is in the Tamworth division of the hundred of HEMLINGFORD, county of WARWICK, 3 miles (S.E.) from Tamworth. The population is returned with Almington.

STONE-EASTON, a parish in the hundred of CHEWTON, county of SOMERSET, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.) from Shepton-Mallet, containing 419 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the vicarage of Chewton-Mendip, in the archdeaconry of Wells, and diocese of Bath and Wells.

STONEBECK (DOWN), a township in the parish of KIRKBY-MALZEARD, lower division of the wapentake of CLARO, West riding of the county of YORK, 14 miles (W. by S.) from Ripon, containing 568 inhabitants.

STONEBECK (UPPER), a township in the parish of KIRKBY-MALZEARD, lower division of the wapentake of CLARO, West riding of the county of YORK, 16 miles (W. by N.) from Ripon, containing 361 inhabitants.

STONEFERRY, a township in the parish of SUTTON, middle division of the wapentake of HOLDERNESS, East riding of the county of YORK, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (N. by E.) from Kingston upon Hull. The population is returned with the parish. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. Ann Waters, in 1720, bequeathed property for the erection and endowment of almshouses for seven widows, or poor old maids, who each receive £13 per annum: she also left an annuity of £5 to be paid to one of the almswomen for teaching ten poor girls.

STONEGRAVE, a parish in the wapentake of RYEDALE, North riding of the county of YORK, comprising the townships of East Ness, West Ness, East Newton with Laysthorpe, and Stonegrave, and containing 373 inhabitants, of which number, 177 are in the township of Stonegrave, $4\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. E. by S.) from Helmsley. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Cleveland, and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £33. 6. 8., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is partly in the decorated, and partly in the later, style of English architecture.

STONEHAM (NORTH), a parish in the hundred of MANSBRIDGE, Fawley division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, $4\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. N. E.) from Southampton, containing 750 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Winchester, rated in the king's books at £21. 9. 7., and in the patronage of John Fleming, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, contains the remains of the celebrated admiral, Lord Hawke, to whose memory there is a superb monument, composed of white and variegated marble, bearing the family arms and other appropriate emblems, with a sculptured representation of his victory over the French admiral, Conflans, in Quiberon bay. Two miles south of the village is an old mansion, formerly the residence of his lordship. The Itchen navigation passes through the parish, which is within the jurisdiction of the Cheyney court held at Winchester every Thursday, for the recovery of debts to any amount. Edmund Dummer, in 1720, gave £300 for erecting a school-house, and an annuity of £5, for which five boys are instructed.

STONEHAM (SOUTH), a parish partly in the county of the town of SOUTHAMPTON, but chiefly in the hundred of MANSBRIDGE, Fawley division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 3 miles (N. N. E.) from Southampton, containing, with the tythings of Allington, Barton, Bittern, Eastley, Pollick, Portswood, and Shamblehurst, and the extra-parochial liberty of Swathling, 2702 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Incumbent, rated in the king's books at £12, and in the patronage of the Rector of St. Mary's, Southampton. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. The river Itchen, which is navigable from Winchester to Northam, where it falls into Southampton water, passes through the parish, which is well situated for trade. At Wood Mills blocks and pumps were formerly manufactured for the supply of nearly the whole of the Royal Navy, but the factory was destroyed by fire a few years since, and there is now a flour-mill upon its site. At Bittern, in this parish, is a National school, supported by voluntary contributions, and attended by about sixty children. At Swathling is a mineral spring, said to be very efficacious for curing diseases of the eye. Stoneham is within the jurisdiction of the Cheyney court held at Winchester every Thursday, for the recovery of debts to any amount.

STONEHOUSE, a parish in the lower division of the hundred of WHITSTONE, county of GLOUCESTER, 4 miles (W.) from Stroud, containing 2126 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Gloucester, rated in the king's books at £22, and in the patronage of the Crown. The church, dedicated to St. Cyr, though much modernised, retains some portions in the Norman style, particularly the north door. There are places of worship for Independents and Wesleyan Methodists. The river Froome, and the Stroudwater canal, pass through the parish. Fairs are held on May 1st and October 11th. The clothing manufacture is carried on to a considerable extent. Limestone is obtained in the parish. Here is a mineral spring, near which a house was erected, some years since, for the accommodation of visitors, but it is not much resorted to. John Elliott and others, in 1774, subscribed £612. 10. for establishing a free school here, and another in the hamlet of Ebley: the income is £47 a year; the number of scholars at Stonehouse is twenty-eight, and at Ebley sixteen.

STONEHOUSE (EAST), a parish in the suburbs of the borough of PLYMOUTH, county of DEVON, containing 6043 inhabitants. This place, originally called Hipperston, was, in the reign of Henry III., the property of Joel de Stonehouse, from whom it derives its present name: it was then situated more southerly, but, after subsequent improvements and extension to the northward, the ancient buildings were allowed to fall into decay. It now consists of several streets, which are mostly paved, and lighted with gas; the houses are handsome and commodious; and the inhabitants are well supplied with water by means of pipes leading from the reservoir of the Devonport Water Company, situated in the parish of Stoke-Damerall, and from a fine stream brought into the town under an act passed in the 35th of Elizabeth. A communication was made with Devonport by means of a stone bridge across Stonehouse creek, erected at the joint expense of the Earl of Mount-Edgumbe and Sir John St. Aubyn: the tolls are let annually, at a public survey, and the income derived from them is very considerable. Higher up the creek, to the north, is a mill dam, affording a passage to Stoke. On the Devil's Point is the picturesque ruin of a blockhouse, erected in the time of Elizabeth; and over this old edifice is a modern battery, occupied by the Royal Marine Artillery. At a short distance is Eastern King's battery, commanding the mouth of the Hamoaze: there is also a fort for the protection of the creek. The three towns of Stonehouse, Plymouth, and Devonport, are brilliantly lighted from the gas-works in this parish: the gasometer presents a conspicuous object from the road from Plymouth to Devonport. The road to the ferry at New Passage passes through this place. At the quays in Stonehouse pool vessels unload their cargoes of wood and coal. In addition to the general business arising from the maritime relations of this town, and its naval and military establishments, are some large manufactories for varnish for the dock-yards, soap, and tallow. A customary market is held on Wednesday, in a neat and convenient building, in Edgumbe-street; and there are fairs on the first Wednesday in May, and the second Wednesday in September. The town is within the jurisdiction of the county magistrates, who hold their sessions in the town hall at Devonport. A manorial court leet and baron is held annually. Among the most important public establishments is the Royal Naval Hospital, for the reception of wounded seamen and marines, opened in 1762: it is situated on an eminence near the creek, and comprises ten buildings, each containing six wards, each ward affording accommodation for about twenty patients, with a chapel, store-room, operating-room, small-pox ward, and dispensary; they form an extensive quadrangle, ornamented on three sides with a piazza, and the entire edifice, with its spacious lawn, is said to occupy an area of twenty-four acres. In 1795, the government of this institution was vested in a post-captain; the other officers are, the first and second lieutenants, physician, surgeon, dispenser, chaplain, agent, and steward: the chapel is open to the public. The Royal Marine barracks, on the west shore of Mill bay, comprise a handsome range of buildings forming an oblong square, and are adapted for the accommodation of about one thousand men: the Long Room barracks, built chiefly of wood, will contain nine hundred. A new victualling establishment, now in progress of erection at Devil's Point, is designed upon a scale of great magnitude: among the more remarkable features of the work are, the removal of three hundred thousand cubic yards of limestone rock, and the erection of a granite sea-wall, one thousand five hundred feet in length, the foundation of which was laid by means of a diving bell. The water for the brewery is supplied, at the rate of three hundred and fifty tons per day, from the Plymouth Leat: it first runs into a reservoir capable of receiving two thousand tons, and is thence conveyed through iron pipes into a second basin, of six thousand tons. The Royal Military Hospital is situated on the opposite side of the creek, in the parish of Stoke-Damerall; its government is similar to that of the Naval Hospital. Stonehouse was formerly a chapelry in the parish of St. Andrew, Plymouth. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Totness, and diocese of Exeter, endowed with £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Vicar of St. Andrew's, Plymouth. The church, dedicated to St. George, was built in 1787, when the old chapel was taken down. A grant for a new church was made by the parliamentary commissioners, in 1828. There are places of worship for Baptists, Independents, Wesleyan Methodists, and Roman Catholics. A National school is supported by voluntary contributions.

STONELEIGH, a parish in the Kenilworth division of the hundred of KNIGHTLOW, county of WARWICK, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E. by N.) from Kenilworth, containing 1391 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Coventry, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, rated in the king's books at £6. 15. 5., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a large and venerable structure, with a square tower supported by strong buttresses, and surmounted by another of smaller size, crowned with pinnacles at the angles: between the chancel and the nave is a large Norman arch, richly ornamented, and supported by columns, whose shafts and capitals are greatly embellished; around the east end is a series of small Norman arches, which for many years were filled up with plaster, but have been restored. On the south side of the chancel is the mausoleum of the Leigh family, lately erected, the ceiling of which is beautifully worked in groined and ribbed arches; in the chancel is a splendid monument to the memory of Lady Alice Leigh, Duchess of Dudley; also a recumbent stone figure, found in an upright position in a wall, in digging the foundation of the mausoleum; it is supposed to be in memory of Geoffrey de Muschamp, Bishop of Coventry and Lichfield in the reign of John. The south aisle is separated from the nave by three pointed arches supported on octagonal pillars; on the south side is a fine Norman porch and doorway, the arch and pillars ornamented with flat and round mouldings: the ancient stone font is cylindrical, and is surrounded by figures of the twelve Apostles, in Norman arches. The free school was founded, in 1708, by Thomas, Lord Leigh, who bequeathed an annuity of £20 for its support; in 1731, the Hon. Ann Leigh gave £1000, as an augmentation of its funds: the annual income is £102; seventy boys and about fifty girls are educated in a large house, containing separate school-rooms, with apartments for the master and the mistress. Almshouses for five aged persons of each sex were founded and endowed, in 1575, by Dame Alice Leigh, whose descendants have for many years past doubled the endowment. The village is situated on the Sow, near its junction with the Avon, and consists of a few red cottages, interspersed with some modern detached houses. About one mile from it is Stoneleigh abbey, the seat of Chandos Leigh, Esq., originally founded by Henry II., in 1154, for Cistercian monks, and dedicated to the Virgin: at the dissolution, its revenue was valued at £178. 2. 5. In 1245, the abbey suffered greatly from fire, and was repaired by Robert de Hockele, the sixteenth abbot, about 1300, who built the gateway-tower, which is entire, and in the early decorated style, leading through a lofty archway to the lawn before the house: its situation on an extensive plain, rising gently from the Avon, is peculiarly beautiful. Many privileges were granted to the monks by Henry II., and amongst them power to hold a market and a fair. Of the ancient building, the remains are formed into cellars and domestic offices belonging to the modern elegant mansion, erected by the family of Leigh: among the specimens of ancient architecture are, groined arches, resting on massive pillars; and Norman arches and pillars, in the latest and most finished character of that style, which prevails generally throughout the lower part of the abbey. The rivers Avon and Sow run through the parish; the former nearly surrounds the abbey, and is crossed by a handsome stone bridge, and the latter passes through the village, where it is crossed by an ancient bridge of eight arches, about half a mile before its confluence with the Avon. On the south side of the river, opposite the church, is Motstow hill, where the tenantry used to assemble to render suit and service to the lord of the manor.

STONERAISE, a joint township with Brocklebank, in the parish of WESTWARD, ALLERDALE ward below Darwent, county of CUMBERLAND, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. S. E.) from Wigton. The population is returned with Brocklebank. In this township are the ruins of Old Carlisle, where was a considerable Roman city, supposed by Horsley to have been the Olenacum of the Notitia. The site is an oblong square, including an area of one hundred and seventy, by one hundred and twenty, yards, and was defended by a double vallum, with an entrance on each side. Both within and without the vallum foundations of numerous dwellings are discernible, and a very great number of altars, statues, coins, and inscriptions, has been found. The Roman road from Carlisle (Lugovallum) to Ellenborough (Volantium or Virosidum) passed by this station, and there are traces of various intrenchments in the vicinity.

STONESBY, a parish in the hundred of FRAMLAND, county of LEICESTER, 6 miles (N. E.) from Melton-Mowbray, containing 246 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Leicester, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £5. 0. 7 $\frac{1}{2}$., and endowed with £600 royal bounty. R. Norman, Esq. was patron in 1820. The church is dedicated to St. Peter.

STONESFIELD, a parish in the hundred of WOORTON, county of OXFORD, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (W.) from Woodstock, containing 498 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, rated in the king's books at £4. 19. 9 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Duke of Marlborough. The church is dedicated to St. James.

STONHAM (ASPEL), a parish in the hundred of BOSMERE and CLAYDON, county of SUFFOLK, 5 miles (N. E.) from Needham-Market, containing 633 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Suffolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £19. 10. 2 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of Sir W. Middleton, Bart. The church is dedicated to St. Lambert. In the churchyard is a fine, though mutilated, monument of alabaster to the memory of Anthony Wingfield, Esq., whose statue is represented in a recumbent posture, grasping a serpent. Here is a free school, founded about 1574, by the Rev. John Metcalf.

STONHAM (EARL), a parish in the hundred of BOSMERE and CLAYDON, county of SUFFOLK, 3 miles (N. N. E.) from Needham-Market, containing 677 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Suffolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £17. 2. 6., and in the patronage of the Master and Fellows of Pembroke College, Cambridge. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. There is a place of worship for Baptists. John Punchard, about 1475, gave a house for the use of a school, which George Reeve, in 1599, endowed with land, now producing more than £20 a year, for the education of poor children.

STONHAM (PARVA), a parish in the hundred of BOSMERE and CLAYDON, county of SUFFOLK, 4 miles (N. N. E.) from Needham-Market, containing 311 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Suffolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £9. 18. 11 $\frac{1}{2}$.. Miss Bevan was patroness in 1816. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

STONTON-WYVILLE, a parish in the hundred of GARTREE, county of LEICESTER, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by E.) from Market-Harborough, containing 122 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Leicester, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £9. 18. 11½., and in the patronage of the Earl of Cardigan. The church is dedicated to St. Denis.

STOODLEY, a parish in the hundred of WITHERIDGE, county of DEVON, 4 miles (S. W.) from Bampton, containing, with Highley St. Mary, 466 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Barnstaple, and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £20. 0. 2½., and in the patronage of N. Fazakerley, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Margaret. On Warbrightsleigh hill, in this parish, are the remains of an ancient beacon, said to have been erected by Edward II.

STOPHAM, a parish in the hundred of ROTHERBRIDGE, rape of ARUNDEL, county of SUSSEX, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. E. by E.) from Petworth, containing 139 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chichester, rated in the king's books at £5. 12. 8½., and in the patronage of Walter Smith, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is partly in the early, and partly in the decorated, style of English architecture. The river Rother flows through the parish, which is bounded on the east by the Avon.

STOPSLEY, a hamlet in the parish of LUTON, hundred of FLITT, county of BEDFORD, 2 miles (N. N. E.) from Luton, containing 477 inhabitants.

STORETON, a township in the parish of BEBBINGTON, lower division of the hundred of WIRRAL, county palatine of CHESTER, $4\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. by E.) from Great Neston, containing 220 inhabitants.

STORITHS, a joint township with Hazlewood, in that part of the parish of SKIPTON which is in the upper division of the wapentake of CLARO, West riding of the county of YORK, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E.) from Skipton. The population is returned with Hazlewood.

STORMORE, an extra-parochial liberty, in the hundred of GUTHLAXTON, county of LEICESTER. The population is returned with Westrill.

STORRINGTON, a parish in the hundred of WEST EASWRITH, rape of ARUNDEL, county of SUSSEX, $8\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E.) from Arundel, containing 901 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chichester, rated in the king's books at £18, and in the patronage of the Duke of Norfolk. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. A market was formerly held here on Wednesday, and there are still fairs on May 12th and November 11th. Jane Downer, in 1763, bequeathed a sum of money, now producing £15 a year, for the education of twenty children; and John Hooper, in 1806, left certain premises, now let for £28 per annum, for teaching ten; which bequests, aided by parochial subscriptions, are applied to the instruction of sixty boys and girls on the National system.

STORTFORD (BISHOP), a market town and parish (formerly a borough) in the hundred of BRAUGHIN, county of HERTFORD, 14 miles (E. N. E.) from Hertford, and 30 (N. N. E.) from London, containing, according to the last census, 3358 inhabitants, now about 4500. This place derives its name from its situation on each side of a ford on the river Stort, now crossed by two bridges, and its prefix from having been bestowed by William, soon after the Conquest, upon Maurice, Bishop of London, and his successors. In the reign of Stephen, the Empress Matilda negotiated to obtain, by exchange, from the Bishop of London, the castle erected here by William the Conqueror, and not succeeding, threatened its demolition; it, however, remained till the eighth year of King John's reign, who, exasperated at the bishop's promulgation of the pope's menace of laying the kingdom under an edict, razed it to the ground, seized the town into his own hands, incorporated the inhabitants, and granted them the elective franchise, which they continued to exercise only from the fourth of Edward II. till the reign of Edward III., when their privileges ceased. In the reign of Mary, this town became the scene of religious persecution, and Bishop Bonner made use of a prison formerly attached to the castle, for the confinement of convicted Protestants, of whom one was burnt on Goose Green adjoining. The town is situated on two gentle acclivities, that on the east being called Hockerhill, in a fertile valley on the banks of the river Stort, and consists principally of four streets, in the form of a cross, of which Windhill is the western, and Hockerill the eastern, extremity. The inhabitants are well supplied with water from springs. There are a public library, instituted in 1827, and several book societies. The trade consists chiefly in malt and other grain, of which considerable quantities are sent by the river, which is navigable, and a canal, on the banks of which are commodious wharfs and quays: a silk-mill affords employment to many of the inhabitants. The market, for which a very handsome and spacious market-house, or corn-exchange, was erected in 1828, is on Thursday: this building is of the Ionic order, and the area of a semicircular form, with a colonnade supported by iron pillars: the other parts contain an assembly and coffee rooms, and magistrates' chamber, on the first floor, and underneath a spacious hall where the corn-exchange is kept: at the southern extremity are the fish, flesh, poultry, and vegetable markets. It was constructed by means of £100 shares, which promise amply to repay the subscribers. Fairs are held annually on Holy Thursday, the Thursday after Trinity-Sunday, and on the 11th of October, for horses and cattle. Bishop-Stortford is within the jurisdiction of the county magistrates, who hold a petty session every fortnight, in a room at the corn-exchange, where the public business of the town is transacted.

The living is a vicarage, in the jurisdiction of the Commissary of Essex and Herts, concurrently with the Consistorial Court of the Bishop of London, rated in the king's books at £12, and in the patronage of the Precentor of St. Paul's Cathedral, London. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is an elegant and spacious structure, standing at the south-west angle of the town, with a fine tower surmounted by a lofty spire; it was built in the reign of Henry VI., and partly rebuilt in 1820, and contains many ancient and curious monuments, among which is that of Chas. Denny, grandson to Sir Anthony Denny, Knt., Privy Counsellor to Henry VIII. There are places of worship for Baptists, the Society of Friends, Independents, and Methodists, with which are connected Sunday schools, affording instruction to several hundred children. The free grammar school, in High-street, facing the church, was founded and endowed, in 1579, by Mrs. Margaret Dean, of London; an excellent library was presented to it by Thomas Leigh, Esq., and increased by the Rev. Thomas Leigh, vicar, and other benefactors, of which some part still remains preserved in the tower of the church: this school, in which Sir Henry Chauncey, a native of this town, and author of the History and Antiquities of Hertfordshire, was educated, has declined, nothing remaining of its former celebrity but the libraries of Leigh, the founder, and Tooke, the reviver of it on its former failure, together with the books presented by the boys on their leaving school. The National school, established in 1818, in which two hundred boys and one hundred girls are instructed, is supported by voluntary subscription. There are five newly-erected almshouses for poor people, which have been established with the proceeds of the sale of two almshouses in Potter-street, endowed by Mr. R. Pilston, in 1572; and several estates, producing about £200 per annum, are intended for the apprenticing of poor children, the relief of the poor, and the repair of the church; to which latter purpose about £60 per annum, arising from the revenue of a dissolved chantry, and some ancient guilds, formerly established here, is applied. There are some small remains of the castle, in the garden of which Roman coins have been found, and among them one of Marcus Aurelius Antoninus; and near the castle an ancient well, dedicated to St. Osyth, the water of which is esteemed beneficial in diseases of the eye. Bishop-Stortford was the birthplace of Hoole, the translator of Tasso.

STORWOOD, a township in that part of the parish of THORNTON which is in the Holme-Beacon division of the wapentake of HARTHILL, East riding of the county of YORK, $8\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. W. by W.) from Pocklington, containing 116 inhabitants.

STOTFOLD, a parish in the hundred of CLIFTON, county of BEDFORD, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W.) from Baldock, containing 693 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Bedford, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £5. 17. 1., endowed with £1200 private benefaction, £400 royal bounty, and £900 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Master and Fellows of Trinity College, Cambridge. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

STOTFORD, a township in that part of the parish of HOOTON-PAGNELL which is in the southern division of the wapentake of STRAFFORTH and TICKHILL, West riding of the county of YORK, 7 miles (N. W.) from Doncaster, containing 9 inhabitants.

STOTTESDEN, a parish partly in the hundred of WOLPHY, county of HEREFORD, but chiefly in the hundred of STOTTESDEN, county of SALOP, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N.) from Cleobury-Mortimer, containing, with the chapelry of Farlow, 1608 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Salop, and diocese of Hereford, rated in the king's books at £15. 10. 10. Sir W. Pulteney, Bart. was patron in 1822. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, was built by Robert de Belesme, Earl of Shrewsbury, who gave it to the abbey of that place.

STOUGHTON, a chapelry in the parish of THURNBY, hundred of GARTREE, county of LEICESTER, 4 miles (E. S. E.) from Leicester, containing 167 inhabitants. The chapel is dedicated to St. Mary.

STOUGHTON, a parish in the hundred of WESTBOURN and SINGLETON, rape of CHICHESTER, county of SUSSEX, 6 miles (N. W.) from Chichester, containing 519 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chichester, rated in the king's books at £8. 10., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Chichester. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is in the early style of English architecture.

STOULTON, a parish in the lower division of the hundred of OSWALDSLOW, county of WORCESTER, $3\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. W.) from Pershore, containing 380 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Worcester, endowed with £600 private benefaction, £200 royal bounty, and £900 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of Earl Somers. The church is dedicated to St. Edmund.

STOURBRIDGE, a chapelry in the parish of ST. ANDREW the LESS, or BARNWELL, hundred of FLENDISH, county of CAMBRIDGE, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (N. E. by N.) from Cambridge. This place is remarkable for its celebrated fair, one of the largest in the kingdom: it is held in a field to the eastward of Barnwell, and commences September 18th, on which day it is proclaimed by the vice-chancellor, doctors, and proctors of the University of Cambridge, and by the mayor and aldermen of that borough, and continues more than three weeks: the staple commodities exposed for sale are, leather, timber, cheese, hops, wool, cattle, and, on the 25th, horses. The hospital of St. Mary Magdalene, for lepers, was anciently at the disposal of the burgesses of Cambridge; but, about 1245, Hugh, Bishop of Ely, possessed the patronage of it, which was also enjoyed by his successors, till the suppression in 1497: its chapel, called St. Mary's chapel, has been converted into a barn.

STOURBRIDGE, a market town in that part of the parish of OLD SWINFORD which is in the lower division of the hundred of HALFSHIRE, county of WORCESTER, 21 miles (N. by E.) from Worcester, and 124 (N. W.) from London, containing 5090 inhabitants. This place, originally called Bedcote (the manor still retaining that name), derives its present appellation from the erection of a bridge, about the time of Henry VI., across the small river Stour, which here separates the counties of Worcester and Stafford. The surrounding country abounds with coal and iron stone, the mines of which appear, by a manuscript in the possession of the Lyttelton family, to have been worked so early as the reign of Edward III.; and the manufacture of glass was established here in 1557, about the period it was introduced into this country from Lorraine. The town consists chiefly of one long street, called the High-street, which is well flagged and Macadamized, and the lower part spacious, and containing some good houses; the upper is somewhat narrow. A subscription library was established in 1790: it contains about three thousand volumes, and is under the management of a president and a committee of twelve members: Parkes, the self-taught and celebrated chemist, was the first president. There are races on two days in the last week in August, during which the theatre, a small and mean looking building, is open; assemblies are held monthly during the season. The principal branches of trade and manufacture are those of glass, iron, and fire-bricks: the first is now carried on to a very great extent, there being twelve houses in the immediate neighbourhood in which the different varieties of flint, crown, bottle, and window glass, are manufactured, besides several cutting-mills. The flourishing state of this branch of manufacture is chiefly owing to the plentiful supply of fuel, and to the existence, near the town, of that superior species of clay used in making glass-house pots, crucibles, and fire-bricks, which is found here in large quantities, and furnishes a considerable article of export, by the name of "Stour-bridge fire clay:" the best lies at about one hundred and fifty feet below the surface of the earth, in strata of three or four feet thick, in the compass of about two hundred acres, near the town: large quantities of these fire-bricks are made, and sent to London and other places. The manufacture of iron forms also a most important branch of the trade of this town and neighbourhood, and the manufactories are generally on a most extensive scale, particularly that of Bradley and Co., which covers nearly four acres, and gives employment usually to about one thousand men: nearly every article in wrought or cast iron is here manufactured, comprehending in the foundry, steam-engines, boilers, gasometers, and every description of heavy machinery; the bearers, roofs, and fire-proof guards belonging to the custom-house, the new post office, and the recently erected portion of the British Museum, were cast here: in the wrought-iron manufactory are made merchant, wire, and sheet, iron; hoops; nail-rods; small rounds and squares, &c. In the other manufactories are made the various articles of hammered iron, besides scythes, spades, anvils and vices, plantation tools, chains, called gearing, &c.; but that branch of the trade which is carried on to the largest extent is the making of nails, which, in the town and neighbourhood, affords employment to some thousand men, women, and children. The trading interests are greatly benefited by a canal, which, running from the town to the Staffordshire and Worcestershire canal, connects it with that extensive line of inland navigation which spreads in various branches over the mining and manufacturing districts of the country, and also with the Severn, affording an opening for the transit of goods to all parts of the kingdom. The market, granted in 1486, by Henry VII., is on Friday, and is well attended: the market-house, recently erected, at an expense of about £15,000, is a handsome brick building; the principal front, looking towards the High-street, is stuccoed, in the Doric order of architecture: it consists of a spacious triangle, the sides being formed by an arcade, under which those who attend the market expose their goods for sale; the area in the centre is left open, and that portion of the front not occupied by the entrance is disposed in shops. The fairs are on the 29th of March and 8th of September; the former, which continues seven days, is a celebrated horse fair; the latter is for horses, horned cattle, sheep, and pedlary. A court of requests, for the recovery of debts under 40s., the jurisdiction of which extends over the parish of Old Swinford, is held here.

An episcopal chapel, dedicated to St. Thomas, was erected, by subscription among the inhabitants, under an act of parliament obtained about a century since; it is a neat brick edifice, with a square tower, and is not within the jurisdiction of the bishop; the inhabitants possess the power of appointing the minister. There are places of worship for Baptists, the Society of Friends, Independents, Wesleyan Methodists, Presbyterians, and Roman Catholics. The free grammar school was founded and endowed by letters patent, granted in 1553, by Edward VI.: it has a very considerable endowment, from which £150 is paid to the head-master, and £90 to the second master; the remainder, according to a special clause in the deed of endowment, after deducting for repairs of the school, &c., is divided between them; each master has also a good rent-free residence. The government is vested in eight of the principal inhabitants, who are a body corporate, and elect the masters. For several years there were no pupils on the foundation, but at present there are a few: attached to the school is a library of ancient books. Dr. Johnson received the rudiments of his education in this school until he was fifteen years of age; but the report of his having been a candidate for the head-mastership is void of truth. A National school was erected in 1815, and is supported by voluntary contributions; nearly three hundred children are instructed in it, and it is also used as a Sunday school. This town has the privilege of sending four boys to a noble institution called the Blue-coat hospital, founded by Thomas Foley, Esq.; and it also participates in the advantages of the endowments of John Wheeler and Henry Glover; but as these institutions are for the benefit of the parish generally, an account of them will be given under the article OLD SWINFORD. There are twenty-two friendly societies, composed of about one thousand five hundred members, who assemble on Whit-Monday, and proceed to church, with banners and music. In a sandy tract of ground to the westward of the town, numerous detached portions of jasper, porphyry, rock-salt, granite, chalcedony, agate, cornelian, and several varieties of marble, supposed to be diluvial remains, have been discovered.

STOURMOUTH, a parish in the hundred of BLEANGATE, lathe of ST. AUGUSTINE, county of KENT, 8 miles (E. N. E.) from Canterbury, containing 257 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Canterbury, rated in the king's books at £19, and in the patronage of the Bishop of Rochester. The church is dedicated to All Saints. The navigable river Stour passes through the parish.

STOURPAIN, a parish in the hundred of PIMPERNE, Blandford (North) division of the county of DORSET, 3 miles (N. W. by N.) from Blandford-Forum, containing 499 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £7. 18. 6½., and endowed with £200 parliamentary grant. The church is dedicated to the Holy Trinity. The river Stour is navigable on the west and south of this parish. Lacerton, formerly a distinct parish, was united, in 1431, to Stourpain, to which it is now only a hamlet. In a field, called Chapel Close, adjoining a farm-house, the foundations of its ancient church, which was dedicated to St. Andrew in 1331, may be still traced. On an eminence, called Hod-hill, are the remains of a Danish camp, in the form of the letter D, with a double rampart and fosse, which, on the north and south sides, are almost inaccessible: there are five entrances, and, within the area, which comprises several acres, are many circular trenches, four and five yards in diameter, and some round pits, contiguous to each other, supposed to have been so deep and numerous, at one period, as to be capable of concealing a large army.

STOURPORT, a market town in the chapelry of MITTON, parish of KIDDERMINSTER, lower division of the hundred of HALFSHIRE, county of WORCESTER, 4 miles (S. S. W.) from Kidderminster, and 130 (W. N. W.) from London. The population is returned with Mitton. This place, which is of modern date, owes its origin and present importance to the junction of the Staffordshire and Worcestershire canal with the river Severn, on the south side of the town, near the confluence of the Stour with that river. Its name is derived from its situation on the Stour, and from its being the port, or depôt, to which the manufactured articles and produce of the adjoining counties are brought for transmission to different commercial towns; a communication being opened between the Severn and the Trent by the Grand Trunk canal, and a connexion thus formed with most parts of the kingdom. Prior to the completion of the Staffordshire and Worcestershire canal, in 1770, the only part of the town in existence was a few cottages, forming a part of Lower Mitton. The trade principally arises from its being the depôt for goods intended for transmission by canal navigation, extensive basins having been formed, and warehouses erected, for their reception; and the conveyance of them is a source of lucrative employment to many of the inhabitants, as well as the building of boats and barges, for which docks have been constructed. A canal was projected from this town to Kington in Herefordshire, but it has only been executed as far as Mable. Stourport is a neat well-built town, principally of brick; the chief streets are paved, and it is partially lighted with gas. A subscription library was established in 1821, and there are two reading societies. The Severn is here crossed by a handsome iron bridge to Arelly-King's, consisting of one arch, one hundred and fifty feet in breadth, and fifty in height from the surface of the water, with several land-arches, to afford a more free course for the water, in case of a high flood. The former bridge, built in 1775, had three arches over the river, the centre arch being forty-eight feet wide, and the one on each side of it forty-two feet: this bridge having been swept away by a great quantity of ice brought down by the flood after a sudden thaw, the present handsome structure was erected. The market is held on Wednesday, in a market-house erected on a piece of ground purchased by the proprietors, who receive the tolls, and is beginning to assume considerable importance as a corn market. A great quantity of hops was at one time sold, but this branch of trade has very much declined. There are three fairs annually, on the 31st of March, 15th of September, and 18th of December. The inhabitants attend divine service at Mitton chapel. The Wesleyan Methodists have a place of worship, with a Sunday school attached, in which eighty boys and sixty girls are instructed. The Sunday school-rooms are spacious and airy, in which one hundred and twenty boys and girls receive education by means of voluntary contributions.

STOURTON, a parish partly in the hundred of NORTON-FERRIS, county of SOMERSET, but chiefly in the hundred of MERE, county of WILTS, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. N. W.) from Mere, containing, with the hamlet of Brook, otherwise Gasper, 658 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £17, and in the patronage of Sir R. C. Hoare, Bart. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is in the decorated and later styles of English architecture, and contains some monuments of the ancient family of Stourton. Henry Hoare, Esq., in 1724, gave £2000, to be applied for the erection of charity schools and workhouses within the parish. On the site of a large castle, built by John de Stourton, an elegant mansion, of Italian architecture, has been built by the Hoare family, the present proprietors of the estate; and on the highest point in this demesne is a lofty tower, erected, in 1772, by the late Henry Hoare, Esq., in honour of Alfred, the illustrious king of the West Saxons, who, on issuing from his retreat in the Isle of Athelney, is said to have fixed his standard on this ground, bearing the name of Kingsettle Hill: it lies directly on the line of his march to Petra Ecbrieta, now Brixton-Deverill, and Edington, where he fought the Danes, and gained a signal victory over them. Under a statue is the following inscription: "Alfred the Great, A. D. 879, on this summit erected his standard against the Danish invaders. To him we owe the origin of juries, and the creation of a naval force. Alfred, the light of a benighted age, was a philosopher and a Christian, the father of his people, and the founder of the English monarchy and liberties." In 656, Cenwallus, King of Wessex, defeated the Britons here, and drove them to Petherton, on the river Parret. In 1001, another obstinate battle was fought near the same spot, in which the Danes overthrew the Saxons under Cola and Edsigus. And again, in 1016, King Edmund here defeated the Danes under King Canute. At the south-western extremity of the parish, and partly in Somersetshire, is a wide boggy tract of country, part of which exhibits a great number of curious excavations, known by the name of Pen Pits: of these there are several thousand, of various forms and dimensions, scattered over a surface of nearly seven hundred acres. Stourton gives the title of baron to the family of Stourton, so created in 1448.

STOUTING, a parish in the hundred of STOUTING, lathe of SHEPWAY, county of KENT, 8 miles (E. by S.) from Ashford, containing 236 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Canterbury, rated in the king's books at £7. 17. 11., and in the patronage of the Rev. Jacob Geo. Wrench, D.C.L. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is principally in the early style of English architecture. The parish is bounded on the east by the Roman Stane-street, and a branch of the river Stour rises here. In the neighbourhood is a mound overgrown with wood, around which was a double moat, but the origin of it is now buried in obscurity. Some urns and Roman coins have been discovered in this parish.

STOVEN, a parish in the hundred of BLYTHING, county of SUFFOLK, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. E. by E.) from Halesworth, containing 116 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Suffolk, and diocese of Norwich, endowed with £600 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Rev. N. T. O. Leman. The church, dedicated to St. Margaret, contains a Norman arch of great beauty.

STOW, a hamlet in the parish of THRECKINGHAM, wapentake of AVELAND, parts of KESTEVEN, county of LINCOLN, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. E. by E.) from Falkingham. The population is returned with the parish.

STOW, a parish in the wapentake of WELL, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E.) from Gainsborough, containing, with the townships of Normanby, and Sturton with Bransby, 698 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Prebendary of Stow in Lindsey in the Cathedral Church of Lincoln, endowed with £1200 parliamentary grant, and in the alternate patronage of the Prebendaries of Corringham and Stow in the Cathedral Church of Lincoln. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a large structure, principally in the Norman style, with the upper part of the tower, the west window, and a few other portions, of later date. It was founded for Secular priests by Eadnoth, Bishop of Dorchester, its revenue having been greatly augmented by Earl Leofric and his Lady Godiva. After the Conquest these religious became Benedictine monks, under the government of an abbot, and Bishop Remigius obtained for them, from William Rufus, the then desolate abbey of Eynsham in Oxfordshire, where they soon afterwards settled. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. Courts leet and baron are annually held here, and a fair for horses and cattle on October 10th. A school for the education of poor children is endowed with about £12 per annum. Watling-street passes near this place, which is supposed to be the ancient Lidnacester of the Romans.

STOW, a parish in the hundred of PURSLOW, county of SALOP, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (N. E.) from Knighton, containing 157 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Salop, and diocese of Hereford, rated in the king's books at £4. 7. 4., endowed with £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. Michael. The river Team runs through the parish.

STOW (LONG), a parish in the hundred of LONG-STOW, county of CAMBRIDGE, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. S. E.) from Caxton, containing 191 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Ely, rated in the king's books at £4. 8. 4. The Rev. W. Wright was patron in 1820. An hospital for poor sisters was founded here, and dedicated to the Blessed Virgin, in the reign of Henry III., by Walter, the then vicar.

STOW (LONG), a parish in the hundred of LEIGHTONSTONE, county of HUNTINGDON, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by E.) from Kimbolton, containing, with Little Catwick, 194 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Huntingdon, and diocese of Lincoln, endowed with £4 per annum, and £120 private benefaction, and £400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Prebendary of Long-Stow in the Cathedral Church of Lincoln. The church is dedicated to St. Botolph.

STOW cum QUY, a parish in the hundred of STAINE, county of CAMBRIDGE, 5 miles (N. E.) from Cambridge, containing 378 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Ely, and in the patronage of the Bishop of Ely. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. There is a small endowed school. Jeremy Collier, the celebrated nonjuring divine, was born here in 1650; he died in 1730.

STOW (WEST), a parish in the hundred of BLACKBOURN, county of SUFFOLK, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. N. W.) from Bury-St. Edmund's, containing 179 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Sudbury, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £9. 17. $3\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of R. B. de Beauvoir, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

STOW on the WOLD, a market town and parish in the upper division of the hundred of SLAUGHTER, county of GLOUCESTER, 25 miles (E. by N.) from Gloucester, and 82 (W. N. W.) from London, containing, with the hamlets of Donnington and Mangersbury, 1731 inhabitants. This place was the scene of a battle between the royalists and the parliamentary forces in the great civil war, on which occasion the former were put to flight. In old records the town is called Stow St. Edward: it is situated on the summit of a steep elevation; the houses in general are of stone, but low, irregularly built, and of ancient appearance; and it is so indifferently supplied with fuel and water, and having no common field attached, that it is vulgarly remarked, it has only one of the four elements, namely air. There is little trade, except a small woollen business: it was formerly noted for the making of shoes. A charter for a market was procured, in the reign of Edward III., by the abbot of Evesham, then lord of the manor: it is held on Thursday; and fairs are held May 12th and October 24th, for the sale of hops, cheese, and sheep, of which last twenty thousand are said to have been sold at one fair. The inhabitants were incorporated by Henry VI., but at present the town is governed by two bailiffs, who are appointed annually at the manorial court leet. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Gloucester, rated in the king's books at £18, and in the patronage of the Rev. H. Hippley. The church, dedicated to St. Edward, is a spacious edifice, in the ancient English style, erected at different periods in the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries. The tower is conspicuous at a great distance. There is a place of worship for Baptists. A National school for children of both sexes is supported by voluntary contributions. An almshouse for nine poor persons, on the south side of the churchyard, was founded, in the 16th of Edward IV., under the will of William Chestre, and subsequent endowments have been given for the maintenance of its inmates. A park, house, and garden, named St. Margaret's chapel, at a place called Merke in this parish, constituted part of the estates of Charles I. and his queen. The Foss-way intersects the town and the northern part of the parish.

STOW-BARDOLPH, a parish in the hundred of CLACKCLOSE, county of NORFOLK, 2 miles (N. N. E.) from Downham-Market, containing 702 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, annexed to the rectory of Wimbotsham, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £6. 6. 8. The church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, has a large square tower with brick buttresses, and on the north side of the chancel is a chapel, the burial-place of the Hare family. South of the church are the remains of an ancient hermitage, of flint and brick, now converted into a farm-house. Near a bridge, which crosses the Ouse, about two miles from the village, a fair is held for horses and cows, on the eve of the festival of the Holy Trinity.

STOW-BEDON, a parish in the hundred of WAYLAND, county of NORFOLK, $4\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. E. by S.) from Watton, containing 290 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £4. 19. $4\frac{1}{2}$., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Rev. John Eade. The church, dedicated to St. Botolph, was anciently appropriated to Marham abbey, and had a guild founded in honour of the Virgin Mary.

STOW-LANGTOFT, a parish in the hundred of BLACKBOURN, county of SUFFOLK, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E.) from Ixworth, containing 172 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Sudbury, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £8. 7. 8 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of — Wilson, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. George.

STOW-MARIES, a parish in the hundred of DENGIE, county of ESSEX, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. by W.) from Maldon, containing 242 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Essex, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £18. 6. 8., and in the patronage of the Rev. G. H. Storie. The church is dedicated to St. Mary and St. Margaret. The parish is bounded on the south by Crouch river.

STOW-MARKET, a market town and parish in the hundred of Stow, county of SUFFOLK, 12 miles (N. W.) from Ipswich, and, by way of that town, through which the mail travels, 81 (N. E.) from London, but only 75 through Sudbury; containing 2252 inhabitants. The adjunct was given to the name to distinguish the town from Stow-Upland, in the adjoining parish. It is the most central town in the county, is situated at the confluence of three rivulets, which form the river Gippen, on the high road from Ipswich to Bury and Cambridge, and consists of several streets, which are, for the most part, regularly built and paved; many of the houses are handsome, especially those near the market-place; and the inhabitants are well supplied with water from land-springs and wells. The commercial interests of the town are essentially promoted by its locality, and have been much improved by making the Gippen navigable to Ipswich, which was effected under an act obtained in 1790. Over one of the tributary streams called the Orwell, which name the united streams assume from Ipswich to the sea at Harwich, is a bridge southward of the town. From the basin of this navigable river extends a pleasant walk, about a mile in length, chiefly through the hop plantations, with which the neighbourhood abounds. The trade consists chiefly in the making of malt, for which there are more than twenty houses, the manufacture being rapidly increasing; and the exportation of corn, to a considerable extent, to London, Hull, Liverpool, and other places: there are also small manufactories for rope, twine, and sacking, and an iron-foundry. At Combs, about two miles distant, is a considerable tannery. By means of the navigation to Ipswich, grain and malt are conveyed thither, the returns consisting of timber, deals, coal, and slate, for the supply of the central parts of the county. The market is on Thursday, for corn, cattle, and provisions: fairs are held on August 12th, for cattle; July 10th, a pleasure fair; and in the month of September, for hops, cheese, butter, and cattle. The meetings for the nomination of the county members, from its central situation, are generally held in this town; as is also a petty session of magistrates, every alternate Monday; and a manorial court baron is held annually.

The living is a discharged vicarage, with that of Stow-Upland annexed, in the archdeaconry of Sudbury, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £16. 15., and in the patronage of Miss Bevan. The church, which is dedicated to St. Peter and St. Mary, is a spacious and handsome edifice, in the centre of the town, partly in the decorated, and partly in the later, style of English architecture, with a square tower surmounted by a slender wooden spire of tasteful appearance, one hundred and twenty feet in height; the latter was erected from the proceeds of a legacy left for that purpose in the reign of Anne. There are places of worship for Baptists and Independents. Some small benefactions are applied in teaching poor children. A large National school, for an unlimited number of children of both sexes, and two Sunday schools, are supported by voluntary contributions. There are also several benevolent institutions for the relief of the poor, the funds arising from the same source. Abbots' hall, the seat of J. Rust, Esq., was formerly a cell, subordinate to the abbey of St. Osyth, in the county of Essex. In a stone pit near the entrance to the town, the tusks and bones of a species of elephant have been found. Here is a spring slightly impregnated with iron. Dr. Young, tutor to the poet Milton, was vicar of this parish from 1630 to 1655, and was interred here.

STOW-UPLAND, a parish in the hundred of Stow, county of SUFFOLK, adjoining Stow-Market, and containing 836 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, annexed to that of Stow-Market, in the archdeaconry of Sudbury, and diocese of Norwich.

STOW-WOOD, a parish in the hundred of BULLINGTON, county of OXFORD, 4 miles (N. E.) from Oxford, containing 26 inhabitants. There being no church here, the inhabitants resort to the adjoining parish church of Beckley.

STOWE, a parish in the hundred and county of BUCKINGHAM, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. W.) from Buckingham, containing, with the extra-parochial liberty of Luffield-Abbey, 478 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Buckingham, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £11. 14. 7., and in the patronage of the Duke of Buckingham. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. Stowe is celebrated for the princely mansion of the Duke of Buckingham. Hammond, the elegiac poet, died whilst on a visit here, in 1742.

STOWE, a parish in the wapentake of NESS, parts of KESTIVEN, county of LINCOLN, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (W. N. W.) from Market-Deeping, containing 21 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, with which that of Barholme was united, in 1772, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £4. 3. 9., endowed with £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Governors of Oakham and Uppingham schools. The church is dedicated to St. John the Baptist.

STOWE, a parish in the southern division of the hundred of PIREHILL, county of STAFFORD, 7 miles (N. E. by E.) from Stafford, containing 1185 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Stafford, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, endowed with £200 private benefaction, £400 royal bounty, and £1200 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of Earl Ferrers. The church is dedicated to St. John the Baptist. Fourteen children are educated for about £15 a year, arising from land given by an individual whose name is unknown.

STOWE-NINE-CHURCHES, a parish in the hundred of FAWSLEY, county of NORTHAMPTON, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles

(S. E. by E.) from Daventry, containing 395 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Northampton, and diocese of Peterborough, rated in the king's books at £18, and in the patronage of the Rev. J. L. Crawley. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, contains a magnificent monument, erected by Nicholas Stone, in 1617, to the memory of Elizabeth, fourth daughter of John, Lord Latimer. The Grand Junction canal passes through the parish, and the ancient Watling-street forms its eastern boundary. The Rev. Edward Williams bequeathed the interest of £120 for teaching poor children, and providing them with books.

STOWELL, a parish in the hundred of BRADLEY, county of GLOUCESTER, 2 miles (W. S. W.) from North Leach, containing 33 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, annexed, in 1660, to that of Hampnett, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Gloucester, rated in the king's books at £5. 17. 1. The church is dedicated to St. Leonard. Sir William Scott, Judge of the court of Admiralty, was created Baron Stowell, of Stowell Park, in 1821.

STOWELL, a parish in the hundred of HORETHORNE, county of SOMERSET, 5 miles (S. S. W.) from Wincanton, containing 102 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Wells, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £6. 15., and in the patronage of W. M. Dodington, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Mary Magdalene.

STOWELL, a tything in that part of the parish of OVERTON which is in the hundred of ELSTUB and EVERLEY, county of WILTS, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W. by S.) from Marlborough. The population is returned with the chapelry of Alton-Priors.

STOWER (EAST), a parish in the hundred of REDLANE, Sturminster division of the county of DORSET, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (W.) from Shaftesbury, containing 476 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the vicarage of Gillingham, in the archdeaconry of Dorset, and diocese of Bristol. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. Henry Fielding, Esq., the celebrated novelist, resided for some time on his estate in this parish.

STOWER (WEST), a parish in the hundred of REDLANE, Sturminster division of the county of DORSET, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (W.) from Shaftesbury, containing 205 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the vicarage of Gillingham, in the archdeaconry of Dorset, and diocese of Bristol. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. William Watson, M.D., author of some theological productions, was a native of this place, where, though he regularly graduated as a physician, and was distinguished for knowledge of his profession, he practised as a quack.

STOWER-PROVOST, a parish and liberty in the Sturminster division of the county of DORSET, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by S.) from Shaftesbury, containing 800 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, to which that of Todbere was annexed in 1746, in the archdeaconry of Dorset, and diocese of Bristol, rated in the king's books at £16. 4. $9\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Provost and Fellows of King's College, Cambridge. The church is dedicated to St. Michael. In the reign of William the Conqueror, a cell to the nunnery of St. Leger de Prætelis, or Preaux, in Normandy, was founded here, which at the suppression was granted to Eton College, and then to King's College, Cambridge. Rebecca Stonstreet, in 1785, bequeathed a small annuity for teaching poor children.

STOWERTON, a hamlet in the parish of WHICHFORD, Brails division of the hundred of KINGTON, county of WARWICK, 4 miles (S. E.) from Shipston upon Stour, containing 203 inhabitants.

STOWEY, a parish in the hundred of CHEW, county of SOMERSET, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. S. W.) from Pensford, containing 208 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Bath, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £6. 12., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Bath and Wells. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. Richard Jones, in 1688, bequeathed £3000 for teaching and apprenticing poor children of Stowey and Chew.

STOWEY (NETHER), a market town and parish in the hundred of WILLITON and FREEMANNERS, county of SOMERSET, 8 miles (W. N. W.) from Bridgwater, and 147 (W. by S.) from London, containing 773 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Consistorial Decanal Court of Wells, rated in the king's books at £5. 2. $8\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Dean and Canons of Windsor. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, stands at the entrance of the town from Bridgwater. There is a place of worship for Independents. This is a small clean town, situated on a tributary stream to the river Parret: it consists of three streets, nearly in the form of the letter Y, neither paved nor lighted, at the intersection of which stands a rudely built market-house, where a market is held on Saturday, but, from its proximity to Bridgwater, very little business is transacted: there is a fair for cattle on September 18th. A small manufacture of silk affords employment to some of the juvenile part of the population. A Sunday school, in which are one hundred and thirty children, is supported by means of sundry small bequests and subscriptions. On a hill, at the western extremity of the town, a castle is said formerly to have stood; but there is no other vestige of it than a small circular earthwork, which commands fine views of the channel and the Mendip hills. Courts leet and baron are held annually at Michaelmas, when constables and other officers are appointed.

STOWEY (OVER), a parish in the hundred of CANNINGTON, county of SOMERSET, 8 miles (W. by N.) from Bridgwater, containing 587 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Taunton, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £7. 1. $5\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Bath and Wells. The church is dedicated to St. Mary Magdalene. The manufacture of silk is here carried on to a small extent.

STOWFORD, a parish in the hundred of LIFTON, county of DEVON, $8\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E. by N.) from Launceston, containing 394 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Totness, and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £11. 12. 6. J. D. Harris, Esq. was patron in 1807. In the church is a marble statue of C. Harris, Esq., in the ancient Roman costume. Margaret Doyle, in 1777, bequeathed the interest of £200 to be applied for teaching poor children. Dr. John Prideaux, a learned divine, was born here in 1578; he died in 1650.

STOWICK, a tything in that part of the parish of HENBURY which is in the lower division of the hundred of HENBURY, county of GLOUCESTER, containing 467 inhabitants.

STRADBROOK, a parish in the hundred of HOXNE, county of SUFFOLK, $5\frac{3}{4}$ miles (E.) from Eye, containing 1400 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Suffolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £9. 18. $6\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Ely. The church is dedicated to All Saints. There is a place of worship for Baptists. William Greenling, in 1599, bequeathed land to be applied, among other purposes, in support of a school; and Michael Wentworth, in 1687, gave the town house for the use of the poor, with a chamber for a school. Mary Warner also, in 1746, left an annuity of £10 for teaching twelve children.

STRADISHALL, a parish in the hundred of RISBRIDGE, county of SUFFOLK, 5 miles (N. by W.) from Clare, containing 433 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Sudbury, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £9. 11. $0\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of John Vernon, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Margaret.

STRADSETT, a parish in the hundred of CLACKCLOSE, county of NORFOLK, $3\frac{3}{4}$ miles (E. N. E.) from Downham-Market, containing 176 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £3. 6. 8., and endowed with £200 royal bounty. T. P. Bagge, Esq. was patron in 1817. The church is dedicated to St. Mary: the east window exhibits the arms of the see of Ely, those of the East Angles, and of Bury and Dereham abbeys, in stained glass; the north window also is decorated with various emblems.

STRAGGLESTHORPE, a parish in the wapentake of LOVEDEN, parts of KESTIVEN, county of LINCOLN, 8 miles (E. by S.) from Newark, containing 100 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the rectory of Beckingham, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln. The church is dedicated to St. Michael.

STRAMSHALL, a township in the parish of UTTOXETER, southern division of the hundred of TOTMONSLOW, county of STAFFORD, $1\frac{3}{4}$ mile (N. N. W.) from Uttoxeter. The population is returned with the parish. St. Modwenna, on her arrival from Ireland, early in the ninth century, founded a nunnery here, and presided as abbess in it. Stramshall is in the honour of Tutbury, duchy of Lancaster, and within the jurisdiction of a court of pleas held at Tutbury every third Tuesday, for the recovery of debts under 40s.

STRANGHOW, a township in the parish of SKELTON, eastern division of the liberty of LANGBAURGH, North riding of the county of YORK, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E.) from Guilsbrough, containing 91 inhabitants.

STRANTON, a parish in the north-eastern division of STOCKTON ward, county palatine of DURHAM, comprising the townships of Brierton, Seaton-Carew, and Stranton, and containing 704 inhabitants, of which number, 371 are in the township of Stranton, 5 miles (S. W. by W.) from Hartlepool. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Durham, rated in the king's books at £17. 16. $0\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of Sir M. W. Ridley, Bart. The church, dedicated to All Saints, exhibits specimens of various styles of architecture. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. A great quantity of limestone is here quarried and burnt into lime. The village is situated on the south side of Hartlepool harbour: a school was erected by subscription in 1777, before which period the north porch of the church was used as a school-room. An immense quantity of human bones was discovered in draining a morass bordering on the Slake, supposed to have been those of the Scots who fell at the siege of Hartlepool, in 1644.

STRATFIELD-MORTIMER, a parish partly in the hundred of HOLDSHOTT, Basingstoke division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, but chiefly in the hundred of THEALE, county of BERKS, 7 miles (S. W. by S.) from Reading, containing, with the tythings of West Mortimer and Wokefield, 1092 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Berks, and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £8. 19. $4\frac{1}{2}$., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Provost and Fellows of Eton College. The church is dedicated to St. Mary, and in the east window is a portrait of William of Wykeham, in stained glass. There is a place of worship for Independents. Fairs are held on April 27th and November 6th.

STRATFIELD-SAYE, a parish partly in the hundred of READING, county of BERKS, but chiefly in the hundred of HOLDSHOTT, Basingstoke division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, $7\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. E. by N.) from Basingstoke, containing, with the tything of Beech-Hill, 769 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Winchester, rated in the king's books at £24. 13., and in the patronage of the Duke of Wellington. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. Lora Pitt, and others, in 1739, erected a school-house, and endowed it with £400, now producing an annual income of about £18. 18., for which thirty-six children are instructed. There is also an annuity of £5, the bequest of James Christmas, for the education and relief of the poor. A Benedictine priory, in honour of St. Leonard, was founded here, in 1170, by Nicholas de Stotewile, as a cell to the abbey of Vallemont in Normandy, and at the suppression was granted to Eton College: it stood in that part of the parish which is in Berkshire.

STRATFIELD-TURGIS, a parish in the hundred of HOLDSHOTT, Basingstoke division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E. by N.) from Basingstoke, containing 238 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Winchester, rated in the king's books at £6. 10. $2\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Duke of Wellington. The church is dedicated to All Saints.

STRATFORD (ST. ANDREW), a parish in the hundred of PLOMESGATE, county of SUFFOLK, 3 miles (S. W.) from Saxmundham, containing 213 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Suffolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £5, endowed with £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the King, as Duke of Lancaster.

STRATFORD (ST. ANTHONY), a parish in the hundred of CAWDEN and CADWORTH, county of WILTS, 4 miles (S. W. by W.) from Salisbury, containing 148 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £12, and in the patronage of the President and Fellows of Corpus Christi College, Oxford. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

habitants. This place, originally called Streat-ford and Stretford, derived its name from its situation on the great north road, and from a Saxon ford on the river Avon, at the entrance to the town. It was a place of considerable importance prior to the Conquest, and was distinguished for its monastery, founded, in the reign of Ethelred, on or near the site of the present church. In 1197, Richard I. granted the inhabitants a weekly market; and, during the succeeding reigns, various other privileges were conferred upon the town. In the 36th and 37th of Elizabeth it suffered materially from accidental fires, which destroyed the greater part of it; and again, in 1614, it experienced a similar calamity. In 1588, both ends of the bridge over the Avon were carried away by a flood that inundated the lower part of the town. During the parliamentary war, a party of royalists stationed here was driven out by a superior force of parliamentarians, under the command of Lord Brooke, in 1642; but the inhabitants still maintained their adherence to the royal cause, and, in the following year, Henrietta Maria, queen of Charles I., at the head of three thousand infantry, one thousand five hundred cavalry, and with a train of artillery, and one hundred and fifty wagons, advanced to the town, where she was met by Prince Rupert; and, after remaining for some days at New Place, the residence of Shakspeare, where she was hospitably entertained by the family, proceeded to Kington, to meet the king, whom she accompanied to Oxford. The parliamentarians, having subsequently obtained possession of the town, demolished one of the arches of the bridge, over the deepest part of the river, to prevent the approach of the royalists.

The town is beautifully situated on the south-west border of the county, on an eminence rising gently from the west bank of the Avon, which, here expanding, winds round its base. The entrance from the London road is over a handsome stone bridge of fourteen pointed arches, originally, with the causeway, three hundred and seventy-six yards in length, defended on each side by a stone parapet, and having on the north side a foot-path, with an iron palisade, supported by brackets of iron, resting on the piers. This bridge was built by Sir Hugh Clopton, in the reign of Henry VII., and widened by act of parliament in 1814. Nearly parallel with it is another of nine cycloidal arches, built of brick, and exclusively used as a rail-road to the wharfs at this extremity of the town. At the southern termination of the town, over a branch of the river, which has been diverted to form a mill dam, is a foot bridge of wood, resting upon strong piers of stone; from the hill beyond which is a fine view of the town, the church, the surrounding scenery, and the distant woods. The town consists of several spacious streets, intersecting each other, some at right angles, and others crossing obliquely: the houses in that part which is called the Old Town, though rather of ancient appearance, are commodious and well built, occasionally interspersed with modern buildings of large dimensions and handsome appearance, and in some of the streets are smaller houses of frame-work timber and plaster; among these, part of the ancient house in which Shakspeare was born is still preserved in its antique state, and is an object of much interest. The house in which he lived in retirement, for a few years previously to his decease, was originally the mansion of the Clop-ton family, and was purchased by the bard, who, after repairing and improving it, called it "New Place:" it has been taken down by a late proprietor, who also cut down the mulberry tree planted by Shakspeare in the gardens. The town is partially paved, and lighted with oil by lamps adapted to the future introduction of gas, and the inhabitants are amply supplied with water from pumps attached to their houses. The public library and reading-rooms are supported by subscription; the Shaksperian library, also supported by private subscription, was established in 1810, and is a permanent and useful institution. The theatre is a neat building of brick, within the precincts of Shakspeare's garden, and is internally well arranged and elegantly fitted up; the exterior is decorated with a portico, and when completed according to the original plan, will be an ornament to the town; it is generally open for three months in the season, and assemblies are held occasionally, during the winter, at the town hall. To the south of the town is a race-course, where races formerly took place, and were in general well attended; but since 1786 they have been discontinued. A jubilee, in honour of Shakspeare, was instituted by Garrick, in the year 1769, when the town hall, which had been recently rebuilt, was dedicated to the poet; and his statue, finely sculptured, and presented to the town by Garrick, at the close of the ceremony, was placed in a niche at the north end of the building; this festival has been recently revived, and is celebrated every third year. The environs, abounding with diversified scenery and objects of considerable interest, afford many beautiful walks; and the salubrity of the air, and its central situation in a neighbourhood enlivened with the elegant villas of respectable families, and the noble mansions of the wealthy, make it eligible as a place of residence. There is not much trade carried on, the inhabitants being principally employed in agriculture; the only manufacture is that of patent Florentine silk buttons, a branch of a larger factory at Bromsgrove, employing from fifty to sixty persons. The Stratford canal, passing close to the north of the town, and joining the Birmingham, Warwick, and Oxford canals, connects them with the Avon, which is navigable, for barges of forty tons, to Tewkesbury, where it joins the Severn, thus affording a line of inland navigation to the principal towns in the kingdom: near the bridge are some extensive wharfs for lime, timber, coal, and other articles of merchandise. The market, which was formerly on Thursday, is now, by charter granted in the 59th of George III., held on Friday, and is very considerable for corn and other grain, and for cattle. The fairs, to which are attached courts of pie-powder, are on May 14th and the three following days, for cattle, horses, and toys; and September 25th, for cattle and cheese; besides these there are great cattle markets on the third Monday in February, the Friday after the 25th of March, the last Monday in July, the second Friday after the 25th of September, and on the second Monday in December; there is also a statute fair on the morrow after Old Michaelmas. The corn market is held in the area near the town hall; the poultry market in a neat stuccoed building erected at the east end of Woodstreet, near the spot where the ancient cross formerly stood, and surmounted by a cupola and vane, representing a falcon grasping a tilting spear, Shakspeare's family crest; and the cattle market in a spacious area formed by the intersection of the streets leading to the London, Birmingham, Evesham, and Alcester roads.

The town received its first regular charter of incorporation from Edward VI., which, reciting and confirming former grants of privileges to the "Bailiff and Burgesses of Stratford on Avon," was extended by James I., and subsequently by Charles II., in the sixteenth and twenty-sixth years of his reign. Under this last charter the government is vested in a mayor, a high steward, recorder, two chamberlains, twelve aldermen, and twelve burgesses, assisted by a steward of the borough court, clerk of the peace, two serjeants at mace, and subordinate officers. The mayor, who is also coroner and clerk of the market, is chosen annually, on the first Wednesday in September, by the aldermen and burgesses in council; the high steward, recorder, and steward of the borough court are elected by the corporation, and hold their offices for life; the aldermen and the chamberlains are chosen from the common council, by the corporation. The mayor, the late mayor, the high steward, the recorder, and the two senior aldermen, are justices of the peace within the borough; and, by the second charter of Charles II., the mayor, recorder, and the senior aldermen, are also justices of the peace for part of the parish of Old Stratford not otherwise within the jurisdiction of the borough, which includes Old Town, and the church and churchyard. The corporation are, by their charter, empowered to hold quarterly courts of session for all offences not capital, and a court of record for the recovery of debts not exceeding £40; but they have nearly fallen into disuse. The guildhall, in which the courts were held, and the business of the corporation is now transacted, is an ancient building, possessing few claims to architectural notice: it occupies the west side of a small quadrangular area, of which the chapel of the ancient guild of the Holy Cross forms the north side, the vicar's and schoolmaster's houses the east, and the entrance to the school the south side; above the hall are rooms appropriated to the use of the free grammar school. The town hall was rebuilt, in 1768, by the corporation, assisted by the nobility and gentry of the neighbourhood, on the site of the former, of which the upper room, having been used during the civil war as a magazine, by an accidental explosion was destroyed, and the building greatly damaged. The present building is a plain and substantial structure, of the Tuscan order, on piazzas: at the north angle are two small cells for the temporary confinement of prisoners, and the rest of the area is appropriated to the use of the market: on the west front are the arms of the corporation, and in a niche at the north end of the building is the statue of Shakspeare, presented by Garrick. The upper story comprises a handsome banqueting-room, sixty feet long, and thirty feet wide, decorated with paintings, among which are a full-length portrait of Shakspeare, sitting in an antique chair, by Wilson, and, at the opposite end, one of Garrick, reclining against a bust of the poet, by Gainsborough; besides several smaller apartments, which are also ornamented with paintings: the larger meetings of the corporation, the mayor's feast, and the town meetings, are held here; and the celebration of the jubilee, concerts, and assemblies, take place in this suite of rooms.

The living is a vicarage, in the jurisdiction of the peculiar court of the Rector of Stratford upon Avon, rated in the king's books at £20, and in the patronage of the Earl of Plymouth. The church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, and formerly collegiate, is a spacious and venerable cruciform structure, in the early style of English architecture, with a square embattled tower rising from the centre, and surmounted by a lofty octagonal spire; the west entrance is through a richly-moulded and deeply-recessed archway, above which is a large window in the later style, its lower central compartment being filled up with three richly-canopied shrines: an avenue of lime trees, with their branches entwined, forms a pleasing approach to the north porch, over which is an apartment originally lighted by a window, now covered by a tablet. The effect of the interior is destroyed by the closing up of the east end of the nave by the organ, excluding the transepts and the chancel: the nave, of which the fine oak roof is richly carved, and supported on clustered pillars and pointed arches, is very lofty, and is lighted by a range of twelve large clerestory windows enriched with tracery of the later style. In the south aisle, which is in the decorated style, is a chapel, dedicated to St. Thomas à Becket; and in the north aisle is a sepulchral chapel, separated by a richly-carved stone screen, containing several altar-tombs, with recumbent figures of the Clopton family, finely sculptured in marble, and painted to represent the natural complexion of the persons. In the transept are several ancient and some handsome modern monuments, and at the extremity of each is a large enriched window: massive piers of clustered columns, and lofty arches, support the tower, but lose their effect by the exclusion of the nave on one side, and of the chancel on the other. The chancel, parted off by an oak screen, which has been glazed, is much disfigured by a flat ceiling of plaster, in the room of the original oak roof: it is lighted by a handsome range of five windows on each side, in the later style, and a large east window of rich tracery, in which are placed several portions of stained glass that have been preserved: on the south side, near the altar, is a piscina, and near it are stone stalls of elegant design; but the beauty of these, and of the ornamental carvings in the church, is greatly defaced by the thick coat of whitewash which conceals the minuter details. On a slab at the entrance to the altar, covering the ashes of the bard, is an inscription written by Shakspeare, and on the north wall is his monument, in which is his bust, representing him in the act of composing, with a pen in the right hand, and the left arm resting upon a scroll on a cushion: this bust, which is a well-attested likeness, and was originally painted with strict resemblance to the complexion, and colour of the eyes and hair, of the poet, has, by the direction of his commentator Malone, been painted to resemble stone, and forms a lamentable contrast to the complexioned monuments of the Clopton family, and others in the church. The ancient stone font in which Shakspeare was baptized having been removed, to make room for a modern one of marble, was carefully preserved by the late Captain Saunders, of Stratford, who placed it on the pedestal of the ancient market cross, and, upon the erection of the new market-house, removed it into his garden. The chapel of ease, also dedicated to the Holy Trinity, is a handsome edifice in the later style of English architecture: it formerly belonged to the ancient guild of the Holy Cross, and was rebuilt, by Sir Hugh Clopton, in the reign of Henry VII. It has a square embattled tower, and a beautiful north porch, of which the entrance is a deeply-recessed and highly-enriched arch, surmounted by a canopy embellished with scrolls and flowers; the nave is lofty, and is lighted on each side by a range of four windows; the chancel appears, from frequent alteration and repair, which have been made at different times without due regard to the prevailing style of the structure, to have lost its original character: in repairing the chapel, the walls were found to have been originally decorated with various legendary paintings of great antiquity. The master of the grammar school is usually appointed chaplain, to whom the corporation pay a stipend of £50 per annum. There are places of worship for Baptists, Independents, and Wesleyan Methodists.

The free grammar school was founded, in 1482, by Thomas Jolyffe, a native of the town, and one of the brethren of the ancient guild of the Holy Cross: at the dissolution the estate was seized by Henry VIII., but was afterwards restored by Edward VI., for pious and charitable uses, to the corporation, who refounded the school, which is open to all inhabitants of the town for gratuitous instruction in the classics, writing, and arithmetic: the number of scholars on the foundation is about fifteen. The income arising from the endowment is about £130 per annum, of which £115 is paid by the corporation to the master, who is appointed by the Earl of Plymouth, as lord of the manor; in addition to which he has £30 per annum for a house, the original building being too small for residence, and the chaplainship of the chapel of the Holy Trinity. In this school Shakspeare received his education, but he was removed at an early age. The National school, in which ninety boys and eighty girls are instructed, is supported by subscription; a Lancasterian school is supported by the Independents; and an infant school was founded by Miss Mason, at whose expense a neat building, capable of receiving two hundred children, was erected. The almshouses nearly adjoining the guildhall, and in a similar style of building, were refounded and endowed under the charter of Edward VI., for twelve men and twelve women, of whom the most aged and infirm are placed out in case of illness, where they can receive more attention: they have an allowance of five shillings each per week, to which, from the charities of the families of Clopton and Lord, clothing is added every alternate year: there are numerous other charitable bequests for distribution among the poor. About a mile to the west of the town, in the hamlet of Bishopton, is a mineral spring, which, having been analysed by Dr. Perry, in 1744, was found to be of a saline quality, strongly impregnated with sulphur, in its properties like the water of Leamington. At Welcombe, about one mile to the north of the town, are the remains of a military intrenchment, formed of deep ravines meeting obliquely in a common point: in the neighbourhood are several tumuli, in which human bones, spear-heads, and other military weapons, have been found: in opening one of these, in 1795, the proprietor discovered a human skull, transfixed with a spear, which appeared to be the gilded head of a standard pike. On the surface of Borden Hill, about a mile to the west, astroites, or star stones, are found in profusion, in small columns apparently formed of successive layers, which are easily separated: the soil is calcareous, and in the region of limestone, to the north-west, large specimens of testaceous fossils are found: the star stone is found also at Shuckburgh near Southam, and the arms of the family of that name are three of these stones of five points, parted by a chevron. Of the ancient monastery, or of the college that succeeded it, the site of which was near the parish church, not the slightest vestige is discernible. So intimately is the name of Shakspeare associated with every recollection and description of this borough, that every circumstance connected, however remotely with his memory, is deemed worthy of being recorded. It is singular that, though a letter addressed to him has been discovered, which was in the possession of the late Captain Saunders, no traces of his hand-writing, nor any thing that was ever known to have belonged to him, have ever been fully authenticated. In 1810, a large gold seal ring, which had evidently lain there many years, was found near the churchyard, bearing the initials W.S., tied together with a string and tassels, according to the fashion of his time: this, which with great probability is supposed to have been his signet, is in the possession of Mr. Wheler, author of the history of Stratford. Stratford is eminently distinguished as the place where Shakspeare was born, on the 23rd of April, 1564, and in which, after having lived a few years in retirement, he ended his days, on the anniversary of his birth, in 1616, in the 52nd year of his age. Among other eminent natives were John de Stratford, Lord Treasurer in the reign of Edward II., and Lord Chancellor in that of Edward III., who promoted him to the see of Canterbury; Robert de Stratford, his brother, Archdeacon of Canterbury, and afterwards Lord Chancellor, on the translation of his brother to the primacy, and who, together with him and the Bishop of Lichfield and Coventry, was committed to the Tower, on a charge of having detained the supplies for the war with France, but was subsequently liberated and promoted to the see of Chichester; Ralph de Stratford, Bishop of London, who, during the great pestilence, in the year 1348, purchased a piece of ground near Smithfield, for the interment of those who died of the contagion; John Huckell, educated in the free grammar school, author of a poem on the Avon, who assisted Garrick in the composition of the Ode, and other poetical addresses, delivered at the celebration of the jubilee, in 1769; and Francis Ainge, a memorable instance of longevity, who was baptized on the 23rd of August, 1629, left England in his youth and died in North America, on the 13th of April, 1767, having attained the extraordinary age of one hundred and thirty-seven years.

STRATFORD le BOW, county of MIDDLESEX.— See BOW.

STRATFORD under the CASTLE, a parish in the hundred of UNDERDITCH, county of WILTS, $1\frac{3}{4}$ mile (N. W. by N.) from Salisbury, containing, with the borough of Old Sarum, 385 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Salisbury, and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Salisbury. The church is dedicated to St. Lawrence.

STRATFORD (FENNY), a market town and chapelry, partly in the parish of BLETCHLEY, and partly in that of SIMPSON, hundred of NEWPORT, county of BUCKINGHAM, $13\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E.) from Buckingham, and 45 (N. W.) from London, containing 521 inhabitants. The distinguishing prefix is derived from the nature of the surrounding land; the town itself stands on an eminence. In 1665, it was much depopulated by the plague, on account of the ravages of which the inns were shut up, and the road turned in another direction: it contains two streets. The Grand Junction canal crosses the high road at the bottom of the town. Lace-making employs a considerable number of poor females. The market, which has never flourished since the time of the plague, is on Monday; and fairs for cattle are held on April 19th, July 18th, October 10th, and November 28th. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Buckingham, and diocese of Lincoln, endowed with £400 private benefaction, and £600 royal bounty, and in the patronage of John Willis, Esq. The chapel, situated in Bletchley, having been dilapidated since the reign of Elizabeth, was rebuilt by subscription, through the exertions of Mr. Browne Willis, the antiquary, who resided here, and who may be considered its founder. The first stone was laid by him, on St. Martin's day, in 1724, and the building was dedicated to St. Martin, because his grandfather died on St. Martin's day, in St. Martin's lane. On its consecration, in May 1730, he delivered a speech to the diocesan, in which he represented the decline of morality among the inhabitants, from the want of a place of worship: it has received an addition of two hundred and forty free sittings, to which the Incorporated Society for the building and enlargement of churches and chapels contributed £195. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Bucks, and diocese of Lincoln, and in the gift of the patron of Bletchley. The remains of Mr. Willis are interred within the rails of the communion-table: he bequeathed a benefaction for a sermon to be preached on St. Martin's day, and requested that the rector of Bletchley may never have the cure of Fenny-Stratford, but directed that, if he would contribute £6 per annum towards the salary of the curate, he should have the appointment; this has never been done. Baptists and Wesleyan Methodists have each a place of worship. A National school, supported by voluntary contributions, was erected in 1817. A guild, dedicated to St. Margaret and St. Catherine, was founded, in 1494, by Roger and John Hobbes.

STRATFORD (ST. MARY), a parish in the hundred of SAMFORD, county of SUFFOLK, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (W. N. W.) from Manningtree, containing 614 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Suffolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £13, and in the patronage of the King, as Duke of Lancaster. The river Stour is navigable on the west of this parish, also on the south, where it is crossed by a bridge. Lettice Dikes, in 1589, gave a rent-charge of £1, and Robert Clarke, in 1731, another of £5, for teaching poor children. This parish is entitled also to the benefit of Littlebury's school, founded at Dedham, in 1575.

STRATFORD (OLD), a hamlet partly in the parishes of COSGROVE, FURTHO, PASSENHAM, and POTTERS-PURY, hundred of CLELEY, county of NORTHAMPTON, $\frac{1}{4}$ of a mile (N. W.) from Stony-Stratford. The population is returned with the parishes. At a place called Chapel Close there formerly stood a hermitage and a free chapel.

STRATFORD (OLD), a parish in the Stratford division of the hundred of BARLICHWAY, county of WARWICK, adjacent to the town of Stratford upon Avon, containing, with the hamlet of Luddington, and the town of Stratford upon Avon, 4229 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Rector of Stratford upon Avon, rated in the king's books at £20, endowed with £400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Earl of Plymouth. The church is dedicated to the Holy Trinity.

STRATFORD (STONY), a market town comprising the united parishes of West Side and East Side, in the hundred of NEWPORT, county of BUCKINGHAM, 8 miles (N. E.) from Buckingham, and 52 (N. W.) from London, containing 1499 inhabitants. At or near this spot appears to have been the Lactodorum of the Itinerary. Camden is of opinion that it was at the town, because the derivation of Lactodorum, in the ancient British language, agrees with the present name, both signifying "a river forded by means of stones." Dr. Stukeley supposes it was at Old Stratford, on the Northamptonshire side of the river; and Dr. Salmon, at Claverston, an eminence close to the old road which led to the ford at Passenham, where the army of Edward the Elder was stationed, whilst he fortified Towcester. Through Stratford passes the Roman road, Watling-street, in its course in a direct line through the county from Brickhill. One of the crosses in memory of Eleanor, queen of Edward I., was erected here, but it was demolished in the great civil war. At an inn in this town, Richard III., when Duke of Gloucester, accompanied by the Duke of Buckingham, seized the unfortunate young prince, Edward V., and, in his presence, arrested Lord Richard Grey and Sir Thomas Vaughan. In 1736, an accidental fire destroyed fifty-three houses; and, in 1742, a similar catastrophe consumed one hundred and thirteen, and the church of St. Mary Magdalene, which has never been rebuilt: the tower, however, escaped the flames, and is yet standing. The damage was estimated at £10,000, of which £7000 was raised for the sufferers by a brief and subscriptions. The town consists of one long street, composed of houses built of freestone, of which some are very good: it is partially paved with pebbles, and well supplied with water, but not lighted, though an act for lighting and paving was obtained in 1800. This place consisted originally of only a few inns, but its traffic (which is now very great) increasing, its enlargement followed, and a stone bridge, with five arches, was constructed over the Ouse. The manufacture of bone-lace gives employment to many families. A market was granted to the Veres in 1460: in 1663, Simon Bennet, lord of the manor of Calverton, procured a charter for a market on Friday (the present market-day), and four fairs, but only three are now held, viz. August 2nd, Friday next after October the 10th, and November 12th; the first and last are for cattle. The government is in the county magistrates, who sit every alternate Friday.

The livings of the two parishes, having been united, form a perpetual curacy in the archdeaconry of Buckingham, and diocese of Lincoln, endowed with £8 per annum and £200 private benefaction, and £600 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Bishop of Lincoln. The church, dedicated to St. Giles, formerly a chantry, was erected in 1451, and endowed in 1482, but rebuilt, except the tower, in 1776, by Mr. Irons of Warwick. Till of late years it was included in the parish of Calverton, on the west side of the street, whilst that of St. Mary Magdalene belonged to that of Wolverton, on the east side; there are not at present, in either district, twenty acres of land not covered with buildings. There are places of worship for Baptists, Independents, and Wesleyan Methodists. Two Sunday schools, in which upwards of three hundred children are instructed, were opened in 1786; and in 1819, a National school, for an unlimited number of boys, supported by voluntary contributions, was also opened, to which an endowment for ten boys, bequeathed by Mr. M. Hipwell, of this place, has since been appropriated. Here is also a fund of £70 per annum, for apprenticing poor children.

STRATFORD (WATER), a parish in the hundred and county of BUCKINGHAM, 3 miles (W. by N.) from Buckingham, containing 167 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Buckingham, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £7.0.5., and in the patronage of the Duke of Buckingham. The church, dedicated to St. Giles, is partly Norman, having an enriched doorway in that style.

STRATFORD-LANGTHORNE, a ward in the parish of WEST HAM, hundred of BEACONTREE, county of ESSEX, 4 miles (N. E. by E.) from London. The population is returned with the parish. The village, which is situated on the high road to Harwich, is well lighted with gas by the trustees of the road, and supplied with water from the East London water-works. It is in contemplation to erect a new church in this part of the parish, his Majesty's commissioners having proposed a grant for that purpose. There are places of worship for Independents, Wesleyan Methodists, and Roman Catholics. The printing and dyeing of calico and silk are extensively carried on. There are also two chemical establishments, and a porter brewery, on the river Lea, which is navigable to the Thames. A charity school was founded in 1802, and is supported by voluntary contributions and the work of the children, for clothing and educating thirty girls. John Hiett, in 1719, bequeathed £5 a year for apprenticing one poor boy. About 1135, a Cistercian abbey, dedicated to the Virgin Mary and All Saints, was founded here by William of Montfichet, the society of which, being in danger from the floods, the abbey occupying a low situation in the marshes, removed to a cell at Burghstead, near Bille-ricay; but the damages sustained from the waters being repaired, they returned, and continued here till the dissolution, at which period the revenue was valued at £573. 15. 6.

STRATTON, a market town and parish in the hundred of STRATTON, county of CORNWALL, 17½ miles (N. N. W.) from Launceston, and 223 (W. by S.) from London, containing 1580 inhabitants. This place has acquired considerable note, as having been the scene of the great victory obtained, in the early part of the civil war, by the royalist forces over their opponents: in consideration of the eminent services rendered by Sir Ralph Hopton, on this occasion, he was created Lord Hopton of Stratton, in 1643; and after his death in 1654, Charles II., then in exile, in 1658, created Sir John Berkley, to whose prowess and courage the victory at Stratton was mainly owing, Baron Berkley of Stratton. The town is situated in a flat country, and the streets are but indifferently paved; the inhabitants are tolerably supplied with water: it is in contemplation to build a market-house and two bridges. The Bude canal passes within a mile of the town, and extends to Draxton bridge, about three miles north of Launceston: upon it are six inclined planes, worked by very powerful machinery, particularly that near Bude. The market is on Tuesday, and fairs are on May 19th, November 8th, and December 11th. A court leet is held annually by the lord of the manor, and a court baron by the lord of the manor of Efford; petty sessions for the hundred are also held on the first Tuesday in every month. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Cornwall, and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £10. 11. 8., and in the patronage of the King, as Duke of Cornwall. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. Here is a small charitable donation for the education of fifteen boys and ten girls. Some lands, now let for about £115 per annum, are vested in feoffees for the benefit of the poor of this parish.

STRATTON, a parish in the hundred of GEORGE, Dorchester division of the county of DORSET, 3½ miles (N. W.) from Dorchester, containing, with the tything of Grimstone, 262 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to that of Charminster, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Dean of Salisbury, endowed with £200 private benefaction, £200 royal bounty, and £200 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of J. Trenchard, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, has a lofty tower, but no chancel, the latter having been pulled down in 1547. A Roman road from Dorchester to Ilchester passes through the parish.

STRATTON, a parish in the hundred of CROWTHORNE and MINETY, county of GLOUCESTER, 1¾ mile (N. W.) from Cirencester, containing 271 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Gloucester, rated in the king's books at £12. 7. 6., and in the patronage of Mrs. Masters. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a small ancient structure with a steeple rising from between the nave and the chancel. The ancient Ermin-street passes through the parish, and by a bush, called Crowthorne, which gives name to the hundred.

STRATTON, an extra-parochial liberty, in the hundred of COLNEIS, county of SUFFOLK, adjoining the parish of Levington, and containing but one house, the ancient hall. In Chapel-field, between Levington and Trimley, are the ruins of a church or chapel, almost concealed by trees and bushes.

STRATTON (EAST), a parish in the hundred of MITCHELDEVER, Basingstoke division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 6 miles (N. N. W.) from New Alresford, containing 386 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the vicarage of Mitcheldever, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Winchester. The church is dedicated to All Saints.

STRATTON on the FOSS, a parish in the hundred of KILMERSDON, county of SOMERSET, 6 miles (N. N. E.) from Shepton-Mallet, containing 317 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Wells, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £9. 11. 5½., and in the patronage of the King, as Duke of Cornwall. The church is dedicated to St. Vigor. The village is situated on the ancient Fosse way, which now forms part of the turnpike-road leading from Bath to Shepton-Mallet. On the eastern side of the road is Downside College, an elegant and stately edifice, established for the education of Roman Catholic children, and those designed for the service of that church. Coal, iron-stone, and marl, are found in abundance, the former affording considerable employment to the poor. The Bath market is principally supplied with butter from the dairy farms in this neighbourhood.

STRATTON (LONG) ST. MARY, a parish in the hundred of DEPWADE, county of NORFOLK, 10½ miles (S. by W.) from Norwich, containing 636 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, annexed to that of St. Clement's, Norwich, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £10, and in the patronage of the Master and Fellows of Caius College, Cambridge. The church, in old records, is called Stratton cum turri, whence it appears that the other two Strattons had churches without steeples: it contains a handsome monument to Judge Reve and his lady. There is a place of worship for Independents. The Roman road leading to Ad Tuam, or Tasburgh, passes through the parish. A fair was granted by King John to Roger de Stratton, in 1207, but it is now disused. Here was anciently a hermitage, with an oratory attached. Several Roman urns, one of them curiously ornamented, were found, in 1773, on opening a gravel pit, near which a sepulchral hearth has since been discovered, with a mixture of ashes and burnt earth upon it.

STRATTON (ST. MARGARET), a parish in the hundred of HIGHWORTH, CRICKLADE, and STAPLE, county of WILTS, 2¾ miles (N. E. by N.) from Swindon, containing, with the tything of Upper Stratton, 745 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Wilts, and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £8. 12. 3½., endowed with £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Warden and Fellows of Merton College, Oxford, on the nomination of the Bishop of Salisbury. John Hurring, in 1720, bequeathed lands producing a small income for teaching poor children. An Alien priory was founded here soon after the Conquest, which, at the dissolution, was given by Henry VI. to King's College, Cambridge.

STRATTON (ST. MICHAEL), a parish in the hundred of DEPWADE, county of NORFOLK, 1 mile (N. by E.) from St. Mary Stratton, containing 229 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, with that of St. Peter consolidated, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £6. 12. 8½., and in the patronage of the Warden and Fellows of New College, Oxford. The church of St. Peter has been long since demolished.

STRATTON (UPPER), a tything in the parish of STRATTON ST. MARGARET, hundred of HIGHWORTH, CRICKLADE, and STAPLE, county of WILTS, 4¼ miles (S. W.) from Highworth. The population is returned with the parish.

STRATTON (WEST), a tything in the parish and hundred of MITCHELDEVER, Basingstoke division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 6¾ miles (N. W. by N.) from New Alresford. The population is returned with the parish.

STRATTON-AUDLEY, a parish partly in the hundred and county of BUCKINGHAM, but chiefly in the hundred of PLOUGHLEY, county of OXFORD, 3 miles (N. E. by N.) from Bicester, containing 342 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Dean and Canons of Christ Church, Oxford. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

STRATTON-STRAWLESS, a parish in the southern division of the hundred of ERPINGHAM, county of NORFOLK, 4¾ miles (S. S. E.) from Aylsham, containing 187 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £8. 8., endowed with £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of R. Marsham, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. Margaret, contains numerous monuments and inscriptions, and the windows some curious specimens of ancient stained glass.

STREATHAM, a parish in the eastern division of the hundred of BRIXTON, county of SURREY, 6 miles (S. by W.) from London, comprising the hamlets of Upper Tooting and Balham Hill, and containing 3616 inhabitants. This parish, which derives its name from its situation near the great Roman road from Arundel to London, is almost connected with the metropolis by continuous ranges of building, and extends along the principal road to Brighton for nearly three miles. The houses, which are mostly modern, are well built, and interspersed with several detached villas and stately mansions, particularly in the neighbourhood of the common. Streatham park was formerly the residence of Mrs. Thrale, afterwards Madame Piozzi, where Dr. Johnson spent much of his time. The neighbourhood is richly wooded, and is diversified with hills and vallies, and the surrounding scenery is finely varied: the air, which is considered particularly salubrious and invigorating, combining with other local advantages, has rendered this village a favourite residence of many opulent families. Among the attractions is a mineral spring, which was discovered in 1660, and is still held in esteem, being highly efficacious in scorbutic eruptions, and in many other cases. The only branch of manufacture is that of silk, recently introduced. The parish is within the jurisdiction of the court of requests for the eastern division of the hundred of Brixton, held in the borough of Southwark, for the recovery of debts under £5, and within the limits of the new police establishment. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Surrey, and diocese of Winchester, rated in the king's books at £18. 13. 9., and in the patronage of the Duke of Bedford. The ancient church, dedicated to St. Leonard, with the exception of the tower, which is of flint, and surmounted by a spire of shingles, forming a picturesque object in the distant landscape, was taken down in 1830, and is now being rebuilt upon an enlarged scale. A chapel has been erected at Upper Tooting, within the last few years, of which the living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the Rector. There are places of worship for Independents and Wesleyan Methodists. A National school is supported by subscription. Mrs. Elizabeth Howland, in 1716, bequeathed £20 per annum for clothing and educating ten girls; and Mrs. Dorothy Appleby, in 1681, left £5 per annum for apprenticing a poor child annually. The St. Anne's Society for the maintenance, clothing, and education of poor children of both sexes was originally established in 1709, and for nearly a century had only a day school in London for clothing and instructing thirty children of each sex from all parts of the kingdom. The first asylum which this society established in the country was at Lavenham, in Suffolk, in 1794, where twenty boys were admitted on the foundation; this establishment was subsequently removed to Peckham in Surrey, where the number of boys increased to sixty-eight, but the efforts of the committee to extend the benefit of the institution, rendered it necessary to provide more ample accommodation, and the present handsome building, adapted to the reception of one hundred and fifty children, was, in 1830, erected at Brixton Hill, in this parish, at an expense of £8000. It is a handsome edifice of brick, having a basement of stone, channelled in horizontal lines, with a central piazza, from which rises a portico of four Ionic columns, supporting a triangular pediment with frieze and cornice continued round the building, which is also decorated at the angles with antæ of corresponding character: it occupies, with the grounds attached, more than two acres of freehold land. The internal arrangements are well adapted to the purposes of the institution, and the management is under the superintendence of a committee of governors, chosen from the subscribers, by whom the institution is supported. The funds have been materially assisted by a liberal contribution of £3000 by Mrs. Partis, of Bath, towards the erection of the new asylum; in acknowledgment of which benefit, Mrs. Partis has the right, in perpetuity, of placing two boys and two girls in the institution, which, after her decease, will devolve to the trustees of Partis' College, near Bath, noticed in our account of that city. There are at present seventy-eight boys and twenty-eight girls, who are educated, clothed, and wholly maintained, the boys till they are fourteen, and the girls till they are fifteen, years of age, when they are apprenticed and placed out at the expense of the society. Thirty boys and thirty girls are still clothed and instructed in the school in London, of whom ten boys, and five girls, are annually admitted on the foundation at Brixton, according to seniority and merit; the remainder are elected by the governors at large, without reference to any particular district, the asylum being open to necessitous children from every part of the kingdom; any person may place a child in the institution by paying the sum of £105. The celebrated Dr. B. Hoadley, Bishop of Bangor, was for several years rector of this parish, previously to his promotion to the see of Salisbury.

STREATLAM, a joint township with Staunton, in that part of the parish of GAINFORD which is in the south-western division of DARLINGTON ward, county palatine of DURHAM, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. E. by E.) from Barnard-Castle. The population is returned with Staunton. Here was anciently a chapel, but no traces of it are discernible. In the neighbourhood are extensive quarries, from which stone has been raised for the erection of the principal buildings in this part of the county; among which is Streatlam castle, a stately structure, built in the seventeenth century, on the site of the old castle, by Sir William Bowes, whose ancestors resided here for many generations.

STREATLEY, a parish in the hundred of FLITT, county of BEDFORD, 5 miles (N. by W.) from Luton, containing, with the hamlet of Sharpenhoe, 309 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Bedford, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £6. 15. 2., endowed with £600 royal bounty, and in the patronage of — Cuthbert, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Margaret. Richard Norton, in 1686, gave a rent-charge of £10 in support of a school, wherein eight boys are educated.

STREATLEY, a parish in the hundred of MORETON, county of BERKS, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. by W.) from Wallingford, containing 590 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Berks, and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £10. 7. 6., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Salisbury. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. Streatley is supposed to have taken its name from its situation on the ancient Ikniel-street, or Ickleton Long, as it is here called, which crosses the Thames from this place to Goring in Oxfordshire. Eight boys and girls are taught to read and write for an annuity of £2. 5., the bequest of Mr. Richard Tull. Here was formerly a convent of the Dominican order, part of which was remaining a few years since.

STREET, a parish in the hundred of WHITLEY, county of SOMERSET, $1\frac{3}{4}$ mile (S. S. W.) from Glastonbury, containing 791 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, with the perpetual curacy of Walton annexed, in the archdeaconry of Wells, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £24. 12. $3\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Marquis of Bath. The church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, has lately received an addition of two hundred and fifty-six sittings, of which two hundred and forty are free, the Incorporated Society for the enlargement of churches and chapels having granted £120 towards defraying the expense. There are places of worship for Baptists and the Society of Friends. A large fair for all kinds of cattle is held at Christmas. Blue lias and limestone, abounding with marine impressions, are found here.

STREET, a parish in the hundred of STREET, rape of LEWES, county of SUSSEX, $6\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. W.) from Lewes, containing 152 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Lewes, and diocese of Chichester, rated in the king's books at £6. 19. 7., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty. Mrs. Lane was patroness in 1822. The church is a small ancient structure of flint, partly in the early English, and partly in the decorated, style of architecture, containing several monuments to the Dobell family and others.

STREETHALL, a parish in the hundred of UTTLESFORD, county of ESSEX, 4 miles (W.N.W.) from Saffron-Walden, containing 54 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Colchester, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £13, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of Lieut. General Raymond.

STREETHAY, a hamlet in that part of the parish of St. Michael, Lichfield, which is in the northern division of the hundred of OFFLOW, county of STAFFORD, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N.E. by E.) from Lichfield, containing 90 inhabitants.

STRELLY, a parish in the southern division of the wapentake of BROXTOW, county of NOTTINGHAM, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W.N.W.) from Nottingham, containing 350 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Nottingham, and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £6. 4. 8., endowed with £400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of T. Webb Edge, Esq. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a large handsome cruciform structure, with a lofty tower; the nave is separated from the chancel by a richly-carved oaken screen: it contains several tombs of the Strelley family, and the windows exhibit some ancient stained glass in good preservation. Though the hall has been much modernised, there still remain slight traces of the style of Edward III. In the park is an extensive area, surrounded by a moat, and in the neighbourhood are considerable coal mines. Richard Smedley, in 1744, gave land for the endowment of a school, in which twenty poor children are educated.

STRENSALL, a parish within the liberty of St. Peter of York, East riding, though locally in the wapentake of Bulmer, North riding, of the county of York, 6 miles (N.N.E.) from York, containing 378 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the Prebendary of Strensall in the Cathedral Church of York, rated in the king's books at £4. 13. 4. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. Robert Wilkinson, in 1718, gave by deed £14. 6. per annum in support of a school; the present annual income, arising from this and other sources, is £34, for which the master instructs all the poor children of the parish.

STRENSHAM, a parish in the upper division of the hundred of PERSHORE, county of WORCESTER, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S.W. by S.) from Pershore, containing 312 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Worcester, rated in the king's books at £12, and in the patronage of John Taylor, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a noble structure: it contains many memorials of the Russel family, among which are some fine specimens of Italian sculpture, in Parian and other marbles. Strensam, which is pleasantly situated on the river Avon, between the hills of Malvern and Bredon, is renowned in history for the siege it sustained against the parliamentary forces, and for the signal bravery displayed by the then lord of the manor, Sir William Russel, here, as well as in the memorable battle of Worcester: it is further distinguished as the birthplace, in 1612, of Samuel Butler, author of Hudibras. Blue stone abounds in every part of the parish, and, in some places, fossils and minerals are met with. Lady Ann Russel bequeathed a rent-charge of £10 for teaching poor children; and there are nine almshouses, endowed by some members of the same family.

STRETFORD, a parish in the hundred of STRETFORD, county of HEREFORD, $4\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S.W. by W.) from Leominster, containing 48 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Hereford, rated in the king's books at £6. 19. 8., endowed with £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Representatives of the late John Morris, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Peter.

STRETFORD, a hamlet in the parish of LEOMINSTER, hundred of WOLPHY, county of HEREFORD, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by S.) from Leominster. The population is returned with the township of Broadward.

STRETFORD, a chapelry in the parish of MANCHESTER, hundred of SALFORD, county palatine of LANCASTER, 4 miles (S.W.) from Manchester, containing 2173 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chester, endowed with £230 private benefaction, £600 royal bounty, and £800 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Wardens and Fellows of the Collegiate Church of Manchester. The chapel has lately received an addition of one hundred and seventy-six sittings, of which ninety-five are free, the Incorporated Society for the enlargement of churches and chapels having granted £95 towards defraying the expense.

STRETHAM, a parish in the southern division of the hundred of WITCHFORD, Isle of ELY, county of CAMBRIDGE, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S.W. by S.) from Ely, containing, with the chapelry of Thetford, 1104 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the Bishop of Ely, rated in the king's books at £22. The church is dedicated to St. James. There are places of worship for Baptists and Wesleyan Methodists.

STRETTON, a township in the parish of TILSTON, higher division of the hundred of BROXTON, county palatine of CHESTER, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.W. by N.) from Malpas, containing 106 inhabitants.

STRETTON, a chapelry in that part of the parish of GREAT BUDWORTH which is in the hundred of BUCKLOW, county palatine of CHESTER, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. by E.) from Warrington, containing 277 inhabitants. In 1827 a new chapel, with a tower, in the early English style, was erected, towards defraying the expense of which the Incorporated Society for promoting the building of additional churches granted £1800: it contains five hundred sittings, half of them free.

STRETTON, a township in the parish of NORTH WINGFIELD, hundred of SCARSDALE, county of DERBY, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by W.) from Alfreton, containing 489 inhabitants.

STRETTON, a parish in the hundred of ALSTOE, county of RUTLAND, $8\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. E. by E.) from Oakham, containing 195 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Northampton, and diocese of Peterborough, rated in the king's books at £7. 17. 1., and in the patronage of Sir G. Heathcote, Bart. The church is dedicated to St. Nicholas. The Rev. John Turner, in 1786, bequeathed £20 in support of a school.

STRETTON, a chapelry in that part of the parish of PENKRIDGE which is in the western division of the hundred of CUTTLESTONE, county of STAFFORD, 3 miles (S. W. by W.) from Penkridge. The population is returned with the parish. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the jurisdiction of the royal peculiar court of Penkridge, endowed with £710 private benefaction, and £800 royal bounty, and in the patronage of E. J. Littleton, Esq. The chapel is dedicated to St. John. The Grand Trunk canal passes in the vicinity. This is now an obscure place, supposed to occupy the site of the Roman Pennicrucium, agreeing in distance with the account given by Antoninus, in his Itinerary, and there having been several Roman coins, with other relics, found upon the spot.

STRETTON, a township in that part of the parish of BURTON upon TRENT which is in the northern division of the hundred of OFFLOW, county of STAFFORD, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.) from Burton upon Trent, containing 374 inhabitants. It is within the peculiar jurisdiction of the manorial court of Burton upon Trent.

STRETTON (CHURCH), a market town and parish in the hundred of MUNSLow, county of SALOP, 13 miles (S. by W.) from Shrewsbury, and 153 (N. W.) from London, containing, with the townships of All Stretton, Little Stretton, and Minton, 1226 inhabitants. This place, which, by its adjunct, is distinguished from its townships as the seat of the parish church, derived its name Stretton, or Street-town, from its situation within a quarter of a mile of the ancient Watling-street, which passes in a direction parallel with the road from Shrewsbury to Ludlow. The town is romantically situated in a rich and fertile vale, enclosed on one side by a bold range of mountains, among which are the Caer Caradoc, the lofty and precipitous retreat of Caradocus; the Lawley; and the Raglish; and on the other by the extensive chain of hills called the Longmynd, flat on the summit, but deeply indented, on the south-eastern acclivity, with numerous vallies, from which many mountain streams descend with impetuosity. It consists of one street only, in the wider part of which is the market-house, erected in 1617, an antique building of timber and plaster, consisting of two upper rooms now used for storing wool, and supported on pillars of wood, resting on stone plinths, affording a sheltered area for the use of the market. The houses are in general built of brick, and of neat and modern appearance, occasionally interspersed with handsome dwellings and many small cottages: the inhabitants are amply supplied with water by pumps attached to the more respectable houses, and from a stream which, descending from the Longmynd, flows at one extremity of the town. The secluded and romantic situation of the place, its proximity to scenes of deep interest, the mildness and salubrity of the air, and various other attractions, render it a place of resort for parties from the neighbouring towns. But little trade is carried on: a manufactory for flannel was established in 1816, which is now flourishing; but the principal part of the inhabitants are employed in agriculture: large flocks of sheep are depastured on the neighbouring hills, and a fair for wool was established in 1819. The market is on Thursday, chiefly for provisions: the fairs are March 10th, for cattle, horses, and sheep; May 14th, a statute fair; July 3rd, a great wool fair; September 25th, a very large sheep fair; and the last Thursday in November, for cattle, sheep, and horses. The county magistrates hold a court of petty sessions at the Talbot hotel, on the third Thursday in every month; and two constables for each township are annually appointed at the court leet held in the old manor-house, now an inn, at which also, under the steward, who must be a lawyer, a court of requests for the recovery of debts under 40s. was formerly held by letters patent of Charles II., granted to the Marquis of Bath, then lord of the manor.

The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Salop, and diocese of Hereford, rated in the king's books at £15. 10., and in the patronage of the Rev. Robert Norgrave Pemberton. The church, dedicated to St. Lawrence, is an ancient and venerable cruciform structure, principally in the early style of English architecture, with a square embattled tower rising from the centre, strengthened by buttresses, and crowned with pinnacles: in the buttress at the south angle is a figure of St. Lawrence, and in other parts of the tower are groups of figures, well sculptured. The south porch and the entrance on the north are of Norman character, and the interior contains several portions in the Norman style, with insertions in the decorated style of English architecture. The nave, chancel, and transepts, are separated by four lofty clustered columns and pointed arches, which support the tower; the chancel is beautifully ornamented with richly carved oak in antique devices, collected from ancient manorial and ecclesiastical edifices, and put up by the present rector, who has bestowed much care and expense on the embellishment of the church; and in the central compartment of the altar is an elegant and well-carved representation of a dead Christ in the lap of the Virgin. The windows, principally in the decorated style, with rich and flowing tracery, are embellished with stained glass; and in the south transept, the ancient oak roof, finely carved, is carefully preserved. A large stone coffin with a lid, now broken, and an alabaster slab, with an illegible inscription, were taken from under a low arch in the south transept. The triennial visitation is held in this church by the bishop of the diocese, in August, and in the intermediate years by the archdeacon, in May.

The free school was endowed by successive benefactors, of whom the principal were, Edward Lloyd, Esq., who in 1790 bequeathed £100; John Bridgman, Esq., who in 1803 gave £100; and the Rev. John Mainwaring, who in 1807 left £200 for the same purpose. In addition to these legacies, of which a portion is appropriated to apprenticing the children, it has an endowment of forty acres of land, under the late enclosure act. The building, which is neat and well adapted to its use, comprises two school-rooms, with apartments for the master and the mistress; the school is free for all children of the parish, and combines the objects of a National school, (in which one hundred children, of whom the more respectable pay a quarterage to the trustees, are instructed in reading, writing, and arithmetic,) with the advantages of a Sunday school: the income is about £70, out of which the master is allowed £40, per annum. The almshouses, which have been recently erected, are appropriated as residences for four poor people, who pay a rent of one shilling per quarter: the rental of four acres of land in the parish, and several charitable bequests, are distributed among the poor, on Easter-day, by the rector and churchwardens. On Caer Caradoc are the remains of a large encampment, defended on the steepest acclivities with one, and on the more accessible ascents with two, and in some places with three, intrenchments hewn out of the solid rock; this was probably an exploratory station of Caractacus, from whom the hill received its name. In the neighbourhood of Clun is another, in which the British hero, after his escape from the Roman conquerors, took refuge, and from which he was betrayed into their power, and led captive to Rome. On the summit of Longmynd a pole has been erected, denoting the highest point in that extensive range of hills, commanding a panoramic view of a wide extent of country in every direction: the prospect includes, on the west, the Stiperstones, the Welch mountains, the Sugar loaf in Abergavenny, the Table mountain, the Cader Idris, and the intervening range from that mountain to Snowdon; on the south-east, the Edgewood, between Wenlock and Ludlow, the Wrekin, and the Clee and Malvern hills; and the Radnorshire hills on the south-west. On the Longmynd are many low tumuli and cairns of stones; and on one of the eminences, called Bodbury, is a large intrenchment of earth: this mountain was the scene of many battles between the Romans and the Britons, and afterwards between the Welch and the English. In 1825, one of the tumuli was opened, under the superintendence of the Rev. Mr. Pemberton, rector of the parish: on the level of the base was found a circular enclosure of loose stones, appearing to have endured the action of fire, and several pieces of bone were discovered in a calcined state, supposed to have been parts of the bodies burnt there according to the rites of Roman sepulture: this tumulus was surrounded by the trench, from the excavation of which it had been raised. On an eminence at Minton is a very lofty tumulus, supposed to be one of those mounts upon which, in the earlier times of the Britons, justice was administered to the people. One mile to the south-west of Church-Stretton was Brockard's Castle, of which the site, the intrenchments, the moat, and foundations, with the approaches from the Watling-street, may be traced. Among the eminent natives of this town were William Thynne, Receiver of the Marches, in 1546; Sir John Thynne, Knt., who founded Longleat House, in the county of Wilts; and Dr. Roger Mainwaring, vicar of St. Giles' in the Fields, London, and chaplain to Charles I., who, for preaching two sermons, called "Religion" and "Allegiance," was censured by parliament, and imprisoned and suspended for three years; being afterwards by the king made Bishop of St. David's, he retained that dignity till the abolition of episcopacy, when he again underwent various persecutions till his death, in 1653.

STRETTON upon DUNSMOOR, a parish in the Rugby division of the hundred of KNIGHTLOW, county of WARWICK, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by N.) from Dunchurch, containing, with the hamlet of Princethorpe, 760 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Coventry, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry. The Rev. H. T. Powell was patron in 1817. The church is dedicated to All Saints. William Herbert, in 1694, bequeathed land, directing the rental to be applied to charitable purposes, among which £10. 10. is paid to a schoolmaster for teaching poor children.

STRETTON en le FIELDS, a parish in the hundred of REPTON and GRESLEY, county of DERBY, though locally in the western division of the hundred of Goscote, county of Leicester, 5 miles (S. W.) from Ashby de la Zouch, containing 116 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Derby, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, rated in the king's books at £9. 10. 5., and in the patronage of Sir William Browne Cave, Bart. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, contains some ancient tombs of ecclesiastics.

STRETTON on the FOSS, a parish forming a detached portion of the Brails division of the hundred of KINGTON, county of WARWICK, 3 miles (W. S. W.) from Shipston upon Stour, containing 410 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, with that of Ditchford annexed, in the archdeaconry of Gloucester, and diocese of Worcester, rated in the king's books at £11, and in the alternate patronage of the two Coheiresses of the Rev. W. Hawes. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. The old Roman Fosse-way passes through the parish, also an unfinished rail-road. There is a spring in the neighbourhood, the water of which is slightly impregnated with salt. Ditchford friary is divided into three farms, but there are no remains of its ancient chapel.

STRETTON under FOSS, a hamlet in the parish of MONK'S KIRBY, Kirby division of the hundred of KNIGHTLOW, county of WARWICK, $6\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. W. by N.) from Rugby, containing, with Newbold-Revel, 261 inhabitants. There is a place of worship for Independents. The Oxford canal is crossed by the old Fosse-road to the westward of this place.

STRETTON (MAGNA), a chapelry in the parish of GLEN MAGNA, hundred of GARTREE, county of LEICESTER, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E. by E.) from Leicester, containing 17 inhabitants. The chapel is dedicated to St. John the Baptist. The Roman Via Devana passes through the chapelry.

STRETTON (PARVA), a chapelry in the parish of KING'S NORTON, hundred of GARTREE, county of LEICESTER, 6 miles (E. S. E.) from Leicester, containing 128 inhabitants.

STRETTON-BASKERVILLE, a parish in the Kirby division of the hundred of KNIGHTLOW, county of WARWICK, 3 miles (E. by S.) from Nuneaton, containing 85 inhabitants. The living is a sinecure rectory, in the archdeaconry of Coventry, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, rated in the king's books at £6. Miss Pinchin and Mrs. Wilcox were patronesses in 1822. The church, which was dedicated to All Saints, is in ruins.

STRETTON-GRANDSOME, a parish in the hundred of RADLOW, county of HEREFORD, $7\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. W.) from Ledbury, containing 150 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, with the perpetual curacy of Ashperton annexed, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Hereford, rated in the king's books at £9. 4. 2., and in the patronage of the Rev. W. Hopton. The church is dedicated to St. Lawrence.

STRETTON-SUGWAS, a parish in the hundred of GRIMSWORTH, county of HEREFORD, $3\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. W. by W.) from Hereford, containing 151 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Hereford, rated in the king's books at £9. 7. 1., and in the patronage of the Governors of Guy's Hospital, London. The church is dedicated to St. Mary Magdalene.

STRICKLAND (GREAT), a township in the parish of MORLAND, WEST ward, county of WESTMORLAND, 6 miles (S. E. by S.) from Penrith, containing 246 inhabitants. There is a meeting-house belonging to the Society of Friends, with a burial-ground attached. A school, for which the building was erected in 1790, is endowed with land purchased with £10 left, in 1757, by Wm. Fletcher, and £20 by Wm. Stephenson, in 1797.

STRICKLAND (LITTLE), a township in the parish of MORLAND, WEST ward, county of WESTMORLAND, $8\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. N. W.) from Orton, containing 115 inhabitants.

STRICKLAND-KETTLE, a township in that part of the parish of KENDAL which is in KENDAL ward, county of WESTMORLAND, 2 miles (N. by W.) from Kendal, containing 390 inhabitants. It is bounded on the east by the Kent river. The chapel and part of the village of Burneside is within this township.

STRICKLAND-ROGER, a township in that part of the parish of KENDAL which is in KENDAL ward, county of WESTMORLAND, 4 miles (N.) from Kendal, containing 341 inhabitants. It is bounded on the west by the river Kent, and on the east by the Sprint, and contains part of the village of Burneside. Near Garnet bridge is a mill for the manufacture of bobbin, and at Cowen Head there is a paper-mill. At a place called Hundhow was anciently a chapel, called Chapel en le Wood.

STRINGSTON, a parish in the hundred of CANNINGTON, county of SOMERSET, $10\frac{1}{4}$ miles (W. N. W.) from Bridg-water, containing 131 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, with the rectory of Kilve united, in the archdeaconry of Taunton, and diocese of Bath and Wells. There is a place of worship for Independents. In the neighbourhood is an ancient fortification, called Danes-burrow, or Douseborough, Castle, with a double embankment and wide ditch; it is about three quarters of a mile in circumference, and is wholly covered with oak coppice wood, among which a prætorium may be distinctly traced. There is a trifling bequest by George Paddon, in 1734, for the education of children.

STRIXTON, a parish in the hundred of HIGHAM-FERRERS, county of NORTHAMPTON, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. by E.) from Wellingborough, containing 56 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, consolidated with the vicarage of Bozeat, in the archdeaconry of Northampton, and diocese of Peterborough, rated in the king's books at £7, and in the patronage of Earl Spencer. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is small, but affords a good specimen of the early style of English architecture.

STROUD, a tything in the parish of CUMNER, hundred of HORMER, county of BERKS, containing 76 inhabitants.

STROUD, or STROUDWATER, a market town and parish in the hundred of BISLEY, county of GLOUCESTER, 10 miles (S. by E.) from Gloucester, and 102 (W. by N.) from London, containing 7097 inhabitants. This place, which formerly belonged to the parish of Bisley, derives its name from its situation on the Slade, or Stroud water, near its confluence with the Frome. It stands on a considerable declivity, in the midst of a most beautiful country, and consists principally of a long street extending up the side of the hill, which is crossed by another at its base: the streets are paved, and contain many handsome houses, and the inhabitants are well supplied with water conveyed by pipes from two springs in the neighbourhood. Stroud has long been famous as the centre of the woollen manufacture in Gloucestershire, and is supposed to owe much of its prosperity to the peculiar properties of the stream called the Stroud water, which is admirably adapted for dyeing scarlet, and which, consequently, was the means of attracting, at an early period, many clothiers and dyers to its banks. It possesses great advantages in water-carriage, the Thames and Severn canal passing close to the south of the town. The inhabitants of the neighbourhood and surrounding villages are employed in different processes of this manufacture, several thousand pieces of broad and narrow cloth being annually made, and conveyed by the canal to different parts of the empire. The town has been greatly improved recently, in consequence of an act of parliament obtained, within a few years, for paving, lighting, and widening the streets; and many new roads have been formed extending in various directions, to connect it more closely with the contiguous towns. The market, which is on Friday, is well supplied; and there are fairs on the 10th of May and the 21st of August, for cattle, sheep, and pigs. The petty sessions for the hundred are held here, on the first and third Fridays in every month. Stroud is also within the jurisdiction of the court of requests, for the recovery of debts under 40s., held at Cirencester, on Thursday every three weeks; and in that of a court baron held annually by the lord of the manor of Bisley. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Gloucester, endowed with £400 private benefaction, £400 royal bounty, and £800 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Bishop of Gloucester: there is an endowed lectureship, in the gift of the parishioners. The church, dedicated to St. Lawrence, is a large building, erected and enlarged at several different periods, with a tower at its western end, surmounted by a lofty octangular steeple. There are places of worship for Particular Baptists, Independents, and Wesleyan Methodists. Thomas Webb, in 1642, gave an endowment, now amounting to about £54 per annum, by means of which four poor boys are boarded, clothed, and educated; and, in 1734, Henry Windowe bequeathed £21 for the maintenance and clothing of two more: there are other small endowments for educating and apprenticing poor boys, and several hundred children are instructed in the Sunday schools. The parochial school, instituted, in 1700, by the Rev. William Johns, is supported by annual subscriptions. Many endowments also provide relief for the poor, and several friendly societies for the benefit of such as are sick have been established. Stroud is the birthplace of John Canton, F.R.S., a celebrated natural philosopher, who died in 1772; and Joseph White, D.D., Professor of Arabic at Oxford, who died in 1814; both these distinguished men were the sons of weavers.

STROUD, a parish partly within the jurisdiction of the borough of ROCHESTER, and partly in the hundred of SHAMWELL, lathe of AYLESFORD, county of KENT, $\frac{1}{2}$ a mile (N. W.) from Rochester, containing 2704 inhabitants. The village consists of one principal street, on the high road from London to Rochester, to which latter place it is joined by a bridge over the Medway, at its eastern extremity: the houses are irregularly built, and equally destitute of uniformity and respectability of appearance; but since the last act of parliament for paving, watching, and lighting the village, it has been considerably improved: the adjoining heights command interesting and extensive prospects. The inhabitants are principally engaged in maritime pursuits, in the fisheries on the Medway, and in dredging for oysters, of which large quantities, as well as shrimps, are sent to the London and other markets: the trade principally arises from the resort of sea-faring men, from its situation as a thoroughfare, and, more particularly, from its proximity to Rochester. The fair is on August 17th, and the three following days, by grant of King John, and has become very considerable. That part of the parish, called Stroud Extra, which is not within the borough of Rochester is under the jurisdiction of the county magistrates, and within that of the court of requests held at Rochester, for the recovery of debts not exceeding £5. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Rochester, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Rochester. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is a neat building of stone, situated at the western extremity of the village, and consists of a nave and aisles; in the south aisle is a chapel, the floor of which contains some handsome specimens of Mosaic work. There is a place of worship for Independents. Francis Barrell, Esq., in 1718, bequeathed £1100 for the endowment of three charity schools, one to be in Stroud, for instructing thirty children, of which number twenty were to be of this parish; and, in 1721, Mr. William Turner gave a rent-charge of £2 for the same purpose. Of Stroud Temple, originally a preceptory founded for Knights Templars, and valued at the dissolution at £52. 6. 10., there are some interesting remains on the Temple farm; and of Stroud hospital, founded by Bishop Gilbert de Glanville, in the reign of Richard I., for infirm and indigent travellers, the almonry, which has been converted into a stable, and some other portions, are remaining. About two miles from Stroud, on the London road, is Gadshill, celebrated by Shakspeare as the scene of Falstaff's valorous exploits.

STROUD-END, a tything in the parish of PAINSWICK, hundred of BISLEY, county of GLOUCESTER, containing 812 inhabitants.

STROXTON, a parish in the wapentake of WINNIBRIGGS and THREO, parts of KESTEVEN, county of LINCOLN, $3\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. S. W.) from Grantham, containing 140 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £3. 8. $6\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of Sir W. E. Welby, Bart. The church is dedicated to All Saints.

STRUBBY, a parish in the Wold division of the hundred of CALCEWORTH, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 4 miles (N.) from Alford, containing, with Woodthorp, 255 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £4. 13. 4., and endowed with £200 royal bounty. The church is dedicated to St. Oswald.

STRUMPSHAW, a parish in the hundred of BLOFIELD, county of NORFOLK, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W. by W.) from Acle, containing 318 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, united to that of Bradeston, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £8. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. Here is a windmill, standing on the highest ground in the county, and forming a conspicuous landmark.

STUBBS, a joint township with Hamphall, in the parish of ADWICK le STREET, northern division of the wapentake of STRAFFORTH and TICKHILL, West riding of the county of YORK, 7 miles (N. W.) from Doncaster. The population is returned with Hamphall.

STUBBY-LANE, a hamlet in the parish of HAMBURY, northern division of the hundred of OFFLOW, county of STAFFORD, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E.) from Uttoxeter, containing 177 inhabitants. It is in the honour of Tutbury, duchy of Lancaster, and within the jurisdiction of a court of pleas held at Tutbury every third Tuesday, for the recovery of debts under 40s.

STUBLACH, a township in that part of the parish of MIDDLEWICH which is in the hundred of NORTHWICH, county palatine of CHESTER, 3 miles (N. by E.) from Middlewich, containing 64 inhabitants.

STUBTON, a parish in the wapentake of LOVEDEN, parts of KESTEVEN, county of LINCOLN, $6\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. E. by E.) from Newark, containing 174 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £12. 3. 9., and in the patronage of Sir Robert Heron, Bart. The church is dedicated to St. Martin.

STUDHAM, a parish partly in the hundred of DACORUM, county of HERTFORD, but chiefly in the hundred of MANSHEAD, county of BEDFORD, comprising the hamlets of Humbershoe, Studham, and part of that of Market-Street, and containing 774 inhabitants, of which number, 173 are in the hamlet of Studham, $3\frac{3}{4}$ miles (W. by S.) from Market-Street. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Bedford, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £9, endowed with £400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

STUDLAND, a parish in the hundred of ROWBARROW, Blandford (South) division of the county of DORSET, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by N.) from Corfe-Castle, containing 382 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Dorset, and diocese of Bristol, rated in the king's books at £7. 10. 5., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of Edmond Morton Pleydell, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is supposed to have been built about the time of the Conquest. The parish, which includes Brownsea and several smaller islands, is bounded on the north by Poole harbour, on the east by Studland bay, and by Swanage bay on the south-east, where there is a signal station, on a hill called Ballard down. The bay, though an open roadstead, affords excellent anchorage for ships drawing fourteen or fifteen feet of water. Brownsea island is of an oval form, about three miles in circumference, and contained anciently a hermitage and chapel, dedicated to St. Andrew, of which there are now no remains. The castle, at its eastern extremity, was built in the reign of Elizabeth, by the inhabitants of Poole, for the defence of that port: adjoining it is a platform, upon which, in time of war, a few pieces of ordnance are mounted. There is also a quay, where vessels of considerable burden can lie conveniently for taking in, or discharging, their cargoes. On Studland common there are many ancient barrows, which must be either British or Danish, the principal of them is ninety feet in perpendicular height, and is called Agglestone, or Stone Barrow, from its being surmounted by an enormous circular red sand-stone, eighteen feet high, and computed to weigh four hundred tons.

STUDLEY, a chapelry in the parish of BECKLEY, partly in the hundred of ASHENDON, county of BUCKINGHAM, and partly in that of BULLINGTON, county of OXFORD, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E. by E.) from Oxford, containing, with the hamlet of Horton, 429 inhabitants. A priory of Benedictine nuns, in honour of the Blessed Virgin Mary, was founded here, in the reign of Henry II., by Bernard de S. Walerico, which at the dissolution had a revenue of £102. 6. 7.

STUDLEY, a parish in the Alcester division of the hundred of BARLICHWAY, county of WARWICK, $4\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. by W.) from Alcester, containing 1338 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Worcester, rated in the king's books at £8, endowed with £200 private benefaction, £600 royal bounty, and £1000 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of R. Knight, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. Studley is situated on the river Arrow, and has a large manufacture of needles and fish-hooks, which affords employment to many of the inhabitants. Eight children are taught free, and two are annually clothed, from a small income arising from bequests by William Mortiboys, in 1733, and William Ayres, in 1739: the school-house was built by subscription in 1810. There are considerable remains of a priory, founded, in honour of St. Mary, early in the reign of Henry II., by Peter de Studley, who translated hither a Society of Augustine canons, which he had previously established at Wicton in Worcestershire: this house, at the dissolution, had a revenue of £181. 3. 6., and at its gate William de Cantilupe erected an hospital for the relief of poor impotent people.

STUDLEY-ROGER, a township in that part of the parish of RIPON which is in the lower division of the wapentake of CLARO, West riding of the county of YORK, $1\frac{3}{4}$ mile (W. S. W.) from Ripon, containing 144 inhabitants. It is within the peculiar jurisdiction of the Archbishop of York.

STUDLEY-ROYAL, a hamlet in that part of the parish of RIPON which is in the lower division of the wapentake of CLARO, West riding of the county of YORK, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. S. W.) from Ripon, containing 19 inhabitants. It is within the peculiar jurisdiction of the Archbishop of York.

STUKELEY (GREAT), a parish in the hundred of HURSTINGSTONE, county of HUNTINGDON, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W.) from Huntingdon, containing 341 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Huntingdon, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £6. 14. 2., and in the patronage of the Master and Fellows of Trinity Hall, Cambridge. The church, dedicated to St. Bartholomew, is principally in the Norman style of architecture.

STUKELEY (LITTLE), a parish in the hundred of HURSTINGSTONE, county of HUNTINGDON, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. W. by N.) from Huntingdon, containing 385 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Huntingdon, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £13. 13. $1\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of Lady Olivia Sparrow. The church is dedicated to St. Martin.

STUNTNEY, a chapelry in the parish of the HOLY TRINITY, ELY, hundred and Isle of ELY, county of CAMBRIDGE, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (S. E.) from Ely. The population is returned with the parish. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Ely, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Vicar of Holy Trinity parish, Ely. The chapel is in the Norman style of architecture.

STURBRIDGE, county of CAMBRIDGE. — See STOURBRIDGE.

STURMER, a parish in the hundred of HINCKFORD, county of ESSEX, 6 miles (W. by S.) from Clare, containing 311 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the jurisdiction of the Commissary of Essex and Herts, concurrently with the Consistorial Court of the Bishop of London, rated in the king's books at £8. 10., and in the patronage of the Duke of Rutland. Sturmer, though now an obscure place, was formerly of considerable importance: it extended into the counties of Suffolk and Cambridge, and also included Haverhill and Kedington, then hamlets, but now distinct parishes, each exceeding it both in extent and population.

STURMINSTER-MARSHALL, a parish in the hundred of COGDEAN, Shaston (East) division of the county of DORSET, 5 miles (W.) from Wimborne-Minster, containing, with the tything of Coombe-Almer, 715 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, with the perpetual curacy of Lytchett-Minster annexed, in the jurisdiction of the peculiar court of Sturminster-Marshall, rated in the king's books at £31. 5., and in the patronage of the Provost and Fellows of Eton College. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a spacious structure, with an embattled tower, a remarkably large chancel, and, at the west end of the north aisle, an apartment partitioned off with wainscoting, for holding the peculiar court. The navigable river Stour bounds the parish on the north-east, and is there crossed by Whitmill bridge, of eight arches. In the centre of the village is an open space, still called the market-place, though no market has been held within the memory of man. Early in the reign of Henry I., a fair was granted to William, Earl of Pembroke, then Earl Marshal, from whom the place probably obtained its distinguishing appellation, the name itself being derived from the church, or minster, on the river Stour. A charity school is well supported by annual subscriptions. Cogdean-Elmes, an eminence in this parish, near which are several barrows and some large elms, gives name to the hundred, the courts of which were anciently held upon it.

STURMINSTER-NEWTON-CASTLE, a market town and parish in the hundred of STURMINSTER-NEWTON-CASTLE, Sturminster division of the county of DORSET, 8 miles (S. W.) from Shaftesbury, and 108 (W. S. W.) from London, containing 1612 inhabitants. This place, which derives its name from the river on the northern bank of which it stands, and the minster, or church, is supposed to be the Anicetis of Ravennas, and was early known to the Saxons; some lands here having been given by Alfred to his son Ethelwald. In 968, Edgar gave the manor of Sturre, or Stour, to the abbey of Glastonbury, and the grant was confirmed by Edmund Ironside; and in the Norman survey it was included in Newenton, or Newton. At the dissolution it was given by Henry VIII. to Catherine Parr, and, after her death, by Edward VI. to his sister Elizabeth, who devised it to Sir Christopher Hatton, from whom it passed to the family of Lord Rivers. In 1645, some hundred clubmen of Dorsetshire and Wiltshire forced the quarters of the parliamentary troops here, and, after some slaughter on both sides, were victorious, taking sixteen dragoons, with several horses and arms. In 1681, and 1729, the town suffered by conflagrations, having sustained damage at the latter period to the amount of £13,000. Sturminster-Newton is formed by the two townships of Sturminster and Newton, occupying different sides of the river Stour, and connected by a causeway and bridge of six arches; the latter has been lately widened and improved, and the formed raised, so as to prevent the inundation to which it was previously subject. The streets are in general narrow, and the houses low and indifferently built, except in the market-place, where there is a large oblong market-house, with ware-rooms above and shambles below. A turnpike road, lately completed, runs through this town to Sherborne, and the Dorset and Somerset canal passes eastward of it. Some trade is carried on with Newfoundland, and the little manufacture in the town consists of baizes, though woollen goods were formerly made. The market is held on Thursday, and on every alternate Thursday is a large market for cattle: fairs are May 12th and October 24th. A court leet is held annually, at which the constable for the hundred, and tythingmen, are appointed. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Dorset, and diocese of Bristol, rated in the king's books at £16. 16. 8., and in the patronage of Lord Rivers. The church, a handsome edifice dedicated to St. Mary, is situated on the south side of the town, and was originally built by John Selwood, abbot of Glastonbury, but has been lately rebuilt by the Rev. Thomas Lane Fox; it consists of a chancel, nave, and two aisles, with an embattled tower. A chapel of ease, which stood at Bagbere in this parish, has fallen into decay. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. A National school, for children of both sexes, has been also recently erected by the Rev. T. L. Fox, by whom it is principally supported. The principal object of interest is an ancient fortification, or camp, called the Castle, situated on an eminence in Newton, near the south bank of the river, supposed to have been constructed by the Romans, or not later than the Saxon era: it consists of a vallum and deep foss, in the shape of the Roman letter D, and on the top, near the centre, is a small artificial mount, or keep, near which are the ruins of an ancient house, where the courts were formerly held.

STURRY, a parish in the hundred of BLEANGATE, lathe of St. AUGUSTINE, county of KENT, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E.) from Canterbury, containing 878 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Canterbury, rated in the king's books at £13. 1. 8., and in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is in the early style of English architecture, with a tower surmounted by a spire. The river Stour runs through the parish, and is crossed by a bridge at the village, which is large and well built, on the road between Canterbury and the Isle of Thanet. A fair is held here on Whit-Monday.

STURSTON, a hamlet in that part of the parish of ASHBOURN which is in the hundred of APPLETREE, county of DERBY, 1 mile (E.) from Ashbourn, containing 561 inhabitants.

STURSTON, a parish in the hundred of GRIMSHOE, county of NORFOLK, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. W. by S.) from Watton, containing 42 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Norwich, endowed with £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of Lord Walsingham. The church is dedicated to the Holy Cross.

STURTON, a township in the parish of SCAWBY, eastern division of the wapentake of MANLEY, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. W.) from Glandford-Bridge. The population is returned with the parish.

STURTON, a joint township with Bransby, in the parish of STOW, wapentake of WELL, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $8\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. E.) from Gainsborough, containing 268 inhabitants. It is within the peculiar jurisdiction of the Prebendary of Stow in Lindsey in the Cathedral Church of Lincoln. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. The Countess Dowager of Warwick, in 1626, gave an annuity of £5 for teaching poor children; and Edward Burgh subsequently bequeathed property, producing about £7 per annum, for a like purpose.

STURTON, a parish in the North-clay division of the wapentake of BASSETLAW, county of NOTTINGHAM, 6 miles (E. N. E.) from East Retford, containing 605 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Nottingham, and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £5. 7. $3\frac{1}{2}$., endowed with £600 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of York. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. The Roman road from Lincoln to Doncaster passes through the parish, and the river Trent forms its southern boundary. A National school, erected in 1830, is partly supported by a rental of £6. 14., the gift of George Green, in 1710, for teaching eight poor children. Several coins were lately discovered here, and among them one of Louis XIII., and a leaden seal of Pope Innocent III.

STURTON (GREAT), a parish in the northern division of the wapentake of GARTREE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by N.) from Horncastle, containing 145 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £8, endowed with £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to All Saints.

STURTON-GRANGE, a township in that part of the parish of WARKWORTH which is in the eastern division of COQUETDALE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. N. W.) from Warkworth, containing 72 inhabitants.

STURTON-GRANGE, a township in the parish of ABERFORD, lower division of the wapentake of SKYRACK, West riding of the county of YORK, 7 miles (E.) from Leeds, containing 92 inhabitants.

STUSTON, a parish in the hundred of HARTIS-MERE, county of SUFFOLK, 3 miles (N. by W.) from Eye, containing 208 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Sudbury, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £6. 16. 8., and in the patronage of Sir Edward Kerrison, Bart. The church is dedicated to All Saints.

STUTCHBURY, a parish in the hundred of KING'S SUTTON, county of NORTHAMPTON, 5 miles (N. by W.) from Brackley, containing 32 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Northampton, and diocese of Peterborough, rated in the king's books at £3. 6. 8., and in the patronage of the University of Oxford. The church, which was dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is destroyed.

STUTTON, a parish in the hundred of SAMFORD, county of SUFFOLK, 6½ miles (S. by W.) from Ipswich, containing 475 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Suffolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £12. 17. 6., and in the patronage of the Rev. Thomas Mills. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. The river Stour separates this parish from Essex, and, at high tides, is here from two to three miles broad. The gateway and other remains of Stutton hall are good specimens of the domestic style of architecture prevalent in the reign of Elizabeth: it was formerly the residence of the ancient family of Jermys, and is now occupied by a tenant.

STUTTON, a joint township with Hazlewood, in that part of the parish of TADCASTER which is in the upper division of the wapentake of BARKSTONE-ASH, West riding of the county of YORK, 1½ mile (S. by W.) from Tadcaster, containing 256 inhabitants. In the neighbourhood are quarries of excellent limestone, and several limekilns.

STYDD, a township in the parish of SHIRLEY, hundred of APPLETREE, county of DERBY, 4¾ miles (S. by W.) from Ashbourn, containing 30 inhabitants.

STYFORD, a township in the parish of BYWELL St. Andrew, eastern division of TINDALE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, 7 miles (E. by S.) from Hexham, containing 69 inhabitants. It is bounded on the south by the river Tyne.

STYRRUP, a township in the parishes of BLYTH, HARWORTH, and HOUGHTON, Hatfield division of the wapentake of BASSETLAW, county of NOTTINGHAM, 3½ miles (W. S. W.) from Bawtry, containing 444 inhabitants.

SUCKLEY, a parish in the upper division of the hundred of DODDINGTREE, county of WORCESTER, 5½ miles (E. S. E.) from Bromyard, containing, with the chaptries of Alfrick and Lulsley, 1187 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Worcester, rated in the king's books at £26. 19. 4½., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. John the Baptist. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. Courts leet and baron are annually held here. A school for the education of the poor is endowed with about £8 per annum.

SUDBORNE, a parish in the hundred of PLOMES-GATE, county of SUFFOLK, 1½ mile (N. by E.) from Orford, containing 561 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, with the perpetual curacy of Orford annexed, in the archdeaconry of Suffolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £33. 6. 8., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to All Saints. The parish is bounded on the east by the North sea: on the shore is a lighthouse, called, with another in the adjoining parish of Orford, "The Orfordness Lights."

SUDBOROUGH, a parish in the hundred of HUXLOE, county of NORTHAMPTON, 4¼ miles (N. W.) from Thrapstone, containing 294 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Northampton, and diocese of Peterborough, rated in the king's books at £10. 5. 10., and in the patronage of the Bishop of London. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is in the early, decorated, and later English, styles of architecture.

SUDBROOK, a parish in the upper division of the hundred of CALDICOTT, county of MONMOUTH, 5½ miles (S. W. by S.) from Chepstow. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Llandaff, rated in the king's books at £4. 14. 7., endowed with £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of R. C. Vaughan, Esq. The church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, is in ruins: the parish has greatly declined in importance.

SUDBROOKE, a parish in the wapentake of LAWRESS, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 4¾ miles (N. E.) from Lincoln, containing 103 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Stow, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £7. 10., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Lincoln. The church is dedicated to St. Edward.

SUDBURY, a parish in the hundred of APPLETREE, county of DERBY, 5 miles (E. by S.) from Uttoxeter, containing 628 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Derby, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, rated in the king's books at £14. 13. 1½., and in the patronage of Lord Vernon. The church, dedicated to All Saints, contains some very ancient monuments. Here are almshouses for seven poor persons.

SUDBURY, a borough and market town, having separate jurisdiction, locally in the hundred of Babergh, county of SUFFOLK, 22 miles (W. by S.) from Ipswich, and 56 (N. E. by N.) from London, containing, according to the last census, 3950 inhabitants, which number has since increased to nearly 5000. This place, which was originally called South Burgh, is of great antiquity, and at the period of the compilation of Domesday-book was of considerable importance, having a market and a mint. A colony of the Flemings, who were introduced into this country by Edward III., for the purpose of establishing the manufacture of woollen cloth, settled here, and that branch of trade continued to flourish for some time, but at length fell to decay. The town is situated on the river Stour, which is crossed by a bridge leading into Essex. For some years after its loss of the woollen trade, it possessed few attractions, the houses belonging principally to decayed manufacturers, and the streets being very dirty: it has, however, within the last few years, been greatly improved, having been paved and lighted in 1825, under an act obtained for the purpose, and some good houses built. The town hall, recently erected by the corporation, in the Grecian style of architecture, is a great ornament to the town, in which is also a neat theatre. The trade principally consists in the manufacture of silk, crape, and buntings used for ships' flags: that of silk was introduced by the manufacturers from Spitalfields, in consequence of disputes with their workmen, and now affords employment to a great number of persons, about one thousand five hundred being engaged in the silk, and four hundred in the crape and bunting business. The river Stour, navigable hence to Manningtree, affords a facility for the transmission of coal, chalk, lime, and agricultural produce. The statute market is on Saturday, and the corn market on Thursday: fairs are held on the 12th of March and 10th of July, principally for earthenware, glass, and toys.

The first charter of incorporation was granted by Queen Mary, in 1554, and confirmed by Elizabeth, in 1559: another was given by Oliver Cromwell, but that under which the corporation derives its power was bestowed by Charles II. The government is in a mayor, six aldermen, and twenty-four capital burgesses, with a recorder, town clerk, bailiff, chief constable, and subordinate officers. The mayor is elected from among the aldermen by the capital burgesses, with the assent of twenty-four freeholders, and the capital burgesses are elected by the court. The mayor and his immediate predecessor are justices of the peace, the former holding courts of quarter session, and a court of record, every Monday, for the recovery of debts to the amount or damage of £20, the jurisdiction of which is co-extensive with the borough. The freedom is obtained by birth, apprenticeship, purchase, or gift of the corporation. The borough first sent members to parliament in the commencement of the reign of Elizabeth, when the elective franchise was vested in the body corporate; but it has since been decided to be in the freemen, who are about eight hundred in number: the mayor is the returning officer.

Sudbury comprises the parishes of All Saints, St. Gregory, and St. Peter, in the archdeaconry of Sudbury, and diocese of Norwich. The living of All Saints' is a discharged vicarage, rated in the king's books at £4. 11. 5½., endowed with £400 royal bounty, and £1200 parliamentary grant. Henry Sperling, Esq. was patron in 1811. The living of St. Gregory's is a perpetual curacy, with that of St. Peter annexed, endowed with £400 private benefaction, and £1400 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of Sir Lachlan Maclean. The churches are all of considerable antiquity, and are spacious and handsome structures, mostly in the later English style of architecture, of which they present some fine specimens, though generally much defaced. St. Gregory's, which is the most ancient, was formerly collegiate, until Henry VIII. granted its site and other possessions, for a sum of £1280, to Sir T. Paston, Knt.: it contains a very magnificent font, and in a niche in the wall of the vestry-room, enclosed with an iron grating, is a human head, supposed to be that of Symon de Theobald, alias de Sudbury, Archbishop of Canterbury in the time of Richard II., a native of this town, who was beheaded by the mob in Wat Tyler's rebellion. One hundred and thirty free seats have been added to the church of St. Peter, towards defraying the expense of which the Incorporated Society for the enlargement of churches and chapels gave £30. The free grammar school was founded, in 1491, by William Wood, who endowed it with a farm, called the School farm, in the parish of Little Maplestead, in the county of Essex, worth about £100 per annum; a good house is provided for the master, with a large school-room, and about one acre of land, for which he pays a moderate rent: there are six boys on the foundation, whose parents must be inhabitants of Sudbury. There is also a National school, with a small endowment, in which about one hundred and thirty children are instructed. The hospital of St. Leonard, for lepers, was founded by John Colneys, and endowed, by Simon Theobald de Sudbury, with about five acres of land, a chapel, and a dwelling-house: it is now in the possession of the corporation of the poor, and is applied towards their maintenance. From a bequest by Thomas Carter, fifty poor men receive coats and fifty poor women gowns annually on St. Thomas' day, and there are several other smaller charities for the benefit of the poor. The college of St. Gregory, for Secular priests, founded by Simon de Theobald, was richly endowed, and valued, at the period of the dissolution, at £122 per annum: its only remains are the gateway, and portions of a wall now forming a part of the workhouse. A gateway, part of a monastery of Augustine friars, standing in Friars'-street, also exists. About half a mile from the town is a spring of exceedingly pure water, which, from its supposed efficacy in curing many painful diseases, is called by the inhabitants "Holy water." Sudbury is the birthplace of Gainsborough, the celebrated painter. It gives the inferior title of baron to the Duke of Grafton.

SUDELEY-MANOR, a parish in the lower division of the hundred of KIFTSGATE, county of GLOUCESTER, 1 mile (S. S. E.) from Winchcombe, containing 90 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Gloucester, rated in the king's books at £6. 11. 5½., and in the patronage of Lord Rivers. The church, which has remained in a dilapidated state ever since the injury it sustained in the great civil war, was the burial-place of Queen Catharine Parr, and of several of the family of Bridges. The ancient castle is said to have been built, ex spoliis Gallorum, by Boteler, Lord Sudeley, a celebrated warrior in the reigns of Henry V. and VI., who sold it to Edward IV., for fear of confiscation. It was granted by Edward VI. to his uncle, Lord Seymour, who espoused Queen Catharine Parr. Mary bestowed it upon Sir John Bridges, created by her Baron Chandos of Sudeley, whose grandson, the third Lord Chandos, here entertained Queen Elizabeth, in 1592. George, the sixth lord, having embraced the cause of Charles I., the castle was twice besieged by the parliamentary forces, who reduced it to its present state of ruin: the remains are considerable and interesting.

SUDELEY-TENEMENTS, a hamlet in the parish of WINCHCOMBE, lower division of the hundred of KIFTSGATE, county of GLOUCESTER. The population is returned with the parish.

SUFFIELD, a parish in the northern division of the hundred of ERPINGHAM, county of NORFOLK, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (W. by N.) from North Walsham, containing 238 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £14, and in the patronage of Lord Suffield. The church is dedicated to St. Margaret. Suffield gives the title of baron to the family of Harbord.

SUFFIELD, a joint township with Everley, in the parish of HACKNESS, liberty of WHITBY-STRAND, North riding of the county of YORK, 5 miles (W. N. W.) from Scarborough, containing, with Everley, 97 inhabitants.

SUFFOLK, a maritime county, bounded on the east by the North Sea, or German Ocean, on the north by the county of Norfolk, on the west by that of Cambridge, and on the south by that of Essex. It extends from $51^{\circ} 56'$ to $52^{\circ} 36'$ (N. Lat.), and from $23'$ to $1^{\circ} 44'$ (E. Lon.), comprising an area of about one thousand five hundred and twelve square miles, or nine hundred and sixty-seven thousand six hundred and eighty statute acres. The population, in 1821, was 270,542. At the period of the Roman invasion this county formed part of the territory inhabited by the Iceni, or Cenomanni, who, according to Whitaker, were descended from the Cenomanni of Gaul. Under the Roman dominion it was included in the division called Flavia Cæsariensis. After the withdrawal of the Roman legions, Cerdic, one of the earliest Saxon invaders, and founder of the kingdom of Wessex, landed, in 495, at a place afterwards called Cerdic Sand, in the hundred of Mutford and Lothingland, forming the north-eastern extremity of the county, and, after gaining some advantages over the opposing Britons, set sail for the western parts of the island. During the succeeding invasions of the Saxons, the territory now comprised in the counties of Suffolk, Cambridge, and Norfolk, was erected by Uffa, about the year 575, into the kingdom of East Anglia, in which the relative position of this district obtained for its inhabitants the name of Suth-folc, or southern people (in contradistinction to those of Norfolk, who were called the North-folc, or northern people), whence, by contraction, its modern name. The Christian religion was permanently established in this kingdom by King Sigebert, who brought over with him a Burgundian ecclesiastic, named Felix, whom he made bishop of East Anglia, and who fixed his seat at Dunwich, in this county, where he died, in 647. Bisa, or Bosa, on succeeding to this see, in 669, divided it into two bishopricks, the seat of one of which was fixed at North Elmham, in Norfolk, the other remaining at Dunwich; but these were re-united about the year 870, when North Elmham became the sole seat of the diocese. In 655, during the struggles for independence maintained by East Anglia against the powerful kingdom of Mercia, then under the sway of Penda, a battle was fought at Bulcamp, near Dunwich, in which Anna, monarch of the East Angles, and his son Ferminus, were slain. East Anglia was again the scene of desolation, at the period of its subjugation by Offa, King of Mercia, who had basely assassinated its king, Ethelbert. It remained tributary to Mercia until, in the reign of Egbert, the kingdom of Wessex obtained a preponderating influence in the Octarchy: under that monarch it continued to have its own sovereigns, until the reign of the East Anglian king, Edmund, who, after being barbarously murdered by the Danes under Ingvar and Ubba, was surnamed the Martyr. These marauders directing their early attacks chiefly upon this part of the island, possessed themselves of the whole of East Anglia before the death of Egbert, making lamentable ravages in their progress. After the total defeat of the Danes by Alfred, in the West of England, East Anglia was one of the principal portions of territory allotted to them, for their limited residence, by that monarch. Suffolk suffered severely on the invasion by Sweyn, King of Denmark, who landed at Ipswich in 1010, and at Rushmere, or, according to some, at a place called Seven Hills, in the parish of Nacton, signally defeated the Saxons under Earl Ulfketel.

Some time after the Norman Conquest had changed the political system of the whole kingdom, in the year 1153, Ipswich was besieged and taken by King Stephen; his son Eustace also made some ravages in the vicinity of Bury, at which town he died, on St. Lawrence's day in the same year. During the reign of Henry II., in 1173, the Earl of Leicester, in support of the demands of Prince Henry, the king's eldest son, landed at Wadgate haven, in this county, with an army of Flemings, and was immediately joined by Hugh Bigod, Earl of Norfolk: their united forces overran the whole county, which, in a great measure, they laid waste; but, being met at Fornham St. Geneveve, near Bury, by Richard de Lucy, Chief Justice of England, and Humphrey de Bohun, the constable, they were defeated with great slaughter, and Leicester and his countess made prisoners. In 1215, during the baronial war, Saher de Quincy, Earl of Winchester, withdrew, with his army of foreign mercenaries, from the siege of Colchester to Bury St. Edmund's; and Louis the Dauphin, in the two following years, in conjunction with the barons opposed to the king, reduced the whole of this county to subjection, committing great devastation in it. In 1267, Henry III. mustered a large body of his forces at Bury, the insurgent barons being at that time strongly posted in the Isle of Ely. In 1326, Isabella, queen of Edward II., landed with an army on the coast of Suffolk, and thence marched to Bury, where she remained a considerable time, recruiting her forces, and collecting her adherents. In the reign of Richard II., at the period of Wat Tyler's rebellion, many of the men of Suffolk joined the Norfolk insurgents in their formidable revolt, which was at last suppressed by the military exertions of Spencer, Bishop of Norwich. In 1486, Henry VII. made a progress through Suffolk, under the apprehension of its being invaded by the supporters of Lambert Simnel, the pretended Edward Plantagenet. In the fifteenth year of this reign, Ralph Wilford, the son of a shoemaker, was instructed, by an Augustine friar of this county, to personate the Earl of Warwick, and the story soon gained credit, the friar asserting its authenticity from the pulpit: both master and pupil were, however, soon arrested; the latter was hanged, and the former condemned to perpetual imprisonment. In 1526, the Dukes of Norfolk and Suffolk met at Bury, and succeeded in quelling an alarming insurrection which had broken out in the southern parts of Suffolk, at Lavenham, Hadleigh, Sudbury, &c. In 1549, it being reported that the leader of the Norfolk rebels, named Kett, had formed a camp on Mousehold heath, near Norwich, the lower orders of the people assembled in great numbers, and, having made themselves masters of Lothingland, seized six pieces of cannon at Lowestoft, with which they proceeded to batter Yarmouth, but their design was frustrated by the inhabitants of that port, and many of them were made prisoners. On the death of Edward VI., the inhabitants of Suffolk showed great zeal in supporting the claims of the Princess Mary, in opposition to the adherents of Lady Jane Grey; and Mary, at this period, removed from Norfolk to Framlingham castle, in this county. In 1561, Queen Elizabeth made a progress through Suffolk; as also in 1578, when she was received on its confines by a magnificent cavalcade, headed by the high sheriff, which again attended her Majesty on her departure.

In the civil war of the seventeenth century, this was one of the eastern counties that were associated in the cause of the parliament, and placed under the command of the Earl of Manchester. Sir Edward Barker, Sir John Petty, and other loyal gentlemen, endeavoured to raise a force to secure it for the king, but were surprised and reduced to obedience to the parliament by Cromwell. During the war with the Dutch, in the reign of Charles II., on June 3rd, 1665, the memorable engagement between the English and Dutch fleets, in which the latter was defeated, with the loss of eighteen ships taken, and fourteen sunk or burned, and about six thousand men, of whom two thousand were made prisoners, occurred off Lowestoft. In 1667, the Dutch landed three thousand men under Felixstow cliff, near the southern extremity of the coast, who, marching to the adjacent fort, after an hour's incessant firing with small arms, were put to flight by the discharge of two or three small guns on board a galliot lying among the shingles. Southwold bay, commonly called Sole bay, is celebrated as the scene of the sanguinary and obstinate conflict, on the 28th of May, 1672, between the united fleets of England and France on the one side, and the Dutch fleet on the other, in which the French squadron, sheering off soon after the commencement of the action, left the engagement to the English and the Dutch: the Dutch vessels that were not either sunk or burned, being dreadfully shattered, were at last obliged to retreat; while the English, having suffered in an equal degree, were unable to pursue. In the year 1782, Lowestoft, and various other points on this coast, were strongly fortified, on account of a threatened foreign invasion.

Suffolk is comprised in the diocese of Norwich, and province of Canterbury. Its western part, with such parishes in Cambridgeshire as belong to the same diocese, constitute the archdeaconry of Sudbury, which is divided into eight deaneries, seven of which are in the county, viz., those of Blackbourn, Clare, Hartismere, Stow, Sudbury, Thedwestry, and Thingoe; its eastern part forms the archdeaconry of Suffolk, which contains the fourteen deaneries of Bosmere, Carlford, Claydon, Colneis, Dunwich, Hoxne, Ipswich, Loes, Lothingland, Orford, Samford, South Elmham, Wangford, and Wilford: the total number of parishes is five hundred, of which three hundred and twenty-two are rectories, ninety-seven vicarages, and the remainder perpetual curacies. For purposes of civil government it is divided into the twenty-one hundreds of Babergh, Blackbourn, Blything, Bosmere and Claydon, Carlford, Colneis, Cosford, Hartismere, Hoxne, Lackford, Loes, Mutford and Lothingland, Plomesgate, Risbridge, Samford, Stow, Thedwestry, Thingoe, Thredling, Wangford, and Wilford. It contains the borough, market town, and sea-port of Ipswich; the boroughs and sea-ports of Aldborough, and Dunwich; the borough and market towns of Bury St. Edmund's, Eye, and Sudbury; the borough of Orford; the market towns and sea-ports of Lowestoft, Southwold, and Woodbridge; and the market towns of Beccles, Bungay, Clare, Debenham, Framlingham, Hadleigh, Saxmundham, and Stow-Market. Two knights are returned to parliament for the shire; and two representatives for each of the boroughs: the county members are elected at Ipswich, where stands the county gaol. Suffolk is included in the Norfolk circuit: the assizes are held at Bury. There are one hundred and ten acting magistrates. The rates raised in the county for the year ending March 25th, 1827, amounted to £253,475. 19., and the expenditure to £252,283. 14., of which £223,037. 2. was applied to the relief of the poor.

The two grand civil divisions are, the franchise, or liberty, of Bury St. Edmund's, and the remaining part, or body of the county, as it is termed, each at the county assizes, furnishing a distinct grand jury. In its civil government Suffolk is also divided into the Geldable portion, in which the issues and forfeitures are paid to the king; and the franchises, in which they are paid to the lords of the liberties. The former comprises the hundreds of Blything, Bosmere and Claydon, Hartismere, Hoxne, Mutford and Lothingland, Samford, Stow, and Wangford: the sessions for Blything, Mutford and Lothingland, and Wangford, are held at Beccles; and for the rest of the Geldable hundreds at Ipswich. The franchises are three in number; first, the franchise, or liberty, of St. Ethelred, which formerly belonged to the prior and convent, now to the Dean and Chapter, of Ely, containing the hundreds of Carlford, Colneis, Loes, Plomesgate, Thredling, and Wilford, the sessions for which are held at Woodbridge. Secondly, the franchise, or liberty, of St. Edmund, given to the abbot of Bury by Edward the Confessor, and comprising the hundreds of Babergh, Blackbourn, Cosford, Lackford, Risbridge, Thedwestry, and Thingoe, the sessions for which are held at Bury. And thirdly, the liberty of the duchy of Norfolk, granted by letters patent from Edward IV., dated December 7th, 1468, in which the duke has the returning of all writs, and the right of appointing a special coroner, and of receiving all fines and amerciaments: it comprises, within the limits of this county, his manors of Bungay, Kelsale, Carlton, Peasenhall, the three Stonhams, Dennington, Brundish, the four Ilketshalls, and Cratfield. The counties of Suffolk and Norfolk formed only one shrievalty until the year 1576, when a sheriff for each was first appointed. With regard to the government and management of the poor, the most remarkable circumstance is the incorporation of several hundreds for the erection and support of houses of industry, on a very large scale, and in situations chosen for their pleasantness and salubrity. Thus, Colneis and Carlford hundreds were incorporated in the 29th of George II., and have their house of industry in the parish of Nacton; the hundred of Blything was incorporated in 1764, and has its house of industry in the hamlet of Bulcamp, near Blythburgh; that of Mutford and Lothingland in the same year, having its house of industry in the parish of Oulton, near Lowestoft; and that of Wangford also in 1764, which has its house of industry at Shipmeadow, between Bungay and Beccles. The following hundreds were incorporated in 1765: viz., those of Loes and Wilford (since dis-incorporated), which had their house of industry in the parish of Melton; that of Samford, in the parish of Tattingstone; and that of Bosmere and Claydon, in the parish of Barham. The hundred of Cosford, and the parish of Polstead, which have theirs in the parish of Semer, were incorporated in the 19th of George III. The hundred of Stow was incorporated in the 20th of George III., and has its house of industry in the parish of One-House.

The climate, which is very salubrious, is also remarkably dry: its other chief peculiarities are, that frosts are here experienced with great severity; and that, in the spring months, the north-easterly winds, which are very prevalent, are sharp, and injurious to vegetation. The soils are various, but the limits of each may be clearly traced. Strong clayey loams, on a substratum of clay marl, occupy the largest tract, which extends from the confines of Cambridgeshire and Essex, on the south-west, across the central parts of the county, to those of Norfolk, on the north-east: on the north-west this district is bounded by an irregular imaginary line, passing from the western border of the county, near Dalham, by Barrow, Little Saxham, the vicinity of Bury St. Edmund's, Rougham, Pakenham, Ixworth, and Honington, to the northern boundary at Knettishall; and on the south-east by another, drawn from the banks of the Waveney, near North Cove, a few miles to the east of Beccles, southward by Wrentham and Wangford, and then south-westward by Blythford, Holton, Bramfield, Yoxford, Saxmundham, Campsea-Ash, Woodbridge, Culpho, Bramford, Hadleigh, and along the high lands bordering on the western side of the river Bret, to the confluence of that stream with the Stour: it must be observed, that the bottoms of the vales traversed by running streams, which are numerous, and the slopes descending to them, are of a soil superior in quality to the rest of this district, generally consisting of a rich friable loam. Rich loams, of various qualities, occupy that portion of the county included between the south-eastern part of the strong loams and the æstuaries of the rivers Stour and Orwell, lying to the south of a line drawn from Ipswich to Hadleigh: some of these are of a sandy quality, others much stronger: from Debtford and Higham, on the borders of the Stour, eastward, across the Orwell, to the banks of the river Stour, near its mouth, extends a tract of friable and putrid vegetable mould of extraordinary fertility; more especially at Walton, Trimley, and Felixstow. In the projecting north-eastern district, lying between the river Waveney and the ocean, is much land of the same rich quality; but as it is interspersed with many sandy tracts, and on the sea-coast is of a sandy character throughout, it may be considered to form part of the great sandy maritime district extending from the river Orwell, between the clayey loams and the sea, to the north-eastern extremity of the county: the lands in this district are generally of excellent staple, and are among the best-cultivated in England; although, in the country lying between the towns of Woodbridge, Orford, and Saxmundham, and north-eastward, as far as Leiston, there is a large extent of poor, and in some places even blowing, sands, which have caused this south-eastern part of the county to receive the name of "Sandlings," or "Sandlands:" the substratum of the eastern district, though sometimes marl, is generally sand, chalk, or crag; which last is a singular mass, consisting of cockle and other shells, found in numerous places, from Dunwich, southward, to the Orwell, and even beyond that river. Another district of sand occupies the whole extent between the clayey soils and the fenny tract, which latter forms the north-western angle of the county, and may be separated from the sand by an irregular line drawn from near where the river Larke begins to form the western boundary of Suffolk, to the Little Ouse, a short distance below Brandon: these western sands, unlike much of the last-mentioned, are seldom of a rich loamy quality, but comprise numerous warrens and poor sheep-walks; much of that now under tillage is apt to blow, that is, to be driven by the wind, and consequently ranks among the worst soils: the chief exceptions to the general inferiority of this district lie to the south-east of a line drawn from Barrow to Honington, and at Mildenhall: the substratum is throughout a perfect chalk, at various depths. Of the Fens, it is only necessary to observe, that the surface, to the depth of from one foot to six, consists of the ordinary peat of bogs, some of which is very solid and black; but in other places it is more loose, porous, and of a reddish colour: the substratum is generally a white clay, or marl.

By far the greater part of the county is under tillage: the modes of culture on the clayey loams are various; but, on the rich loam and lighter soils, the Norfolk system has been generally introduced: on the sand, turnips are everywhere employed as a preparative crop before corn or grass: paring and burning is practised only in the Fens, where the course of crops, after this operation, is generally cole-seed; then oats twice in succession, with the last crop of which are sown ray-grass and clover, under which the land remains for six or seven years, and afterwards is again pared and burned. The crops commonly cultivated are wheat, barley, oats, beans, peas, buck-wheat, turnips, cabbages, carrots, potatoes, tares, cole-seed, red and white clover, trefoil, sainfoin, hemp, and hops. The produce of the corn crops varies greatly on the different soils: that of wheat is estimated to average twenty-two bushels per acre; that of barley thirty-two bushels, and that of oats thirty-six bushels. Rye, though formerly much sown, is now only seen on the poorest sands, where the produce is about sixteen bushels per acre. Peas are more frequently cultivated than beans, as they flourish on a greater diversity of soils. Buck-wheat is often grown on the poor sands, and is chiefly employed in fattening hogs and poultry. The culture of carrots in the Sandlings is of very ancient practice, great quantities having been formerly sent from that district by sea to the London market; but the chief object for which they are now grown is as food for horses: the produce on good land is generally from four hundred to five hundred bushels per acre: they are left in the field during winter, and taken up only as wanted. Potatoes are grown in every part of the county: the tares are employed chiefly as green food for horses. Much cole-seed is sown, and in the fen district it constitutes one of the principal crops: it is chiefly applied as food for sheep; but when left for seed, it is reaped and left on the ground until fit to thresh, which operation is performed in the field on cloths, and the straw burned: the average produce of seed is about twenty bushels per acre. Of the artificial grasses above-mentioned, great quantities of clover are seeded; as also is trefoil occasionally: the cultivation of sainfoin is particularly extensive, and in the chalky districts it is everywhere found; this also is not unfrequently seeded. Hemp is chiefly grown in a tract of about ten miles broad, extending in length from Eye to Beccles: the average produce per acre is forty-one stones. The culture of hops is confined to an extent of about one hundred and fifty acres, in the vicinity of Stow-Market. The most remarkable agricultural implement is the well-known light Suffolk swing-plough: drilling is much practised.

The grass lands are not remarkable for excellence, and the extent occupied by dairy farms is not so great as formerly, though large quantities of butter are still sent to the London market. Large tracts of grass land are also mown for the supply of the towns with hay: the produce varies from one to two tons per acre; the herbage, which springs up after the gathering of the hay crop, is here called rawings. Clay and marl are extensively employed as manures; as also is chalk, which the inhabitants of the hundreds of Colneis and Samford obtain from Kent and Essex, by means of the corn-hoys: besides these substances, the shell-marl, or crag, as it is provincially termed, that is found in the Sandlings, is much used for this purpose, and considerable quantities of manure are brought from London. The Suffolk cows have long been famous for the great quantity of their milk, which, however, is not remarkable for richness: they are universally polled, and of a small size, few, when fattened, weighing more than fifty stone: their general character is that of having a snake-like head, a small dewlap, short and slender legs, a large body with flat loins, and a large udder; the colour is various. In some parts of the county black cattle are fattened, part of them being brought from Ireland and Wales, but by far the greater number from Scotland. The number of sheep kept is very great, the South Down breed being most prevalent. The only remarkable breed of hogs is a particularly good one, which is found in the dairy district: they are well made, small-boned, and have thick, short noses. There are many rabbit warrens, particularly in the western district. Poultry is exceedingly plentiful, especially turkeys, for which this county is nearly as famous as Norfolk. The Suffolk breed of horses is as celebrated as that of the cows; it is found in the greatest perfection in the tract included between the coast and the towns of Woodbridge, Debenham, and Eye, extending as far north as Lowestoft.

The woods are of very small extent, and are not generally of luxuriant growth: the strong loams formerly bore considerable quantities of fine oak, a great proportion of which has been cleared off, and various plantations made, but only with a view to ornament. The amount of waste lands at the time of the publication of Mr. Young's Agricultural Survey, in 1804, was nearly one hundred thousand acres, the most important tracts being the immense wastes that occupy nearly all the country from Newmarket, on the borders of Cambridgeshire, to the confines of Norfolk, near the towns of Thetford and Brandon; and those lying between Woodbridge, Orford, and Saxmundham, in the eastern part of the county; besides which, numerous heaths of smaller extent are scattered in every quarter of it: the chief use of these wastes is as sheep-walks. Wood and coal are both much used as fuel, the former chiefly in the habitations of the poorer classes; in the vicinity of the heaths, fens, and commons, turf is also burned.

The manufactures and commerce are very inconsiderable, in comparison with those of many other counties. The chief manufacture is the combing and spinning of wool, in a great measure for the Norwich manufacturers, which is carried on, though not to any great extent, in most parts of the county, excepting the hemp district before mentioned, where the latter material is spun and woven into linen. At Sudbury are manufactories for silk, and woollen goods: there is also a silk manufactory at Mildenhall, a branch of an extensive concern at Norwich. The imports are merely the ordinary supplies of foreign articles for the inhabitants: the chief exports are corn and malt. The principal fishery on the coast is that of herrings, which is the chief support of the town of Lowestoft, where about forty boats, of forty tons' burden each, are engaged in it: the season commences about the middle of September, and lasts until towards the latter end of November. This town also partakes in the mackerel fishery, in which the same boats are employed, the season commencing about the end of May, and continuing until the end of June. In the Orford river there is a considerable oyster fishery.

This is a well-watered county: the principal rivers are the Stour, the Gippen, or Orwell, the Deben, the Ore, the Waveney, the Little Ouse, or Brandon river, and the Lark; besides which the smaller streams are almost innumerable. The Stour, rising on the Cambridgeshire border of the county, runs southward, across its south-western extremity, to the vicinity of Haverhill, eastward of which town it begins to form the southern boundary of Suffolk, and continues so throughout the rest of its course, passing by the towns of Clare, Sudbury, and Nayland: a few miles to the eastward of the latter place it is augmented by the powerful stream of the Bret, descending from the north-west: at Manningtree in Essex it first meets the tide, and begins to expand into a broad æstuary, which at high water has a beautiful appearance; but at low water the river shrinks into a narrow channel, bordered by extensive mud banks. Proceeding eastward, it is joined near Harwich by the Orwell, and their united waters, having formed the port of Harwich, discharge themselves into the North sea, between that town in Essex, and Landguard fort at the south-eastern extremity of this county: this river is navigable up to Sudbury. The Gippen is formed by the confluence of three rivulets at Stow-Market, from which place it was made navigable in 1793: it takes a south-easterly course by Needham-Market to Ipswich, below which town it assumes the name of Orwell, expands into an æstuary, and continues its course to its junction with the Stour opposite Harwich: the Orwell is navigable for ships of considerable burden up to Ipswich, and the scenery on its banks is beautiful. The Deben rises near Debenham, and, passing that town, runs south-eastward to the vicinity of the village of Rendlesham, whence it takes a south-westerly course to Woodbridge, at which place it expands into an æstuary, and thence proceeds in a southerly direction to the North sea: towards its mouth it takes the name of Woodbridge haven, which joins the sea about ten miles below that town, to which it is navigable for vessels of considerable burden. The Ald rises north of Framlingham, and, running south-eastward, expands into an æstuary as it approaches Aldborough, where, having arrived within a very short distance of the sea, it suddenly takes a southerly direction, and discharges its waters into the North sea below Orford: it is navigable to a short distance above Aldborough. The Waveney, rising in a swampy meadow near the village of Lopham in Norfolk, immediately becomes the boundary of the county, which it henceforward continues to be, proceeding first eastward and then north-eastward to Bungay, where it makes an extensive horse-shoe bend, and then reassumes its easterly course by Beccles, at a short distance beyond which town, having approached within a very few miles of the sea, it is compelled by rising grounds abruptly to assume a northerly course to the river Yare, which it joins at the head of Bredon-water, an expansion formed by these united rivers, which, contracting again near Yarmouth, pursues a nearly southerly course to the sea, below that town: this river, the meadows on the banks of which are among the richest in England, is navigable for barges as high as Bungay bridge. The Little Ouse, or Brandon river, though rising within a very short distance of the course of the Waveney, assumes a directly contrary course, and, forming the northern boundary of the county, proceeds westward to the neighbourhood of the village of Barnham, where it assumes a northerly course, by the town of Thetford in Norfolk, below which it again takes a westerly course, passing by the town of Brandon, in this county, and quitting Suffolk at its north-western extremity: this river is navigable up to Thetford. The Larke, rising in the south-western part of the county, flows northward to Bury, and thence north-westward to Mildenhall, below which place it soon becomes the western boundary of the county, which it finally quits near its north-western extremity, shortly to join the Little Ouse: this river is navigable to within a mile of Bury St. Edmund's. The Blythe, rising near Laxfield, in the hundred of Hoxne, thence runs east-north-eastward to Halesworth, where it becomes navigable, and whence it flows eastward by Blythburgh to Southwold, where it falls into the North sea. The only artificial navigation is that in the channel of the Gippen, from Stow-Market to Ipswich: it is sixteen miles and forty rods long, and has fifteen locks, each sixty feet in length and fourteen in width: this canal was opened in the year 1793: the total expense of its formation was about £26,380. The roads, in every part of Suffolk, are excellent. That from London to Norwich, through Newmarket, enters this county from the latter town in Cambridgeshire, and passes through Mildenhall to Thetford; and that to Norwich, through Ipswich, enters from Colchester, and passes through Stratford, Ipswich, and Thwaite. The road from London to Lynn, through Newmarket, branches from the first Norwich road at Mildenhall, and passes through Brandon. The road from London to Yarmouth, through Ipswich, branches from the second Norwich road at Ipswich, and passes through Woodbridge, Saxmundham, and Lowestoft.

Within the limits of the county were comprised the Roman stations Ad Ansam, at Stratford, on the border of Essex; Cambretonium, at Brettenham, or Icklingham; Garianonum, at Burgh Castle (though some fix it at Caistor, near Yarmouth); and Sitomagus, probably at Woolpit. Remains of Roman military works exist at Burgh Castle, Brettenham, Icklingham, Stow-Langtoft, and Stratford, on the banks of the Stour. Numerous domestic and sepulchral relics of that people have also been dug up in different places, such as pavements, coins, medals, urns, rings, &c. That stupendous work of human labour, called the Devil's Ditch, on Newmarket heath, is supposed to have served as the line of demarcation between the kingdoms of Mercia and East Anglia. On a hill called Eye Cliff, and several others situated in its vicinity, near Southwold, are some earthworks, supposed to have constituted a Danish camp; and near Barnham, on the borders of the Little Ouse, is a range of eleven tumuli, on a spot supposed to have been the scene of one of the conflicts between the Danes, under Ingvar, and the forces of Edmund, King of East Anglia: others occur in different places, the most remarkable group of them being that called the Seven Hills, at Fornham St. Geneveve, near Bury. The number of religious houses, of all denominations, was about fifty-nine, including four Alien priories. There are remains, more or less extensive, of the abbeyes of Bury St. Edmund's and Leiston; of the priories of Blythburgh, Butley, Clare, Herringfleet, Ipswich, Mendham, and Sudbury; and of the nunneries of Bungay and Redingfield. Some of the most remarkable churches are those of Alderton, Ashfield, and Barnham, all which are now in ruins; of Beccles, which is remarkable for its noble steeple; Blythburgh; St. Mary, and St. James, at Bury; Buxlow, in ruins; Creeting All Saints, Corton, Dunwich, Flixton, and Fordley, all in ruins; Framlingham; Haslewood, in ruins; St. Lawrence, St. Mary at Quay, and St. Mildred at Ipswich, part of the latter of which has been converted into a town hall; Lavenham, the most beautiful in the county; Lowestoft; Sibton; Stow-Langtoft; and Thurlston, now used as a barn: in addition to these, may be enumerated the churches of Eye, Hoxne, Laxfield, Long Melford, Southwold, Bungay St. Mary (partly in ruins), Covehithe, Walberswick (in ruins), Kessingland, Walton, &c. The fonts in the following churches are worthy of notice for their antiquity, or other peculiarities, viz., those of Blythburgh, Clare, Framlingham, Hawstead, Hengrave, St. Peter's (Ipswich), Letheringham, Lowestoft, Melton, One-House, Orford, Snape, Ufford, and Worlingworth. The remains of ancient fortresses are chiefly those of the castles of Bungay, Clare, Framlingham, Haughley, Lidgate, Mettingham, Orford, and Wingfield. Ancient mansions are seen in different parts of the county; the most remarkable is Hengrave Hall. There are many elegant seats, among the most distinguished of which is Euston Park, the property and residence of the Duke of Grafton; and Heveningham Hall, the seat of Lord Huntingfield. Suffolk gives the title of earl to the family of Howard.

SUGLEY, a township in that part of the parish of NEWBURN which is in the western division of CASTLE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, $3\frac{3}{4}$ miles (W.) from Newcastle, containing 266 inhabitants. The extensive manufactory termed the Tyne Iron Works is within this township.

SUGNALL (MAGNA), a township in the parish of ECCLESHALL, northern division of the hundred of PIREHILL, county of STAFFORD, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by W.) from Eccleshall, containing 109 inhabitants. It is within the peculiar jurisdiction of the Prebendary of Eccleshall in the Cathedral Church of Lichfield.

SUGNALL (PARVA), a township in the parish of ECCLESHALL, northern division of the hundred of PIREHILL, county of STAFFORD, 3 miles (N. W.) from Eccleshall, containing 79 inhabitants. It is within the peculiar jurisdiction of the Prebendary of Eccleshall in the Cathedral Church of Lichfield.

SULBY, an extra-parochial district, in the hundred of ROTHWELL, county of NORTHAMPTON, $6\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. W.) from Market-Harborough; containing 59 inhabitants. An abbey of the Premonstratensian order, in honour of the Blessed Virgin Mary, was founded here, about 1155, by Robert de Querceto, Bishop of Lincoln, and its possessions were so much increased by Sir Robert de Paveley, Knt., that, at the dissolution, its revenue was estimated at £305. 8. 5.

SULGRAVE, a parish in the hundred of CHIPPING-WARDEN, county of NORTHAMPTON, $8\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by W.) from Brackley, containing 578 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Northampton, and diocese of Peterborough, rated in the king's books at £9. 17., and in the patronage of W. Harding, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. James. Near it, to the westward, is Castle hill; and about a mile to the northward is an artificial mount, called Burrough hill, crowned with an ancient fortification, forty feet square, and commanding a most extensive prospect, nine counties being visible from its summit. There are several bequests for the education and relief of the poor, the principal of which are, a rent-charge of £8 by John Hodges, in 1724, another of £12. 16. by Robert Gardiner, in 1763, who also gave the interest of £500 to put out apprentices.

SULHAM, a parish in the hundred of THEALE, county of BERKS, 5 miles (W. by N.) from Reading, containing 152 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Berks, and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £6. 4. 2. J. Wilder, Esq. was patron in 1814. The church is dedicated to St. Nicholas.

SULHAMPSTEAD-ABBOTTS, a parish in the hundred of READING, county of BERKS, 7 miles (S. W. by W.) from Reading, containing, with the tything of Graisle, 364 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, to which, in 1782, that of Sulhampstead-Bannister was annexed, in the archdeaconry of Berks, and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £10. 6. 0 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Provost and Fellows of Queen's College, Oxford. The church is dedicated to St. Bartholomew. The river Kennet runs through the parish. There is a Sunday school for the children of both parishes, superintended by a benevolent lady, who has endowed it with £573. 5. 3. three per cent. consols., also a school-room and house for the master and mistress.

SULHAMPSTEAD-BANNISTER, a parish in the hundred of THEALE, county of BERKS, $6\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. W. by W.) from Reading, containing 315 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, annexed to that of Sulhampstead-Abbotts, in the archdeaconry of Berks, and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £6. 5. The church is dedicated to St. Michael. The river Kennet runs through the parish.

SULLINGTON, a parish in the hundred of EAST EASWRITH, rape of BRAMBER, county of SUSSEX, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by N.) from Steyning, containing 287 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chichester, rated in the king's books at £12. 17. 6., and in the patronage of the Rev. G. Palmer. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is principally in the early style of English architecture.

SUMMERFORD, a township in that part of the parish of ASTBURY which is in the hundred of NORTH-WICH, county palatine of CHESTER, $1\frac{3}{4}$ mile (N. W.) from Congleton, containing 107 inhabitants.

SUMMERHOUSE, a township in that part of the parish of GAINFORD which is in the south-western division of DARLINGTON ward, county palatine of DURHAM, $6\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. W. by W.) from Darlington, containing 189 inhabitants. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. A school was built by subscription in 1821.

SUNBURY, a parish in the hundred of SPELTORNE, county of MIDDLESEX, 15 miles (S. W. by W.) from London, containing 1777 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Middlesex, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £13. 6. 8., and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's, London. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

SUNDERLAND, a township in the parish of ISALL, ALLERDALE ward below Darwent, county of CUMBERLAND, 6 miles (N. E.) from Cockermouth, containing 48 inhabitants.

SUNDERLAND, a sea-port, market town, and parish, in the northern division of EASINGTON ward, county palatine of DURHAM, on the southern bank of the river Wear, 13 miles (N. E.) from Durham, and 269 (N. by W.) from London, containing, exclusively of Bishop-Wearmouth and Monk-Wearmouth, 14,725 inhabitants. The early history of this place is interwoven with that of Bishop-Wearmouth, until the end of the twelfth century, when, in a charter of privileges and free customs, similar to those then enjoyed at Newcastle, granted to it, under the name of South Wearmouth, by Bishop Pudsey, we meet with the first authentic record of its distinct maritime and commercial character as a port. The etymology and date of its present name are somewhat obscure; the more probable conjecture is that it was intended to designate its original peninsular situation, occasioned by the influx of the river Wear into the sea, and a deep ravine at Hendon Dean, which separated it from the main land. Its prosperity having been essentially promoted by the provisions of the above-mentioned charter, it gradually increased in population and importance, and, in the reign of Henry VIII., was becoming a place of considerable note. At the commencement of the seventeenth century, some Scottish families and foreign merchants came to reside here, and the charter of Bishop Morton raised it to the dignity of a corporate town. Soon after the Conquest, Malcolm, King of Scotland, when traversing the eastern coast in one of his destructive incursions, met with Edgar Atheling, heir to the English crown, his sister Margaret, the future queen of Scotland, and a train of distressed Saxons, whilst waiting in the harbour of Sunderland for a wind and tide favourable to their escape from the victorious Normans into Scotland. During the great civil war the inhabitants were entirely devoted to the interests of the parliament, and, in 1642, the town was garrisoned in its behalf, in consequence of the seizure of Newcastle by the royalists, and the exportation of coal from that port to London being prohibited; a parliamentary commissioner also was sent to reside here until the surrender of that town. In 1644 and 1645, repeated skirmishes occurred in Sunderland and the neighbourhood, between the contending parties, during which period the resident Scots suffered greatly from want of provisions, owing to the wreck of some vessels laden with supplies from Scotland, and the capture of others by the royalists, in the river Tyne, whither adverse winds had most inopportunately driven them.

The town comprises several streets, of which the principal is broad and handsome, nearly a mile long, and communicates with the High-street of Bishop-Wearmouth. In general the houses are well built, except in the lower part of the town: by virtue of an act of parliament, passed in 1809, considerable improvements were made, in the removal of nuisances; and, in 1823, a company was formed for lighting the streets with gas, supplied from two gasometers, which are calculated to contain twenty-five thousand cubic feet, the works having been built at an expense of £8000. The inhabitants are supplied with water from a large well, by means of a steam-engine, which raises it into two reservoirs, at the rate of one hundred and fifty gallons per minute, whence it is conveyed to the houses through pipes: the expense of these works is estimated at £5000, which was defrayed by shares of £25 each. The facilities and accommodations afforded to bathers, during the season, have rendered this town a place of fashionable resort: in 1800, hot and cold baths were established at Hendon; and, in 1821, a suite of hot, cold, vapour, and medicinal baths was erected on the town moor: on the sands, which are peculiarly favourable to bathing, are several machines for the purpose. A mechanics' institute for Sunderland and its vicinity, established in 1825, is in a very flourishing condition, and comprises a library of four hundred volumes, with the requisite apparatus for lectures. Among various other literary institutions is a subscription library, originally established in 1795: the present handsome edifice was completed in 1802, and contains upwards of four thousand five hundred volumes. There are a commodious theatre in Drury-lane, and an assembly-room. Races were formerly held on the town moor, but they have for some time been discontinued. Barracks were erected on the Sands in 1794; they afford accommodation for one thousand eight hundred men, stabling for ten horses, and an hospital adapted to the reception of eighty patients. Monk-Wearmouth and the opposite batteries have been constructed for the protection of the port. Of all the improvements which the town has received during the last fifty years, the cast-iron bridge across the Wear, which connects it with Monk-Wearmouth, may be considered the chief. Previously to 1792 the river had been crossed by means of two ferries: the first project entertained was that of erecting a stone bridge, which was abandoned for the present structure, of which the first stone was laid September 24th, 1793, and the work completed in 1796, at a total expense of £33,400, of which sum, £30,000 was advanced by Rowland Burdon, Esq., M.P. for the county; the tolls are let annually for £3000. The bridge was built under the direction of Mr. Thomas Wilson, of Bishop-Wearmouth, and consists of one magnificent arch, two hundred and thirty-six feet in the span, and one hundred feet in height from low water mark, admitting vessels of from two to three hundred tons' burden to pass underneath: the abutments are nearly solid masonry, twenty-four feet thick, forty-two broad at the bottom, and thirty-seven at the top; the breadth of the carriage-way is thirty-two feet, with flagged foot-paths on each side, defended by an iron balustrade: the whole weight of iron is two hundred and sixty tons, forty-six of which are malleable, and the remainder cast.

Sunderland is mainly indebted to its advantageous situation on the coast, and near the influx of a navigable river, which flows through a district abounding with coal and limestone, for its present importance. The export of coal, which is the staple article of commerce, appears to have commenced so early as the reign of Elizabeth, or the beginning of that of James; the quantity shipped at present is about five hundred and sixty thousand chaldrons (Winchester Measure) annually. The town dues on exports are sixpence each chaldron, three halfpence of which are paid by the fitters. The metropolis and the western part of England are the principal marts; a large quantity is also sent to the Baltic. The next in importance is the trade in lime, of which upwards of thirty thousand chaldrons are annually shipped for the ports of Yorkshire and those on the eastern coast of Scotland; from twenty-five to thirty vessels, of from forty to one hundred tons' burden, are employed. The remainder of the export trade is supplied by the numerous manufactories in the town and its vicinity, which consist of those for flint and crown glass, copperas-works, extensive potteries, roperies, chain cable and sail-cloth manufactories, and a brass foundry: there are also three sawing-mills, wrought by steam, and grindstone quarries, in one of which is a fine vein of black marble, from which various chimney and other ornaments are constructed. Of these, the patent ropery at Deptford is worked by a steam-engine of sixteen-horse power, and is capable of producing five hundred tons of cordage in the year: within the usual hours of labour, in 1804, eight hundred tons were manufactured, but the average annual sale is from three to four hundred, being nearly half of the whole quantity made in the neighbourhood. The principal imports are flour, wine, spirituous liquors, timber, tallow, iron, and flax. Ship-building is here carried on more extensively, perhaps, than at any other port in the empire, about twenty eight builders being resident: on the shores of the river, from eighty to one hundred vessels may be placed on the stocks at a time; there are thirty yards for building ships, five for boats, four dry-docks, and four floating-docks. The largest vessel ever constructed here was the Lord Duncan, launched from Southwick quay, in 1798; its extreme length was one hundred and forty-four feet, the breadth thirty-nine feet, and the burden nine hundred and twenty-five tons: the number of vessels built, from 1824 to 1826 inclusive, was two hundred and fifty-two. The salmon fishery was formerly very extensive, and, so late as the year 1788, seventy-two were taken at one draught; but this pursuit has been wholly abandoned, and the supplies now consist of cod, ling, turbot, haddock, skate, herrings, crabs, and lobsters, all of them being caught in great abundance. By the parliamentary returns printed by the House of Commons in 1828, it appears that Sunderland, as it respects the gross amount of the tonnage, and the average size and number of its ships, is the fourth port in the united kingdom; the tonnage being the one twenty-first part of the aggregate tonnage of the united kingdom, one-seventeenth part of the tonnage of England, one-third of the whole tonnage of Scotland, and exceeding, by five thousand and eighty-seven tons, the gross amount of the tonnage of all Ireland. In the year 1829, the number of ships belonging to the port was six hundred and twenty-five, the tonnage one hundred and seven thousand eight hundred and eighty; and the magnitude of its maritime trade is evinced by the circumstance of nine thousand one hundred and eighty ships having been, during that year, cleared to foreign parts and coastwise at the custom-house. The general importance of this sea-port has increased, within the last fifty years, to a height and with a rapidity almost incredible; the population and shipping having within that period, become doubled in number; and as the exports and imports are annually greater, and as the formation of capacious wet docks, to afford additional accommodation for ships, is now in contemplation, it may be expected to rise still higher in commercial character and maritime consequence.

The harbour is formed by two piers: the depth of water at the highest spring tide is from fifteen to twenty feet, and at the lowest neap tides from ten to eleven; vessels of four hundred tons' burden can enter it. In 1669, letters patent were obtained from Charles II., by Edward Andrew, Esq., empowering certain commissioners to levy contributions for the purpose of cleansing the harbour, and erecting a pier and lighthouse. Under this authority the southern pier had been partially constructed, at an expense of £50,000, and, in 1765, its completion was expected to require as much more: its present length is about six hundred and twenty-six yards, and a tide light is placed at its extremity. The northern pier was begun in 1787, and is now one thousand eight hundred and fifty feet in length. Near its extremity is an elegant octagonal lighthouse of freestone, sixty-eight feet high from the pier to the under side of the cap, lighted with gas by means of nine argand lamps and reflectors, each of the latter being eighteen inches in diameter. A gasometer, and two neat cottages, for the residence of the men who attend to the lights, have been erected on the pier: the disasters incident to this rocky and somewhat dangerous coast are additionally provided against by having in constant readiness two life-boats of peculiar construction. All the improvements connected with the harbour were placed under the superintendence of commissioners appointed, for twenty-one years, by an act passed in the 3rd of George I., of which the provisions have been subsequently enlarged and confirmed: their jurisdiction extends up the river as far as to Biddick Ford, and from Sooter point to Ryhope Dean on the coast. The exchange, a neat structure in High-street, erected in 1814, at an expense of £8000, advanced on shares of £50 each, comprises an auction mart, a commercial-room, a news-room, merchants' walk, and justice-room. The custom-house is situated on the moor, and the excise-office in East Cross-street. The market, formerly held on Friday, is now on Saturday; and fairs are, May 13th and 14th, and October 12th and 13th, for toys, &c.

The first charter of privileges was granted to the inhabitants, in the twelfth century, by Bishop Pudsey, which conferred upon them similar privileges to those enjoyed by the burgesses of Newcastle, likewise the right to determine all pleas arising within the borough, excepting those of the crown; other privileges and appointments having been made by subsequent Bishops of Durham. Previously to 1634, the town was governed by a bailiff appointed by letters patent from the bishop; but in that year the inhabitants were incorporated by charter of Bishop Morton, under the style of mayor, twelve aldermen, and commonalty of the borough of Sunderland, which also stated that it had been a borough from time immemorial, known as the new borough of Wearmouth: the mayor was clerk of the market. Although the practical operation of this charter ceased almost immediately after it was granted (the original nominees having been the only individuals who acted under it), a body of the influential tradesmen and neighbouring gentlemen have, for some years past, formed a private corporation, under the title of "Freemen and Stallingers," and in that capacity have claimed, and are in possession of, the town moor as their corporate property: they do not interfere in the regulation, or government, of the town, and their right to hold the moor is disputed by the inhabitants. There are twelve freemen, and eighteen stallingers: the sole right of election is vested in the freemen. The various interests in the town are let on two leases by the Bishop of Durham; one includes the borough courts, fairs, market, tolls, anchorage, and beaconage, and the office of water-bailiff; the other comprises the ferry-boats, and metage and tolls of fruits, herbs, and roots. The bishop holds his baronial court annually, with the court leet for the recovery of debts under 40s. A petty session of the county magistrates is held every Friday at the exchange.

Anterior to 1719, Sunderland formed a portion of the parish of Bishop-Wearmouth, but in that year, an act was obtained to make it a distinct parish. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Durham, and in the patronage of the Bishop of Durham. The endowment is only £80 per annum, which is assessed, under the act, upon all estates real and personal, stock in trade, &c.; and this sum, with the surplice fees, constitutes the only income of the incumbent. The church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, was erected in 1720, and repaired in 1803: it stands in the upper part of the town, and is a commodious handsome brick edifice, with a square tower: the altar is placed in a recess, covered with a dome opening into the nave, under fluted pilasters, with Corinthian capitals. The parochial business is transacted by twenty-four vestrymen, who are elected, on possessing the requisite qualification of a freehold estate of at least £10 per annum, by the parishioners, and continue in office three years. St. John's chapel was built in 1769, chiefly at the expense of John Thornhill, of Thornhill, Esq.; the site, at the head of Barrack-street, having been given by Marshall Robinson, of Herrington: it has received five hundred additional sittings, towards defraying the expense of which, the Incorporated Society for the enlargement of churches and chapels contributed £200: it has also been endowed with £2800 private benefaction, royal bounty, and parliamentary grant: the living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the Bishop, generally held by the rector of Sunderland. Another church was erected, in John-street, in 1827, at the expense of the parliamentary commissioners. There are places of worship for Baptists; Scotch Burghers; the Society of Friends; Independents; Calvinistic, Primitive, and Wesleyan, Methodists, and Methodists of the New Connexion; Presbyterians; Unitarians; Roman Catholics, and Jews; forming in all nineteen dissenting places of worship. A school for instructing and clothing poor girls was endowed, in 1778, under the will of Elizabeth Donnison, widow, with £1500; the management is vested in eight trustees, of whom the rector of Sunderland is one: the interest arising from the property, which is vested in the three per cents., is £78. 8. 6.; thirty-six poor girls are educated and clothed. A school for children of members of the Society of Friends was established, pursuant to the will of Edward Walton, in 1768; the master's income is £26 per annum, and twenty boys receive instruction. A school of industry, in which girls belonging to the poorhouse are taught the platting of straw, is supported by the overseers. A National school, established in 1808, and containing about three hundred and twenty boys and sixty girls, is supported by voluntary contributions: the building consists of two stories, and cost the sum of £500, which was collected by parochial subscription, aided by donations from the executors of Dr. Paley, the trustees of Lord Crewe, Dr. Bell, and several other benevolent individuals. In addition to these are numerous Sunday schools. The almshouses in Assembly Garth, for the residence of thirty-eight superannuated seamen and their widows, belonging to the "Muster Roll," were purchased, in 1750, by the trustees of the "Seamen's Fund," appointed by virtue of an act passed in the 20th of George II., which obliges the masters of all vessels to levy sixpence per month from each sailor towards this provident institution, to be under the management of fifteen trustees, who are elected annually; upwards of seven hundred individuals derive benefit from it. The Sunderland and Bishop-Wearmouth Marine almshouse, for ten widows, or unmarried daughters, of master-mariners, was founded and endowed, in 1820, by Mrs. Eliz. Woodcock; each candidate must have passed her fifty-sixth year: each inmate receives an annuity of £10 for life. Almshouses in Church-lane, Bishop-Wearmouth, for the maintenance of twelve poor women, were built and endowed by a legacy of £1400, the bequest of Mrs. Jane Gibson, in 1725; the appointment of the inmates is vested in the family of Mowbray. On Wearmouth Green are almshouses for twelve poor persons, erected about 1712, under the will of John Bowes, rector of Bishop-Wearmouth, and endowed, in 1725, by Thomas Ogle, with a bequest of £100; the Dean and Chapter of Durham are trustees. The infirmary, comprising a dispensary, house of recovery, and humane society, each instituted at different periods, but now combined in one establishment, was erected in 1822, at an expense of £3000: it is in the patronage of the Bishop of Durham, and under the management of eight presidents, twelve vice-presidents, four physicians, four surgeons, a matron, apothecary, and other subordinate officers: the building is situated in Durham-lane. Amongst the several friendly societies are four lodges of freemasons, having a masonic hall in Queen-street, erected in 1785. Here are also numerous benevolent societies for the benefit of the sick and poor of the town and its vicinity. Sunderland confers the inferior title of earl upon the family of Churchill, Dukes of Marlborough.

SUNDERLAND (NORTH), a township in the parish and northern division of BAMBROUGH ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, $8\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by S.) from Belford, containing 566 inhabitants. There is a place of worship for Presbyterians. Seven children are educated for £5 a year, with a house and garden for the master, allowed by the trustees of Lord Crewe's estate. This township has the North sea on the east, and possesses a small port, subject to Berwick, from which corn, fish and lime are exported; of the latter article considerable quantities are burned at the kilns in the neighbourhood.

SUNDERLAND-BRIDGE, a township in that part of the parish of AUCKLAND ST. ANDREW, which is in the south-eastern division of DARLINGTON ward, county palatine of DURHAM, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. S. W.) from Durham, containing 204 inhabitants. It is situated between the river Wear and Croxdale water, the former being crossed by a bridge on the great north road. On the manor of Butterby there are saline and sulphureous springs.

SUNDERLAND-WICK, a township in the parish of HUTTON-CRANSWICK, Bainton-Beacon division of the wapentake of HARTHILL, East riding of the county of YORK, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. S. W.) from Great Driffeld, containing 60 inhabitants.

SUNDON, a parish in the hundred of FLITT, county of BEDFORD, $4\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. W. by N.) from Luton, containing 387 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Bedford, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £8. 6. 8., endowed with £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of J. R. Cuthbert, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is partly in the decorated style of architecture. A market and fair, formerly held by royal grant in 1316, have been long disused.

SUNDRIDGE, a parish in the hundred of CODS-HEATH, lathe of SUTTON at HONE, county of KENT, 4 miles (W. by N.) from Seven-Oaks, containing 1129 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury, rated in the king's books at £22. 13. 4. The church has some fine windows in the later English style. The river Darent flows through the parish, part of which lies below the great ridge of sand hills in the Weald. The manufacture of paper is carried on here. A National school is attended by about two hundred children, each paying threepence a week, and by ten others who are taught for a rent-charge of £6 left by Humphrey Heide, Esq. Sundridge gives the English title of baron to the Duke of Argyll.

SUNK-ISLAND, an extra-parochial district, in the southern division of the wapentake of HOLDERNESS, East riding of the county of YORK, 20 miles (S. E. by E.) from Kingston upon Hull, containing 216 inhabitants. Here is a small chapel, in the patronage of the Archbishop of York, also a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. This island has been gradually recovered from the Humber; a century ago it comprised only eight hundred acres, but it now contains five thousand, in a high state of cultivation, and more is expected to be embanked within a very short period. It was originally two miles from the opposite shore, and vessels formerly passed through the channel, which is now so narrow as to be crossed by a bridge to the main land.

SUNNINGHILL, a parish in the hundred of COOKHAM, county of BERKS, 6 miles (S. S. W.) from New Windsor, containing 1125 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Dean of Salisbury, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Master and Fellows of St. John's College, Cambridge. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is principally in the Norman style of architecture. There is a place of worship for Baptists. Two chalybeate springs, in the garden of an inn called Sunning Wells, were formerly in great repute, and adjoining them is a room where public breakfasts have been given. At a place called Bromehall, in this parish, there was formerly a small convent of Benedictine nuns, founded before the reign of John; it was deserted by these sisters in 1522, when it escheated to the crown, and was granted to St. John's College, Cambridge.

SUNNINGWELL, a parish in the hundred of HORMER, county of BERKS, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.) from Abingdon, containing, with part of the chapelry of Kennington, 277 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Berks, and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £12. 14. 7., and in the patronage of Sir G. Bowyer, Bart. The church, dedicated to St. Leonard, is an ancient structure of a singular form, and contains a monument to the memory of Bishop Jewell. The village is pleasantly situated on the banks of the Thames, across which there is a wooden bridge.

SURFLEET, a parish in the wapentake of KIRTON, parts of HOLLAND, county of LINCOLN, 4 miles (N.) from Spalding, containing 812 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £11, endowed with £1400 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of — Pickworth, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. Lawrence, is partly in the later style of English architecture, and partly of earlier date, with a tower and spire. There is a canal, called the Glen, by which the waters of Pinchbeck are conveyed to the Welland river; and another, termed the Grand Sluice, that conveys the waters of the fen to Boston. This parish contains one of the largest heronries in England. Here are two endowed schools, one free for twenty children, the other for children inhabiting Fen Ends.

SURLINGHAM, a parish in the hundred of HENSTEAD, county of NORFOLK, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. S. E.) from Norwich, containing 403 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, with the perpetual curacy of St. Saviour's annexed, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £6. 13. 4., and in the patronage of the Rev. W. Collett. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. Here is a ferry across the Yare, which is much frequented.

SURRENDRAL, a tything in that part of the parish of HULLAVINGTON which is in the hundred of CHIPPENHAM, county of WILTS, $5\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. W.) from Malmesbury, containing 34 inhabitants.

SURREY, an inland county, bounded on the north by the river Thames, which separates it from Middlesex and the south-eastern extremity of Buckinghamshire; on the north-west by Berkshire; on the west by Hampshire; on the south by Sussex; and on the east by Kent: it extends from $51^{\circ} 5'$ to $51^{\circ} 31'$ (N. Lat.), and from $3'$ (E. Lon.) to $51'$ (W. Lon.); comprising an area of seven hundred and fifty-eight square miles, or about four hundred and eighty-five thousand one hundred and twenty statute acres. The population, in 1821, was 398,658. The most ancient British inhabitants of this district, of whom we have authentic information, were the Segontiaci, or, as they are called by Ptolemy, the Regni, a people who had been expelled from Hampshire by the invading Belgæ. Cæsar, in his exploratory invasion of Britain, crossed the north-eastern part of Surrey, from the county of Kent to the Thames, which he is supposed to have passed at a place now called Cowey Stakes, at Walton on Thames, into the territory of Cassivellaunus, though the Britons endeavoured to prevent his passage by driving stakes into the bed of the river. Under the Roman dominion Surrey was included in the division called Britannia Prima. On the complete establishment of the Saxon kingdom of Wessex, it appears to have included the greater part of this county. In 568, Ethelbert, in defence of his own kingdom, having invaded the territories of Ceawlin, King of Wessex, a great battle was fought between them at Wimbledon, in which the former was signally defeated: this was the first battle fought between the Saxon kings. This county suffered severely from the ravages of the Danes, who entered it in 852, after sacking London, but were defeated with great slaughter at Ockley, near its southern border, by Ethelwulf and his son Ethelbald. In 893, Wada, or Huda, the only Saxon recorded to have borne the title of Earl of Surrey, was slain in battle against the Danes, in the Isle of Thanet, whither he had marched with the men of Surrey to the assistance of the Earl of Kent; and in the same year the invaders made great devastations in this county, particularly in the vicinity of Godalming. When Canute besieged London, in 1016, finding that the citizens had taken possession of London bridge, so as to prevent the passage of his vessels under it, he proceeded to construct a canal through the marshes on the south side of the Thames, with which river it communicated at Rotherhithe and at Chelsea-reach, thus enabling the Danish monarch to attack the city from that part of the river which is above the bridge. William the Conqueror, advancing toward London after the battle of Hastings, in 1066, in order to terrify the inhabitants into submission, reduced Southwark to ashes. The first who enjoyed the dignity of Earl of Surrey, after the Conquest, was William de Warren, Earl of Warren in Normandy, who had distinguished himself in the battle of Hastings, and was united in marriage to a daughter of the Conqueror. In 1215, at Runymede, near Egham, the armed barons compelled King John to grant the famous Magna Charta: this monarch having afterwards broken faith with his people, and desolated England with bands of armed mercenaries, Louis the Dauphin, who had been invited by the barons to assume the crown, possessed himself, in 1216, of the castles of Guildford and Farnham, which, however, were shortly retaken, on the death of John, by the forces of his son and successor, Henry III. In the sixteenth year of the reign of this monarch, Hubert de Burgh, Chief Justice of England, having incurred the displeasure of his sovereign, took refuge in the convent of Merton, whither Henry ordered the citizens of London to proceed and seize him; they marched towards that place, to the number of twenty thousand, but the king's anger having in the meantime been appeased, their march was countermanded. In 1264, immediately after the battle of Lewes, in which Henry III. was defeated and taken prisoner by the disaffected barons, a party of the king's forces then lying in garrison at Tonbridge castle, marched into this county, destroyed Blechingley castle, and advanced upon Croydon, where they surprised the men of London, who had espoused the cause of the barons, and had been driven out of the field at Lewes, slew many of them, and gained a considerable booty. During Wat. Tyler's rebellion, in 1381, the men of Essex attacked the archiepiscopal palace at Lambeth, and destroyed all the furniture, books, registers, and public papers. In 1472, the bastard Falconbridge, with an army of seventeen thousand men, came to Kingston, intending to cross the Thames; but finding the bridge broken down, he marched to St. George's Fields near London, and, in an attack upon that city, was repulsed by its inhabitants. Sir Thomas Wyatt, in his military operations to prevent the marriage of Queen Mary with Philip of Spain, marched with a force of about two thousand men to Southwark, where he arrived on February 3d, 1554: after staying there three days, his entrance into London being vigorously opposed, he marched to Kingston, with the design of crossing the Thames into Middlesex: there he found the bridge broken, and the opposite bank of the river defended by two hundred men, who, however, soon retired, on two pieces of ordnance being pointed against them, and Sir Thomas, having repaired the bridge, passed over.

During the contest between Charles I. and the parliament, a great majority of the inhabitants strenuously supported the proceedings of the latter; and, in the early part of the dispute, a petition was presented to the House of Commons, signed by two thousand of them, and another to the Lords, congratulating them on the measures which they had adopted, and complaining of there being evil counselors about the king, and popish lords in the House. In January 1642, Col. Lunsford assembled at Kingston a body of four or five hundred cavalry, for which he was proclaimed a traitor by the parliament, and apprehended. In August of the same year, by order of the parliament, Captain Royden, with two hundred foot and a troop of horse, seized and took away the arms in Lambeth House. In October, the Earl of Essex was at Kingston, with an army of three thousand men; and at the beginning of November, Sir Richard Onslow, one of the knights of the shire, and a parliamentarian, went with the trained bands of Southwark to the defence of that town, but being ill-received by the inhabitants, he abandoned it. On the 8th of the same month, a party of soldiers took possession of Lambeth House, by order of the parliament, after the battle of Brentford; on November 12th, the king marched to Kingston. In December, Farnham castle, which had been well garrisoned for the king by Sir John Denham, high sheriff of the county, was besieged by the parliamentarian forces, and, after an obstinate resistance, surrendered to Sir William Waller. Although armed bands were occasionally moving in different parts of the county, yet no other important event seems to have taken place within its limits until the year 1647, when the inhabitants of Southwark, not approving of the conduct of the citizens of London towards them, privately sent word to General Fairfax, that they were willing to surrender the borough to him: the General immediately sent a brigade, under the command of Col. Rainsborough, who took possession of it. Fairfax then visited Croydon, whence, on August 10th, he removed his head-quarters to Kingston. On the 27th of the same month Cromwell removed his head-quarters from Kingston, and fixed them at Putney, whence the parliamentarian army took its departure, on November 13th, two days after Charles I. had made his escape from Hampton Court, and on the 18th held a grand rendezvous on Ham common. The Earl of Holland, the Duke of Buckingham, and Lord Francis Villiers, making a last attempt on behalf of the royal cause, assembled at Kingston a body of six hundred horse, their avowed object being to release the king, then confined in the Isle of Wight, and bring him to parliament, to establish peace in the kingdom, and preserve the laws: the parliament immediately sent some troops of horse from Windsor, under the command of Col. Pritty, who found the royalists but ill prepared for defence: a skirmish took place near Surbiton common, in which the Earl of Holland and his party were soon defeated, and Lord Francis Villiers was slain. On the Restoration, the Lord Mayor and Aldermen of London met Charles II., in his approach towards the capital, on May 29th, in St. George's Fields, where a magnificent tent was erected, in which the king partook of a sumptuous collation. In 1768, during the riots of the populace of London and its environs, occasioned by the imprisonment of John Wilkes, Esq., in the King's Bench, the rioters were opposed by the military in St. George's Fields, and some lives were lost: and in 1780, Lord George Gordon assembled on the same spot upwards of fifty thousand persons, who afterwards were engaged in the memorable disturbances of that year. Lambeth Palace was threatened with the popular vengeance, but was preserved by the timely interference of the military.

Surrey is included in the diocese of Winchester, and province of Canterbury; excepting the exempt deanery of Croydon, which contains nine parishes, and is in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Archbishop of Canterbury: it forms an archdeaconry, in which are the deaneries of Ewell, Southwark, and Stoke: the total number of parishes is one hundred and forty-one, of which seventy-nine are rectories, thirty-four vicarages, and the remainder perpetual curacies. For purposes of civil government it is divided into the hundreds of Blackheath, Brixton, Copthorne, Effingham, Elmbridge, Farnham, Godalming, Godley, Kingston, Reigate, Tandridge, Wallington, Woking, and Wotton, all of them having first and second divisions, except Brixton, which is divided into east and west, and Farnham, which has no division. It contains the borough and market town of Southwark, with the populous suburban parishes of Rotherhithe, Bermondsey, Newington, Camberwell, Lambeth, Clapham, and Battersea; the borough and market towns of Guildford, Haslemere, and Reigate; the boroughs of Blechingley and Gatton; the market towns of Chertsey, Croydon, Dorking, Farnham, Godalming, and Kingston; and the large and elegant village of Richmond. Two knights are returned to parliament for the shire, and two representatives for each of the boroughs: the county members are elected at Guildford. Surrey is included in the Home circuit: the lent and winter assizes are held at Kingston, and the summer assizes at Guildford and Croydon, alternately: the county gaol is in Horsemonger-lane, in the parish of Newington. The quarter sessions are held at the New Sessions House, Newington, on January 12th; at Reigate, on April 20th; at Guildford, on July 13th; and at Kingston, on October 19th. There are one hundred and sixty-five acting magistrates. The rates raised in the county, for the year ending March 25th, 1827, amounted to £288,108. 15., and the expenditure to £291,830. 9., of which £241,582. 4. was applied to the relief of the poor. According to the earliest authentic accounts, the county of Surrey had always a sheriff of its own until the beginning of the reign of John, when it was placed under the same shrievalty with Sussex; and though, during the reigns of succeeding monarchs, it was occasionally under a distinct sheriff, yet the regular appointment of a separate sheriff for it did not commence until 1615.

Its form is nearly oblong, except that the northern border is rendered extremely irregular by the devious course of the Thames. The scenery, celebrated for its beauty, possesses also great variety; presenting in some parts wild and naked heaths, which form a powerful contrast with the adjoining highly cultivated and ornamented districts. The surface, for the most part, is gently undulating, excepting the Weald, a district of about thirty miles in length, and varying from three to five in breadth, which extends along the whole southern border, and forms, with the Wealds of Kent and Sussex, one immense plain, the flat surface of which is of very inferior elevation: some of the hills, however, rise to a very considerable height, and command rich and extensive views. The middle of the county is crossed from east to west by the Downs, which rise with a gentle acclivity from the north, but on the south are broken into precipitous cliffs of great height and romantic irregularity: the prospects from the most elevated of them are remarkably beautiful and diversified. Southward of the Downs rise the hills that overhang the Weald, in the vicinities of Oxted, Godstone, Reigate, and Dorking. Approaching the western side of the county, this range becomes of greater extent, and near Wonersh, Godalming, and Pepper-Harrow, is covered with rich woods, and intersected by pleasing vallies, watered by streams tributary to the Wey; the whole forming one of the most picturesque portions of the county. The largest tracts of the very extensive heaths lie in the western part: from Egham, on the banks of the Thames, south-south-westward as far as the village of Ash, the district consists, with little exception, of heath and moor; as also does that extending in a transverse direction from Bagshot, on the north-western confines, by Chobham and Byfleet, to Cobham, Ripley, and Oatlands: the whole south-western angle is of the same barren character, from Haslemere to Farnham, in one direction, and from Elstead to Frensham in the other.

The climate in general is remarkable for its dryness, but it varies considerably in different situations. The greatest quantity of rain falls in that portion of the county which is included in the vale of London; and the atmosphere of this district is moist, as also is that of the southern border, from the flatness of the surface, the immense number of trees obstructing the free circulation of air, and the wet nature of the soil. On the other hand, the air on the Downs is dry, keen, and bracing; and a similar climate prevails on the heaths about Bagshot, Aldershot, Hindhead, &c. The spring is generally early, vegetation being here little checked by the easterly winds, which often so much retard it in other counties. On the whole, the climate is esteemed particularly salubrious; and the atmosphere, being kept clear of the smoke of the metropolis, by the prevalence of westerly and southerly winds, is remarkable for its superior purity.

The soils, which are extremely various, are by no means so clearly discriminated as in many other counties, the different species lying in small patches much intermixed: they may, however, be reduced under the four general heads of clay, loam, chalk, and heath. The most extensive tract bearing a uniform character is that denominated the Weald of Surrey, where the surface consists of a pale, cold, retentive clay, upon a subsoil of the same nature, in which iron is found: still deeper occurs a white clay of a slaty texture, the laminae of which are extremely thin. In some places, particularly on the northern border of the Weald, where the soil is more of a loamy character, rag-stone is the prevailing substratum: the difficulties experienced in the cultivation of this soil are extremely great. Northward of it lies a district of sandy loam, stretching across the whole county, and forming the range of hills overlooking the Weald: this soil is every where of great depth, though variable in colour and fertility, and rests on a sandstone, veined with oxyde of iron; the richest portion of it lies around Godalming. Although this district, in the eastern part of the county, is in few places more than half a mile broad, yet, proceeding westward, in the neighbourhood of Godalming, it expands to a breadth of five or six miles. The chalky soil of the Downs adjoins this to the north, the most fertile portions of it being a pure hazel loam of various depths, while the substratum of the whole is chalk rock. A less friable soil, mixed with flints, intervenes between Croydon and Godstone, and is found on all the declivities of the chalk hills. Along the elevated summit of the Downs, particularly about Walton and Headley, is a large extent of heathy land, consisting of ferruginous and barren sand. A peculiar kind of clay, of a blueish-black colour, here called "black-land," extends in a long narrow tract along the southern side of the chalk hills, from the vicinity of Reigate, into the county of Kent.

Proceeding northward from the eastern extremity of the Downs, a variety of soils occurs, chiefly strong clays, interspersed with tracts of sandy loam, and these again with patches of gravel, which continue nearly to Dulwich, whence, to the north-eastern extremity of the county, a strong pure clay occupies the whole tract. Northward from the chalk, at Banstead Downs, is also a long tract of clay, continuing by Sutton, Mordon, and the eastern side of Merton, to the sandy loams of Wimbledon, Putney heath, and Mortlake. A similar soil is found on descending northwards from any part of the Downs, between Banstead and Clandon, near Guildford; but the breadth of clay separating the sandy loam from the chalk continues decreasing as it proceeds westward. The rich sandy soil lying between the clay and the Thames is intermingled, especially on the banks of the Mole and the Wey, with loams of various qualities, and even with clay: the subsoil of nearly the whole of these northern sands is a yellow silicious gravel. North-westward from Guildford, sandy loams first occur in the vicinity of Stoke, and afterwards strong retentive clays, which extend beyond Warpleston, where they unite with the heaths. The soil on the banks of the Thames consists partly of a sandy loam, and partly of a rich strong loam.

The proportion of arable land greatly exceeds that of meadow and pasture: the drill husbandry is general in the western part of the county, about Bagshot, Esher, Send, Cobham, Ripley, &c. The corn and pulse crops are, wheat, barley, oats, beans, and peas: wheat is cultivated to a great extent; the barley, being of a superior quality, is generally appropriated to the making of malt. The field varieties of peas and beans are extensively cultivated, as an agricultural crop, in most parts of the county, especially on the chalk hills; while the finer sorts are grown in the vicinity of the metropolis, and on the sandy loams in the vale of the Thames, chiefly for the supply of the London market. The cultivation of turnips and cabbages is now carried on to a great extent, partly for the supply of the metropolitan markets, and partly for the consumption of cattle. Great quantities of carrots are grown in the northern part of the county, to the west of the river Mole, and parsnips on the rich deep lands in the district lying between Wandsworth and Kingston, for the London markets, being seldom given to cattle. Tares, and sometimes rye, are grown as green food for sheep and horses. Red clover has long been in general cultivation: the greater part of this crop is made into hay, but though within a short distance of London, much is cut green for horses and cows. Trefoil, white clover, and ray-grass, are occasionally sown, and large tracts of chalky soil are occupied by sainfoin, most of which is made into hay: lucerne is also grown, but on a small scale. The Farnham hops are cultivated to a considerable extent on the borders of Hampshire, and have long been celebrated for their excellent quality, always bringing a higher price than any other hops in the kingdom. Woad flourishes on the chalk hills about Banstead Downs, where it is generally sown with barley. By far the most extensive and valuable tracts of meadow are situated along the banks of the Thames, in the north-western part of the county, and on the banks of the Wey, near Godalming: there is also a small extent of meadow in its north-eastern angle, near the metropolis.

Of dairy pastures there are scarcely any: the greatest extent lying together is on the estate of the Duke of Norfolk, in the parishes of Newdigate and Charlwood, on the southern border. Large quantities of manure, of different kinds, are carried from the metropolis into the northern parts of Surrey; in the more remote districts lime and chalk are procured from the quarries and works on both sides of the range of chalk downs.

A great variety of cattle is kept in this county; but few oxen are worked. The large Wiltshire, the South Down, and the Dorsetshire, are the principal breeds of sheep, the latter being kept chiefly for the rearing of early house lambs, for which Surrey was formerly much celebrated, though the number sent to the London market has greatly decreased: many grass lambs are prepared for the butcher in April and May. Great numbers of hogs are fed at the distilleries and starch-manufactories, whither they are brought chiefly from Berkshire, Shropshire, and the East riding of Yorkshire; those from the first-named district are preferred. Most of the farmers keep hogs of the Berkshire and Chinese breeds: Budgwick, on the border of Sussex, is remarkable for a breed of swine that fatten to an enormous size. Numerous flocks of geese are kept on the commons, especially in the Weald: the Dorking breed of fowls is much celebrated. The quantity of garden ground employed in raising vegetables for the London market is very considerable: the parishes of Mortlake and Battersea are particularly distinguished for the cultivation of asparagus of excellent quality; in the latter much ground is also occupied in the cultivation of vegetables for seed. Orchards are numerous, but of very limited extent. It is considered that a greater extent of land is employed in the cultivation of medicinal plants in this county than in any other in England: those grown in the largest quantity are peppermint, lavender, wormwood, camomile, aniseed, liquorice, and poppies, which, with a few others for the druggists and perfumers, occupy a large portion of land in the parishes of Mitcham and Tooting.

The part most remarkable for its woods is the Weald, on the southern side of the county, which, there is every reason to believe, was formerly wholly covered with wood, much of which has been cleared off at no very remote period. The coppices consist chiefly of oak, birch, ash, chesnut, sallow, hazel, and alder; and their produce is formed into hoops, poles for the hop plantations, hurdles, and fagots; great quantities are also made into charcoal, for gunpowder and other purposes. The woodlands in the other parts of the county, particularly on the chalk hills, have a greater proportion of coppice, and fewer timber trees, than those in the Weald. The most common kinds of timber are oak, beech, walnut, ash, elm, box, yew, birch, Scotch fir, larch, and maple; besides which, lime and chesnut trees are found in the numerous plantations about gentlemen's seats. The oaks of the finest and largest growth are those in the Weald; the beeches thrive best on the chalk hills, where they are every where seen; walnut trees, of a large size, are found scattered in many parts, but no where in great numbers; the ash and elm are seldom seen any where but in the hedge-rows, and the latter chiefly to the north of the chalk hills, about Croydon, Cheam, &c., and in the more immediate vicnity of the metropolis. The box in this county, and chiefly on Box hill, near Dorking, attains a considerable size; its wood is bought principally by the mathematical instrument makers, and by the turners, in London and Tonbridge. Surrey is noted for the great number of yew-trees that are scattered in a wild state over its chalk hills, and for the size to which some of those that have been artificially planted have attained. Besides forming a considerable portion of the under-woods, the birch flourishes on the heaths: great quantities of brooms are made of its small branches, and sold chiefly at Southwark. Extensive plantations of fir and larch have been made on the heathy lands in the western part of the county. In the western and northern parts the osier and willow are much cultivated, particularly about Byfleet, Chertsey, &c.; the common furze is also cultivated in different places for fuel.

Under the early Norman sovereigns a large portion of Surrey was reserved as part of the royal demesne. By Henry II. the limits of Windsor Forest were gradually extended until he had afforested nearly the whole of this county; but Richard, his son and successor, in the first year of his reign, consented to disafforest all the county lying eastward of the river Wey, and southward of Guildford Down, his charter to that effect having been confirmed by King John. That part still enclosed in the forest, according to the provisions of this charter, was called the Bailiwick of Surrey, being exempt from the jurisdiction of the sheriff, and subject only to that of its own bailiff: it contained the parishes and townships of Ash, Bisley, Byfleet, Chobham, Horsell, Purbright, Pyrford, Stoke, Tongham, Wanborough, Worplesdon, Windlesham, and Woking: within the same district also lay Chertsey, Egham, and Thorpe, but these being estates of the abbey of Chertsey, were not subject to the bailiff's jurisdiction. Notwithstanding the charter of forests granted by King John, this part of the county remained in forest until after the granting of another charter by Henry III., in the ninth year of his reign, which disafforested the whole, excepting only the park of Guildford. Edward I. and Edward II. attempted to set aside this grant, but without effect; and Edward III., in the first year of his reign, fully confirmed it. The royal pretensions were revived in the seventh of Charles I., but without success; and from that period the district known, since the time of Richard I., as the Bailiwick of Surrey, has been regarded as only a purlieu of the forest of Windsor; and the king has still a right and property over the deer escaping into it, which may be destroyed by none, except the owners of woods, or lands, in which they may be found, which are especially exempted from the operation of the forest laws: it is, however, so far free and open to all owners of land within its limits, that, under certain restrictions, they may chase and kill any of the deer actually found therein. For the better preservation of the deer escaping out of the forest into this purlieu, the king has a ranger, appointed by letters patent, whose office it is to chase them back again, and to whom, in his official capacity, belongs Fangrove Lodge, near Chertsey.

It appears surprising, that a county so near the metropolis should contain so large a quantity of waste land. About the commencement of the present century it was computed, that one-sixth lay in a wild and uncultivated state; and though this extent has been greatly lessened by numerous enclosures, there yet remain in heaths about forty-eight thousand acres, and in commons about seventeen thousand. The principal heaths are, that of Bagshot, on the western border of the county, which, with Romping Downs, and the wastes of Purbright, Windlesham, &c., contains upwards of thirty thousand acres, almost entirely covered with short heath; Frensham, Thursley, and Witley heaths, comprising together five thousand eight hundred acres; Hindhead heath, which, with the last-mentioned tracts, is situated on the south-western confines of Surrey, and occupies an extent of upwards of three thousand acres; the heaths of Farnham and Crooksbury, containing about three thousand seven hundred acres; Blackheath, about four miles south of Guildford, comprising about one thousand acres; and Headley heath, containing about nine hundred acres. From their vicinity to the metropolis, Addington heath and Shirley common, containing about three hundred acres, and situated to the south-east of Croydon, are worthy of notice. The surface of the heaths is in general flat, and their value is very trifling, being only used for grazing a very few lean cattle. In the low swampy parts, about Bagshot, Windlesham, Frimley, and Chobham, peat is cut, though the places which supply it are few; some of the heath is cut for making into brooms; they also produce whortleberries, which are sometimes gathered for sale. In the western heaths, as well as in several other parts, fish-ponds have been made, by means of dams in the narrow vallies, in which fish, chiefly carp, are fed for the London market. Two of the most extensive of these are, Spire pond, between Chobham and Byfleet, and another near Frensham, each containing about one hundred and fifty acres. The most extensive commons still remaining unenclosed are, those of Leith hill and Hurtwood, containing upwards of three thousand acres; those of Walton, Kingswood, and Banstead, occupying about one thousand five hundred acres; and those of Epsom, Leatherhead, and Ashted, extending over one thousand two hundred acres. Those in the more immediate vicinity of the metropolis are Wimbledon and Putney, containing about one thousand acres; Barnes common, about two hundred; Wandsworth common, about three hundred and fifty; Battersea and Clapham commons, together about fifty; Streatham common, about two hundred and fifty; and Kennington common, about twenty. Coal from the port of London is carried into every part of the county, and in the vicinity of the metropolis is the only fuel that is used; but in the more remote districts, furze, turf, and peat, are commonly burned in all the cottages.

A sand-stone, commonly called rag-stone, containing oxyde of iron, abounds along the line of junction of the Weald with the sand hills, which skirt that tract on the north: the oxyde of iron sometimes prevails so greatly, as to have been formerly worked and smelted as iron-ore; but in consequence of the high price of fuel, these works have long been totally abandoned. Stone of a similar kind to the above is found in smaller quantities about Send and Chobham; and iron-ore appears in the sand in the vicinities of Puttenham and Godstone. At Purbright, and in many parts of the surrounding country, are found loose blocks of stone, bearing a strong resemblance, both in quality and appearance, to those termed the Grey Wethers, on the downs of Berkshire and Wiltshire. In the neighbourhoods of Godstone, Gatton, Merstham, Reigate, and Blechingley, are extensive quarries of a peculiar kind of stone, which, when first dry, is soft and unable to bear the action of a damp atmosphere; but after being kept under cover for a few months, its texture becomes so firm and compact, that it can resist the heat of an ordinary fire, and is, in consequence, in great demand for fire-places. On the White hills near Blechingley this stone is softer than elsewhere, and is now chiefly dug for the glass-manufacturers, who, by means of it, have been enabled to produce plate-glass of much larger dimensions than they formerly could: great quantities are taken by water to Liverpool and the north of England. Limestone, of a blueish-grey colour, containing a very small proportion of flint, is extensively quarried near Dorking, and affords lime of great purity and strength, particularly serviceable in works under water, having been employed in the construction of the West India and Wapping docks: limestone is also dug and burned at Guildford, Sutton, and Carshalton. Some of the most extensive chalk-pits are those at Croydon, Sutton, Epsom, Leatherhead, Bookham, Effingham, Horsley, Clandon, Stoke, Guildford, and Puttenham, on the northern side of the Downs; and those at Godstone, Catterham, Reigate, Merstham, Buckland, and Betchworth, on the southern side. The sand about Tandridge, Reigate, and Dorking, is in great request for hour-glasses, writing, and a variety of other purposes; that about Reigate, more especially, is considered unequalled in the kingdom for purity and colour; great quantities are sent to London. Fullers' earth is found in very extensive beds about Nutfield, Reigate, and Blechingley, to the south of the Downs; and some, though of an inferior quality, near Sutton and Croydon, to the north of them: it is of two kinds, blue and yellow, the latter, which is the most valuable, being chiefly employed in fulling the finer cloths of Wiltshire and Gloucestershire, while the former is sent into Yorkshire, for the coarser manufactures: this earth is sent in wagons to the railway commencing at Merstham, along which it is conveyed to the Thames, where it is shipped. Brick-earth is found in most parts of the county, though not of the finest quality: at Nonsuch, in the parish of Cheam, however, there is a particularly valuable bed, from which a kind of brick, capable of resisting intense heat, is made.

Though Surrey cannot be regarded as a manufacturing county, yet its vicinity to the metropolis, and the convenience of its streams for the working of mills, have caused several manufactures of importance to be established in it. On the Wandle is situated a great number of flour, paper, snuff, and oil mills, besides mills for preparing leather and parchment, and for grinding logwood: upon its banks also, chiefly in the parishes of Croydon and Mitcham, are large calico, bleaching, and printing works. This river, which is usually not more than three feet deep, and eight broad, is remarkable for turning ninety mills in a course of only ten miles. On the Mole are several flour-mills, some iron-mills at Cobham, and several flatting-mills at Ember. There are extensive powder-mills near Malden, to the north of Ewell; and several paper-mills on the different tributary branches of the Wey. At Godalming are considerable factories for the weaving of all kinds of stockings and the making of patent fleecy hosiery; at the same place are also establishments for the combing of wool, and the manufacture of worsteds, blankets, tilts, and collar-cloths. At Stoke, near Guildford, is a sawing-mill for staves, ship-pins, &c.; and at Mortlake a manufacture of delft and stone ware. In the neighbourhood of London, particularly at Battersea and Lambeth, are several distilleries on a very extensive scale; and at the latter place, manufactories for patent shot and artificial stone: the manufactures carried on in Southwark, and its immediate vicinity, are of different kinds, being chiefly such as are connected with the varied trade of the port of London. This north-eastern extremity of the county has a very large share in the vast commerce of the port of London; and, besides its numerous wharfs and quays on the banks of the Thames, it possesses various large commercial docks, among which may be noticed, more particularly, the Grand Surrey docks (Outer and Inner), by which the Grand Surrey canal connects with the river.

The principal rivers are the Thames, the Wey, and the Mole. The Thames, forming the entire northern boundary of the county, first touches it at its north-western extremity, above Egham, whence it takes a south-easterly course, by the town of Chertsey, to the confluence of the Wey, where it assumes an irregular north-easterly direction to the village of Kew, passing by the town of Kingston (to which and the village of Thames-Ditton it makes an extensive sweep on the south-east), the village of Petersham, and the bold heights of Richmond: at Kew it takes a winding easterly course, which it pursues by Mortlake, Barnes, Putney, Wandsworth, and Battersea: then forming Chelsea Reach, it pours its majestic stream through the spacious arches of the six magnificent bridges which connect the cities of London and Westminster with the borough of Southwark and the southern suburbs of the metropolis; and, immediately eastward of the last of them forms the pool, or harbour of London; between Rotherhithe and Deptford it quits Surrey, as it approaches the superb pile of Greenwich hospital: above London bridge it is navigable for barges of large burden during the whole of its course past this county; the tide flows to Richmond bridge. The Wey, rising on the eastern border of Hampshire, to the south-west of Haslemere, makes a small circuit through that county, and then enters Surrey, on its south-western border, near Frensham, proceeding eastward to Godalming, where it becomes navigable, and whence its course to the Thames is generally in a north-north-easterly direction: at the village of Shalford, a little to the south of Guildford, it is joined by a stream which rises near Leith hill, to the south of Wotton, and passing through Guildford, by the villages of Stoke and Send, and close to the south-east of that of Woking, it proceeds to Weybridge, to which place it gives name, and near which it falls into the Thames at Harn Haw. The Mole rises from several springs on the southern borders of the county, and in the forest of Tilgate in Sussex, the waters of which unite in the parish of Horley, to the south of Reigate, whence this river takes a south-westerly course, at first through a flat and uninteresting county: approaching the downs near Dorking, the scenery changes, and passing beneath the venerable groves around Betchworth castle, the river enters a narrow defile, and pursues its course through a romantic valley beneath the almost perpendicular height of Box hill: its course from the vicinity of Dorking is nearly northward to Leatherhead, where it emerges from among the hills, flowing north-westward by the village of Stoke to that of Cobham, a little distance beyond which it takes a north-easterly direction by Esher to West and East Moulsey, at which latter place it joins the Thames opposite to Hampton Court. This river is famed for, and is supposed to derive its name from, the circumstance of a part of its waters pursuing a subterraneous passage: this is occasioned by the porous and cavernous nature of the soil over which the river runs during several miles of its course below Dorking: when its waters are at their ordinary height, no particular irregularity in its stream is here observable; but in seasons of drought its current is wholly carried through the swallows, as the subterraneous passages are called, and its ordinary channel, similar to that of any other river of the same size, is left dry, except here and there a stagnant pool: by the bridge at Thorncroft it rises again, and thenceforward the current is uninterrupted. The small river Wandle, rising from some very strong springs near Croydon, flows eastward by Beddington and Wollington, and having been greatly increased by the waters of some other powerful springs situated near Carshalton, flows northward by Mitcham, Morden, Merton, and Tooting, to Wandsworth, where it falls into the Thames, after a course of about ten miles: its waters are remarkable for their purity. A powerful stream rises in the town of Ewell, whence it pursues its course to the Thames, at Kingston. One of the streams which, by their junction in Kent, form the river Medway, rises in the parishes of Godstone and Horne, and flowing through that of Lingfield, passes eastward into that county. The small river Loddon forms the western boundary of Surrey for the distance of nine or ten miles near its source.

Under the head of canals it may be proper to observe, that the navigation of the Wey is artificial, and has locks upon it, which are supposed to have been the first constructed in the kingdom; the navigable channel also is, in some places, wholly separate from the natural course of the river: the bill for the formation of this navigation up to Guildford was passed in 1651, but the work was not carried into execution until towards the close of the century: it was extended to Godalming in 1760, and by its means timber, flour, and paper, are now exported to London. The Basingstoke canal enters Surrey from Hampshire near Dradbrook, crossing the river Loddon, from which it derives its chief supply of water; immediately turning northward, it proceeds in that direction to the neighbourhood of Frimley, where it pursues an easterly course, a little inclining northward, by Purbright, to the river Wey, a short distance below Byfleet; from Dradbrook to its junction with the navigable channel of the Wey, a distance of about fifteen miles, it has a fall of one hundred and ninety-five feet; from Hook common there is a branch to Turgis Green, six miles long, and on the same level: the act for the formation of this navigation was passed in 1778, and it was completed in 1796: the chief articles of traffic upon it are timber, corn, and coal. The Grand Surrey canal, the act for constructing which was obtained in 1801, commencing a little to the west of the road from London to Camberwell, is carried eastward across the Kent road, and then northward to the Grand Surrey docks, through which it communicates with the Thames. The Croydon canal, the act for making which was obtained in 1801, commencing on the northern side of that town, is carried north-by-east by the hamlet of Sydenham to the Grand Surrey canal, in the parish of Deptford; part of its course lies just within the north-eastern confines of Kent: it is navigable for boats of twenty-five tons' burden. The Surrey and Sussex canal forms a junction between the navigable channel of the Arun in Sussex, and that of the Wey, a little above Guildford. The Surrey railway, which was projected and commenced in the year 1802, proceeds from Wandsworth, in a double line, up the valley of the Wandle to Croydon, whence it is continued southward to Merstham: the part from Wandsworth to Croydon, about ten miles in length, was soon completed; and the success of the undertaking shortly induced the proprietors to form the further line, which is about seven miles long, but has not near the same extent of traffic as the lower part, from which short branches are carried to many of the manufactories on the banks of the Wandle; at Wandsworth the railway terminates at a basin, capable of holding more than thirty barges, which communicates with the Thames: the breadth of the two lines, with a foot-path, is twenty-four feet. In forming the railway between Croydon and Merstham, it was found necessary, for the purpose of preserving the level, to raise embankments across several vallies, of from ten to thirty feet deep, with arched carriage roads through them.

Owing to the inferiority of the materials for making and repairing the ordinary roads, they are not generally in a good condition. The road from London to the Land's End enters from Staines, and passes through Egham and Bagshot to Basingstoke: this is also the road from London to Truro, through Launceston; that from London to Wells, Bridg-water, and Minehead; that to Exeter and Dartmouth, through Taunton; that to Barnstaple and Ilfracomb; and that to Stratton. The road from London to Winchester, Poole, and Weymouth, branches off near Bagshot, and passes through Farnham to Alton in Hampshire: this is also the road from London to Southampton, to Gosport, and to Portsmouth. The road from London to Portsmouth, through Guildford, passes through Wandsworth, Kingston, Esher, Guildford, and Godalming, to Petersfield. The road from London to Chichester branches from the last near Godalming, through Haslemere, to Midhurst. The road from London to Brighton, by Lewes, passes through Streatham and Croydon, to East Grinstead in Sussex. That from London to Brighton, through Reigate, passes by Clapham common, Tooting, Mitcham, Sutton, and Reigate, to Crawley in Sussex: that by Horsham, branches from the last at Lower Tooting, and passes through Ewell, Epsom, Leatherhead, and Dorking. The road from London to Dover quits Surrey at New Cross turnpike.

This county contained the Roman station of Noviomagus, situated at Woodcote, near Croydon; besides two others, supposed to have been respectively at Kingston on Thames and Walton on the Hill. It was traversed by the roads leading from the southern and eastern coasts to the capital, which met in St. George's Fields, near Southwark, the principal of them being the Ermin-street, which ran nearly parallel to, and at a very short distance to the eastward of, the present turnpike-road through Clapham, Tooting, Merton, Ewell, and Epsom, to Ashted, thence proceeding, nearly in a southerly direction, to Dorking, where it took a westerly course, about a mile southward of Guildford, to Farnham, beyond which town it soon entered Hampshire; the Stane-street, which, branching from the Ermin-street at Dorking, proceeded southward, through the parish of Ockley, into Sussex; and another Stane-street, which from the metropolis passed through Streatham, Croydon, Coulsdon, Catterham, and Godstone, also into Sussex; and the Watling-street, from Dover, which crossed its north-eastern extremity to London. Remains of ancient encampments, supposed to be Roman, may be seen at Bottle hill, in the parish of Warlingham; on Castle hill, in that of Hascomb; near Chelsham; on Holmbury hill, in the parish of Ockley; at Ladlands and Oatlands; and on St. George's hill, near Walton on Thames. Foundations of Roman edifices have been discovered at Walton on the Hill, and on Blackheath, in the parish of Albury, both surrounded by intrenchments. Other remains of buildings, supposed to be of the like origin, have been traced in the vicinities of Wollington, Carshalton, and Beddinton; and near Kingston on Thames, Roman sepulchral urns, coins, earthenware, and foundations of buildings, have been found. Many Roman coins and pavements have also been found in St. George's Fields, Southwark. Different ancient encampments, the date of the formation of which is uncertain, exist in various places, besides those above mentioned; that at the south-western angle of Wimbledon common is supposed by Camden to mark the site of the battle fought in 568; while those of Hanstie Bury, on a projection of Leith hill, and War Coppice hill, in the parish of Catterham, are attributed to the Danes.

The number of religious houses in Surrey, of all denominations, prior to the general dissolution, was about twenty-eight. Remains yet exist of the abbeys of Chertsey and Waverley, and of the priories of Merton, Newark, or Newstead, and Southwark. Of ecclesiastical architecture and antiquities, the most remarkable specimens are in the churches of Addington, Barnes, Beddington, Camberwell, Carshalton, Chaldon, Chipstead, Compton, Croydon, Dunsfold, St. Mary and St. Nicholas (at Guildford), Kingston, Lambeth, Leatherhead, Leigh, Merstham, Merton, Merrow, Mickleham, Shere, St. Mary Overy, commonly called St. Saviour's, in Southwark (one of the largest and finest parochial churches in the kingdom), and in the chapel of St. Martha on the Hill. The most remarkable fonts are those of the churches of Beddington, Chelsham, Dunsfold, Elstead, Ewhurst, Frensham, Hambledon, Haslemere, Horne, Merstham, Mitcham, Mordon, Mortlake, Shere, Thames-Ditton, and Walton on the Hill. There are extensive remains of the castles of Farnham and Guildford. The most remarkable ancient residence is Lambeth palace: there are also remains of the ancient palace of the Archbishops of Canterbury, at Croydon. Few counties in England can vie with Surrey in the number and elegance of its seats of nobility and gentry, and certainly none not exceeding it in size: this circumstance is owing chiefly to its vicinity to the metropolis, and the superior pleasantness of its scenery. Of its parks, the royal one of Richmond, to the south-east of that elegant resort, is the most extensive, being nearly eight miles in circumference, and containing upwards of two thousand two hundred and fifty acres. Many of the farm-houses in the Weald have a mean and dilapidated appearance; but in the other parts of the county they are neat and commodious: the oldest are built entirely of brick, and generally roofed with large heavy flag-stones; while many are constructed on a wooden frame, with lath and plaster; others again are rough-cast. The mineral springs are numerous, and were formerly in high repute and much frequented, more particularly those of Epsom. On the northern side of the chalk hills, and in the vallies by which they are traversed, in the eastern part of the county, copious streams of water, in the shape of remarkably powerful springs, provincially called bourns, are periodically discharged. In sinking wells on the chalk it is often found necessary to bore to the depth of three hundred feet; and the thick beds of clay lying in the north-eastern part of the county must, for the same purpose, be bored entirely through, frequently to an equal depth. There are several remarkable excavations, of unknown date, in the chalk hill upon which Guildford castle stands. Surrey gives the title of earl to the family of Howard, Dukes of Norfolk.

SUSSEX, a maritime county, bounded on the west by Hampshire, on the north by Surrey, on the north-east and east by Kent, and on the south by the English Channel. It extends from $50^{\circ} 44'$ to $51^{\circ} 9'$ (N. Lat.), and from $50'$ (E. Lon.) to $57'$ (W. Lon.); comprising an area of upwards of one thousand four hundred and sixty-three square miles, or about nine hundred and thirty-six thousand three hundred and twenty statute acres. The population, in 1821, was 233,019. At the period of the invasion of Britain by the Romans, Sussex formed part of the territory of the Regni. The reduction of this part of the island was effected by Flavius Vespasian, who was commissioned by the Emperor Claudius, about the year 47, to establish the Roman dominion in the maritime provinces, which he accomplished without much difficulty, and fixed his head-quarters near the site of the present city of Chichester. This territory was included in the division called Britannia Prima. No particular mention of it occurs in history until after the departure of the Romans from Britain, when, in 477, a Saxon chieftain, named Ælla, landed, with his three sons and a considerable number of followers, at West Wittering, a village about eight miles south-west of Chichester: they soon made themselves masters of the adjacent coasts, but were too weak to penetrate into the country, which was vigorously defended by its inhabitants. Hostilities appear to have been carried on for several years between Ælla and the Britons, the former occasionally receiving reinforcements; and, in 485, a sanguinary but indecisive battle was fought near Mercradesbourne, in the vicinity of Pevensey. Ælla's forces having, however, been recruited by fresh arrivals of his countrymen, he undertook, in 490, the siege of Anderida, the capital of the Regni (the precise situation of which has not been ascertained), and at last succeeded in taking it by assault; as a punishment for the obstinacy of its defenders, he ordered them all to be put to the sword. From this period may be dated the foundation of the kingdom of the South Saxons, called in Saxon Suth Seaxe, of which Sussex is a contraction. Ælla, on the death of Hengist, founder of the Saxon kingdom of Kent, became the most influential of the Saxon chieftains in Britain, which he continued to be until his death in 504, or 505. Cissa, the only surviving son of Ælla, succeeded his father in the government of the South Saxons, and employed much of his time and treasure in rebuilding and improving the capital of his kingdom, to which he gave the name of Cissa-ceaster, now Chichester. About the year 650, Adelwalch succeeded to the throne of Sussex, and was attacked, vanquished, and made prisoner, by Wulfhere, monarch of the more powerful kingdom of Mercia. Having at the court of the latter embraced the Christian religion, Adelwalch, was reinstated in his dominions, and made every exertion to propagate the same faith among his subjects, receiving into his dominions Bishop Wilfrid, who had been expelled from Northumbria, at the same time assigning the peninsula of Selsea as his abode, and granting to him and his companions that and other lands for their maintenance. Ceadwalla, a prince of the blood royal of Wessex, having failed in an attempt to usurp the supreme authority in that kingdom, fled to the great forest of Anderida, which occupied the Weald of Sussex, Surrey, and Kent, where he succeeded in maintaining himself for some time at the head of a band of freebooters: Adelwalch attacked and expelled him from his territories; but Ceadwalla, having undertaken an expedition against Kent, which proved unsuccessful in his retreat from that kingdom, again encountered Adelwalch, whom he defeated and slew. On the death of the king, Berthun and Anthun, two South Saxon nobles, rallied their countrymen around them, and compelled the invader, Ceadwalla, to retire. The latter, however, on the death of the reigning monarch of Wessex, soon after succeeded peaceably to the throne of that kingdom, and renewing his contests with the South Saxons, entered their country with a powerful army, defeated them, and made great devastations throughout their whole territory: the final subjugation of Sussex was, however, left for Ceadwalla's successor, who, in 728, united it to his other dominions. Bishop Wilfrid returned to Northumbria about the year 658, and after his departure it appears that the ecclesiastical affairs of Sussex were under the government of the bishops of Winchester, until the year 711, when Eadbert, abbot of Selsea, was appointed bishop of the South Saxons, and for more than three succeeding centuries Selsea was the episcopal see, until it was removed to Chichester, in the reign of the Conqueror, about the year 1082. In the year 876, the Danes, returning from the siege of Exeter, landed on the coast of Sussex, but were attacked and routed by the men of Chichester, who slew many of them and captured some of their vessels. In 893, they visited the eastern part of the county, and proceeding up the river Rother, seized the town of Appledore in Kent. The famous Danish pirate, Hesting, or Hastings, also landed near the site of the present town of Hastings, where he raised some kind of fortifications. In 902, a battle was fought at Holmwood, in this county, between the Danes and the men of Kent; and in 904, Sweyn, King of Denmark, and Olave, King of Norway, retreating from the siege of London, ravaged both Surrey and Sussex. It was at this period also that a sanguinary battle was fought, near Lewes, between the North-men and the Saxons, in which the former were defeated, and Olave taken prisoner. In 1009, the Danish chiefs, Heming and Anlaf, laid waste Sussex, which experienced a similar devastation in 1013. In 1051, its coasts were ravaged by Godwin, Earl of Kent. William, Duke of Normandy, in his invasion of England, made his descent upon this coast, landing his army in Pevensey bay, where he arrived with a fleet of nine hundred sail, on September 29th, 1066. On the 14th of October the Saxon and the Norman armies came to an engagement at a place then called Epiton, but which, in commemoration of this victory, has ever since been called Battle. Thence William marched along the coast, north-eastward, to Dover. In 1087, or 1088, William II. invested Pevensey castle, where the rebellious Bishop of Baieux had taken refuge, the garrison in which, after a siege of six weeks, was compelled by famine to surrender. On May 14th, 1264, the decisive battle between the forces of Henry III. and those of his barons, under Simon de Montfort, was fought near Lewes, in which the king and his son, Prince Edward, were made prisoners. In 1266, Prince Edward attacked Winchelsea, and took it by storm. In 1287, Old Winchelsea and Rye harbours suffered greatly by a tremendous tempest, which choked up the mouth of the Rother, and changed its course. Sussex, at various periods, has suffered severely from partial invasions, to which its locality seems to have peculiarly exposed it. In 1340, the French burned several ships at Hastings, and made an attempt upon Winchelsea, which failed: in this year also they landed at Rottingdean, and advanced across the Downs towards Lewes, but were met by the gentlemen and other inhabitants of the neighbouring county, whom they defeated, but withdrew immediately to their ships, and carried off their prisoners. In 1380, the French and Spaniards landed at Winchelsea, which town they burned. In 1447, Rye suffered the like infliction from the French only. In 1513, the French made a descent on the coast, at Brighton, and having pillaged that town, set fire to it. In 1545, after they had retired from the Isle of Wight, they made another descent at the same place, but were driven back to their ships: they shortly after made an attempt to land at Newhaven, when all who approached the shore were either killed or drowned: from Newhaven they sailed to Seaford, and there attempted to land, but with the same unfavourable result; after which they retired to their ships and proceeded to France, with diminished forces. In 1551, the Princess, afterwards Queen Elizabeth, visited Halmaker, Petworth, Cowdray, and Chichester; and in 1573, after her accession, she made a tour along the coast: she also visited different parts of Sussex in 1591.

In 1642, while Charles I. lay at Reading, he was waited upon by a deputation from this county, requesting his authority to raise the southern counties in arms in his behalf. Having obtained the necessary commissions, Chichester was chosen, as being a walled town, for the place of rendezvous; but the mass of the people were little inclined to defend the royal cause, and, in 1643, Sir William Waller was sent by the parliament, with a considerable force, to attack the royalists, and dislodge them from that city, which he invested, and which, after a brisk siege of ten or twelve days, was surrendered to him, on December 29th. Near the close of the year 1644, Lord Hopton suddenly appeared with his forces before Arundel castle, which was given up to him on the first summons; but in less than two months after, it was as suddenly retaken by Sir William Waller. After the battle of Worcester, Charles II. was conducted, by Lord Wilmot and Col. Gunter, to the house of a Mr. Maunsell of Ovingdean, in this county, where he lay concealed for a few days, whilst his friends were devising the means of his escape to the continent, in effecting which he proceeded to Brighton, on October 14th, and the next morning embarked at Shoreham on board a coal vessel, which conveyed him to Fescamp in Normandy. In the year 1690, on June 30th, the combined fleets of the English and Dutch were defeated, off Beachy Head, by that of the French. Different places on the coast suffered severely, from violent gales and unusually high tides, in January 1775, and in the same month of the year 1792.

Sussex is co-extensive with the diocese of Chichester, in the province of Canterbury, and is divided into the two archdeaconries of Chichester and Lewes, the former containing the deaneries of Arundel, Boxgrove, Chichester, Midhurst, and Storrington, and, locally that of Pagham; the latter those of Dallington, Hastings, Lewes, and Pevensey, and, locally that of South Malling; all the parishes comprised in the exempt deaneries of Pagham and South Malling, with those of All Saints at Chichester, and St. Thomas in the Cliffe at Lewes, are in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Archbishop of Canterbury. The total number of parishes is three hundred, of which one hundred and fifty-seven are rectories, one hundred and twenty-seven vicarages, and the remainder, with the exception of three, which have both a rectory and a vicarage, perpetual curacies. The great civil divisions are called rapes, a term peculiar to this county: they are six in number, viz., Arundel, comprising the hundreds of Arundel, Avisford, Bury, Poling, Rotherbridge, and West Easwirth; Bramber, comprising those of Brightford, Burbeach, East Easwirth, Fishergate, Patching, Singlecross, Steyning, Tarring, Tipnoak, West Grinstead, and Windham and Ewhurst; Chichester, those of Aldwick, Bosham, Box and Stockbridge, Dumpford, Easebourne, Manhood, and Westbourn and Singleton; Hastings, those of Baldslow, Battle, Bexhill, Foxearle, Goldspur, Gostrow, Guestling, Hawkesborough, Henhurst, Netherfield, Ninfeld, Shoyswell, and Staple; Lewes, those of Barcomb, Buttinghill, Dean, Fishergate, Holmstrow, Lewes, Poynings, Preston, Street, Swanborough, Whalesbone, and Younsmere; and Pevensey, those of Alciston, Bishopstone, Burley-Arches, or Burarches, Danehill-Horsted, Dill, Eastbourne, East Grinstead, Flexborough, Hartfield, Longbridge, Loxfield-Dorset, Loxfield-Pelham, Ringmer, Rotherfield, Rushmonden, Shiplake, Totnore, and Willingdon, and the lowey of Pevensey. It contains the city and port of Chichester; the following members of the cinque-ports, viz., Hastings, Rye, Seaford, and Winchelsea, all which have markets except Seaford; the borough, market town, and sea-port of Horsham; the borough and market towns of Arundel, East Grinstead, Lewes, Midhurst, Shoreham, and Steyning; the borough of Bramber; the market towns and sea-ports of Brighton and Hastings; and the market towns of Cuckfield, Hailsham, Little Hampton, Petworth, and Worthing. Two knights are returned to parliament for the shire, two citizens for the city of Chichester, two barons for each of the members of the cinque-ports, and two burgesses for each of the boroughs: the county members are elected at Chichester. This is one of the counties forming the Home Circuit: the Lent assizes are held at Horsham, and the summer and winter assizes at Lewes: the county gaols are at Lewes and Horsham, a portion of the former being used as the county house of correction. The quarter sessions are held at Petworth, Horsham, Lewes, and Chichester: there are one hundred and thirty-four acting magistrates. The rates raised in the county for the year ending March 25th, 1827, amounted to £274,185. 2., and the expenditure to £273,664. 1., of which £239,778. 12. was applied to the relief of the poor.

The most remarkable feature in the surface and scenery of Sussex is the bold and open range of chalk hills, called the South Downs, extending into it from Hampshire, and stretching, in nearly an easterly direction, for the greater part of its length, gradually approaching the sea: their northern declivity is precipitous, but on the south their descent is gradual, except in the vicinity of Brighton, where they form a shore broken into stupendous cliffs, terminated on the east by the bold promontory of Beachy Head, which rises perpendicularly above the strand to the height of five hundred and sixty-four feet, and is the most elevated point on the southern coast of England. The rest of the coast is flat, excepting the vicinity of Selsea Bill, where a few rocks present themselves, and the rocks of Hastings. The district generally understood to constitute the South Downs consists only of the chalk hills lying to the east of Shoreham: many parts of the Downs westward of the river Arun are overgrown with much beech wood, chiefly of a dwarf size, furze, &c., so that the herbage is much inferior to that covering them further eastward. Southward of the chalk hills, extending from their base to the sea, lies a fertile and richly-cultivated vale, which towards its eastern extremity, between Brighton and Shoreham, is, for the most part, less than a mile in breadth: proceeding westward, between the rivers Adur and Arun, this is increased to three miles; and from the Arun to the borders of Hampshire its breadth varies from three to seven miles: its length is about thirty-six. Extensive tracts of marsh land lie adjacent to the coast, between the eastern extremity of the South Downs at Beachy Head and the confines of Kent, in the vicinity of Rye; others also are situated on the lower part of the course of the rivers Ouse, Adur, and Arun. "The Weald" comprises a tract of country, the exact limits of which are not defined: in a legal sense it means the large woodland district contained in the three counties of Sussex, Surrey, and Kent, in which the woods pay no tithe. The large portion of it within the limits of this county, called the Weald of Sussex, comprises nearly the whole of the level tract lying to the north of the Downs, together with the range of hills running the whole length of the county, at a short distance from its northern and north-eastern boundaries, a great part of which is completely barren. Such is the quantity of timber and other trees in the low plains of the Weald, that, when viewed from the chalk hills, they present to the eye the appearance of one mass of wood; this is, in part, owing to the common practice, at the period that this tract was first reclaimed from its condition of a wild forest, of leaving a shaw of wood, several yards in width, around each enclosure, as a nursery for timber. On the whole, the scenery of Sussex is pleasing and picturesque, much resembling that of the adjoining county of Surrey, except that its maritime districts, including the noble Downs, command a wide expanse of sea studded with numerous vessels, and terminated on the west by the Isle of Wight. The climate in the western maritime tracts is particularly mild, and favourable for vegetation; as is also that of the South Downs, though not to so great a degree. These hills are bleak, and completely exposed to the violent westerly and south-westerly winds, which sometimes do considerable damage, by shaking the corn out of the ear: the gales also carry with them saline particles, from the spray of the sea, (which beats with extreme violence upon the coast,) that destroy the vegetation of all the hedges and trees over which it more immediately sweeps: the same matter penetrates even through the walls of houses, particularly those in exposed situations.

The different soils of chalk, clay, sand, loam, and gravel, are found in this county. The first is the soil of the South Downs, consisting, in its natural state, of a rich light hazel mould, lying upon a substratum of loose chalk, or chalk rubble, which covers the more compact rock of the same nature: when brought under cultivation it becomes intermixed with a great portion of chalk by the action of the plough. In some places along the summit of the Downs, nearly the whole surface consists of flints covered by a natural turf: descending from these hills the soil becomes of a deeper staple, and near their base is every where of a good and sufficient depth for the plough. Westward of the river Arun this soil is very gravelly, and contains large flints, and between the Adur and the Ouse has a thin substratum of reddish sand. Along the northern base of the chalk hills, throughout nearly their whole length, and lying between them and the clay of the Weald, is a narrow tract of rich and strong arable land, consisting of an excessively stiff, deep, calcareous loam, on a substratum of pure clay, which, from the admixture of chalk, has generally a whitish appearance. The soil of the fertile vale lying to the south of the Downs consists of a rich loam, in some places rather stiff, more particularly in the projecting south-western angle of the county, and in the peninsula of Selsea Bill, though more commonly light and sandy, and resting upon a substratum of brick-earth, or gravel; the latter, in the western part of it, being by far the most prevalent. Between this and the chalk hills extends a narrow tract, inferior to the former in richness, but consisting of excellent land for turnips; its breadth is greatest on the confines of Hampshire, the flints lying upon its surface in such abundance as entirely to hide the mould: vegetation, however, flourishes through these beds of stone with singular luxuriance. The prevailing soil of the Weald, namely, that of its low plains, is a very stiff clayey loam, on a substratum of brick-clay, and that again upon one of sand-stone. Upon the hills before mentioned, as traversing it in a direction nearly from east to west, the soil is in some places a sandy loam, resting upon a sandy gritstone; and in others, a poor, black, sandy, vegetable mould on a soft clay. A long line of these poor sandy tracts, in an unimproved state, crosses the northern part of this county from Kent, and extends into Hampshire: these wastes are, however, wholly separated from each other by extensive districts of clay and others under cultivation. The soil of the marsh lands is composed of decayed vegetable substances, intermixed with sand and other matter, deposited by inundations: in the rape of Lewes this vegetable mould is about twelve inches thick; while in that of Pevensey it is many feet deep, and rests upon a heavy black silt, or sea-sand, containing various kinds of shells: stumps of trees, and timber of large size, have been dug from both these tracts.

The rich arable lands lying to the south of the Downs, and those at the foot of their northern declivity, amount to about one hundred thousand acres: of Down land there is about sixty-eight thousand acres, of which a great proportion is under its native green sward: the arable and grass lands of the Weald, which are of nearly equal extent, amount together to about four hundred and twenty-five thousand acres. The whole county is enclosed with good hedge-rows, excepting the greater part of the Downs, and the wastes towards its northern confines. The rotations of crops are regulated chiefly by the nature and properties of the soil, and are therefore various: the common system in the Weald is a fallow, two crops of corn, and one of clover. The corn and pulse commonly grown are wheat, barley, oats, and peas. A valuable species of wheat, called the Chidham white, or hedge wheat, takes the former name from the village of Chidham, in this county, where it was first cultivated, the plant which produced the original seed having been found growing wild in a hedge in that neighbourhood. The soil of the extensive tract of the Weald being generally too heavy for the culture of barley, the quantity produced is consequently inferior. Oats are grown on the largest scale in the Weald. Peas are very extensively cultivated, especially on the South Downs, and in the maritime districts: beans are very little grown. Tares are frequently cultivated as green food for cattle and horses. Coleseed, barley, and rye are sown, and are in great esteem among the flock-masters of the Downs, as green food for their sheep. Turnips are also much cultivated, more particularly as food for the flocks during the winter and the spring. Potatoes are extensively and very successfully grown, particularly in the vicinities of Battle, East Bourne, and Chichester: they are chiefly applied to the fattening of cattle.

The principal artificial grasses are, red and white clover, trefoil, and ray-grass: lucerne is commonly cultivated in the neighbourhood of Brighton and East Bourne, and is seen in a few other places, particularly about Chichester: sainfoin is also occasionally sown. In the eastern and north-eastern parts, hops are very extensively cultivated. The meadow lands are mown every year, and afterwards grazed. It is only in the western part of the county that there are any extensive tracts of irrigated meadows; these are chiefly on the course of the small river Lavant. The marshes may be classed among the finest and most profitable of their kind, having undergone great improvement: the brooks, or levels, as they are called, by which they are traversed, are sometimes, especially in winter, so much swollen by violent rains, as to overflow their banks: when one of these inundations occurs during summer, as is sometimes the case, the whole produce of the flooded land is, for that year, entirely spoiled by the stagnant muddy water, and no kind of cattle will eat the herbage; the tides also sometimes overwhelm parts of them, as the banks are not every where strong enough to resist their force. These marshes occupy about thirty thousand acres, and are wholly employed in the feeding of cattle and sheep; the level of Pevensey is preferred for the cattle, while the marshes about Winchelsea and Rye, adjoining the western side of Romney-Marsh in Kent, not possessing fresh water, are better calculated for sheep. An act of parliament was obtained, about the commencement of the present century, for widening the channel of the Ouse, near Lewes, and making a shorter cut to the sea, the execution of which design has been of essential benefit to the Lewes and Laughton levels. The great extent of Down land having its native green sward is applied to the feeding of numerous flocks of sheep: the herbage is short, sweet, and aromatic, and of an excellent kind, peculiar to these hills, which is supposed to give to the flesh of the sheep fed upon them that firmness and exquisite flavour for which it is so remarkable. Several of the manures are peculiar: chalk is used in immense quantities, as also is lime burned from it; and as the chalk hills extend no further eastward than East Bourne, it is shipped in sloops from Holywell pits at Beachy Head, and conveyed to the kilns at Bexhill, Hastings, and Rye: lime is also burned from a kind of limestone dug in the Weald. The lands in the maritime district are extensively manured with marl, which is found almost every where on the south side of the Downs, at the depth of only a few feet from the surface: great quantities are also dug from pits on the sea-shore, which are generally covered at high water. Sea mud, provincially called sleech, is frequently used as manure near the coast; wood ashes are employed in the Weald.

The chief object of the cattle system is the breeding and rearing of stock; for the purposes of working, and fattening for the butcher, the dairy being only a secondary object. The native cattle are ranked among the best in the kingdom: their colour is universally red, and they have a great disposition to fatten; they yield but very little milk, but the quality of it is peculiarly rich: many oxen are employed in the labours of the farm. When fat, the ordinary weight of the oxen is about one hundred and forty stone: the other sorts are principally Welch. Besides its valuable native breed of cattle, Sussex has a breed of sheep, the South Down, one of the most celebrated and numerous in the kingdom: this breed has of late years been introduced in great numbers into various parts of England, more particularly the southern and midland counties; and its excellence is every where acknowledged. The wool is of a very fine carding kind, and its lightness is in proportion to its fineness. The other kinds are the celebrated Romney-Marsh breed, and Hampshire, Dorsetshire, Wiltshire, and Somersetshire sheep. The hogs bear much affinity to those of Berkshire; some of them are of a mixed breed, between this and a smaller species. Great numbers of rabbits occupy the extensive sandy wastes, many of them being sent to the London market. Northchapel, Kindford, and their vicinities, are famous for fowls. Most of what are called Dorking fowls are bred in the Weald of Sussex, the chief market for them being at Horsham.

In the western parts of the county are some considerable orchards, from which cider is made: it is only to the south of the Downs that orchards for cider are much attended to, though the vicinity of Petworth is considered to produce the best in the county: nearly all that is made is for home consumption. Sussex has, from the remotest period of antiquity, been celebrated for its fine growth of timber, chiefly oak: the extent of its woodlands cannot be estimated at less than one hundred and seventy thousand acres, nearly all included within the Weald, the timber produced in which is preferred by the navy contractors to that of any other district. In the Saxon times here appears to have been one continued forest, stretching from Hampshire into Kent, which, at the time of the Norman Conquest, was valued, not according to the quantity of timber it produced, but the number of hogs that could be fed on the acorns. The quantity of timber in the remaining portions of this ancient woodland has, of late years, been much lessened by extensive falls. The coppices contain oak, ash, beech, Spanish chesnut, willow, maple, and red and white birch; the natural produce of the sands consists chiefly of birch, hazel, and beech underwood. The produce of these coppices is converted principally into poles for the hop-plantations, and for fuel: new plantations have been formed in several places. The waste lands are chiefly situated on the northern side of the county, occupying an extent of about one hundred thousand acres: their soil has a discouraging aspect, generally consisting of a poor blackish sand, frequently very wet; and their chief value is as rabbit warrens. Among the most extensive are, St. Leonard's Forest, containing about ten thousand acres; Ashdown Forest, occupying nearly twenty thousand; and the forests of Waterdown and Tilgate. The principal articles of fuel are coal and wood; in a few places turf is used.

The chief mineral productions are the various descriptions of limestone obtained in the Weald: one of these is the Sussex marble, which, when cut and polished, is equal in beauty to most marbles: it is frequently used for chimney-pieces, and for building, paving and burning into lime: much of it was employed in building the cathedral at Canterbury, where it is called Petworth marble, being found in the neighbourhood of that town in the highest degree of perfection. The limestone and the iron-stone in contact with it often rise to within a very few feet of the surface. Alternate strata of sand-stone and iron-stone occur every where in the Weald; and under these, at a considerable depth, are numerous strata of limestone, which, when burned, makes the finest cement in the kingdom. The sand-stone, though often extremely friable, is in some places solid enough for the purposes of masonry: the iron-stone is of various kinds, each having a provincial name. Anciently the iron-stone of this district was very extensively worked as ore, until the successful establishment of the great iron and coal works in the midland and northern districts of the kingdom occasioned the works in the Weald, the fuel of which was supplied by the extensive surrounding woodlands, to be wholly abandoned. Fullers' earth is found at Tillington, and used in the neighbouring fulling-mills; red ochre is obtained at Graffham, Chidham, and several other places on the coast, some of it being sent to London. The manufacture of charcoal, chiefly for gunpowder, has been of considerable importance in this county, from which large quantities have been annually sent to London over land. At Chichester a small woollen manufacture is carried on: sacks, blankets, linen and worsted yarn, cotton and stuff goods, and other articles, are made in the workhouses. There are paper-mills at Iping and a few other places. Potash is made at Bricksill hill, near Petworth, for the soap-makers of that town. Brick-making is common in many parts of the county: near Petworth are kilns for the burning of bricks and tiles to be exported to the West Indies. Ship and boat building is carried on in some of the small harbours of Sussex; yet, notwithstanding the great extent of sea-coast, its maritime commerce is of nearly as little importance as its manufactures. Corn is exported in different directions, much of it being sent to Portsmouth. A considerable quantity of timber is exported; as are charcoal, cord-wood, and oak-bark; horned cattle and sheep, hides, and wool, are among its agricultural exports. There are several fisheries upon the coast, chiefly for herrings, mackerel, and flat-fish, much of the produce being sent to London. In the Weald are very numerous ponds for feeding fresh water fish for the London markets: these are chiefly carp; though tench, perch, eels, and pike, are also kept: many of the ponds were originally formed for the purpose of working the machinery of the iron-manufactories long since abandoned. The most fashionable places of resort for sea-bathing are Brighton, Worthing, and Hastings.

All the principal rivers rise in the Weald, within the limits of the county, and take a tolerably direct course to the English channel, so that their length is not great. They are, the Arun, with its tributary, the Rother; the Ouse; and the Adur. The Arun has its source in St. Leonard's Forest, whence it flows, for a few miles, by Horsham, and then turns due south: having received the waters of the Rother, which rises in the north-western part of the county, and joins it near the village of Stopham, its course becomes very serpentine, as it flows through a rich tract of marshes, and by the town of Arundel, to the sea at Little Hampton: this river, with the aid of several artificial cuts, has been made navigable up to Newbridge, near Guillenhurst; and the Rother, with the like assistance, as high as the town of Midhurst. A small canal also branches from the Rother to the village of Haslingbourne, within half a mile of Petworth. The largest barges navigating these rivers are of thirty tons' burden: the tide flows up the Arun, a distance of seventeen miles, to the vicinity of the village of Amberley: this river is celebrated for its mullets, which, in the summer season, proceed up it, in large shoals, as far as Arundel, as also for its trout and eels. The Ouse is formed by the junction of two streams, one of which rises in the forest of Worth, the other in that of St. Leonard, uniting near Cuckfield, whence the Ouse, proceeding first eastward, and then southward, passes the town of Lewes, to the sea at Newhaven: this river has been made navigable beyond Lewes to within five miles of Cuckfield. The Adur, sometimes called the Beeding, also rises in St. Leonard's Forest, and pursues a course southward, by Steyning and Bramber, to Shoreham, where it suddenly takes an easterly direction, nearly parallel with the coast, and only at a short distance from it, falling into the sea a little westward of Brighton: it is navigable for ships of considerable burden to Shoreham, and for barges to the vicinity of the village of Ashurst. The Rother has its source at Rotherfield, near Ashdown Forest, whence it proceeds eastward, and soon becomes the boundary between this county and that of Kent: after passing the Isle of Oxney, in the latter county, it suddenly turns southward across the eastern extremity of Sussex, expanding into an æstuary, and falling into the sea below the town of Rye, the harbour of which it forms; it is navigable as far as Newenden. The Lavant, a much smaller stream than any of the above, rises in the chalk hills near East Dean, and flows southward by Chichester, some distance below which it becomes navigable for ships, and expands into an æstuary, which opens into the sea between the village of Wittering and the south-eastern point of Hayling island in Hampshire: remarkably fine lobsters are bred in this river, near its mouth. The shores of the south-western part of the county are rendered very irregular by several other arms of the sea, one of which separates Thorney island from the rest of the county. One of the four streams which, by their junction immediately within the south-western confines of Kent, form the river Medway, rises in the north-eastern part of this county. The Portsmouth and Arundel canal, the act for the formation of which was obtained in 1815, commencing from the river Arun, a little below the latter town, proceeds westward, in nearly a direct line, to the broad æstuary of the Lavant, below Chichester, to which city there is a short branch northward: from the Lavant the navigation is continued through the channels which separate Thorney and Hayling islands from the main land to the eastern side of Portsea island, where the artificial navigation recommences, and proceeds westward across that island to Portsmouth.

The roads are generally good. That from London to Chichester enters the county from Haslemere in Surrey, and passes through Midhurst, where it is joined by another road from London to the same place, entering from Godalming, near Cripple-Crouch, whence there is a branch to Petworth. The road from London to Brighton, through Lewes, entering from Surrey, passes through East Grinstead and Lewes, or through Maresfield and Lewes, to Brighton; that from London to Brighton through Reigate passes through Crawley and Cuckfield, in this county; and that from London to Brighton by Horsham, through West Grinstead and Steyning: the road to Newhaven and Seaford branches from the first of these at Lewes; and those to Arundel, Tarring, and New Shoreham, from the last at Steyning. The road from London to Rye and Winchelsea runs for upwards of twenty miles along the confines of the counties of Sussex and Kent: the road to Hastings branches from it at Flimwell, and thence proceeds through Robertsbridge and Battle to Hastings.

This county is supposed to have contained the Roman stations of Anderida Civitas, at East Bourne; Anderida Portus, at Pevensey; Cilindunum, at Slingdon; Mida, at Midhurst; Mantantonis, or Mutuantonis, at Lewes; Portus Adurni, at Aldrington; and Regnum, at Chichester. The present roads from Portsmouth, from Midhurst, and from Arundel, to Chichester are considered to have been originally of Roman formation; and from this city the Roman road, commonly called the Stane-street, proceeded, in a northeasterly direction, towards Dorking in Surrey, where it fell into the Ermin-street, being traceable in many parts of its course. Various Roman domestic remains have been dug up in different places, particularly at Chichester, Bognor, and East Bourne, including tessellated pavements and baths: coins of the Lower Empire have been found in various other places. The number of ancient encampments upon the Downs and in other parts of the county, near the sea, evince that they have been frequently the scene of military operations: some of these ancient fortifications are supposed to have been made by the Romans, others by the Saxon and the Danish invaders, while one on Mount Caburn, about a mile and a half from Lewes, on the northern edge of the Downs, is thought to be British. Near the western confines of the county, to the west of Chichester, are the encampment of the Broile, of an oblong form, about half a mile in length and a quarter in breadth; and another, called Gonshill, of the same form. On the northern brow of the Downs, overlooking the Weald, and proceeding from west to east, occur the following camps; Chenkbury, about two miles west of Steyning, which is circular, and the circumference about two furlongs; eight miles further, above Poynings, a large camp of an oval form, not less than a mile round, and accessible only at one narrow neck of land, which is defended by a deep broad ditch and high bank; Wolstenbury, about three miles further, on a hill projecting from the rest like a bastion, nearly circular, and about a furlong in diameter; Ditchling, three miles from the last, nearly square, about sixty rods long, and fifty broad; and lastly, that on Mount Caburn, already mentioned, which is round, and scarcely three furlongs in circumference; and a quarter of a mile westward of it is another fortification, much larger, but not so perfect. Those on the southern side of the Downs, proceeding in the same direction, are, that on St. Roche's, or St. Rook's, hill, which is circular, and about two furlongs in diameter; that on High down, four miles eastward of Arundel, a small square; and Cissbury, four miles south-west of Steyning. The only one on the central heights of the chalk hills is Hollingbury, two miles north of Brighton, which is square, and the area about five acres. About a mile eastward of the same town, on the top of a hill near the sea, is a camp with a triple ditch and bank, also square, except that the angles are rounded off: its outer circumference is about three quarters of a mile. In the parish of Telscombe, about five miles from the last, are two other squares; and at Newhaven, on the point of a hill overlooking the mouth of the Ouse, is a strong fortification of an oval form, and containing an area of about six acres. About a mile eastward of Seaford is another work of the same kind, also situated close to the sea, but of a semicircular form, and containing about twelve acres; and lastly, about three miles east of Cuckmere haven, near Burling Gap, are other earthworks, enclosing a hill, of a semi-elliptical form, and about three quarters of a mile in circumference: traces of several more earthworks of less extent and importance are discoverable in other places.

The number of religious houses in this county, before the general dissolution, including hospitals and colleges, was about fifty-eight. There are yet extensive remains of the magnificent abbey of Battle, founded, in 1067, by William the Conqueror, in commemoration of his victory over Harold; and of that of Bayham, on the confines of Kent; and considerable relics of the priories of Boxgrove, Hardham, Lewes, Michelham, and Sheldred, about four miles north of Midhurst. The churches most remarkable for antiquity, or other peculiarities, are, those of Aldrington (in ruins), Arundel, Barnham, Battle, Bramber, Broadwater, Cuckfield, East Marden, St. Clement and All Saints at Hastings, Horsham, St. John sub Castro and St. Anne at Lewes, New Shoreham, Old Shoreham, Rye, Selsea, Steyning, South Stoke, Up-Waltham, St. Thomas at Winchelsea, and West Hampnett. There are also interesting remains of ancient chapels at several places. Some of the fonts most worthy of notice are those of Aldingbourn, a curious specimen of the very ancient fonts of black marble, standing on five pillars of unequal size, which are common in this county; Bosham, Brighton, St. Clement's at Hastings, North Mundham, Stedham, Tortington, West Wittering, Woolbeding, and Yapton. The most considerable remains of ancient castles are those of Amberley, Arundel, Bodiam, Bramber, Eridge, in the parish of Frant, Hastings, Hurstmonceaux, Ipres at Rye, Lewes, Pevensey, Scotney, and Winchelsea. The most remarkable ancient mansion is that of Cowdray House, now in ruins. Several of the modern seats of the nobility and gentry are magnificent; and the Pavilion at Brighton is distinguished as one of the residences of the monarch. Some of the seats most worthy of notice are, Petworth Park, the residence of the Earl of Egremont, the lord-lieutenant of the county; Arundel Castle, that of the Duke of Norfolk; the episcopal palace of Chichester; Eridge Castle, the residence of the Earl of Abergavenny; Goodwood, that of the Duke of Richmond; Parham Park, that of Lord de la Zouche; Penshurst Place, that of Sir John Shelley Sidney, Bart; Sheffield Park, that of the Earl of Sheffield; Slingdon House, that of the Earl of Newburgh; and Stanmer Park, that of the Earl of Chichester. The ordinary houses, as well as the gentlemen's seats, when situated near the quarries, are generally built of the kinds of stone that are found in the northern and eastern parts of the county. On the Downs, and in their vicinity, flints are almost the only material for the former. The houses in different parts, particularly those in exposed situations, are frequently faced with tile. There is a chalybeate spring at Brighton, and another at East Bourne: near Hastings there is a singular dropping well, and, in the same vicinity, a fine waterfall of forty feet perpendicular. The following parishes are incorporated for the common support of their poor; viz., Repton, Cocking, Chithurst, East Bourne, Farnhurst, Iping, Linchmere, Lodsworth, Lurgasall, Selham, Stedham, Tillington, Trayford, Trot-ton, Woolbeding, and Wollavington, which have their common house of industry at East Bourne; and Bersted, Bignor, Burton, Bury, Clapham, Coates, Duncton, Egdean, Patching, Slindon, and Sutton, which have their house of industry at the last-mentioned place. The title of the Duke of Sussex is borne by His Royal Highness Prince Augustus Frederick, sixth son of George III., upon whom it was conferred in the year 1801.

SUSTEAD, a parish in the northern division of the hundred of ERPINGHAM, county of NORFOLK, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S.W.) from Cromer, containing 134 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, endowed with £600 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Rev. John Boldero. The church is dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul.

SUTCOMBE, a parish in the hundred of BLACK TORRINGTON, county of DEVON, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by E.) from Holsworthy, containing 405 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Totness, and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £17. 10. $7\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Rev. W. H. Coham. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, has a Norman doorway, but is mostly of later date. There is an almshouse for six poor persons, founded and endowed by Sir William Morice, Secretary of State to Charles II.

SUTTERBY, a parish in the Wold division of the wapentake of CANDLESHOE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $4\frac{3}{4}$ miles (W. S. W.) from Alford, containing 33 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £5. 10. $2\frac{1}{2}$., endowed with £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. John the Baptist.

SUTTERTON, a parish in the wapentake of KIRTON, parts of HOLLAND, county of LINCOLN, $8\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. W. by N.) from Holbeach, containing 1014 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £23. 3. 4., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is principally in the later style of English architecture, with a tower, surmounted by an elegant crocketed spire.

SUTTON, a parish in the hundred of BIGGLESWADE, county of BEDFORD, $1\frac{3}{4}$ mile (S.) from Potton, containing 369 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Bedford, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £20, and in the patronage of the President and Fellows of St. John's College, Oxford. The church is dedicated to All Saints. Here were the seat and royalty of the celebrated John of Gaunt, Duke of Lancaster, who conferred Sutton and Potton upon Sir Roger Burgoyne and his heirs, by a curious laconic deed in doggerell verse, which is preserved among the ancient records in the Arches, Doctors' Commons. The manor-house was burned down in 1826. There is a fine chalybeate spring near the parsonage-house. The learned Bishop Stillingfleet was rector of Sutton, about the middle of the seventeenth century, where he wrote his Origines Sacrae.

SUTTON, a parish in the southern division of the hundred of WITCHFORD, Isle of ELY, county of CAMBRIDGE, $6\frac{1}{4}$ miles (W. by S.) from Ely, containing 1157 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, with the rectory of Mepal united, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Bishop of Ely, rated in the king's books at £10, and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Ely. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, was built by Barnet, Bishop of Ely, who died in 1373: it is a beautiful specimen of the decorated style of English architecture. There are places of worship for Baptists and Wesleyan Methodists. This place had anciently a market and a fair, granted to the first abbot of Ely. A charity school is supported by the Dean and Chapter, the master of which receives a salary of £20 per annum. In 1634, some labourers discovered, near this place, several ancient coins and gold rings, and three silver plates, one of which had a curious inscription engraven upon it.

SUTTON, a township in the parish of RUNCORN, hundred of BUCKLOW, county palatine of CHESTER, 2 miles (N. E. by E.) from Frodsham, containing 266 inhabitants.

SUTTON, a township in the parish of PRESTBURY, hundred of MACCLESFIELD, county palatine of CHESTER, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. E. by S.) from Macclesfield, containing 2991 inhabitants, who are principally employed in the silk manufacture. Here are two small bequests, by Catherine Nixon, in 1689, and John Upton, applied to the instruction of poor children. This was the seat of the family of Holinshed, the historian, and is supposed to have been his birthplace.

SUTTON, a township in that part of the parish of MIDDLEWICH which is in the hundred of NORTHWICH county palatine of CHESTER, $1\frac{1}{4}$ mile (S.) from Middlewich, containing 32 inhabitants.

SUTTON, a parish in the hundred of SCARSDALE, county of DERBY, 4 miles (E. S. E.) from Chesterfield, containing, with Duckmanton, 685 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, with the vicarage of Duckmanton annexed, in the archdeaconry of Derby, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, rated in the king's books at £12. 16. $0\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of Richard Arkwright, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Mary; the windows exhibit some remains of ancient stained glass. Twenty poor children are instructed for about £20 per annum, arising from the rent of sixteen acres of land allotted by the lord and freeholders of the manor. Nicholas Deincourt, Earl of Scarsdale, in 1643, fortified the hall, which he had previously erected here, for Charles I.; it was taken by assault, and the works demolished by Sir John Gell, and, some time afterwards, was plundered by the parliamentary garrison of Bolsover: this mansion is situated in an extensive and beautiful park.

SUTTON, a parish in the hundred of ROCHFORD, county of ESSEX, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (S. E. by S.) from Rochford, containing 89 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Essex, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £11, and in the patronage of W. Cockerton, Esq. and others.

SUTTON, a township in the parish of PRESCOT, hundred of WEST DERBY, county palatine of LANCASTER, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (S. E. by E.) from St. Helen's, containing 2329 inhabitants, who are extensively employed in the manufacture of crown and flint glass, earthenware, and watch movements.

SUTTON, a township in the parish of WYMONDHAM, hundred of FOREHOE, county of NORFOLK, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (S. W. by S.) from Wymondham, containing 645 inhabitants.

SUTTON, a parish in the hundred of HAPPING, county of NORFOLK, $8\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E. N. E.) from Coltishall, containing 317 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £6. 16. 8., and in the patronage of the Earl of Abergavenny. The church is dedicated to St. Michael.

SUTTON, a chapelry in the parish of CASTOR, liberty of PETERBOROUGH, county of NORTHAMPTON, $1\frac{1}{4}$ mile (E. by S.) from Wansford, containing 113 inhabitants. The chapel is dedicated to St. Michael. The river Nene runs through the chapelry, in which there is a fine stone quarry, producing stone resembling that at Ketton.

SUTTON, a hamlet in the parish of GRANBY, northern division of the wapentake of BINGHAM, county of NOTTINGHAM, 14 miles (E. by S.) from Nottingham. The population is returned with the parish.

SUTTON, a parish in the liberty of SOUTHWELL and SCROOBY, though locally in the wapentake of Bassetlaw, county of NOTTINGHAM, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. N. W.) from East Retford, containing, with the township of Lound, 717 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, with that of Scrooby annexed, in the archdeaconry of Nottingham, and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £10, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Duke of Portland. The church is dedicated to St. Bartholomew. The river Idle runs through the parish, in which there is a very ancient mansion of singular appearance, said to have been formerly much larger than at present, and the country residence of some of the ancestors of Earl Fitzwilliam. A school, erected by subscription in 1783, is endowed with the proceeds of £70, the gift of Richard Taylor, in 1737, and with two allotments of the waste lands, enclosed in 1773: the annual income is about £28, for which, and the payment of threepence each per week, thirty children are educated. Sutton is in the honour of Tutbury, duchy of Lancaster, and within the jurisdiction of a court of pleas held at Tutbury every third Tuesday, for the recovery of debts under 40s.

SUTTON, a township in the parish of DIDDLEBURY, hundred of MUNSLow, county of SALOP, 6 miles (N.) from Ludlow, containing 180 inhabitants.

SUTTON, a parish in the liberties of the borough of SHREWSBURY, county of SALOP, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. S. E.) from Shrewsbury, containing 71 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Salop, and diocese of Hereford, rated in the king's books at £3, endowed with £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of Lord Berwick. The church is dedicated to St. John. Sutton Spa, a fine mineral spring issuing from a stratum of ash-coloured clay, close to the village, is nearly similar in its properties to sea water, and has been found efficacious in cases of scrofula.

SUTTON, a parish in the hundred of WILFORD, county of SUFFOLK, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E. by E.) from Woodbridge, containing 577 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Suffolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £8. 2. 1., and in the patronage of the Rev. Robert Field. The church is dedicated to All Saints. There is a place of worship for Baptists. The navigable river Deben bounds the parish on the west, where there is a ferry to Wood- ford. Sutton Hall is a fine specimen of ancient domestic architecture.

SUTTON, a parish in the second division of the hundred of WALLINGTON, county of SURREY, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (E. N. E.) from Ewell, containing 911 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Surrey, and diocese of Winchester, rated in the king's books at £16. 18. 4., and in the patronage of the Rev. Thomas Hatch. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is partly in the decorated style of English architecture; it had formerly a wooden tower, which has been replaced by one of brick, and contains, among other handsome monuments, chiefly of the Talbots, one to the memory of Lady Dorothy Brownlow. In Domesday-book two churches are mentioned to have existed in this place. There is a place of worship for Independents. The Wey and Arun canal passes through the parish. Nine poor children are educated for £6 per annum, the gift of William Beck, in 1789; and the interest of a bequest of £100 by Susannah Bentley, in 1823, is paid in aid of the National school, which is further supported by voluntary contributions. There are also two Sunday schools, endowed by Mrs. Lucy Manners, with £700 three per cent. consols. Mary Gibson left £500 three per cent. annuities, directing the interest to be distributed annually in the following manner; £5 to the rector, £5 to the poor, £2 each to the two churchwardens, and £1 to the parish clerk, provided that, on the 12th of August, the mausoleum of her family be opened and inspected by them, and that they then repair to the church, to hear a sermon preached by the rector. There is a large chalk pit in the parish, in which a variety of curious fossils has been found.

SUTTON, a parish in the hundred of ROTHERBRIDGE, rape of ARUNDEL, county of SUSSEX, 5 miles (S.) from Petworth, containing 353 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chichester, rated in the king's books at £15. 0. 10., and in the patronage of the Earl of Egremont. The church, dedicated to St. John, is partly in the early, and partly in the decorated, style of English architecture.

SUTTON, a hamlet in the parish of TENBURY, upper division of the hundred of DODDINGTREE, county of WORCESTER, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. by E.) from Tenbury, containing 205 inhabitants.

SUTTON, a township in the parish of NORTON, wapentake of BUCKROSE, East riding of the county of YORK, 1 mile (S. by E.) from New Malton, containing 87 inhabitants.

SUTTON, a parish in the middle division of the wapentake of HOLDERNESS, East riding of the county of YORK, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. E.) from Kingston upon Hull, containing, with the township of Stoneferry, 3658 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of the East riding, and diocese of York, endowed with £600 royal bounty, and £1000 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of H. Broadley, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. James, had formerly a chantry of six priests, endowed by John of Sutton, and valued, at the dissolution, at £13. 18. 8. per annum. Many of the most opulent merchants of Hull have residences in this neighbourhood. In the village are two hospitals; one of them founded by Leonard Chamberlain, and rebuilt in 1800, for the maintenance of two poor aged widowers and eight widows, each having a separate house and three shillings a week; the other erected in 1819, by the trustees of the late Mrs. Watson, for the reception of the widows and daughters of poor clergymen deceased. A house of White friars existed here in the time of Edward I.

SUTTON, a joint township with Howgrave, in the parish of KIRKLINGTON, wapentake of HALLIKELD, North riding of the county of YORK, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N.) from Ripon, containing 122 inhabitants. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

SUTTON, a joint township with Healey, in the parish of MASHAM, eastern division of the wapentake of HANG, North riding of the county of YORK, $6\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. W.) from Bedale. The population is returned with Healey.

SUTTON, a township in the parish of BROTHERTON, partly within the liberty of St. PETER of YORK, East riding, and partly in the lower division of the wapentake of BARKSTONE-ASH, West riding, of the county of YORK, 1 mile (N. E. by E.) from Ferry-Bridge, containing 74 inhabitants.

SUTTON, a township in the parish of CAMPSALL, upper division of the wapentake of OSGOLDCROSS, West riding of the county of YORK, $6\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. by W.) from Doncaster, containing 145 inhabitants.

SUTTON, a township in the parish of KILDWICK, eastern division of the wapentake of STAINCLIFFE and EWCROSS, West riding of the county of YORK, 5 miles (W. N. W.) from Keighley, containing 1092 inhabitants, several of whom are employed in the manufacture of cotton goods and worsted. There is a place of worship for Baptists.

SUTTON in ASHFIELD, a parish in the northern division of the wapentake of BROXTOW, county of NOTTINGHAM, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. S. W.) from Mansfield, containing, with the hamlet of Hucknall under Huthwaite, 4655 inhabitants. The village is situated on an eminence, and comprises several streets, covering a considerable extent of ground. The inhabitants are chiefly engaged in the manufacture of cotton hose and lace: in the former about one thousand seven hundred frames are in operation, affording employment to more than two thousand five hundred persons; and there are twenty machines for making the latter: a large factory for spinning cotton, and making checks and nankeens, has long been conducted here. A few also find employment in making a coarse kind of red pottery ware. The Mansfield and Pinxton railway passes through this parish. Limestone of excellent quality abounds in the vicinity. A book society has been established for several years. A small customary market, for provisions, is held on Saturday. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the manorial court of Mansfield, endowed with £400 private benefaction, £400 royal bounty, and £1800 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Duke of Devonshire. The church, situated north-west of the town, is dedicated to St. Mary. There are places of worship for General and Particular Baptists, Independents, and Primitive and Wesleyan Methodists. A National school for boys is principally supported by voluntary contributions, excepting about £10 per annum, which is now appropriated for that purpose, arising from two small benefactions in land, given, some years ago, for the general purposes of education, by James Mason and Elizabeth Root. A Sunday school, in which twenty-one boys and one hundred and twenty girls are instructed, is connected with this institution; and the Sunday schools attached to the dissenting religious communities contain not less than five hundred children of both sexes. Joseph Whitehead, a frame-work knitter, eminent for his attainments in astronomy and mechanics, who constructed an orrery upon Ferguson's principle, and other complicated pieces of machinery, and was also an excellent musician, was a native of this place; he died in 1811, at the early age of twenty-seven years.

SUTTON (BISHOP'S), a parish in the hundred of BISHOP'S SUTTON, Alton (North) division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, $1\frac{3}{4}$ mile (E. S. E.) from New Alresford, containing 474 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Wells, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £4. 15. 10. W. Helyar, Esq. was patron in 1820. The church is principally in the early style of English architecture.

SUTTON-BONNINGTON, a parish in the southern division of the wapentake of RUSHCLIFFE, county of NOTTINGHAM, 2 miles (S. E. by E.) from Kegworth, containing 983 inhabitants. The living consists of the united rectories of St. Anne and St. Michael, in the archdeaconry of Nottingham, and diocese of York, the former rated in the king's books at £4. 17. 6., and in the patronage of the Crown, and the latter rated at £15. 2. 1., and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Bristol. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

SUTTON-BOURNE, a hamlet in the parish of LONG SUTTON, wapentake of ELLOE, parts of HOLLAND, county of LINCOLN, 5 miles (E. by N.) from Holbeach, containing 673 inhabitants.

SUTTON-CHENEY, a chapelry in the parish of MARKET-BOSWORTH, hundred of SPARKENHOE, county of LEICESTER, 2 miles (S. S. E.) from Market-Bosworth, containing 354 inhabitants. The chapel, dedicated to St. James, has lately received an addition of one hundred and fifty sittings, of which one hundred and twenty are free, the Incorporated Society for the enlargement of churches and chapels having granted £60 towards defraying the expense. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. The Ashby de la Zouch canal passes through the parish.

SUTTON-COLDFIELD, a market town and parish, having separate jurisdiction, though locally in the Birmingham division of the hundred of Hemlingford, county of WARWICK, 26 miles (N. W. by N.) from Warwick, and 110 (N. W. by N.) from London, containing 3466 inhabitants. This town, formerly called Sutton-Colville, and King's Sutton, is of considerable antiquity, having been of some note in the Saxon times. During the reign of Edward the Confessor, the manor was in the possession of Edwin, Earl of Mercia, but subsequently William the Conqueror held it in his own hands, and Henry I. exchanged it with the Earl of Warwick for other manors. In later times, the town having nearly fallen into decay, it was indebted to the attachment of Vesey, Bishop of Exeter, and chaplain to Seal and Arms.

Henry VIII., who was a native of this place, for that munificence which led to its revival, and laid the foundation of its future prosperity. It occupies a bleak and exposed situation on rising ground of steep acclivity, and consists principally of one long street; the houses are mostly modern, well built, and of handsome appearance, and the inhabitants are well supplied with water from springs. Adjacent to it is a very extensive and finely-wooded park, in which the inhabitants have the privilege of pasturage, for a small payment to the corporation: it is crossed by the Ikniel-street, which is distinctly traceable for two miles, entering the park near a small artificial mount, called King's Standing on the Coldfield, from the circumstance of Charles having harangued his troops from Shropshire on this spot, and taking thence a direction into the Lichfield road. Here is a medicinal spring, called Rounton Well; another, possessing sulphureous qualities, is now disused. The principal occupation is the manufacture of spades, saws, axes, and other implements: mills for grinding gun-barrels are worked by streams of water issuing from pools in the park, of which one covers from thirty to thirty-five acres. The Birmingham and Fazely canal passes through the parish. The market is held on Monday; and fairs are on Trinity-Monday and November 8th, for cattle, sheep, and pedlary. The town is governed by a corporation, which obtained its charter from Henry VIII., at the instance of Bishop Vesey, consisting of a warden, two capital burgesses, and twenty-two other corporate members. The warden, who is chosen annually, and the capital burgesses, for life, by the corporation, from their own body, are justices of the peace by virtue of their office: the warden acts as coroner for the town, manor, and lordship of Sutton. The corporation are lords of the manor, and elect a lord high steward and park-keepers: the former appoints his deputy, who must be a lawyer, and presides at the courts leet and baron. The other members are also chosen by the corporation; the inhabitants are free and eligible by residence. Under the charter they were empowered to hold courts of Oyer and Terminer, and of gaol delivery, which, from disuse, have been transferred to the county town, the corporation paying a quota towards the county rate: they hold a petty session at the town hall, on the Friday in the week of general quarter sessions. A court of record was formerly held, but it has been discontinued since 1727. In the town hall, a neat brick building, are the arms of Bishop Vesey, emblazoned on a shield surmounted with a mitre.

The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Coventry, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, rated in the king's books at £33. 9. 2., and in the patronage of William Bedford, Esq. The church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, is a fine ancient structure, built probably in the thirteenth century, though combining different styles of English architecture: the aisles were added by Bishop Vesey, whose effigy, in a recumbent posture, with a mitre on his head and crosier in his right hand, is in the chancel: part of the nave fell down about seventy years ago, and was rebuilt by the corporation, at the expense of £1500. The free grammar school was founded, in the reign of Henry VIII., and endowed with land in the parish, by Bishop Vesey: the salary of the master is from £300 to £400 per annum, and a handsome house was erected for him, chiefly at the expense of the corporation, on the condition of his teaching twenty-four poor boys additionally in reading, writing, and arithmetic. National schools, in which about two hundred and forty children of both sexes are educated and clothed, are supported from funds belonging to the corporation. Almshouses for five aged men and five aged women, with gardens attached, were built and are supported by the corporation. Among various charitable benefactions, four marriage portions, of £24 each, are allowed annually to four poor maidens, natives or long resident. Near Driffold house, so called from the custom of driving and folding the cattle of the parishioners, a farm-house occupies the site of the old manor-house, formerly an episcopal palace of great strength, of which a few remains are still visible. At the north-west extremity of Sutton, near the Chester road, is a pool called the Bowen, at the extremity of which are the remains of a fortification, called Loaches Banks, enclosing a quadrangular area of nearly two acres, surrounded by three large mounds and three narrow trenches, supposed to be an ancient British camp, from the neighbouring heath being named Drude heath (i. e. Druids' heath): it is defended on three sides by a morass, and accessible only on the side from the Coldfield, where it is protected by a larger mound.

SUTTON-COURTNEY, a parish in the hundred of Ock, county of BERKS, 3 miles (S. by E.) from Abingdon, containing, with the chapelry of Appleford, and the township of Sutton-Wick, 1147 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Berks, and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £18. 13. 4., endowed with £400 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Dean and Canons of Windsor. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is very ancient: it has a wooden rood-loft, also a Norman font surrounded with pillars and enriched with sculptured foliage, &c. There is a place of worship for Independents. The Wilts and Berks canal passes through that portion of the parish which borders upon Steventon common. A paper-mill here employs about twenty-five persons. Edmund Bradstock, in 1607, bequeathed a house and lands, of the present annual value of £55, for the education of children: the premises are now in the occupation of a school-master, who teaches fifteen boys. An almshouse was erected, in 1820, pursuant to the will of Francis Elderfield, Esq., who endowed it with £60 per annum for ever.

SUTTON-GRANGE, a township in that part of the parish of RYON which is in the liberty of RYON, West riding of the county of YORK, 3 miles (N. W. by N.) from Ripon, containing 86 inhabitants.

SUTTON-MADDOCK, a parish in the Shiffnall division of the hundred of BRIMSTREE, county of SALOP, 6 miles (N.) from Bridgenorth, containing 417 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, annexed to the rectory of Kemberton, in the archdeaconry of Salop, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, rated in the king's books at £5. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. The Severn bounds the parish on the west, and the Shropshire canal forms a junction with that river, near the china manufactory established on its banks.

SUTTON-MALLET, a chapelry in the parish of MOORLINCH, hundred of WHITLEY, county of SOMERSET, 5¼ miles (E.) from Bridgwater, containing 164 inhabitants. The chapel has lately received an addition of eighty free sittings, the Incorporated Society for the enlargement of churches and chapels having granted £50 towards defraying the expense.

SUTTON-MANDEVILLE, a parish in the hundred of CAWDEN and CADWORTH, county of WILTS, 7 miles (W. S. W.) from Wilton, containing 250 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £13. 6. 8., and in the patronage of — Hibberd, Esq. The church is dedicated to All Saints.

SUTTON-MONTIS, or MONTAGUE, a parish in the hundred of CATSASH, county of SOMERSET, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S.) from Castle-Cary, containing 165 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Wells, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £6. 12. 1. R. Leach, Esq. was patron in 1825. The church is dedicated to the Holy Trinity.

SUTTON-POINTZ, a tything in the parish of PRESTON, liberty of SUTTON-POINTZ, Dorchester division of the county of DORSET, 4 miles (N. N. E.) from Melcombe-Regis, containing 337 inhabitants. It is within the peculiar jurisdiction of the Prebendary of Preston in the Cathedral Church of Salisbury. Here was formerly a chapel, dedicated to St. Giles, some remains of which are still visible.

SUTTON-SCOTNEY, a chapelry in the parish of WONSTON, hundred of BUDDLESGATE, Fawley division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, $5\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S.) from Whitchurch. The population is returned with the parish.

SUTTON-VALENCE, a parish in the hundred of EYHORNE, lathe of AYLESFORD, county of KENT, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E. by S.) from Maidstone, containing 1058 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, with the perpetual curacy of East Sutton annexed, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Canterbury, rated in the king's books at £7. 9. 7., and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Rochester. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a handsome structure in the later English style, with the remains of a lofty spire, injured by lightning: it has lately received an addition of three hundred sittings, of which two hundred and eighty are free, the Incorporated Society for the enlargement of churches and chapels having granted £100 towards defraying the expense. There is a place of worship for Independents. The village, called Town Sutton, is situated below the ridge of hills bounding the Weald, and was anciently distinguished for a strong castle, of which part of the keep still remains: it is a highly picturesque ruin, being overgrown with ivy, and having branches of trees sprouting from its walls. A free grammar school, founded here pursuant to letters patent of the 18th of Elizabeth, by which the master and four wardens of the Clothworkers' Company were constituted governors, is endowed with a rent-charge of £30, by William Lambe and John Franklin, in support of a master and an usher; another of £5, bequeathed in 1713, by George Maplisden, for the usher; and with £200, the gift of Francis Robins, in 1721, to found two exhibitions, of £10 a year each, in St. John's College, Cambridge; Mr. Lambe also left £4 per annum for a visitation, and the master occupies a house rent-free. Thirty boys receive an English education, and instruction in the classics when required.

SUTTON-VENEY, a parish in the hundred of WARMINSTER, county of WILTS, 2 miles (W. S. W.) from Heytesbury, containing 689 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £21, and in the patronage of — Thring, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. Leonard, has lately received an addition of one hundred and fifteen sittings, of which seventy-five are free, the Incorporated Society for the enlargement of churches and chapels having granted £75 towards defraying the expense.

SUTTON-WALDRON, a parish in the hundred of REDLANE, Sturminster division of the county of DORSET, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S.) from Shaftesbury, containing 206 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Dorset, and diocese of Bristol, rated in the king's books at £9. 9. $4\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of H. C. Sturt, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Bartholomew.

SUTTON-WICK, a township in the parish of SUTTON-COURTNEY, hundred of OCK, county of BERKS, $1\frac{3}{4}$ mile (S. by W.) from Abingdon, containing 217 inhabitants.

SWABY, a parish in the Marsh division of the hundred of CALCEWORTH, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by N.) from Alford, containing 302 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £12. 1. 10., and in the patronage of the President and Fellows of Magdalene College, Oxford. The church is dedicated to St. Nicholas. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

SWADLINCOTE, a chapelry in the parish of CHURCH-GRESLEY, hundred of REPTON and GRESLEY, county of DERBY, $4\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. E. by E.) from Burton upon Trent, containing 459 inhabitants. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. This township is in the honour of Tutbury, duchy of Lancaster, and within the jurisdiction of a court of pleas held at Tutbury every third Tuesday, for the recovery of debts under 40s. Here are extensive potteries for the manufacture of yellow earthenware: coal is obtained in the neighbourhood.

SWAFFHAM, a market town and parish in the southern division of the hundred of GREENHOE, county of NORFOLK, 28 miles (W. by N.) from Norwich, and 95 (N. N. E.) from London, containing 2836 inhabitants. This ancient town is situated on an eminence commanding an extensive view of the surrounding country, and is remarkable for the salubrity of its air, and the longevity of its inhabitants: it consists of four principal, and several inferior, streets; the houses in general are well built, and the inhabitants are well supplied with water from springs. A book club is supported by subscriptions among the clergy and gentry in the town and neighbourhood; a neat theatre has been recently erected, and an elegant assembly-room, on the market hill, was lately repaired and modernised, at a considerable expense; subscription assemblies are held monthly. On the north-west side of the town is a fine heath of some thousand acres, admirably adapted for the diversions of racing and coursing: greyhounds are annually entered here for the latter amusement, in the month of November, being subject to the same restrictions as race-horses. A charter for a market and two annual fairs was granted by King John to one of the Earls of Richmond, who were anciently lords of the manor. The market is on Saturday; and fairs are held on May 12th for sheep, July 21st, and November 3rd, for sheep and cattle. The market-place, a fine area surrounded by handsome buildings, contains a beautiful cross, erected in 1783, by Lord Orford, consisting of a circular dome covered with lead, supported on eight pillars, and crowned with a figure of Ceres, the whole being enclosed with palisades. The county magistrates hold a weekly petty session: the general quarter sessions are held here at Midsummer only, by adjournment from Norwich; manorial courts leet and baron are held annually in April or May. This town having formerly been held in royal demesne, the inhabitants are exempt from toll, and from being empannelled on juries, or any recognizances, except in the court of the manor. Anciently the Earl of Richmond had a prison in the town, and a house of correction, or bridewell, was erected in the 41st of Elizabeth, for the convenience of several adjoining hundreds. The New Bridewell was built about 1787, and will hold upwards of one hundred prisoners: attached to it is a chapel, the chaplain, who has a stipend of £200 per annum, being elected by the justices: a tread-mill was erected in 1822, and, in 1825, a handsome residence for the governor.

The living is a vicarage, with the rectory of Thrixtan annexed, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £14. 5. 10., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Norwich. The church, which is dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is a splendid and spacious cruciform structure, with a stately and well-proportioned embattled tower and turreted spire, in the later style of English architecture; in the transept are three chapels: the vaulted roof of the nave, richly adorned with figures of angels carved in Irish oak, and that of the side aisles, rest on fourteen arches, supported on fine slender clustered pillars, and are surmounted by twenty-six clerestory windows; in the interior are several handsome monuments, and some brasses, bearing a variety of inscriptions; and in a library attached to the church is a curious missal. The north aisle is commonly reported to have been built by John Chapman, a tinker of this town; concerning which circumstance, there is a curious monkish legend, and there are various devices of a pedlar, and others representing a person keeping a shop, in different parts of the church, which are, in all likelihood, only rebuses on the name of Chapman, a conceit very prevalent in former times; the founder having probably been a person of that name, who was churchwarden in 1462. This church has lately received an addition of one hundred and seventy sittings, of which one hundred and four are free, the Incorporated Society for the enlargement of churches and chapels having contributed £50 towards defraying the expense. Here was anciently a free chapel, dedicated to St. Mary; and about half a mile distant, in a hamlet formerly called Guthlac's Stow, now Goodluck's Close, stood another, dedicated to St. Guthlac. There are places of worship for Baptists and Wesleyan Methodists. The grammar school was founded by Nicholas Hammond, Esq., who by will bequeathed £500 for erecting a school-house, and £500 for the instruction of twenty boys in reading, writing, and arithmetic. A National and Evening school is supported by subscription. Several houses have been given, at different periods, as rent-free residences for the poor, for whom there is also a workhouse, which was the residence of the rector before the impropriation took place. John de Swaffham, a man of great learning, and a strenuous opponent of Wickliffe, who was raised to the see of Bangor by Pope Gregory II., was a native of this town.

SWAFFHAM-BULBECK, a parish in the hundred of STAINE, county of CAMBRIDGE, 6 miles (W. by S.) from Newmarket, containing 684 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Ely, rated in the king's books at £16. 10., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Ely. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. The parish is partly bounded by the Cam, of which river there is a branch, called Swaffham Lode, navigable to the village. A charity school was founded here, in 1721, by Mrs. Frances Towers, and endowed with £50 per annum. Here are the remains of a Benedictine nunnery, founded before the reign of John, by one of the Bolebecs, and dedicated to St. Mary. At the dissolution its revenue was estimated at £46. 18. 10., and the house is now occupied by paupers.

SWAFFHAM-PRIOR, a parish in the hundred of STAINE, county of CAMBRIDGE, 5½ miles (W. by N.) from Newmarket, containing 979 inhabitants. The living consists of the consolidated vicarages of St. Cyriac and St. Mary, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Ely, the former rated in the king's books at £16. 18. 11½., and the latter at £14. 12. 11., and in the alternate patronage of the Bishop, and the Dean and Chapter, of Ely. Here were formerly two churches in the same cemetery; that of St. Mary has fallen to ruin, except the tower, which, from the peculiarity of its situation, still forms an interesting object. The church dedicated to St. Cyriac has been lately rebuilt. The parish, which includes part of Newmarket heath, is bounded on the north by the Cam, and several navigable drains, or lodes, communicating with that river, pass through it. A market and fair, anciently granted to the prior of Ely, have been long disused. There are two endowed schools, one of which is conducted upon the National plan.

SWAFIELD, a parish in the hundred of TUNSTEAD, county of NORFOLK, 1½ mile (N. by E.) from North Walsham, containing 131 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £6, and in the patronage of the King, as Duke of Lancaster. The church is dedicated to St. Nicholas.

SWAINBY, a joint township with Allarthorp, in that part of the parish of PICKHILL which is in the wapentake of HALLIKELD, North riding of the county of YORK, 6 miles (E. S. E.) from Bedale, containing, with Allarthorp, 33 inhabitants. There are places of worship for Primitive and Wesleyan Methodists. Butchers' knives, and some other articles of cutlery, are manufactured. A Premonstratensian abbey, founded here by Hellewise, daughter of Ranulph de Glanville, in the time of Henry II., was afterwards translated to Coverham.

SWAINSCOE, a joint township with Blore, in the parish of BLORE, northern division of the hundred of TOTMONSLOW, county of STAFFORD, 4 miles (W. N. W.) from Ashbourn. The population is returned with Blore.

SWAINSTHORPE, a parish in the hundred of HUMBLEYARD, county of NORFOLK, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N.N.E.) from St. Mary Stratton, containing 185 inhabitants. The living consists of the united rectories of St. Mary and St. Peter, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £12. 13. 4., and in the patronage of the Rev. R. C. Long. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a small ancient structure, with a steeple, round at the basement, and sexangular above; that of St. Mary was pulled down at the Reformation.

SWAINSWICK, a parish in the hundred of BATH-FORUM, county of SOMERSET, 3 miles (N. by E.) from Bath, containing 381 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Bath, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £9. 17. 8., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Provost and Fellows of Oriel College, Oxford. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, contains the remains of the celebrated William Prynne, barrister at law, an active statesman and public writer during the disturbed reign of Charles I. He was born at this place in 1600, and died in 1669.

SWALCLIFFE, a parish comprising the chapelries of Epwell and East Shutford, and the township of West Shutford, in the hundred of BANBURY, and the hamlets of Sibford-Ferris and Sibford-Gower, in that of BLOXHAM, county of OXFORD, 6 miles (W. S. W.) from Banbury, and containing 1798 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, rated in the king's books at £7. 9. $4\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Warden and Fellows of New College, Oxford. The church is dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul. One-third of the sum of £72. 15. per annum, arising from the rent of certain land, bequeathed by an unknown individual, is paid in support of a school, and the residue for other charitable purposes.

SWALECLIFFE, a parish in the hundred of BLEANGATE, lathe of St. AUGUSTINE, county of KENT, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.) from Canterbury, containing 143 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Canterbury, rated in the king's books at £11. 9. $4\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of Earl Cowper. The church is dedicated to St. John the Baptist.

SWALLOW, a parish in the wapentake of BRADLEY-HAVERSTOE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $3\frac{3}{4}$ miles (E. N. E.) from Caistor, containing 122 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £7. 10. 10., and in the patronage of Lord Yarborough. The church is dedicated to the Holy Trinity.

SWALLOWCLIFFE, a parish in the hundred of DUNWORTH, county of WILTS, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E.) from Hindon, containing 252 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, and constitutes also the endowment of a prebend in the church of Heytesbury, in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the Dean of Salisbury, as Dean of Heytesbury, rated in the king's books at £8. 13. 4.

SWALLOWFIELD, a parish partly in the hundred of CHARLTON, county of BERKS, but chiefly in the hundred of AMESBURY, county of WILTS, 6 miles (S. by E.) from Reading, containing 983 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the vicarage of Shinfield, in the archdeaconry of Berks, and diocese of Salisbury. The church is dedicated to All Saints. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. A fair is held here on June 9th. The celebrated Lord Chancellor Clarendon, after his retirement from public life, resided at the manor-house, then the property of his son, where he wrote "The History of the Rebellion."

SWALWELL, a township in the parish of WHICKHAM, western division of CHESTER ward, county palatine of DURHAM, $4\frac{3}{4}$ miles (W. by S.) from Gateshead, containing 1320 inhabitants, the greater number of whom are employed at the extensive iron-works of Messrs. Crawley, Millington, and Co., where anchors of the largest size, chain cables, pumps, and cylinders for steam-engines, with every other description of cast and wrought iron articles, are produced. This factory was founded, about 1690, by Sir Ambrose Crawley, who was originally a blacksmith: he also benevolently established schools for instructing the children of his workmen, provided asylums for their widows and orphans, and adopted the most laudable regulations for orderly conduct among them. There are places of worship for Presbyterians and Wesleyan Methodists. An annual festival is held, on May 22d, in the village, which is of considerable size: a freemasons' lodge is occasionally held at the Queen's Head Inn. William Shield, the celebrated musical composer, was a native of this place.

SWANAGE, a market town and parish in the hundred of ROWBARROW, Blandford (South) division of the county of DORSET, 7 miles (E. S. E.) from Corfe Castle, and 122 from London, containing 1607 inhabitants. In the Saxon Chronicle this place is called Swanawic; Asser Menevensis names it Swanavine and Gnavewic, and in Domesday-book it is written Swanwic and Sonwic. The earliest and principal historical circumstance which we find on record connected with it is the destruction, by a violent storm in 877, of a Danish fleet, on its way from Wareham to the relief of Exeter, in the bay on which the town stands; and a similar disaster is said to have befallen another of their fleets, after its defeat by Alfred, in the same place and year. The town, which is situated on the small bay of the same name, consists principally of one street about a mile long, containing many neat houses, built and roofed with stone; and the bay having of late years become a place of resort for sea-bathing, has led to the erection of some new houses in the town, and considerable improvements in the neighbourhood, land having been levelled and drives formed for the visitors. The manufacture of straw-plat employs many of the females, but the chief occupation of the inhabitants is derived from working the many quarries in the parish, which produce great quantities of the freestone called Purbeck stone, which is conveyed in carts to boats, and by them to the larger vessels in the bay, by which it is conducted to various parts of the kingdom, a small quantity being sent abroad. The bay affords a tolerable harbour for vessels of three hundred tons' burden. In addition to other public works, Ramsgate pier was constructed of this stone, fifty thousand tons having been conveyed thither for the purpose. The quarry men are governed by local laws or regulations, by which none but their sons, who must serve an apprenticeship of seven years, are allowed to work. The market is on Tuesday and Friday.

The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Dorset, and diocese of Bristol, rated in the king's books at £27. 9. 9½., and in the patronage of John Calcraft, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. Mary the Virgin, is an extremely ancient structure, with a very large chancel and a lofty tower: it was formerly a chapel to the vicarage of Worth-Matravers, but was made parochial in 1500. There are places of worship for Independents and Wesleyan Methodists. Fossils of different fish, particularly bream, are frequently found in the quarries, and there are also some mineral springs in the parish, recommended for their medicinal qualities.

SWANBOURNE, a parish in the hundred of COTESLOE, county of BUCKINGHAM, 2¼ miles (E.) from Winslow, containing 616 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Buckingham, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £9. 9. 7., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. Swithin. There is a place of worship for Baptists. Nicholas Godwin, in 1712, bequeathed £15 per annum for teaching poor children.

SWANLAND, a township in the parish of NORTH FERRIBY, county of the town of KINGSTON upon HULL, 6¾ miles (W. by S.) from Kingston upon Hull, containing 418 inhabitants. There is a place of worship for Independents.

SWANNINGTON, a chapelry in the parish of WHITWICK, western division of the hundred of GOSCOTE, county of LEICESTER, 4½ miles (E. by S.) from Ashby de la Zouch, containing 541 inhabitants. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

SWANNINGTON, a parish in the hundred of EYNSFORD, county of NORFOLK, 3½ miles (S. E.) from Reepham, containing 365 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, with the vicarage of Wood-Dalling annexed, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £6. 11. 5., and in the patronage of the Master and Fellows of Trinity Hall, Cambridge. The church is dedicated to St. Margaret.

SWANSCOMBE, a parish in the hundred of AXTON, DARTFORD, and WILMINGTON, lathe of SUTTON at HONE, county of KENT, 4 miles (E.) from Dartford, containing 908 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Rochester, rated in the king's books at £25. 13. 4., and in the patronage of the Master and Fellows of Sidney Sussex College, Cambridge. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is principally in the early style of English architecture. The parish is bounded on the north by the river Thames, from which the village, agreeably surrounded by woods, has a highly picturesque appearance. Swanscombe, anciently Swanes-Camp, is celebrated for the landing and encampment of Sweyn, King of Denmark; also as the place where the men of Kent enclosed William the Conqueror with boughs in their hands, when, casting them down, they prepared for battle, demanding the enjoyment of their former rights, which they obtained. From Greenhithe, a hamlet in this parish, immense quantities of chalk and lime are sent to the neighbouring ports.

SWANTHORPE, a joint tything with Crondall, in the parish and hundred of CRONDALL, Basingstoke division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 3 miles (S. E.) from Odiham. The population is returned with Crondall.

SWANTON-ABBOTT, a parish in the southern division of the hundred of ERPINGHAM, county of NOR-FOLK, 3 miles (S. S. W.) from North Walsham, containing 424 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £6. 10., and in the patronage of Lord Viscount Anson. The church is dedicated to St. Michael.

SWANTON-MORLEY, a parish in the hundred of LAUNDITCH, county of NORFOLK, 3¾ miles (N. E.) from East Dereham, containing 723 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, with that of Worthing annexed, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £15. 10. 2½., and in the patronage of Edward Lombe, Esq. The church, dedicated to All Saints, was erected in 1379, on an eminence in the centre of the village. Near it stood the ancient manor-house, surrounded by a moat. William Small, in 1651, bequeathed a rent-charge of £8 for teaching and apprenticing children.

SWANTON-NOVERS, a parish in the hundred of HOLT, county of NORFOLK, 6¼ miles (S. W.) from Holt, containing 302 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, annexed to that of Wood-Norton, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £4. 15. 2½. The church is dedicated to St. Edmund.

SWANWICK, a hamlet in the parish of ALFRETON, hundred of SCARSDALE, county of DERBY, 1½ mile (S. by W.) from Alfreton, with which the population is returned. There are places of worship for Baptists and Wesleyan Methodists. A free school, erected in 1740, was endowed by Mrs. Elizabeth Turner with £500, which was laid out in the purchase of a house and lands of the annual value of £60, now in the occupation of the schoolmaster, who educates forty children. In the neighbourhood are extensive collieries.

SWARBY, a parish in the wapentake of ASWARDHURN, parts of KESTIVEN, county of LINCOLN, 5½ miles (N. W. by N.) from Falkingham, containing 143 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £6, endowed with £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of Sir T. Whichcote, Bart. The church, dedicated to St. Mary and All Saints, is a handsome structure, principally in the later English style.

SWARDESTON, a parish in the hundred of HUMBLEYARD, county of NORFOLK, 4½ miles (S. S. W.) from Norwich, containing 291 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £6, endowed with £400 private benefaction, £200 royal bounty, and £600 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of J. Steward, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew.

SWARKESTONE, a parish in the hundred of REPTON and GRESLEY, county of DERBY, 5¾ miles (S. by E.) from Derby, containing 243 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Derby, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, rated in the king's books at £5, and in the patronage of Sir George Crewe, Bart. The church, dedicated to St. James, is principally in the Norman style, though much disfigured by the insertion of modern windows: it has lately received an addition of one hundred sittings, of which seventy are free, the Incorporated Society for the enlargement of churches and chapels having granted £35 towards defraying the expense. Swarkestone is in the honour of Tutbury, duchy of Lancaster, and within the jurisdiction of a court of pleas held at Tutbury every third Tuesday, for the recovery of debts under 40s. The Trent and Mersey canal passes through the parish, and is here joined by the Derby canal. The bridge over the Trent is constructed so as to secure a passage over the low grounds, which are usually flooded in the winter: the span over the river is only one hundred and thirty-eight yards, but the whole length of the bridge is one thousand three hundred and four yards: it was originally not more than eleven or twelve feet broad, but has been widened in many places, so that carriages can now pass each other at very small intervals. About the beginning of the year 1643, Col. Hastings fortified Sir John Harpur's house at Swarkestone, and threw up some works at the bridge, to secure the passage of the Trent. Sir John Gell marched thither with Sir George Gresley's troops, when the garrison at the bridge offered a determined resistance, on the part of the royalists, but the men were at length driven from their works with considerable loss.

SWARLAND, a township in that part of the parish of FELTON which is in the eastern division of COQUETDALE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, $8\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. by W.) from Alnwick, containing 211 inhabitants. An obelisk of white freestone, erected by the late Alexander Davison, Esq. to the memory of Admiral Lord Nelson, stands near Swarland Hall, and close to the great road between Morpeth and Alnwick.

SWARRATON, a parish in the hundred of BOUNTISBOROUGH, Fawley division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 3 miles (N. N. W.) from New Alresford, containing 109 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Winchester, rated in the king's books at £4. 5. $2\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of Alexander Baring, Esq.

SWATON, a parish in the wapentake of AVELAND, parts of KESTIVEN, county of LINCOLN, $5\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. E.) from Falkingham, containing 298 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, with the rectory of Spanby annexed, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £12. 7. 1., and in the patronage of J. W. Knapp, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Michael.

SWAVESEY, a parish in the hundred of PAPWORTH, county of CAMBRIDGE, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E. S. E.) from St. Ives, containing 1029 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Ely, rated in the king's books at £7. 6. 8., and in the patronage of the Master and Fellows of Jesus College, Cambridge. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, anciently belonged to an Alien priory of Black monks, founded here, soon after the Conquest, as a cell to the abbey of St. Sergius and St. Bachus, and that of St. Briocus, at Angiers; at the suppression it was given by Richard II. to the priory of St. Anne, Coventry, and some slight remains of the monastic buildings are still visible. There is a place of worship for Baptists. A market and fair were granted, in 1243, to the family of Zouch, the site of whose ancient castle is about half a mile south-west from the church.

SWAY, a hamlet in that part of the parish of BOLDRE which is in the hundred of CHRISTCHURCH, New Forest (West) division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W.) from Lymington. The population is returned with the parish. There is a place of worship for Baptists.

SWAYFIELD, a parish in the wapentake of BELTISLOE, parts of KESTIVEN, county of LINCOLN, 2 miles (S. by W.) from Corby, containing 206 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £11. 2. 11., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. Nicholas.

SWEEPSTONE, a parish in the western division of the hundred of GOSCOTE, county of LEICESTER, $4\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. by E.) from Ashby de la Zouch, containing, with Newton, 625 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, with the perpetual curacy of Snareston annexed, in the archdeaconry of Leicester, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £21. 18. 4., and in the patronage of the Representatives of the Charnel family. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. The river Mease, and the Ashby de la Zouch canal, run through the parish. At Snareston there is a free school for forty boys, endowed by the Charnels. Sweepstone is in the honour of Tutbury, duchy of Lancaster, and within the jurisdiction of a court of pleas held at Tutbury every third Tuesday, for the recovery of debts under 40s.

SWEETHOPE, a township in the parish of THOCKINGTON, north-eastern division of TINDALE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, $9\frac{3}{4}$ miles (E. by S.) from Bellingham, containing 25 inhabitants. The river Wansbeck has its source in the neighbourhood.

SWEFLING, a parish in the hundred of PLOMESGATE, county of SUFFOLK, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (W. N. W.) from Saxmundham, containing 367 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Suffolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £9. 2. $8\frac{1}{2}$.. The Rev. R. Turner was patron in 1813. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

SWELL, a parish in the hundred of ABDICK and BULSTONE, county of SOMERSET, 4 miles (W. S. W.) from Langport, containing 133 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Taunton, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £5. 10. 5., and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Bristol. The church is dedicated to St. Catherine.

SWELL (LOWER), a parish in the upper division of the hundred of SLAUGHTER, county of GLOUCESTER, 1 mile (W.) from Stow on the Wold, containing 263 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Gloucester, rated in the king's books at £6. 12. $3\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Dean and Canons of Christ Church, Oxford. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

SWELL (UPPER), a parish in the upper division of the hundred of KIFTSGATE, county of GLOUCESTER, $1\frac{1}{4}$ mile (N. W.) from Stow on the Wold, containing 82 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Gloucester, rated in the king's books at £6. 14. 6., and in the patronage of Charles Pole, Esq. The church has lately received an addition of fifty-one free sittings, the Incorporated Society for the enlargement of churches and chapels having granted £10 towards defraying the expense. The Roman Foss-way bounds the parish on the east.

SWERFORD, a parish in the hundred of CHADLINGTON, county of OXFORD, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. E. by E.) from Chipping-Norton, containing 395 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, rated in the king's books at £15. 7. 1., and in the patronage of the Master and Fellows of Magdalene College, Oxford.

SWETTENHAM, a parish in the hundred of NORTHWICH, county palatine of CHESTER, comprising the townships of Kermincham and Swettenham, and containing 435 inhabitants, of which number, 259 are in the township of Swettenham, 5 miles (N.W.) from Congleton. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chester, rated in the king's books at £5. 1. 3., and in the patronage of the Rev. J. D'Arcey. The church is a brick structure, with a tower, forming a conspicuous object in the romantic scenery on the banks of the Dane.

SWILLAND, a parish in the hundred of BOSMERE and CLAYDON, county of SUFFOLK, 6 miles (N. by E.) from Ipswich, containing 195 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Suffolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £7. 8. 4½., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

SWILLINGTON, a parish in the lower division of the wapentake of SKYRACK, West riding of the county of YORK, 6½ miles (E. S. E.) from Leeds, containing 510 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £16. 1. 8., and in the patronage of Sir John Lowther, Bart. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is partly in the decorated, and partly in the later, style of English architecture. Sir William Lowther, Bart., and others, gave £92 for the erection of a school, which the former endowed with land producing a small annuity for teaching six poor children.

SWIMBRIDGE, a parish in the hundred of SOUTH MOLTON, county of DEVON, 4¼ miles (S. E. by E.) from Barnstaple, containing 1374 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, with that of Landkey annexed, in the jurisdiction of the Consistorial Court of the Bishop of Exeter, endowed with £400 private benefaction, £400 royal bounty, and £800 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Dean of Exeter. The church, dedicated to St. James, is a fine specimen of the later style of English architecture, with a spire: it contains a stone pulpit, enriched with figures of saints, and the nave and chancel are separated by a handsome wooden screen. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. Sixteen children are instructed for £6 per annum, arising from the parish estate. The village is situated in a hollow surrounded by verdant hills of singular formation. Limestone is found here, enclosed in a strata of hard blueish building stone.

SWINBROOK, a parish in the hundred of CHADLINGTON, county of OXFORD, 2½ miles (E.) from Burford, containing 208 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, endowed with £16 per annum and £290 private benefaction, £200 royal bounty, and £300 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Chancellor of the Cathedral Church of Salisbury. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is partly Norman, and partly of later date, with a remarkable tower open with an arch to the west; it has some remains of a rood-loft and wooden screen-work. The river Windrush runs through the parish, which possesses a very considerable right in the forest of Whichwood. Mrs. Anne Pytts, in 1715, endowed a school with £30 per annum, for teaching boys of Swinbrook and the parish of Widford.

SWINBURN, a joint township with Colwell, in the parish of CHOLLERTON, north-eastern division of TINDALE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, 7 miles (N.) from Hexham. The population is returned with Colwell. It is bounded on the west by a rivulet of the same name, tributary to the North Tyne. There is a domestic Roman Catholic chapel at Swinburn castle, a handsome stone structure belonging to Ralph Riddell, Esq.

SWINBURN (LITTLE), a joint township with Whiteside-Law, in the parish of CHOLLERTON, north-eastern division of TINDALE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, 9½ miles (N. by E.) from Hexham. The population is returned with the township of Chollerton.

SWINCOMB, a parish in the hundred of EWELME, county of OXFORD, 5¼ miles (E. by N.) from Wallingford, containing 345 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, rated in the king's books at £7. 9. 4½., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. Botolph.

SWINDALE, a chapelry in the parish of SHAP, WEST ward, county of WESTMORLAND, 12 miles (W. N.W.) from Orton. The population is returned with the parish. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Carlisle, endowed with £1200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Vicar of Shap. The chapel was built at the expense of the inhabitants, in 1749. Near it is a school, founded in 1703, by Mr. Baxter, and endowed with a rent-charge of £25.

SWINDEN, a township in the parish of GISBURN, western division of the wapentake of STAINCLIFFE and EWCROSS, West riding of the county of YORK, 7½ miles (S.E.) from Settle, containing 37 inhabitants.

SWINDERBY, a parish in the lower division of the wapentake of BOOTHBY-GRAFFO, parts of KESTIVEN, county of LINCOLN, 8½ miles (S.W. by W.) from Lincoln, containing 365 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £3. 19. 9½., and in the patronage of Charles Moor, Esq. The church is dedicated to All Saints. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. Daniel Disney, in 1732, bequeathed a rent-charge of £3 for teaching eight children, and Elizabeth Upsall, in 1770, another of £4, for the education of six.

SWINDON, a parish in the hundred of CHELTENHAM, county of GLOUCESTER, 2¼ miles (N.N.W.) from Cheltenham, containing 201 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Gloucester, rated in the king's books at £13. 1. 0½. The Rev. W. Romney was patron in 1807. The church is dedicated to St. Lawrence.

SWINDON, a market town and parish in the hundred of KINGSBRIDGE, county of WILTS, 41 miles (N.) from Salisbury, and 81 (W.) from London, containing 1580 inhabitants. This place is mentioned in Domesday-book, but nothing further connected with its ancient history is on record. The town is pleasantly situated on the summit of a considerable eminence, commanding extensive and beautiful views of parts of Berkshire and Gloucestershire: the principal street is wide, and contains some good houses; and many of the inhabitants being persons in easy circumstances, the general aspect of the town is prepossessing: there is a good supply of water, which is of excellent quality. No branch of manufacture is carried on. The market is on Monday, for corn, &c., and on every second Monday for cattle; the latter is termed the great market. Fairs are held on the Monday before April 5th, the second Monday after May 12th, the second Monday in September, and the second Monday after September 11th, for cattle of all kinds, pedlary, &c. The petty sessions for the Swindon division of the hundred are held here. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Wilts, and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £17, and in the patronage of the Crown. The church, dedicated to the Holy Rood, and situated at the south-eastern extremity of the town, is a small unadorned edifice, with a low tower; the interior is neatly fitted up. There are places of worship for Independents and Wesleyan Methodists. The free school, which was established in 1764, was founded by the gentry of the town and neighbourhood, and is supported partly by an endowment of about £40 per annum, arising from several bequests, and partly by voluntary contributions; there is a house for the master, and about forty boys are instructed in reading, writing, and arithmetic. Some very extensive quarries are worked in the immediate vicinity, the stones raised from which are usually very large, and of an excellent quality. The Wilts and Berks canal passes about half a mile from the town, and a reservoir, covering about seventy acres, for its supply in dry seasons, has been constructed about a mile and a half from it, and is partly in this parish, adding much to the beauty of the scenery.

SWINDON, a township partly in the parish of PANNALL, lower division, and partly in that of KIRKBY-OVERBLOWS, upper division, of the wapentake of CLARO, West riding of the county of YORK, 6 miles (W. by S.) from Wetherby, containing 52 inhabitants. It is within the peculiar jurisdiction of the Honour Court of Knaresborough.

SWINE, a parish comprising the chapelries of Bilton and South Skirlaugh, and the townships of Benningholme with Grange, Coniston, Ellerby, Ganstead, Marton, Swine, Thirtleby, and Wyton, in the middle, and the joint township of North Skirlaugh with Rowton, in the northern, division of the wapentake of HOLDERNESS, East riding of the county of YORK, and containing 1604 inhabitants, of which number, 229 are in the township of Swine, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. E.) from Kingston upon Hull. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of the East riding, and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £8, endowed with £200 private benefaction, £200 royal bounty, and £1200 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of W. Wilberforce, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is partly in the early, and partly in the later, style of English architecture. Six poor children are educated for £6 a year, the bequest of Mrs. Lamb. A nunnery of the Cistercian order, dedicated to the Blessed Virgin Mary, was founded here, in the reign of Stephen, by Robert de Verli, which at the dissolution possessed a revenue of £134. 6. 9.

SWINEFLEET, a chapelry in the parish of WHITGIFT, lower division of the wapentake of OSGOLDCROSS, West riding of the county of YORK, $4\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. S. E.) from Howden, containing 956 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to that of Whitgift, in the archdeaconry and diocese of York, endowed with £1000 royal bounty, and £1000 parliamentary grant. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

SWINESHEAD, a parish in the hundred of LEIGHTONSTONE, county of HUNTINGDON, though locally in the hundred of Stodden, county of Bedford, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W. by W.) from Kimbolton, containing 245 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Huntingdon, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £12. 13. 6 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Duke of Manchester. The church is dedicated to St. Nicholas.

SWINESHEAD, a parish (formerly a market town) in the wapentake of KIRTON, parts of HOLLAND, county of LINCOLN, 7 miles (W. by S.) from Boston, containing 1696 inhabitants. An abbey for Cistercian monks was founded here by Robert de Greslie, in 1134, the revenue of which at the dissolution was valued at £175. 19. 10.; many valuable coins and several skeletons have, at various periods, been dug up near the spot, and, in 1825, on sinking a well, one of the latter was discovered, which measured six feet four inches. King John, in passing the Cross Keys wash, near this place, lost his carriages and baggage, and escaped to the monastery only with his life, where he died. The ruins of the monastery have entirely disappeared, but its site is still visible, and a mansion, recently modernised, was erected with a portion of its materials, about two hundred and twenty years since. The sea formerly flowed up to the town, and near the market-place was a harbour. About thirty years ago, a bridge was taken down, which crossed a river then navigable for small craft, but now choked up. The market, nearly disused, is on Thursday, and a fair is held on October 2nd. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £14. 9., endowed with £30 per annum private benefaction, £200 royal bounty, and £900 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Master and Fellows of Trinity College, Cambridge. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a handsome edifice with a lofty spire. A free school was founded, in 1720, by Thomas Cowley, Esq., who endowed it with certain lands producing £35 per annum, for which thirty-five children receive instruction, with a small surplus for clothing the poor, who also receive from the interest of various charitable bequests the benefit of a distribution amounting to £200 per annum. About a quarter of a mile north-westward of the town is a circular Danish encampment, called the Man-war-rings, about sixty yards in diameter, and surrounded by a double fosse.

SWINETHORP, an extra-parochial liberty, in the higher division of the wapentake of BOOTHBY-GRAFFO, parts of KESTIVEN, county of LINCOLN, 7 miles (W. by S.) from Lincoln, containing 55 inhabitants. Coal may be obtained here, though the mines have not yet been worked.

SWINFEN, a hamlet in the parish of WEEFORD, southern division of the hundred of OFFLOW, county of STAFFORD, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. E. by S.) from Lichfield, containing 109 inhabitants. It is within the peculiar jurisdiction of the Prebendary of Alrewas and Weeford in the Cathedral Church of Lichfield.

SWINFORD, a tything in the parish of CUMNER, hundred of HORMER, county of BERKS, containing 54 inhabitants.

SWINFORD, a parish in the hundred of GUTHLAXTON, county of LEICESTER, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E. by S.) from Lutterworth, containing 450 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Leicester, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £5. 7. 11., and in the patronage of Lady Cave. The church, dedicated to All Saints, has lately received an addition of one hundred free sittings, the Incorporated Society for the enlargement of churches and chapels having granted £50 towards defraying the expense. Here was a preceptory of the Knights Templars.

SWINFORD (KING'S), a parish in the northern division of the hundred of SEISDON, county of STAFFORD, 3 miles (N. by W.) from Stourbridge, containing, with the chapelry of Brierly-Hill, and the hamlets of Brockmoor and Wordsley, 11,022 inhabitants. The situation of this parish, in a country abounding with coal and iron mines, has been the means of the establishment of its manufactures, the principal of which are iron and glass, both carried on to a considerable extent, and for the conveyance of which great facilities are afforded by the Stourbridge and the Staffordshire and Worcestershire canals passing through the parish; a rail-road from some of the principal mines to the latter canal has recently been constructed, at a great expense, by Earl Dudley. A court leet and a court baron are held annually, and the inhabitants claim an exemption from tolls, under a charter granted by Queen Elizabeth, and confirmed by Charles I. A copyhold court is also held occasionally. The living is a rectory, with the perpetual curacy of Brierley-Hill annexed, in the archdeaconry of Stafford, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, rated in the king's books at £17. 13. 4., and in the patronage of Earl Dudley. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. His Majesty's commissioners are about to erect a new church at Wordsley, in this parish, which, by a recent act of parliament, will become the mother church. Holbeach House, in which Catesby and the other Popish conspirators engaged in the gunpowder plot were taken, is in this parish. There are the remains of a Roman encampment on Ashwood heath, and the spa, at Lady well, is partly in this parish, and partly in that of Dudley. There is a school-house at Brierley-Hill, for the endowment of which the Rev. Mr. Ashenhurst bequeathed £80, but the bequest does not appear to have been ever carried into effect.

SWINFORD (OLD), a parish partly in the southern division of the hundred of SEISDON, county of STAFFORD, but chiefly in the lower division of the hundred of HALFSHIRE, county of WORCESTER, 1 mile (S. S. E.) from Stourbridge, containing, with the town of Stourbridge, and the hamlet of Amblecoat, 11,227 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Worcester, rated in the king's books at £26. 6. 8., and in the patronage of Lord Foley. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. The Blue-coat hospital, in this parish, was founded by Thomas Foley, Esq., ancestor of the noble family of that name, and endowed by him with estates now producing upwards of £2000 per annum: it is a commodious brick building, somewhat in the style of a college, pleasantly situated on the road to Bromsgrove. In this noble institution seventy poor boys are boarded, clothed and educated: the original number was sixty, but the increase of income has enabled the feoffees to add ten more. They are chosen from the following parishes and towns, viz., Old Swinford, three; town of Stourbridge, four; Kidderminster, six (three from the borough and three from the foreign); Bewdley, four; Dudley, four; Great Whitley, King's Swinford, Kinver, Harbourn, Hales-Owen, West Bromwich, Bromsgrove, Rowley-Regis, Wednesbury, and Sedgeley, two each; Hagley, Little Whitley, Alvechurch, Pedmore, and Wombourn, one each; and the remaining twenty-four are appointed by the representative of the founder: each boy must, on admission, be between seven and eleven years of age, free from disease, and the son of parents who have never received parochial relief; he is annually provided with a suit of clothes (similar to that worn at Christ's Hospital), a cap, and four pair of shoes and stockings, and, at fourteen years of age, is apprenticed with a premium of £4, and on producing a certificate of good conduct during his apprenticeship, receives at its expiration a gratuity of £15. The establishment is under the direction of nineteen feoffees, who are noblemen, dignitaries of the church, or gentlemen of large landed property, in this or the adjoining counties, and who elect the master, steward, &c. The school at Red-hill is supported with endowments by John Wheeler, Esq., and Henry Glover, Esq., the former of whom granted property for the instruction of twenty poor boys, and for furnishing them with books and stationery, and the latter bequeathed £400, since laid out in lands, for the instruction of six poor boys in reading, writing, and arithmetic, for six years each, providing them with books and stationery, and apprenticing one of them annually, with a premium of £5: two boys have since been added by the trustees, who are the governors of the Stourbridge free grammar school, and the boys on the foundation of both these charities are instructed by the same master. The remainder of Henry Glover's endowment, after all necessary charges for the school are deducted, is distributed amongst the poor of that part of the parish which is in the county of Worcester who do not receive parochial relief, in sums of not more than one shilling per week to each person. Exclusively of the trade connected with the town of Stourbridge, a detailed account of which is given in the article on that place, many of the inhabitants are engaged in the making of nails.

SWINGFIELD, a parish in the hundred of FOLKSTONE, lathe of SHEPWAY, county of KENT, 5 miles (N.) from Folkestone, containing 304 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Canterbury, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £800 royal bounty, and in the patronage of Sir J. G. Bridges, Bart. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. A preceptory of Knights Templars was founded here before 1190, to which Sir Waresius de Valoniis and others were considerable benefactors: it subsequently became part of the possessions of the Knights of St. John of Jerusalem, and, at the dissolution, had a revenue of £87. 3. 3. On Swingfield common, during the agitations of 1745, the neighbouring nobility, gentry, and yeomen, to the amount of several thousands, accoutred with arms and ammunition, assembled, to oppose an expected invasion on the coast of Kent.

SWINHOLE, a township in the parish and northern division of BAMBROUGH ward, county of NORTHUMBRLAND, $9\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E. by E.) from Belford, containing 111 inhabitants.

SWINHOPE, a parish in the wapentake of BRADLEY-HAVERSTOE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $7\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. E. by E.) from Caistor, containing 94 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £4. 17. 8 $\frac{1}{2}$., endowed with £400 private benefaction, and £400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of Mrs. Allington. The church is dedicated to St. Helen.

SWINNERTON, a parish in the northern division of the hundred of PIREHILL, county of STAFFORD, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. N. W.) from Stone, containing 832 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Stafford, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, rated in the king's books at £10. 2. 6., and in the patronage of the Rev. Christopher Dodsley. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. The river Sow forms the boundary between this parish and Eccleshall.

SWINSTEAD, a parish in the wapentake of BELTISLOE, parts of KESTIVEN, county of LINCOLN, 2 miles (S. E.) from Corby, containing 319 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £6. 19. 7., and in the joint patronage of Baroness Wilmoughby De Eresby and Lord Gwydyr. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

SWINTON, a joint township with Warthermask, in the parish of MASHAM, partly in the liberty of ST. PETER of YORK, East riding, and partly in the eastern division of the wapentake of HANG, North riding of the county of YORK, 1 mile (S. W.) from Masham, containing, with Warthermask, 177 inhabitants. Many relics of antiquity have been discovered in this neighbourhood, among which were the handle of a shield, of gold, and a Roman battle-axe of brass.

SWINTON, a chapelry in the parish of APPLETON le STREET, wapentake of RYEDALE, North riding of the county of YORK, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. W. by W.) from New Malton, containing 334 inhabitants. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

SWINTON, a chapelry in the parish of WATH upon DEARN, northern division of the wapentake of STRAFORTH and TICKHILL, West riding of the county of YORK, $4\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. N. E.) from Rotherham, containing 1050 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of York, endowed with £800 private benefaction, £400 royal bounty, and £600 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Vicar of Wath upon Dearn. The chapel, dedicated to St. Mary, has a fine Norman door. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. A considerable manufacture of earthenware is carried on in this chapelry.

SWITHLAND, a parish in the western division of the hundred of GOSCOTE, county of LEICESTER, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. W. by W.) from Mountsorrel, containing 336 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the peculiar jurisdiction of Grooby, under the Commission of the Earl of Stamford and Warrington, rated in the king's books at £10. 4. 7., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. Leonard. There are quarries of slate in the parish. Swithland has an interest in the endowed school at Mountsorrel.

SWYRE, a parish in the hundred of UGGSCOMBE, Dorchester division of the county of DORSET, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E.) from Bridport, containing 210 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Dorset, and diocese of Bristol, rated in the king's books at £7. 0. 5., and in the patronage of the Duke of Bedford. The church was dedicated to the Holy Trinity in 1503: it has a lofty tower, and north and south porches. The parish is bounded on the south by the English channel, and the village is situated about one mile from the coast. A wake is annually kept on Trinity Monday.

SYDE, county of GLOUCESTER.—See SIDE.

SYDENHAM, a chapelry in the parish of LEWISHAM, hundred of BLACKHEATH, lathe of SUTTON at HONE, county of KENT, $8\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. S. E.) from London. The population is returned with the parish. This place, which formerly consisted only of a few scattered dwellings, was first brought into notice by the discovery, in 1640, of a saline chalybeate spring, the waters of which, similar in their properties to those of Epsom, attracted the notice, and made it the occasional resort, of invalids; and, notwithstanding that the wells have fallen almost into disuse, the salubrity of the air, the pleasantness of its situation, and its proximity to the metropolis, have made it the permanent residence of numerous families of respectability, who have erected in the vicinity many handsome seats and elegant villas. The village is well built, and contains many genteel houses, with detached cottages of pleasing appearance. The upper part of the common commands extensive and richly-varied prospects, and the surrounding scenery possesses much rural beauty: the neighbourhood affords many pleasant walks, and the adjoining woods are much frequented by parties from the metropolis on excursions of pleasure. The Croydon canal passes through the village, which is within the jurisdiction of the court of requests held at Bromley and at Greenwich, for the recovery of debts not exceeding £5. An annual fair, chiefly for pleasure, is held on Trinity-Monday, and is in general well attended. The proprietary episcopal chapel, of which the Rev. P. A. French appoints the minister, was originally a meeting-house, Dr. John Williams, author of a Greek Concordance, having been minister for many years: it is a convenient edifice, but not in any respect entitled to architectural notice. A new church, to contain nine hundred and thirty-six sittings, of which five hundred and forty-six are to be free, is in progress of erection, by grant from the parliamentary commissioners, at an expense of £10,279. 19. 1.: it is a handsome structure of white Suffolk brick, ornamented with stone, in the later style of English architecture, with a square embattled tower, ninety-three feet high, crowned with pinnacles: the interior consists of a lofty nave, lighted by a handsome range of seven clerestory windows, and separated from the aisles by lofty piers and arches of graceful elevation. The living will be a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the Vicar of Lewisham. There are places of worship for Independents and Wesleyan Methodists. The National school, in which forty-six boys and thirty-four girls are instructed, is supported by subscription.

SYDENHAM, a parish in the hundred of LEWK-NOR, county of OXFORD, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (E.) from Tetsworth, containing 367 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the vicarage of Thame, in the jurisdiction of the Peculiar Court of Thame, subject to the Dean and Chapter of Lincoln. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

SYDENHAM-DAMAREL, a parish forming, with the parish of Lamerton, a distinct portion of the hundred of LIFTON, county of DEVON, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (W. by N.) from Tavistock, containing 288 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Totness, and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £10. 6. 8., and in the patronage of John Carpenter, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. The river Tamar separates the parish from Cornwall. A copper mine formerly in operation is now neglected.

SYDERSTONE, a parish in the hundred of GALLOW, county of NORFOLK, $6\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S.) from Burnham-Westgate, containing 317 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £13. 13. 4., endowed with £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Marquis of Cholmondeley. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

SYDLING (ST. NICHOLAS), a parish and liberty in the Cerne subdivision of the county of DORSET, 8 miles (N. W. by N.) from Dorchester, containing 563 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Dorset, and diocese of Bristol, rated in the king's books at £13. 1. 0 $\frac{1}{2}$., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Warden and Fellows of Winchester College. The church is a neat structure, with a high embattled tower; the chancel has been elegantly rebuilt by the late Sir William Smith, who also constructed a large family vault within it, where his remains were deposited in 1752. There is a place of worship for Independents. Near the ancient mansion-house of the Hardys, at Up-Sydling, there was, before the Reformation, a chapel of ease, but there are no vestiges of it.

SYERSCOTE, otherwise STERSCOTE, a liberty in that part of the parish of TAMWORTH which is in the northern division of the hundred of OFFLOW, county of STAFFORD, 3 miles (N. N. E.) from Tamworth, containing 41 inhabitants.

SYERSTON, a parish in the southern division of the wapentake of NEWARK, county of NOTTINGHAM, $5\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. W.) from Newark, containing 129 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the vicarage of East Stoke, in the archdeaconry of Nottingham, and diocese of York. The old Fosse road passes through the parish, which is partly bounded by the river Trent.

SYKEHOUSE, a chapelry in the parish of FISH-LAKE, southern division of the wapentake of STRAF-FORTH and TICKHILL, West riding of the county of YORK, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by W.) from Thorne, containing 551 inhabitants. The chapel is dedicated to St. Peter.

SYLEHAM, a parish in the hundred of HOXNE, county of SUFFOLK, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W.) from Harleston, containing 360 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Suffolk, and diocese of Norwich. Miss Isabella Barry was patroness in 1814. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

SYMONDSBURY, a parish in the hundred of WHITCHURCH-CANONICORUM, Bridport division of the county of DORSET, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (W. N. W.) from Bridport, containing 1076 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Dorset, and diocese of Bristol, rated in the king's books at £36. 3. 4., and in the patronage of the Rev. G. Raymond. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a large cruciform structure, partly in the early, and partly in the later, style of English architecture, with a tower rising from the intersection. The small river Simene has its source in this parish, and falls into the Birt at Bridport. There are several springs in the neighbourhood, slightly impregnated with iron.

SYMONDS-HALL, a tything in the parish of WOTTON under EDGE, upper division of the hundred of BERKELEY, county of GLOUCESTER, 3 miles (N. E. by E.) from Wotton under Edge, with which the population is returned.

SYNFIN, a joint liberty with Arleston, in that part of the parish of BARROW which is in the hundred of APPLETREE, county of DERBY, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. by W.) from Derby, containing, with Arleston, 74 inhabitants.

SYRESHAM, a parish in the hundred of KING'S SUTTON, county of NORTHAMPTON, $4\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. E.) from Brackley, containing 725 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Northampton, and diocese of Peterborough, rated in the king's books at £13, and in the patronage of Sir S. C. Dormer, Knt. The church is dedicated to St. James. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. The Rev. George Hammond, in 1755, bequeathed the interest of £300 for teaching ten poor children, and, in augmentation of the master's salary, Conquest Jones, in 1773, left the interest of £100.

SYSONBY, a parish in the hundred of FRAMLAND, county of LEICESTER, 1 mile (W.) from Melton-Mowbray, containing 67 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the vicarage of Melton-Mowbray, in the archdeaconry of Leicester, and diocese of Lincoln.

SYSTON, a parish in the eastern division of the hundred of GOSCOTE, county of LEICESTER, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. N. E.) from Leicester, containing 1264 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Leicester, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £7. 2. 7., endowed with £1000 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Vice-Chancellor and Fellows of the University of Oxford. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. Dame Margaret Thorold, in 1718, gave a rent-charge of £5 for teaching poor children. About a mile south-west of the village is a tumulus, on the eastern side of a Roman road passing through the vicinity.

SYSTON, a parish in the wapentake of WINNIBRIGGS and THREO, parts of KESTEVEN, county of LINCOLN, 4 miles (N. N. E.) from Grantham, containing 188 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, endowed with £400 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of Sir John H. Thorold, Bart. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

SYWELL, a parish in the hundred of HAMFORD-SHOE, county of NORTHAMPTON, 5 miles (W.) from Wellingborough, containing 265 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Northampton, and diocese of Peterborough, rated in the king's books at £11. 1. 5½., and in the patronage of Earl Brownlow. The church is dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul.

T.

TABLEY (INFERIOR), a township in that part of the parish of GREAT BUDWORTH which is in the hundred of BUCKLOW, county palatine of CHESTER, 3 miles (S.W. by W.) from Nether Knutsford, containing 110 inhabitants. Here was formerly a chapel, the site of which is still called Chapel field. Tabley confers the title of baron on the family of Leicester, created July 16th, 1826, at which period Sir John Fleming Leicester, Bart., a gentleman distinguished for his munificent patronage of the fine arts, and encouragement of native artists, was raised to the peerage by that title; he died in June 1827.

TABLEY (SUPERIOR), a township in that part of the parish of ROSTHERN which is in the hundred of BUCKLOW, county palatine of CHESTER, 2 miles (W. N. W.) from Nether Knutsford, containing 450 inhabitants. Here are the ruins of an ancient chapel, formerly called, from its situation, "The chapel in the street."

TACHBROOK (BISHOP'S), a parish partly in the Kenilworth division of the hundred of KNIGHTLOW, but chiefly in the Warwick division of the hundred of KINGTON, county of WARWICK, 3¾ miles (S. E.) from Warwick, containing, with the hamlet of Tachbrook-Mallory, 654 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Prebendary of Tachbrook in the Cathedral Church of Lichfield, rated in the king's books at £5. 13. 4., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Lichfield and Coventry. The church is dedicated to St. Chad. A school was erected and endowed, in 1771, by subscription of Sir William Bagot, the Earl of Warwick, and others, in which about one hundred children are instructed on the National system: the income is £39 per annum, with a good house and garden for the master.

TACHBROOK-MALLORY, a hamlet in that part of the parish of BISHOP'S TACHBROOK which is in the Kenilworth division of the hundred of KNIGHTLOW, county of WARWICK, 3½ miles (S.E. by E.) from Warwick, containing 55 inhabitants.

TACKLEY, a parish in the hundred of WOOTTON, county of OXFORD, 3¼ miles (N.E.) from Woodstock, containing 478 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, rated in the king's books at £19. 9. 4½., and in the patronage of the President and Fellows of St. John's College, Oxford. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is an ancient cruciform structure, but the north aisle appears to have been destroyed by fire. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. Earth of a peculiar quality, used for flooring barns, cottages, &c., abounds here. The Roman Akeman-street passes through the parish, and separates the two manors of the Duke of Marlborough and Sir Henry Dashwood, Bart.: on that of the latter the two gateways of the ancient mansion built by the Harborne family still remain.

TACOLNESTON, a parish in the hundred of DEP-WADE, county of NORFOLK, 4½ miles (N.W. by W.) from St. Mary Stratton, containing 416 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £12, and in the patronage of Mrs. Warren. The church is dedicated to All Saints. John Tasephans, who was prior of the Carmelite friary at Norwich, was born here in 1404: he was a learned and pious divine, and a powerful orator, but his intolerant zeal brought much persecution upon the Lollards. The hall, a fine brick mansion, is a good specimen of the domestic style of architecture prevalent in the seventeenth century; it is said to have been built, in 1670, by the Browne family, who then held the estate.

TADCASTER, a parish comprising the market town of Tadcaster, and the township of Stutton with Hazlewood (the latter being extra-parochial), in the upper division of the wapentake of BARKSTONE-ASH, West riding, and the townships of Catterton and Oxton, in the ainsty of the city of YORK, East riding, of the county of YORK, and containing 2811 inhabitants, of which number, 2426 are in the town of Tadcaster, 10 miles (S. W.) from York, and 189½ (N.N.W.) from London. This place was the Roman station Calcaria, so named from the nature of the soil, which abounds in calx, or limestone, and one of the outports, or gates, on the Consular way, to their chief military station, Eboracum, the city of York. Under the name Calca-cester, Bede relates that Heina, the first female who assumed the habit of a nun in this country, retired to it, where she built a residence. In all the great civil wars of England, it was regarded as a post of considerable importance, and the possession of it has been repeatedly contested. During the commotions, on the appointment of the Earl of Newcastle to the command of the royal army, in 1642, he advanced from York towards this town, with four thousand men and seven pieces of cannon, and commenced his attack on the enemy's works, which lasted without intermission from eleven in the morning to five in the afternoon: his ammunition being exhausted, the lord general desisted from the assault, in expectation of a fresh supply from York before the following morning; but during the night, Sir Thomas Fairfax, who was posted here with seven hundred men, drew them off to Cawood and Selby, and left the royalists in possession. The town, which is a great thoroughfare, is situated on the river Wharf, over which is a very handsome stone bridge, considered the finest in the county, erected in the beginning of the last century; its centre marks the divisions of the jurisdictions of the West riding and the ainsty of the city of York. On the banks of the river, which is navigable up to the town, are several flour-mills. The streets are arranged on each side, and the houses are neat and modern. The walks on the banks of the river are highly interesting, and have of late been greatly improved. In the immediate neighbourhood are stone quarries, one of which, called Jack-daw-Cragg, (singularly interesting and romantic, and in the possession of the ancient family of Vavasour), supplied stone for the erection of the magnificent cathedral at York, and is now furnishing ma-materials for its repair, in consequence of the partial conflagration in 1829. The market is on Wednesday; and fairs are held on the last Wednesdays in the months of May and October, for cattle and sheep; and in November, for hiring servants.

The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £8. 4. 9½., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Earl of Egremont. The church, which is dedicated to St. Mary, is a handsome structure in the later style of English architecture, with a fine tower. There are places of worship for Independents, Inghamites, and Primitive and Wesleyan Methodists, the last having a school-room attached, capable of containing three hundred children. The grammar school, and an hospital for four poor men, were founded and endowed with lands and the sum of £600, by Dr. Oglethorpe, Bishop of Carlisle, and confirmed by license in the 5th of Philip and Mary; the number of scholars is twenty, and the annual income is £145. Forty boys and girls are also instructed by four poor women, almshouse pensioners, on the foundation of Mrs. Henrietta Dawson, who, about thirty years ago, bequeathed £15 per annum to ten widows, and £10 per annum to ten spinsters, with an additional £5 per annum to each of the four women for teaching the children. A Sunday school, in connexion with the established church, was built by subscription in 1788, on a plot of ground given by the late William Hill, Esq., whose daughter, the present Miss Hill, has ever since contributed materially towards its support, and has assigned to it a permanent endowment of £20 per annum. Several Roman coins have been found here at different times, and there are some vestiges of a trench, surrounding part of the town, which is supposed to have been thrown up at the time of the civil war in the reign of Charles I.

TADDINGTON, a chapelry in the parish of BAKEWELL, hundred of HIGH PEAK, county of DERBY, 3½ miles (S. S. W.) from Tideswell, containing, with the township of Priestcliffe, 463 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Dean and Chapter of Lichfield, endowed with £800 royal bounty, and £800 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Vicar of Bakewell. The chapel, dedicated to St. Michael, is fast going to decay: near it is the mutilated shaft of an ancient cross. There is a place of worship for Baptists. The Rev. Roger Wilkson, in 1714, bequeathed lands, now producing £84 per annum, for the education of all children of the Wilkson family, and ten others, by a schoolmaster bearing his name. Twelve poor children are also taught in another school, erected by subscription in 1805, and supported with a rent-charge of £15, the bequest of Michael White in 1798. Taddington is in the honour of Tutbury, duchy of Lancaster, and within the jurisdiction of a court of pleas held at Chapel en le Frith, for the recovery of debts under 40s.

TADLEY, a parish in the hundred of OVERTON, Kingsclere division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 6 miles (N. N. W.) from Basingstoke, containing 597 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the vicarage of Overton, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Incumbent. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. There is a place of worship for Independents. Tadley is within the jurisdiction of the Cheyney Court held at Winchester every Thursday, for the recovery of debts to any amount.

TADLOW, a parish in the hundred of ARMINGFORD, county of CAMBRIDGE, 4½ miles (E. S. E.) from Potton, containing 147 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Ely, rated in the king's books at £6. 17., and in the patronage of the Master and Fellows of Downing College, Cambridge. The church is dedicated to St. Giles.

TADMARTON, a parish in the hundred of BLOXHAM, county of OXFORD, 4¾ miles (W. S. W.) from Banbury, containing 401 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, rated in the king's books at £13. 11. 0½., and in the patronage of the Provost and Fellows of Worcester College, Oxford. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, has lately received an addition of one hundred sittings, of which seventy are free, the Incorporated Society for the enlargement of churches and chapels having granted £40 towards defraying the expense.

TAKELEY, a parish in the hundred of UTTLESFORD, county of ESSEX, 2¾ miles (S. E. by E.) from Stansted-Mountfitchet, containing 1134 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the jurisdiction of the Commissary of Essex and Herts, concurrently with the Consistorial Court of the Bishop of London, rated in the king's books at £11, and in the patronage of the Bishop of London. The church is dedicated to the Holy Trinity. There is a place of worship for Independents. A small priory was founded here, in the reign of Henry I., as a cell to the abbey of St. Valery in Picardy.

TALK o' th' HILL, a chapelry in the parish of AUDLEY, northern division of the hundred of PIREHILL, county of STAFFORD, 5 miles (N. N. W.) from Newcastle under Line, containing 1008 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Stafford, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, endowed with £200 private benefaction, £600 royal bounty, and £200 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Vicar of Audley. The chapel is a small brick building, surmounted by a cupola. The great north road formerly passed through the village, which is situated upon an eminence commanding a view into nine counties, with the mountains of North Wales in the distance. In the centre is a stone cross, where a market was formerly held. A free school was erected by subscription in 1760, in which fourteen children are instructed for £15 a year. Adjacent to the village is a spring, the water of which is of a blue milky colour, strongly impregnated with sulphur, and much in request for cutaneous diseases.

TALKIN, a township in the parish of HAYTON, ESKDALE ward, county of CUMBERLAND, 3 miles (S. E. by S.) from Brampton, containing 280 inhabitants. It is bounded on the west by the river Gelt, and contains quarries of freestone and limestone, and collieries. A school is supported by small annual subscriptions. Three valuable gold clasps were discovered, in 1790, on Netherton farm, where a battle was formerly fought.

TALLAND, a parish in the hundred of WEST, county of CORNWALL, 2 miles (S. W. by W.) from West Looe, containing, with the borough of West Looe, 1378 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Cornwall, and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £10. The Rev. N. Kendall was patron in 1806. The church is dedicated to St. Tallan. The parish is bounded on the south by the English channel, and includes the decayed market town of West Looe, and part of the small fishing town of Polperro. Mary Kendall, in 1710, left £4 per annum for teaching poor girls; and Charles Kendall, in 1746, gave £6 a year for the instruction of boys.

TALLATON, a parish in the hundred of HAYRIDGE, county of DEVON, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.W. by N.) from St. Mary Ottery, containing 393 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £32. 3. $1\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Rev. R. P. Welland. The church, dedicated to St. James, has an elegant wooden screen, in good preservation. Four poor children are taught by a schoolmistress, for a trifling annuity left by Elizabeth Prideaux, in 1710. At Escot House, which was destroyed by fire in 1808, George III. and three of the princesses were entertained by Sir G. Young, Bart., August 14th, 1789. Dr. Thomas Sprat, Bishop of Rochester, an historian and poet, was born here, in 1636; he died in 1713. Southcote, in this parish, was the occasional residence of Sir William Pole, the antiquary.

TALLENTIRE, a township in the parish of BRIDEKIRK, ALLERDALE ward below Darwent, county of CUMBERLAND, $3\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. by W.) from Cocker-mouth, containing 244 inhabitants. Limestone is quarried and burned in the vicinity. Here is a free school, with a trifling endowment.

TALLINGTON, a parish in the wapentake of NESS, parts of KESTIVEN, county of LINCOLN, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by S.) from Market-Deeping, containing 240 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £8. 9. 8., endowed with £400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of Lord Gwydyr. The church is dedicated to St. Lawrence.

TALWORTH, a hamlet in the parish of LONG DITTON, second division of the hundred of KINGSTON, county of SURREY, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. S. E.) from Kingston upon Thames, containing 234 inhabitants.

TAMERTON (NORTH), a parish in the hundred of STRATTON, county of CORNWALL, 5 miles (S. S. W.) from Holsworthy, containing 479 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Cornwall, and diocese of Exeter, and in the alternate patronage of P. Coffin, Esq., and Miss I'Ans. The church is dedicated to St. Denis. The river Tamar and the Bude canal run through the parish, in a parallel direction, from north to south. There is a dilapidated chapel at Hornacot, in this parish.

TAMERTON-FOLIATT, a parish in the hundred of ROBROUGH, county of DEVON, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by W.) from Plymouth, containing 1101 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Cornwall, and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £12. 7. $8\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, has a remarkably fine tower, and contains, among several handsome memorials of the Coplestone, Bampfylde, and Radcliffe families, an ancient altar-tomb, with the figures of an armed knight and his lady. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. Tamerton, supposed by Camden to be the ancient Tamara, is delightfully situated on a creek of the Tamar, and is inhabited by many genteel families. A free school for twenty boys was founded, and liberally endowed with land and money, by Mary Deane, in 1734; the income is about £120 a year, for which they are clothed and educated. An almshouse for four widows was erected, in 1669, by Sir C. Bampfylde. In this parish is Maristow, the beautiful, but neglected, domain of Sir M. M. Lopes, Bart., where, in August 1789, he entertained George III. and three of the princesses. A chapel is attached to the mansion, in which divine service is regularly performed.

TAMHORN, a hamlet in the parish of WHITTINGTON, northern division of the hundred of OFFLOW, county of STAFFORD, 3 miles (N. W. by N.) from Tamworth, containing 16 inhabitants. The Birmingham and Fazely canal passes in the vicinity.

TAMWORTH, a parish partly in the northern and partly in the southern division of the hundred of OFFLOW, county of STAFFORD, and partly in the Tamworth division of the hundred of HEMLINGFORD, county of WARWICK, comprising the borough and market town of Tamworth, the chapelry of Wiggington, the townships of Alington with Stone-Delph, Biddescote, Bolehall with Glascote, Bonehill, and Fazely, the hamlet of Wilnecote with part of Dosthill, the liberties of Syerscote, otherwise Sterscote, and Tamworth Castle, and the extra-parochial liberty of Hopwas-Hayes, and containing 7185 inhabitants, of which number, 1636 are in the borough of Tamworth, 22 miles (S. E. by E.) from Stafford, 27 (N. by W.) from Warwick, and 112 (N. W. by N.) from London. This town is of great antiquity, being considered the most ancient in the county: its name is derived from Tame, the river on which it is situated, and Waert, or Worthidge, a water farm. At a very early period it was the site of a Mercian fortification and royal residence, and was the seat of government under Offa, Cenwulf, Beornwulf, and others, at which period it had also a mint. The town, having been nearly destroyed by the Danes, was rebuilt early in the tenth century, by Ethelfleda, daughter of Alfred the Great, who also erected a castle for its defence, which, having undergone recent repairs, is now a private residence. It stands south-west of the town, and the ancient fosse which surrounded it, called the King's Dyke, is still visible at a short distance. Tamworth, which is about equally divided between the counties of Stafford and Warwick, though commonly considered a Staffordshire town, stands near the confluence of the rivers Tame and Anker, both crossed by bridges about a mile distant from the Coventry canal: it consists of some good streets. The manufacture of lace, cotton, tapes, and patten-ties, affords employment to several persons. Many veins of coal have been found, and are worked, in the vicinity; and bricks and tiles of great durability are made from a clay which abounds here. There is a permanent library, under the direction of a respectable committee. The market is on Saturday: fairs are held by charter on May 4th, July 26th, and October 24th, for cattle and merchandise, and there are five new fairs for the sale of cattle only. The town is governed under a charter granted by Charles II., upon the surrender of a former one, which had been conferred by Elizabeth, authorising the appointment of a high steward, two bailiffs, recorder, twenty-four capital burgesses, a town clerk, and other officers: the members of the body corporate are chosen by the two bailiffs and the capital burgesses; the high steward, recorder, and town clerk, hold their offices for life; and the two bailiffs are chosen annually by the capital burgesses, from their own body. The corporation hold courts leet and baron twice a year, and are empowered also to hold a court of record, for the recovery of debts, but this right has not been exercised for many years. Quarter sessions are held regularly, but the trial of criminals has been discontinued, they being now sent to the county gaol for trial by the judges of assize. The borough returns two members to parliament: the elective franchise is in the inhabitants paying scot and lot, and not receiving alms, the number of whom is about six hundred; the bailiffs are the returning officers, and the influence of the noble family of Townshend and Sir Robert Peel, Bart., is predominant.

The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Stafford, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, endowed with £400 private benefaction, £400 royal bounty, and £800 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of C. E. Repington, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. Edith, and situated in that part of the parish which is in the county of Stafford, is a spacious and handsome edifice, with a fine tower, in which are two remarkable spiral staircases, communicating with separate floors, their respective entrances being within and without the church: beneath the edifice is a small crypt: the building combines the decorated and later styles of English architecture. It was formerly collegiate, and occupies the site of an ancient monastery: the foundation of the college, which consisted of a dean and six prebendaries, is uncertain, but is attributed, with the greatest probability, to the Marmions, who were successively owners of the castle. Some fine tessellated pavement, now placed in front of the communion-table, was discovered a few years ago, when the church was undergoing repair. There are places of worship for Baptists, the Society of Friends, Independents, Wesleyan Methodists, and Unitarians. The free grammar school was refounded in the reign of Edward VI., and the stipend of £10. 13. 2½. was confirmed to the master, and made payable from the revenues of the Crown. In the reign of Elizabeth the bailiffs were incorporated governors, and in 1677 the school-room was rebuilt: the revenue has been subsequently increased by various benefactors, and now amounts to £33. 11. 3.: from four to twelve children are instructed. Boys from this school are eligible to a scholarship at Catherine Hall, Cambridge, founded by Mr. Frankland; and a native of this town to a fellowship in St. John's College, Cambridge, on the foundation of Mr. Bailey. A free school for twelve boys and ten girls has an income of £20 per annum, partially arising from a charitable bequest; and the Sunday schools are endowed with the interest of £50, the gift of Mrs. Mary Done. In 1686, the Rev. John Rawlett bequeathed lands and houses for teaching and apprenticing poor children. An almshouse for fourteen poor men and women was endowed, in 1678, by Thomas Guy, Esq., of London, founder of Guy's Hospital in the borough of Southwark, who represented this borough in seven parliaments, and, in 1701, rebuilt the town hall. A new bridge has lately been erected at Fazely, over the Thame, along which passes the ancient Watling-street. Edward, Lord Thurlow, was also a representative of this borough until his elevation to the peerage, and recorder until his death. Tamworth confers the inferior title of viscount on Earl Ferrers.

TAMWORTH - CASTLE, a liberty adjoining the borough, and in that part of the parish, of TAMWORTH which is in the Tamworth division of the hundred of HEMLINGFORD, county of WARWICK, containing 19 inhabitants.

TANDRIDGE, a parish in the first division of the hundred of TANDRIDGE, county of SURREY, 1½ mile (E. by S.) from Godstone, containing 421 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Surrey, and diocese of Winchester, endowed with £600 royal bounty, and £200 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of Sir W. Clayton, Bart. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. A National school, established here for the children of Tandridge, Godstone, and Oxted, is partly supported by a small bequest of David Maynard, in 1709. A priory of Augustine canons, in honour of St. James, to which Odo de Dammartin was a great benefactor, was founded in the time of Richard I., and at the dissolution had possessions valued at £86. 7. 6. per annum.

TANFIELD, a chapelry in that part of the parish of CHESTER le STREET which is in the middle division of CHESTER ward, county palatine of DURHAM, 6¼ miles (S. W.) from Gateshead. The population is returned with the townships of Beamish and Lintz-Green. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Durham, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of Lord Ravensworth. The chapel, dedicated to St. Margaret, was rebuilt by subscription in 1749, with the exception of a portion of the chancel, in the southern wall of which there is a piscina. There are two paper-mills and extensive collieries in the neighbourhood. Tanfield Arch, a magnificent stone structure, one hundred and thirty feet in the span, springing from abutments, nine feet high, to the height of sixty feet, was erected, upon the site of a wooden arch that had recently fallen, by certain coal owners, at the expense of £12,000, to expedite the passage of their wagons. Elizabeth Davison, in 1762, bequeathed £500 towards the support of a free school and for other charitable uses.

TANFIELD (EAST), a township in the parish of KIRKLINGTON, wapentake of HALLIKELD, North riding of the county of YORK, 6½ miles (N. N. W.) from Ripon, containing 32 inhabitants.

TANFIELD (WEST), a parish in the wapentake of HALLIKELD, North riding of the county of YORK, 6½ miles (N. W. by N.) from Ripon, containing 709 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Richmond, and diocese of Chester, rated in the king's books at £13. 0. 5., and in the patronage of the Marquis of Ailesbury. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is an ancient structure, containing many curious old monuments: attached to it is the chantry of Maud Marmion, founded, in the time of Henry III., for a master, warden, and two brothers, to pray for the souls of Lord and Lady Marmion. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. Eleven poor children are educated for £8 per annum, left by Diana, Countess of Oxford, and a smaller annuity bequeathed by Catherine Allen, in 1769. On the banks of the Ure, which is here of considerable width and crossed by a bridge, are the remains of Tanfield castle, the origin and history of which are involved in obscurity.

TANGLEY, a parish in the hundred of PASTROW, Kingsclere division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.N.W.) from Andover, containing 256 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the rectory of Facombe, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Winchester. The church is dedicated to St. John the Baptist. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. A fair for sheep is held on April 15th.

TANGMERE, a parish in the hundred of ALDWICK, rape of CHICHESTER, county of SUSSEX, 3 miles (E. by N.) from Chichester, containing 174 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Archbishop of Canterbury, rated in the king's books at £13. 5., and in the patronage of the Duke of Richmond. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is in the early style of English architecture. This parish is entitled to send two children to Boxgrove school, which was founded, in 1751, by the Countess Dowager of Derby.

TANKERSLEY, a parish in the wapentake of STAINCROSS, West riding of the county of YORK, comprising the chapelry of Wortley, and the township of Tankersley, and containing 1529 inhabitants, of which number, 625 are in the township of Tankersley, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S.) from Barnesley. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £26. 0. $2\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of Earl Fitzwilliam. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is principally in the later style of English architecture.

TANNINGTON, a parish in the hundred of HOXNE, county of SUFFOLK, $4\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. W.) from Framlingham, containing 209 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Suffolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £12. 10. $2\frac{1}{2}$., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Bishop of Rochester. The church is dedicated to St. Ethelbert.

TANSHELF, a township in the parish of PONTEFRAC, upper division of the wapentake of OSGOLD-CROSS, West riding of the county of YORK, $\frac{1}{4}$ of a mile (W. by S.) from Pontefract, containing 356 inhabitants. There is a small sum, the bequest of Richard Banister, in 1762, for teaching one child.

TANSLEY, a hamlet in that part of the parish of CRICH which is in the hundred of WIRKSWORTH, county of DERBY, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (E.) from Matlock, containing 449 inhabitants. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. Two children are educated for a trifling sum, bequeathed by Sir John Statham, in the reign of Anne. Tansley is in the honour of Tutbury, duchy of Lancaster, and within the jurisdiction of a court of pleas held at Tutbury every third Tuesday, for the recovery of debts under 40s.

TANSOR, a parish in the hundred of WILLYBROOK, county of NORTHAMPTON, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. N. E.) from Oundle, containing 234 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Northampton, and diocese of Peterborough, rated in the king's books at £13. 12. 11., and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Lincoln. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a small structure, partly in the Norman, and partly in the early English style, with some screen-work and ancient monuments. The parish is partly bounded by the river Nen: at Cotterstock, on its opposite bank, a fine Roman tessellated pavement has been discovered. Clement Bellamy, in 1658, bequeathed £5 per annum for the education of children.

TANWORTH, a parish in the Warwick division of the hundred of KINGTON, county of WARWICK, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. W. by N.) from Henley in Arden, comprising the liberty of Monks-Riding, and containing 1993 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Worcester, rated in the king's books at £6. 13. 4., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Earl of Plymouth. The church is dedicated to St. Mary Magdalene. The Stratford on Avon canal passes through the parish. Two charity schools, attended by eighty children, are supported out of the proceeds of several charitable bequests, amounting to £80 per annum.

TAPLOW, a parish in the hundred of BURNHAM, county of BUCKINGHAM, 1 mile (E. N. E.) from Maidenhead, containing 586 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Buckingham, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £11. 18. 9., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. Nicholas: in the chancel lie the remains of Sarah Milton, the mother of the immortal poet, who resided here for some years. Ann Taplow, in 1784, left £1. 10. per annum toward the instruction of the poor. On the river Thames, which separates this parish from Berkshire, is a large paper-mill, employing a considerable number of persons. Cleifden, in this parish, was the residence of the Prince and Princess of Wales, during the infancy of their son, George III. It formerly belonged to a member of the Hamilton family, who fought under the celebrated Duke of Marlborough, and who, on his return from the continent, indulged the curious fancy of figuring the battle of Blenheim, by plantations of trees, now in full vigour.

TAPTON, a township in the parish of CHESTERFIELD, hundred of SCARSDALE, county of DERBY, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (N. E. by E.) from Chesterfield, containing 149 inhabitants.

TARBOCK, a township in the parish of HUYTON, hundred of WEST DERBY, county palatine of LANCASTER, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. by W.) from Prescot, containing 699 inhabitants, of whom a considerable number are employed at the collieries here.

TARDEBIGG, a parish partly in the Alcester division of the hundred of BARLICHWAY, county of WARWICK, but chiefly in the upper division of the hundred of HALFSHIRE, county of WORCESTER, 3 miles (E. S. E.) from Bromsgrove, containing, with the hamlets of Bentley, Redditch, Tutnal with Copley, and Wibheath-Yields, 3458 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Worcester, rated in the king's books at £8, and in the patronage of the Earl of Plymouth. The church is dedicated to St. Bartholomew. At Redditch, in this parish, is a manufacture of needles and fish-hooks. The Birmingham and Worcester canal passes through a short tunnel in the parish.

TARLETON, a parish in the hundred of LEYLAND, county palatine of LANCASTER, $8\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by E.) from Ormskirk, containing 1616 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chester, endowed with £660 private benefaction, and £600 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Rev. Streynsham Master. The church, consecrated in 1719, is dedicated to St. Mary. This was formerly a chapelry in the parish of Croston. A free school, the building for which was erected in 1650, is endowed with £30 per annum, for which twenty children are gratuitously instructed.

TARNICAR, a joint township with Upper Rawcliffe, in the parish of St. MICHAEL, hundred of AMOUNDERNESS, county palatine of LANCASTER, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. W.) from Garstang. The population is returned with Upper Rawcliffe.

TARPORLEY, a parish in the first division of the hundred of EDDISBURY, county palatine of CHESTER, comprising the market town of Tarporley, and the townships of Eaton, Rushton, and Utkinton, and containing 2123 inhabitants, of which number, 800 are in the town of Tarporley, $10\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. S. E.) from Chester, and 172 (N. W.) from London. This town, which is situated on the great road from Chester to London, has a neat appearance, and consists of one long street, which is well paved, and terminated at the southern extremity by the ancient manor-house. At the close of the thirteenth century, a grant of a market and fair was obtained by Hugh de Thorpley, then proprietor of the manor. The market is on Thursday; and fairs are held May 1st, the first Monday after August 24th, and December 11th. The town was governed by a mayor from 1297 to 1348, but now only two constables are appointed. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chester, rated in the king's books at £20. 3. 4., and in the joint patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Chester, Lord Alvanley, and the Rev. Sir P. G. Egerton, Bart. The church, dedicated to St. Helen, is an ancient structure of red stone, and contains some good monuments. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. A school, situated in the churchyard, was endowed with £20 per annum by Lady Jane Done, who left also a small bequest for apprenticing poor children, but there are no free scholars. Almshouses have been founded for four poor widows, each of whom receives thirty shillings per annum.

TARRABY, a township in that part of the parish of STANWIX which is in ESKDALE ward, county of CUMBERLAND, $1\frac{3}{4}$ mile (N. N. E.) from Carlisle, containing 153 inhabitants.

TARRANT-CRAWFORD, county of DORSET.—See CRAWFORD-TARRANT.

TARRANT-GUNVILLE, a parish in that part of the hundred of CRANBORNE which is in the Shaston (West) division of the county of DORSET, 6 miles (N. N. E.) from Blandford-Forum, containing 487 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Dorset, and diocese of Bristol, rated in the king's books at £19. 7. 11., and in the patronage of the Master and Fellows of University College, Oxford. The church was dedicated to St. Mary in 1503; the body is raised above the aisles, and the tower is embattled and crowned with pinnacles. The small river Tarrant runs through the parish.

TARRANT-HINTON, county of DORSET.—See HINTON (TARRANT).

TARRANT-KEYNSTON, a parish in the hundred of PIMPERNE, Blandford (North) division of the county of DORSET, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E. by E.) from Blandford-Forum, containing 220 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Dorset, and diocese of Bristol, rated in the king's books at £7. 17. $8\frac{1}{2}$. Charles Hiley, Esq. was patron in 1806. The church, dedicated to All Saints, stands on the western bank of the small river Tarrant, which falls into the Stour on the southern side of the parish.

TARRANT-LAUNCESTON, a parish in the hundred of PIMPERNE, Blandford (North) division of the county of DORSET, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. E. by E.) from Blandford-Forum, containing 88 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the vicarage of Tarrant-Monckton, in the archdeaconry of Dorset, and diocese of Bristol.

TARRANT-MONCKTON, county of DORSET.—See MONCKTON (TARRANT).

TARRANT-RAWSTON, a parish in the hundred of PIMPERNE, Blandford (North) division of the county of DORSET, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by N.) from Blandford-Forum, containing 58 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Dorset, and diocese of Bristol, rated in the king's books at £8. 9. 2., and in the patronage of Sir J. W. Smith, Bart. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. The small river Tarrent runs through this parish, and that of Tarrant-Rushton.

TARRANT-RUSHTON, a parish in that part of the hundred of CRANBORNE which is in the Shaston (East) division of the county of DORSET, $3\frac{3}{4}$ miles (E.) from Blandford-Forum, containing 206 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Dorset, and diocese of Bristol, rated in the king's books at £4. 19. 2., and in the patronage of the Rev. George E. Saunders. The church was dedicated to St. Mary in 1342. Here was formerly an hospital, or chantry, dedicated to St. Leonard, which was granted to the prior of Christchurch-Twynham in the 7th of Edward III.

TARRETBURN, a township in the parish of BELLINGHAM, north-western division of TINDALE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, 3 miles (N. W.) from Bellingham, containing 264 inhabitants.

TARRING (WEST), a parish in the hundred of TARRING, rape of BRAMBER, county of SUSSEX, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (N. W.) from Worthing, containing 650 inhabitants. The living consists of a sinecure rectory, rated in the king's books at £22. 13. 4., and a vicarage consolidated with the rectory of Patching, rated at £8. 13. 4., in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is principally in the early style of English architecture.

TARRING-NEVILLE, a parish in the hundred of DANEHILL-HORSTED, rape of PEVENSEY, county of SUSSEX, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.) from Newhaven, containing 81 inhabitants. The living is a rectory with that of Heighton, united in 1660, in the archdeaconry of Lewes, and diocese of Chichester, rated in the king's books at £7, and in the patronage of D. Geere, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a neat structure in the early English style, with a remarkably large chancel.

TARRINGTON, a parish in the hundred of RADLOW, county of HEREFORD, 7 miles (W. N. W.) from Ledbury, containing 500 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Hereford, rated in the king's books at £5. 0. 2½., and in the patronage of E. T. Foley, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. James.

TARSET (WEST), a township in the parish of THORNEYBURN, north-western division of TINDALE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, 4 miles (W. N. W.) from Bellingham, containing 169 inhabitants.

TARVIN, a parish partly in the lower division of the hundred of BROXTON, but chiefly in the second division of the hundred of EDDISBURY, county palatine of CHESTER, comprising the townships of Ashton, Bruen-Stapleford, Burton, Clotton-Hoofield, Dudden, Foulk-Stapleford, Hockenhull, Horton with Peele, Kelsall, Mouldsworth, and Tarvin, and containing 3485 inhabitants, of which number, 1022 are in the township of Tarvin, 6 miles (E. by N.) from Chester. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chester, rated in the king's books at £19. 11. 0½., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Lichfield and Coventry. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is in the later style of English architecture, with a fine tower considerably enriched with sculpture, though now much mutilated. Courts leet and baron are held here. A grammar school was founded in 1600, with a house for the master, by John Pickering, who endowed it with £200, which was laid out in lands now producing an annual income of £18, for which twenty children are instructed. The celebrated calligrapher, John Thomason, was master of this school; he died in 1740. About the middle of the sixteenth century, Sir John Savage, lord of the manor, procured a charter for a market and a fair to be held here, which have been long disused. During the great civil war, Tarvin was a considerable military post, often taken and retaken by each party till September 1644, when it fell into the power of the parliament, and so remained to the end of the war.

TASBURGH, a parish in the hundred of DEPWAD, county of NORFOLK, 2 miles (N.) from St. Mary Stratton, containing 469 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, with Rainthorpe, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £8, and in the patronage of Sir Thomas Beevor, Bart. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, stands on a lofty eminence, within the area of a square intrenchment containing twenty-four acres, which Gale considers the Roman station Ad Tuam; it was an advantageous position for the defence of the river Tesse, running hence to Caistor, and here forming a convenient harbour. Coins, fibulae, and other relics of antiquity, have been found.

TASLEY, a parish in the hundred of STOTTESDEN, county of SALOP, 1¾ mile (N. W. by W.) from Bridgenorth, containing 95 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Salop, and diocese of Hereford, rated in the king's books at £5. 6. 8., and in the patronage of J. White, Esq.

TATENHILL, a parish in the northern division of the hundred of OFFLOW, county of STAFFORD, 3¼ miles (W. S. W.) from Burton upon Trent, containing, with the chapelries of Barton under Needwood and Wichnor, and the township of Dunstall, 2059 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, annexed to the deanery of Lichfield, in the archdeaconry of Stafford, and diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, rated in the king's books at £26. 1. 8. The church is dedicated to St. Michael. The Grand Trunk canal passes through the parish, which is in the honour of Tutbury, duchy of Lancaster, and within the jurisdiction of a court of pleas held at Tutbury every third Tuesday, for the recovery of debts under 40s.

TATHAM, a parish in the hundred of LONSDALE, south of the sands, county palatine of LANCASTER, comprising the townships of Ireby and Tatham, and containing 880 inhabitants, of which number, 765 are in the township of Tatham, 11 miles (N. E. by E.) from Lancaster. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Richmond, and diocese of Chester, rated in the king's books at £12. 5., and in the patronage of John Marsden, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. James, is a handsome modern structure. An old Roman road passes through the parish, in which there is an extensive colliery. A fair for cattle is held annually on March 12th, in the village of Lowgill. A school is endowed with an estate producing about £28 a year, which is applied for the instruction of all the poor children of the lower division of the parish.

TATHAM-FELL, a chapelry in the parish of TATHAM, hundred of LONSDALE, south of the sands, county palatine of LANCASTER, 12½ miles (E. N. E.) from Lancaster. The population is returned with the parish. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Richmond, and diocese of Chester, endowed with £800 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Rector of Tatham.

TATHWELL, a parish in the Wold division of the hundred of LOUTH-ESKE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 3¼ miles (S. by W.) from Louth, containing 272 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £10, and in the patronage of the Bishop of Lincoln. The church is dedicated to St. Vedast. On a high hill in this parish are six barrows, in a line running from east to west.

TATSFIELD, a parish in the second division of the hundred of TANDRIDGE, county of SURREY, 5½ miles (N. E. by E.) from Godstone, containing 174 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Surrey, and diocese of Winchester, rated in the king's books at £5. 0. 5., and in the patronage of William L. Gower, Esq. The church is principally in the early style of English architecture.

TATTENHALL, a parish in the lower division of the hundred of BROXTON, county palatine of CHESTER, comprising the townships of Golborn-Bellow, Newton by Tattenhall, and Tattenhall, and containing 1016 inhabitants, of which number, 855 are in the township of Tattenhall, 5¾ miles (S. W. by W.) from Tarporley. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chester, rated in the king's books at £13. 17. 6., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Chester. The church, dedicated to St. Alban, has lately received an addition of one hundred free sittings, the Incorporated Society for the enlargement of churches and chapels having granted £30 towards defraying the expense. There are places of worship for Independents and Wesleyan Methodists. Dr. Paploe, rector of this parish, who died in 1781, gave money, vested in the purchase of £334 three per cents., for the education of twelve children.

TATTENHOE, a parish in the hundred of COTTESLOE, county of BUCKINGHAM, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (W.) from Fenny-Stratford, containing 16 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, holden by institution as a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Buckingham, and diocese of Lincoln, endowed with £800 royal bounty, and £200 parliamentary grant. W. S. Lowndes, Esq. was patron in 1813. The church was rebuilt in 1540, but the parish containing only a few inhabitants, it fell into disuse and desecration, until the rector of Shealely claimed the tithes of the parish, in 1636, when it was consecrated anew, and the living was presented to as a rectory.

TATTERFORD, a parish in the hundred of GALLOW, county of NORFOLK, 4 miles (W. by S.) from Fakenham, containing 67 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, consolidated with that of Tatterset, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £6. 6. 8. The church is dedicated to St. Margaret.

TATTERSET, a parish in the hundred of GALLOW, county of NORFOLK, 5 miles (W.) from Fakenham, containing 150 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, with which that of Tatterford is consolidated, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £11. 1. 8., and in the patronage of Sir Charles Chad, Bart. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew.

TATTERSHALL, a market town and parish in the southern division of the wapentake of GARTREE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 30 miles (S. E. by E.) from Lincoln, and 125 (N.) from London, containing 627 inhabitants. This place, anciently a Roman military station, as two encampments at Tattershall park in its immediate neighbourhood indicate, was granted at the Conquest to Eudo, one of William's followers, whose descendants erected a castle here about 1440, of which some remains are yet visible south-westward from the town: it stood on a moor, and was surrounded by two fosses, which received the waters of the Bane, but the principal part was demolished during the parliamentary war: the north-west tower, a rectangular brick structure one hundred feet high, flanked by four embattled octangular turrets, was built by Sir Ralph Cromwell, treasurer of the Exchequer in the reign of Henry VI., and still remains; he likewise erected a lofty tower, with a spiral staircase leading to its summit, about four miles northward, as an appendage to the larger structure, but this is now in a very dilapidated state. The town, situated on the river Bane, near its junction with the Witham, is much decayed, and the trade inconsiderable: a canal from the Witham to Horncastle passes through it. The market, originally granted by King John to Robert Fitz-Eudo, was formerly on Friday, but is now on Thursday: fairs are on May 15th and September 25th. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the manorial court of Kirstead, and in the patronage of E. Fortescue, Esq. The church, which is dedicated to the Holy Trinity, is situated on the eastern side and in the outer moat of the castle, and was made collegiate, in the time of Henry VI., for seven chaplains (one of whom was master), six clerks, and six choristers: at the dissolution its revenue was estimated at £348. 5. 11. The collegiate buildings have been taken down, and the church alone remains, which is a beautiful and venerable cruciform structure, consisting of a nave, transept, and choir, of which the last was once much admired for its magnificent painted windows, but since their removal to the chapel of Burleigh, the seat of the Marquis of Exeter, this part of the edifice has been allowed to fall into decay. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. A National school, wherein about one hundred and thirty children are instructed, is held in the south side of the transept of the church; and an almshouse for thirteen poor persons, originally established by the license which raised the church into a college, still remains, with a small endowment for its support.

TATTINGSTONE, a parish in the hundred of SAMFORD, county of SUFFOLK, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W. by S.) from Ipswich, containing 346 inhabitants, exclusively of 319 in the house of industry for the hundred of Samford, which is in this parish. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Suffolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £6. 13. 4. The Rev. J. Bull was patron in 1816. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

TATTON, a township in that part of the parish of ROSTERN which is in the hundred of BUCKLOW, county palatine of CHESTER, 2 miles (N.) from Nether Knutsford, containing 87 inhabitants.

TATWORTH, a joint tything with Forton, in the parish of CHARD, eastern division of the hundred of KINGSBURY, county of SOMERSET, $1\frac{3}{4}$ mile (S.) from Chard, containing 437 inhabitants.

TAUNTON, a borough and market town in the hundred of TAUNTON and TAUNTON-DEAN, county of SOMERSET, 11 miles (S. by W.) from Bridg-water, and 144 (W. by S.) from London, containing, according to the last census, 8534 inhabitants, which number has since increased to upwards of 10,000. This place, which was called by the Saxons Tantun, and subsequently Tawnton and Thoneton, from its situation on the river Thone, or Tone, is of great antiquity, and the discovery of several urns, containing Roman coins, in the neighbourhood has led to the conjecture that it existed in the time of that people; but the earliest authentic accounts refer to the period of the Octarchy, a castle having been built here for a royal residence by Ina, King of the West Saxons, about the year 700, in which he held his first great council. This castle was afterwards demolished by his queen, Ethelburga, after expelling Eadbricht, King of the South Saxons, who had seized it. The town and manor are supposed to have been granted to the church of Winchester in the following reign; and another castle is said to have been built, on the site of the first, by the Bishops of Winchester, in the reign of William the Conqueror, in which they principally resided for some years. At this period Taunton had a mint, some of the coins bearing the Conqueror's effigy being still in existence. In the reign of Henry VII., in 1497, Perkin Warbeck seized the town and castle, which he quickly abandoned, on the approach of the king's troops. In 1645, it again participated in civil war, being celebrated for the long siege it sustained, and the defence it made, under Colonel (afterwards the renowned Admiral) Blake, who held it for the parliament against ten thousand troops under Lord Goring, until relieved by Fairfax. On this memorable occasion a public thanksgiving was appointed by the Commons, who voted £500 to the Colonel, and £1000 to the men under his command; but the inhabitants incurred the displeasure of the king, who, on his restoration, suspended its charter, and ordered the walls to be razed to the ground, which was so effectually done, that even their site is not now known. Taunton was again implicated in rebellious proceedings by its connexion with James, Duke of Monmouth, who was proclaimed king on the Cornhill of this town, June 21st, 1685; many of whose followers, after his defeat at Sedgmoor, were inhumanly put to death, on the same spot, by the brutal Kirke, without form of trial, besides those who were condemned by the merciless Judge Jeffreys, at the bloody assize which he held here in the following September.

The town is situated in a central part of the singularly beautiful and luxuriant vale of Taunton-Dean, and is upwards of a mile in length: the principal streets, which terminate in the market-place, are spacious, well paved, and lighted with gas by a company established in 1821: the houses, mostly built of brick, are generally commodious and handsome, and well supplied with excellent water. The respectability of the town, combined with the beauty of the surrounding country, has rendered it very attractive as a place of residence, and many recent improvements have been effected, amongst which the erection of a neat crescent and terrace may be particularly noticed, and the removal of some old houses at East Gate, which has rendered the entrance from London more spacious. The parade, in the centre of the town, is a fine open triangular space, enclosed with iron posts and chains, and on the east side of it is a wide street, erected by the late Sir Benjamin Hammet, which forms a handsome approach to St. Mary's beautiful church. A substantial stone bridge of two arches crosses the Tone, and connects the town with the village of North-town, or Norton. Several detached villas, commanding beautiful views, have also been erected in the suburbs of Wilton, Staplegrove, West Monckton, and adjoining parishes. The Taunton and Somerset Institution, established in 1823, possesses a small but valuable library, particularly works of reference; also various specimens in mineralogy, ornithology, zoology, &c.: it has likewise a noble and spacious public reading and news-room. The theatre, in Silver-street, is usually open two months in the year, and balls and concerts occasionally take place.

Taunton was formerly noted for its woollen manufacture, being one of the first places into which that branch of trade was introduced, but it has long since given place to the silk trade, which was begun here, in 1778, and is now carried on to a considerable extent: the chief articles manufactured are, crapes, persians, sarsnets, and mixed goods; and, as nearly every cottage has a silk-loom, the trade furnishes employment to a great number of persons, principally females. Two patent lace-manufactories have been lately established. The river Tone is navigable, but its course to Bridg-water being circuitous, and the navigation frequently interrupted, a canal, called the Taunton and Bridg-water canal, has been constructed, and has given increased activity to trade, considerable quantities of Welch coal being brought to the town, and, in return, the produce of the vale of Taunton being exported to Bristol and other parts of England. The markets are on Wednesday and Saturday, the latter being the principal; they are well supplied with fish from both channels, with every other kind of provisions, and with fruit in abundance. The old market-house, standing on the south side of the Parade, is a lofty brick building, supported on each side by an arcade, one of which is used as a corn market, and the other by various tradesmen: it contains the guildhall, and a handsome assembly-room, in which is a full-length portrait of George III. in his robes, presented by the late Sir Benjamin Hammet. The Parade is appropriated to the butchers, who form on it their market of moveable standings, placed in rows; on the west side is a handsome building of freestone, erected in 1821, in the lower part and rear of which is the market for fish, pork, poultry, and dairy produce; the upper being used as the library and reading-room, with a museum attached: it is of the Ionic order, the entablature supported by four handsome columns, and forms a great ornament to this part of the town. The last Saturday in every month is called the great market, including the sale of live stock. This is one of the towns which, by act of parliament, are obliged to make weekly returns of corn sold; the tolls of the markets are let for about £1400 per annum. There is an annual fair on the 17th of June, for horses and cattle.

The town was for several centuries under the jurisdiction of portreeves and bailiffs, chosen at the courts of the Bishops of Winchester, as lords of the manor, which was formerly very extensive and valuable, the rental, at the time of the Conquest, appearing, from a document found amongst the court rolls, to amount to nearly £700 per annum: it was, however, divided by the Conqueror, and portions of it distributed among his favourites. By the custom of the manor the wife is considered her husband's heir, and succeeds before the children, the youngest son before the eldest, and so on in other relations, the younger succeeding first. It continued in the possession of the Bishops of Winchester until the year 1822, when it was sold by Bishop Tomline to Thomas Southwood, Esq., at whose annual courts, held in the castle, two portreeves, who collect the lord's rents, two bailiffs, two constables, and six tythingmen, are chosen. A charter was granted, in 1627, by Charles I., vesting the civil power in a mayor, justice, aldermen, and burgesses; this was suspended by Charles II., but subsequently confirmed by him, and existed until the year 1792, when, in consequence of the corporation having suffered a majority of the members to die without filling up vacancies, and a majority being required to swear in the officers, none could be legally elected; whereby the charter became forfeited, and a fruitless application having been made to the Privy Council for its renewal, the town is now under the jurisdiction of the county magistrates, who hold a petty session on Wednesdays and Saturdays at the guildhall. The bailiffs convene, and usually preside at, public meetings, and the constables have the distribution of most of the public charities. The Lent assizes for the county are held in the castle, as are also the Michaelmas general quarter sessions. A court for the recovery of small debts under 40s. is holden, in the same place, for the borough and hundred alternately, every week. The castle is supposed to be part of a stately edifice erected by William Giffard, Bishop of Winchester, in the reign of Henry I.; it was thoroughly repaired by Bishop Langton, towards the end of the fifteenth century, and, in addition to other improvements, the present assize hall was built, by Bishop Horne, in 1577, since which period, various sums have been expended for keeping it in repair. The building consists of a south front, with a gateway in the centre, over which are two escutcheons, one bearing the arms of Henry VII., with the motto Vive le roi Henri; the other the inscription Laus tibi Xte., and T. Langto Winto, 1495, both in Saxon characters: at its east end is a circular tower. The inner court-yard is an irregular quadrangle, the east side being the shorter, and on the north side are the county courts, grand jury room, &c.: the access to it is through an open court, called Castle Green, formerly enclosed with two gates, but one only remains, over which is what was the porter's lodge, now occupied as a dwelling-house; besides these is another apartment, called the Exchequer chamber, where the rolls of the manor are preserved; the walls are of great strength, and the grooves for the portcullis quite perfect. The moat was filled up in 1785, and the draw-bridge removed. The only prison, besides a small place of temporary confinement, called the Nook, is the county bridewell, at Wilton, to confine malefactors until they can be taken before a magistrate. It was erected in 1754, and enlarged in 1815, being now capable of receiving eighty prisoners. Debtors, as well as criminals, are sent to the county gaol at Ilchester, and the latter also to Wilton and Shepton-Mallet prisons. This is a borough by prescription, and first sent members to parliament in the reign of Edward I., in 1295: the right of election is in the potwallers, or persons who boil their own pot, and have resided six months within the limits of the borough (which is not co-extensive with the town, comprising only a part of the parish of St. Mary Magdalene) and do not receive alms: the number of electors is about six hundred, and the bailiffs are the returning officers.

Taunton comprises the parishes of St. James and St. Mary Magdalene, in the archdeaconry of Taunton, and diocese of Bath and Wells, but many of the houses extend into the adjoining parishes. The living of St. James' is a perpetual curacy, endowed with £1000 private benefaction, £800 royal bounty, and £1700 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of Sir T. B. Lethbridge, Bart.: the church, which is an ancient unadorned structure, with a quadrangular tower, was formerly the conventual church of the priory. The living of St. Mary Magdalene's is a vicarage, endowed with £600 private benefaction, and £600 royal bounty, and in the patronage of E. B. Portman, Esq.: the church, standing near the centre of the town, was originally a chapel to the conventual church of St. James, but was made parochial in 1308, under Walter Huselshaw, then Bishop of Bath and Wells: it is a spacious and magnificent edifice, in the decorated and later styles of English architecture, consisting of a chancel, nave, and five aisles, two of the latter having been probably added at a later date, separated by four rows of clustered columns supporting pointed arches: the quadrangular tower at the west end is an elegant structure in four compartments, containing thirteen windows, which, by the variety of their ornaments, add much to its lightness and beauty; it is one hundred and twenty-one feet in height, exclusively of its pinnacles of thirty-two feet, which are richly adorned with carved work, and the top crowned with most exquisitely delicate battlements; the whole forming a beautiful and conspicuous object for many miles round. There is a place of worship each for Baptists, the Society of Friends, Independents, and Unitarians, and two for Wesleyan Methodists, one of them erected under the immediate direction of their founder, the Rev. John Wesley. The Roman Catholics have lately built a handsome chapel, with a portico supported by two Ionic pillars, and a façade ornamented with windows and pilasters of the same order; they have also a convent of Franciscan nuns, who emigrated from Brussels during the French Revolution in the last century, and first settled at Winchester, until they became possessed of their present residence, which is a noble building standing at the east end of the town, near the entrance from London, originally intended for a public hospital.

The free grammar school was founded, in 1522, by Richard Fox, Bishop of Winchester, and endowed, in 1554, by William Walbee, clerk, with property now producing about £36 per annum: the school-house is on the south side of the Castle green, and adjoining it is a house for the master, whose appointment is vested in the Warden of New College, Oxford; there are no boys on the foundation. The school in Middle-street, in which eighty boys and fifty girls are clothed and instructed, is supported by voluntary subscription; and there are also a school of industry and two infant schools. The almshouses at East Gate were founded, in 1635, by Robert Gray, Esq., a native of this town, and endowed by him with £2000; ten poor women and seven men are lodged in them, who, by direction of the founder, were to receive two shillings a week each, but additional benefactions have enabled the trustees to increase this allowance to three shillings a week. Huish's almshouses, on the north side of Hammet-street, founded and endowed by Richard Huish, Esq., for "thirteen poor, needy, maimed, impotent, or aged men," one of whom is appointed president, and reads prayers daily in the chapel attached to the building; he receives seven shillings, and the rest five shillings, a week each, besides clothing and coal occasionally. Henley's and Pope's almshouses, and seventeen other tenements, are also appropriated to the rent-free residence of the poor, but are not endowed. Of the other charities, the principal is that arising from the Town Lands, consisting of property to which no claimant appeared after a plague had raged in Taunton, which, together with some land and houses purchased under bequests of John Meredith and Margery Acland, is vested in feoffees; the annual produce is about £360, and, after some deductions for expenses, the income from the Town Lands is distributed in money among the poor of the parish of St. Mary Magdalene; that from John Meredith's bequest, in clothing to poor men and women; and that from Margery Acland's, in small sums to poor women: there are also many small sums, as well as bread and clothing, arising from various bequests, annually distributed. The Taunton and Somerset hospital was founded, in 1809, in commemoration of George III. entering upon the fiftieth year of his reign: it was opened on the 25th of March, 1812, and contains four wards, two for men and two for women, being capable of accommodating twenty-six patients. An eye infirmary, established in 1816, is supported by voluntary contributions; and there is a society for the relief of lying-in women. Taunton is the birthplace of Samuel Daniel, the poet, born in 1562; and of the Rev. Henry Grove, in 1683, an eminent dissenting minister, who, in addition to other works, contributed some excellent papers to the Spectator. Amongst the bishops of Winchester who made it their occasional residence are the celebrated names of Cardinals Beaufort and Wolsey.

TAVERHAM, a parish in the hundred of TAVERHAM, county of NORFOLK, $5\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. W.) from Norwich, containing 192 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, formerly in mediocres, now united, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Norwich, each rated in the king's books at £4. 2. 8 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the alternate patronage of the Bishop of Norwich and Mrs. Branthwayte. The church is dedicated to St. Edmund.

TAVISTOCK, a borough, market town, and parish, in the hundred of TAVISTOCK, county of DEVON, 33 miles (W. by S.) from Exeter, and 204 (W. S. W.) from London, containing 5483 inhabitants. The origin of this town, which derives its name from the river Tavy, on which it is pleasantly situated, appears to have been coeval with the erection of an abbey of Black monks, commenced by Ordgar, Earl of Devonshire, in 961, and completed by his son Ordulf, in 981, the noble founder, according to tradition, having been admonished in a vision to erect a monastery: it was richly endowed, and dedicated to St. Mary the Virgin and St. Rumon in 997: it was destroyed by the Danes, but afterwards arose from its ruins with considerable enlargement: from Henry I. it received the jurisdiction of the entire hundred of Tavistock, and the grant of a market and a fair. The abbey church was dedicated, in 1318, by Bishop Stapleton; and in 1513, Richard Barham, the abbot, procured from Henry VIII. the right of a seat among the peers, and from Pope Leo. X. an exemption for the abbey from all episcopal and metropolitan jurisdiction; in 1539, it was surrendered to the king by John Peryn, the last abbot, and its revenue was valued at £902. 5. 7. The monastery is remarkable as having contained a school for Saxon literature, at an early period (the study of which was discontinued about the period of the Reformation), and an ancient printing-press, soon after the introduction of printing into England. In Exeter College, Oxford, is a copy of the Stannary laws, printed here; also a perfect copy of Boethius, translated by Walton, and printed, in 1525, by Dan Thomas Rychard, one of the monks of the abbey; the possessions of which, with the borough and town, was granted at the dissolution to John, Lord Russell, ancestor of the present noble proprietor, the Duke of Bedford. Of the venerable fabric there are yet sufficient remains, indicating its beauty and extent, although considerably mutilated and appropriated to various uses: among these are the gate-house and several complete buildings near it; the refectory, now used as an assembly-room; traces of the boundary walls, and an entire gateway, near the canal bridge. Within the parish there are also some remains of Old Morwell house, once the hunting seat of the monks of Tavistock. In 1591, while the plague raged at Exeter, the summer assizes were held in this town, and thirteen criminals were executed on the Abbey green. After the defeat of the parliamentary forces on Bradock Down, in 1643, the royalists were quartered here, and Charles I. visited this town on his advance towards Cornwall, after his unsuccessful attempt on Plymouth.

The town occupies a portion of the level and acclivity of a valley, through which the river passes with tumultuous impetuosity over an uneven and rocky bed, and which presents some of the most beautiful and picturesque scenery in this justly admired county: it is irregularly built, but the approach from the Plymouth road is remarkably good. On the right, and opposite the church, are the various embattled and turreted buildings of the old abbey, part of which has been converted into the Bedford hotel, with an extensive façade in the English style of architecture, and several other portions and fragments covered with ivy. It also possesses a good library, with a Doric portico, in which the members of a literary and scientific institution assemble, and lectures are delivered occasionally. Races are held on Whitchurch down. The river is crossed by three bridges, two ancient ones immediately leading from the body of the town, and the third on the Plymouth road, about a quarter of a mile distant: near this is another over the Tavistock canal, which extends hence to the town, parallel with the river; it was opened in June 1817, to form a junction with the Tamar at Morwell Ham quay, five miles distant: a branch canal extends to the slate quarries at Mill hill. The head of this canal is connected with the above-mentioned quay by an inclined plane, two hundred and forty feet high; and, in its course, it flows through a tunnel under Morwell Down, one mile and three quarters in length. The boats employed are of iron, and the principal articles conveyed by them are ore, coal, and lime. The serge and coarse woollen manufactures, with the mining business, form the chief employment of the inhabitants, but the former is on the decline. There are a tin-smelting establishment and an extensive iron-foundry in the town. The neighbourhood abounds with mineral productions: a section of the mining field between the Tamar and Tavy rivers exhibits a considerable quantity of the porphyritic rock, in alternate beds, called elvan. From the mines of Morwell, grey and ruby copper is procured; from Wheal Friendship, native rich, yellow, red, and chrystallized copper, and, in general, arsenic and yellow pyrites may be found. Lead abounds in the district; and silver is also found, as well as tin, iron, manganese, and the loadstone. The market, noted for its supply of corn, is held on Friday: fairs are on the second Wednesday in January, May, July, September, October, November, and December.

The town, which is one of the four stannary towns in the county, is governed by a portreeve, who is elected annually at the manorial court leet. A court of pie-powder was anciently held, and there is still a court for the recovery of debts not exceeding £20. This borough sent representatives to parliament in the reign of Edward I.: the elective franchise is vested in the resident freeholders, the number of whom is about thirty; the portreeve is the returning officer, and the influence of the Duke of Bedford is predominant. Amongst the most distinguished members returned for this borough were John Pym, the great opposer of Charles I., and William, the unfortunate Lord Russell, in the reign of Charles II.

The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Totness, and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £10. 17. 6., endowed with £600 royal bounty, and £1000 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Duke of Bedford. The church, which is dedicated to St. Eustachius, is a neat and very spacious edifice, with a lofty tower elevated over an arched thoroughfare: it contains some good monuments, especially those in memory of Sir John Fitz and Sir John Glanville, the latter of whom was a judge of the Common Pleas, and died in 1600. There are places of worship for the Society of Friends, Independents, Wesleyan Methodists, and Unitarians. The grammar school is of ancient and uncertain foundation, but has now merely a nominal existence: it was endowed in 1649, by Sir J. Glanville, with certain estates, for the maintenance and education of one boy, and with a small exhibition to either of the Universities, on the completion of his preparatory studies: the master receives £4. 4. per annum from the proceeds of the estates, under an act passed in the 3rd of George III., which are now vested in the Duke of Bedford, who also grants him the use of a house rent-free, and an annual contribution of £20, for which eight boys are instructed. In 1674, Nicholas Watts bequeathed some rent-charges, part of them applicable to assist a youth preparing for the University. A subscription free school for children of both sexes, was erected at the expense, and is chiefly supported by the beneficence, of the Duke of Bedford: it is adapted to the reception of one hundred and forty boys and one hundred and twenty girls, and is conducted on the system of Dr. Bell. An almshouse for four poor widows was founded by one of the Courtenay family, each of the inmates receiving £2 per annum. Couches' almshouses are for the reception of fifteen pensioners, nominated by the Duke of Bedford, each of whom receives £3 per annum. The sum of £15, arising from lands, is applied annually in apprenticing poor children. The workhouse, a large and convenient building, occupies the site of an ancient lazaret. There are also several benefit societies, and other charities of a public nature. At Brook is a chalybeate spring of reputed medicinal properties. From the summit of a lofty and precipitous cliff at Morwell woods there is a fine view of the river Tamar, winding through a valley of great beauty. Among the eminent natives were, Sir Francis Drake; Judge Glanville; his son, Sir John Glanville; and William Browne, author of "The Shepherd's Pipe." Tavistock confers the inferior title of marquis on the Duke of Bedford.

TAVY (ST. MARY), a parish in the hundred of LIFTON, county of DEVON, 4 miles (N. E. by N.) from Tavistock, containing 933 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Totness, and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £14. 5. 7½., and in the patronage of John Buller, Esq. In this parish is an extensive copper mine, called Weal Friendship.

TAVY (ST. PETER), a parish partly in the hundred of LIFTON, but chiefly in that of ROBOROUGH, county of DEVON, 3½ miles (N. E.) from Tavistock, containing, with the hamlet of Willsworthy, 444 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Totness, and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £17. 1. 8., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Exeter. At Willsworthy there was formerly a chantry chapel, which has been converted into a cow-house.

TAWSTOCK, a parish in the hundred of FREMINGTON, county of DEVON, 2 miles (S.) from Barnstaple, containing 1237 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Barnstaple, and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £69. 12. 1., and in the patronage of Sir B. Wrey, Bart. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. There is a place of worship for Independents. Mary Pine, in 1758, left a small sum in support of a school. The manor-house, which was garrisoned by Sir T. Fairfax, in February 1646, was almost consumed by fire in 1787: it has been rebuilt by Sir B. Wrey, except the ancient gateway, which still remains, bearing date 1574.

TAWSTOCK, county of SUFFOLK.—See TOSTOCK.

TAWTON (BISHOP'S), a parish in the hundred of SOUTH MOLTON, county of DEVON, 2 miles (S. by E.) from Barnstaple, containing 1200 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Bishop of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £21, and in the patronage of the Dean of Exeter. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a neat ancient structure, with a handsome stone spire. On the division of the see of Sherborne, about 905, Tawton was made the seat of the Devonshire diocese, by Eadulphus, or Werstan, its first bishop; but under the second (Putta) it was translated to Crediton, and, in 1550, Bishop Vesey conveyed the manor to the Russell family. Some remains of the episcopal palace are still discernible, and in the churchyard are the ruins of the deanery. This parish contains the populous village of Newport, which see.

TAWTON (NORTH), a parish in the hundred of NORTH TAWTON with WINKLEY, county of DEVON, 7 miles (N. E.) from Oakhampton, containing 1563 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Barnstaple, and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £32. 4. 7., and in the patronage of the Rev. George Hole. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. There is a place of worship for Independents. This place was anciently called Cheping Tawton, i. e., "a market town on the Taw," which river runs through the parish. Its market charter was confirmed in 1270, at which period it was a borough town, being still governed by a portreeve, elected annually at the manorial court. The market was discontinued about 1720, but cattle fairs are held on the third Tuesday in April, October 3rd, and December 18th. Here was once an extensive woollen manufacture, and there is still a spinning-mill. Ten children are educated for about £14. 14. a year, part of the produce of a messuage and lands, the gift of the Rev. Richard Hole, in 1783. There were formerly chapels at Crook-Burnell, Nichols-Nymet, and Bath-Barton, in this parish; the last is the birthplace of Henry de Bathé, a learned justiciary of the thirteenth century; he died in 1262. Henry Tozer, expelled from Exeter College for his loyalty, in 1648, was a native of this place; he was the author of "Directions for a Devotional Life," which passed through ten editions. In the neighbourhood, a small brook sometimes issues out of a large pit ten feet deep, and continues running for several days together, like that called Woobourne in Hertfordshire.

TAWTON (SOUTH), a parish in the hundred of WONFORD, county of DEVON, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E. by S.) from Oakhampton, containing 1878 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £10, endowed with £15 per annum and £200 private benefaction, and £1400 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Dean and Canons of Windsor. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew.

TAXALL, a parish in the hundred of MACCLESFIELD, county palatine of CHESTER, comprising the townships of Taxall, and Whaley with Yeardsley, and containing 662 inhabitants, of which number, 241 are in the township of Taxall, $8\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. E. by E.) from Macclesfield. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chester, rated in the king's books at £9. 2. 6., and in the patronage of the Rev. J. Swain. The church, dedicated to St. James, has lately received an addition of two hundred and twenty-four sittings, of which two hundred and two are free, the Incorporated Society for the enlargement of churches and chapels having granted £200 towards defraying the expense. The village occupies a pleasing situation on the banks of the river Goyt, which separates it from Derbyshire.

TAYNTON, a parish in the hundred of BOTLOE, county of GLOUCESTER, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. S. E.) from Newent, containing 516 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Hereford, and diocese of Gloucester, rated in the king's books at £9. 6. 8., and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Gloucester. The church, dedicated to St. Lawrence, has lately received an addition of one hundred and sixty-one sittings, of which one hundred and thirty-seven are free, the Incorporated Society for the enlargement of churches and chapels having granted £100 towards defraying the expense. Robert Aldridge, in 1737, bequeathed a rent-charge of £2. 10. for teaching four children to read the Bible.

TAYNTON, a parish in the hundred of CHADLINGTON, county of OXFORD, $1\frac{3}{4}$ mile (N. W.) from Burford, containing 324 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, rated in the king's books at £7. 9. $4\frac{1}{2}$., endowed with £600 royal bounty, and in the patronage of Lord Dynevor. The church is dedicated to St. John. The river Windrush runs through the parish, in which are considerable quarries of excellent freestone. Five boys are educated by a schoolmistress, for the interest of £100, bequeathed by John Collier in 1725.

TEALBY, a parish in the southern division of the wapentake of WALSHCROFT, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. N. E.) from Market-Rasen, containing 755 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £6. 16. 8. G. Tennyson, Esq. was patron in 1816. The church is dedicated to All Saints. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

TEAN, a hamlet in the parish of CHECKLEY, southern division of the hundred of TOTMONSLOW, county of STAFFORD, $7\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. W. by W.) from Uttoxeter. The population is returned with the parish. There is a place of worship for Calvinistic and Wesleyan Methodists. The manufacture of tape, supposed to be the most extensive in Europe, was established at Upper Tean, in 1748, at which, and in the adjoining bleaching grounds, several hundred persons find employment. The proprietors support schools for the children of their workpeople. In the neighbourhood are several fine mansions and elegant villas.

TEATH (ST.), a parish in the hundred of TRIGG, county of CORNWALL, 3 miles (S. W. by W.) from Camel-ford, containing 990 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Cornwall, and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £12, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Bishop of Exeter. The church was formerly collegiate for two prebendaries, or portionists. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. The parish is bounded on the west by the Bristol channel, and contains the great slate quarry of Delabole.

TEDBURN (ST. MARY), a parish in the hundred of WONFORD, county of DEVON, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W. by S.) from Crediton, containing 709 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £18. 6. 3., and in the patronage of the Rev. Charles Burn. A cattle fair is held on the Monday before Michaelmas-day. At Hackworthy, in this parish, there was formerly a chapel of ease.

TEDDINGTON, a parish in the hundred of SPELTHORNE, county of MIDDLESEX, 11 miles (S. W. by W.) from London, containing 863 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the jurisdiction of the Commissary of London, concurrently with the Consistorial Court of the Bishop of London, and in the patronage of the Earl of Bradford. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is principally in the later style of English architecture: it contains the remains of Sir Orlando Bridgeman, who died in 1674, and of Dr. Stephen Hall, Clerk of the Closet to the Princess of Wales, mother of George III., and fifty-one years minister of this parish, to which he was a most liberal benefactor: he died in 1761. The village stands on the western bank of the Thames, on the road from London, through Isleworth, to Hampton Court. Here are the wax bleaching grounds and candle manufactory of Messrs. Barclay, the largest and most complete establishment of the kind in the kingdom. During the summer months, nearly four acres of ground are covered with wax, of which about two hundred thousand pounds are annually bleached, and in winter formed into candles by hand. Connected with this manufactory is a very extensive one of spermaceti, chiefly carried on in Leicester-square by the same firm. Twelve girls are instructed for £20 a year, the rent of certain cottages and land purchased with £40 left by Dame Dorothy Bridgeman, and a smaller sum from the parish funds. Bushy Park, the usual country residence of William IV. and his queen Adelaide, before their accession to the throne, is partly in this parish.

TEDDINGTON, a chapelry in the parish of OVERBURY, middle division of the hundred of OSWALDSLOW, county of WORCESTER, 5 miles (E. by N.) from Tewkesbury, containing 146 inhabitants. The chapel is dedicated to St. Nicholas.

TEDSTONE-DELAMERE, a parish in the hundred of BROXASH, county of HEREFORD, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E. by E.) from Bromyard, containing 246 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Hereford, rated in the king's books at £6. 13. 4., and in the patronage of the Master and Fellows of Brasenose College, Oxford. The church is dedicated to St. James. There is a petrifying spring in the parish.

TEDSTONE-WAFER, a parish in the hundred of BROXASH, county of HEREFORD, $3\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. E. by N.) from Bromyard, containing 98 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, united to that of Edvin-Loach, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Hereford, rated in the king's books at £1. 10. A court leet is occasionally held here: limestone abounds in the neighbourhood.

TEETON, a hamlet in that part of the parish of RAVENSTHORPE which is in the hundred of NOBOTTLE-GROVE, county of NORTHAMPTON, $7\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. W. by N.) from Northampton, containing 90 inhabitants.

TEFFONT-EVIAS, a parish in the hundred of DUNWORTH, county of WILTS, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W.) from Wilton, containing 147 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £8, and in the patronage of the Rev. John Thomas Mayne. The church has been lately rebuilt, on which occasion it received an addition of one hundred free sittings, the Incorporated Society for the enlargement of churches and chapels having granted £100 towards defraying the expense. The river Nadder, and a beautifully clear stream, which rises near the adjoining village of Teffont-Magna, run through the parish; the latter forms a lake, covering two acres, well stocked with trout. There is a fine freestone quarry, now being worked, besides very extensive excavations, from which the stone used in building Salisbury cathedral was taken. The manor-house, a handsome structure in the later style of English architecture, was the birthplace of Henry, Earl of Marlborough, Lord High Treasurer and Chancellor of England in the time of James II.

TEFFONT-MAGNA, a parish, forming a distinct portion of the hundred of WARMINSTER, being locally in that of Dunworth, county of WILTS, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E.) from Hindon, containing 220 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the rectory of Dinton, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Salisbury.

TEIGH, a parish in the hundred of ALSTOE, county of RUTLAND, 5 miles (N.) from Oakham, containing 178 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Northampton, and diocese of Peterborough, rated in the king's books at £14. 2. 11., and in the patronage of the Earl of Harborough. The church is dedicated to the Holy Trinity.

TEIGNMOUTH, a sea-port and market town, comprising two parishes, called East and West Teignmouth, in the hundred of EXMINSTER, county of DEVON, 15 miles (S. by E.) from Exeter, and $187\frac{3}{4}$ (W. S. W.) from London, containing 3980 inhabitants, of which number, 2514 are in West Teignmouth. This place was originally an insignificant village, and is stated to have been the first landing-place of the Danes, in 787, on being sent to reconnoitre the British coast; who, having slain the governor, were encouraged by this omen of success to pursue their warlike purpose throughout the island. The town has been twice destroyed by fire, first by a French pirate, in 1340, and subsequently, in the reign of Anne, when the French, having effected a landing, proceeded to ransack the churches, and burnt one hundred and sixteen houses, with a number of ships and small craft lying within the harbour: in commemoration of this calamitous event, one of the streets still retains the appellation of French-street. Alarmed at the threat of a similar attack, in 1744, the inhabitants obtained permission to erect a small fort on the beach of East Teignmouth, and petitioned the Admiralty for the requisite supply of ordnance. In Camden's time the eastern town was called Teignmouth-Regis, and the other Teignmouth-Episcopi, the manor of the latter having belonged to the see of Exeter, until alienated by Bishop Vesey. The town, as its name implies, is situated on the navigable river Teign, at its influx into the ocean: it occupies a gentle declivity at the foot of a chain of hills, by which it is sheltered on the north and west, the two parts being separated by a small rivulet, called the Tame. East Teignmouth, which is the more modern, is almost entirely appropriated as a watering-place, in which respect it is considered equal, if not superior, in magnitude and fashionable repute, to any on the Devonshire coast: its situation is beautiful, and in the vicinity are prospects, particularly from Little Haldon, of great and deserved celebrity: the cliffs are of a reddish colour, and of considerable height, and at the southern side of the river's mouth is a singular elevation, called the Ness. On the strand fronting the sea are spacious carriage drives, promenades, and an extensive lawn. The public rooms, which form the centre of a crescent, comprise spacious assembly-rooms, with apartments for refreshments, cards, and billiards; the façade of the building is decorated with an Ionic portico over a Doric colonnade; this handsome edifice was lately erected by subscription. There are also a public library, bathing establishments, and a small theatre. A regatta takes place annually about the month of August. West Teignmouth is the port and principal seat of business: in this respect it had risen to some importance at an early period, having sent members to the great council for maritime affairs, and contributed seven ships, with one hundred and twenty men, towards the expedition against Calais, in 1347. The town is roughly paved, and irregularly built, and, with its quay and dock-yard, is situated on the curve formed by the sudden expansion of the river. A post-road, passing through it from Exeter to Torquay, crosses a bridge over the Teign, said to be the longest in England: it is composed of wood and iron, with a drawbridge at each end, for the passage of vessels, and was recently erected by subscription. The quay was constructed, in 1820, by G. Templar, Esq.; and in the small dock-yard, sloops of war, and vessels of two hundred tons' burden, have been built. The harbour is safe and commodious, though somewhat difficult to enter, on account of a moveable bar, or sand bank, which shifts with the wind. In the middle of the last century, twenty ships, of from fifty to two hundred tons' burden each, were employed in the trade with Newfoundland, and some business of this description is still carried on, but it is on the decline: coal and culm are imported, and the home fishery at present occupies a considerable number of the inhabitants. By means of a rail-road and canal, which latter joins the Teign at Newton-Abbot's, and is navigable thence to the sea at Teignmouth, a communication has been effected between the granite quarries at Haytor and the clay-pits of Bovey, which greatly facilitates the exports of granite, and pipe and potters' clay. A grant of a market and a fair was obtained, in the reign of Henry III., by the Dean and Chapter of Exeter, for East Teignmouth, where there is a commodious market-house, which belongs to the lord of the manor. The market is on Saturday, principally for provisions: fairs are held on the third Tuesday in January, the last Tuesday in February, and the last Tuesday in September. The government of both parishes is vested in a portreeve, who is annually elected from a jury of twelve, sworn in at the court leet and baron held by the lord of the manor; in East Teignmouth two constables are elected by the court, and two by the parish.

The living of East Teignmouth is a perpetual curacy, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Dean and Chapter of Exeter, endowed with £800 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Vicar of Dawlish. The church, which is dedicated to St. Michael, was almost entirely rebuilt a few years since, the only part of the ancient edifice now remaining being a well-executed doorway, after the enriched Saxon model. The living of West Teignmouth is also a perpetual curacy, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Bishop of Exeter, and in the patronage of the Vicar of Bishop's Teington: the church, which is dedicated to St. James, is a spacious modern octagonal structure, with a tower on one of its sides, and surmounted in the centre by a lantern. There are places of worship for Baptists at East Teignmouth, and Independents and Calvinistic Methodists at West Teignmouth. In East Teignmouth, thirteen poor children are instructed from the proceeds of a joint benefaction, made in 1731, by Capts. John and Thomas Coleman. In West Teignmouth is a large school, founded by means of a benefaction from the family of Elwill, and additionally supported by subscription, in which from two hundred to three hundred children are educated on the National system. There is a poor-house in each parish. Teignmouth confers the title of baron on the family of Shore.

TEINGTON (BISHOP'S), a parish in the hundred of EXMINSTER, county of DEVON, $1\frac{3}{4}$ mile (W. by N.) from West Teignmouth, containing 946 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Bishop of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £25. 8. 10., and in the patronage of the Rev. John Comyns. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is principally in the Norman style of architecture, with an enriched western doorway, and a low massive tower between the nave and the chancel. The river Teign forms a boundary of the parish, in which are extensive quarries of limestone, affording also compact blocks of various-coloured marble. There is a charity school, with a house for the master, founded in 1729, and endowed by Christopher Coleman and others, the money having been vested in the purchase of an estate in Bovey-Tracey, yielding £40 per annum, for teaching and clothing twenty poor children. Near the church are the remains of a palace and chapel of Bishop Grandison, and an hospital founded by that prelate for poor decayed clerks, the ruins of which are highly picturesque. There was formerly a chapel at Venn, in this parish.

TEINGRACE, a parish in the hundred of TEINGBRIDGE, county of DEVON, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. by W.) from Newton-Bushell, containing 131 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Totness, and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £5. 9. $4\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of G. Templer, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a handsome edifice, rebuilt in 1787, by James Templer, Esq., George Templer, Esq., and the Rev. John Templer, brothers. Among other monuments of that family, it contains one to the memory of Charles Templer, who perished in the wreck of the Halsewell East Indiaman, on the Dorsetshire coast, in 1786. The Stover canal and railway, constructed by the Templer family, facilitate the exportation of potters' clay found in the neighbourhood, and of granite from the extensive quarries near High Tor. There is a large National school, supported by subscription.

TEINGTON-DREWS, a parish in the hundred of WONFORD, county of DEVON, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. W.) from Moreton-Hampstead, containing 1188 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £40. 13. 4., and in the patronage of the Ponsford family. The church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, is an interesting old structure, with a beautiful window of stained glass at the east end: it has lately received an addition of seventy free sittings, the Incorporated Society for the enlargement of churches and chapels having granted £40 towards defraying the expense. An almshouse was founded by Richard Eggecomb, in 1542. The name of this place is supposed to signify "the Druids' Town on the Teign," which river here pursues its rapid course through scenery of the wildest description, and is crossed by Fingal's bridge, in a romantic valley; but the greatest curiosity is a cromlech on the Shilston estate, consisting of three supporting stones, each about six feet and a half high, with a covering stone, twelve feet long, and nine feet across the widest part. On the bank of the Teign is one of the celebrated logan, or rocking, stones, which are thought by some to be a work of design, by others of nature.

TEINGTON (KING'S), a parish in the hundred of TEINGBRIDGE, county of DEVON, 2 miles (N. E. by N.) from Newton-Bushell, containing 1131 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, with the perpetual curacy of Highweek annexed, in the archdeaconry of Totness, and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £28. 13. 9., and in the patronage of the Prebendary of King's Teington in the Cathedral Church of Salisbury. The church is dedicated to St. Michael. There is a place of worship for Independents. The river Teign is navigable here, in the neighbourhood of which are large beds of potters' clay of an excellent quality, and a chalybeate spring. Theophilus Gale, a learned nonconformist divine, was born here, in 1628; he died in 1687.

TELLISFORD, a parish in the hundred of WELLOW, county of SOMERSET, 6 miles (N. N. E.) from Frome, containing 167 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Wells, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £9. 1. 0½, and in the patronage of the Rev. C. W. Baker. The church is dedicated to All Saints. The parish is separated from Wiltshire by the river Frome, which is here crossed by a bridge. A school is endowed with the interest of £143 three per cents., by Edward Crabb, a native of this place. About a third part of the village was destroyed by fire in 1785.

TELSCOMBE, a parish in the hundred of HOLMSTROW, rape of LEWES, county of SUSSEX, 3½ miles (N. W. by W.) from Newhaven, containing 113 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Lewes, and diocese of Chichester, rated in the king's books at £13. 13. 4., and in the patronage of John Philpot, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. Lawrence, is a small structure, principally in the Norman style. The Rev. Josiah Povey, in 1727, bequeathed land, &c., yielding about six guineas a year, for teaching poor children. Henry Smith, Esq. bequeathed an estate in this parish, called Court Farm, directing the rents to be applied for the relief of the poor of seven parishes in the north of England.

TEMPLE, a parish in the hundred of TRIGG, county of CORNWALL, 6¼ miles (N. E. by E.) from Bodmin, containing 27 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of Sir B. Wrey, Bart., endowed with £200 royal bounty. The church is quite dilapidated. The extensive moors, which lie between Bodmin and Launceston, take their name from this parish, in which they are partly situated.

TEMPLE-BREWER, an extra-parochial liberty, in the wapentake of FLAXWELL, parts of KESTEVEN, county of LINCOLN, 6¾ miles (N. W. by N.) from Sleaford, containing 52 inhabitants. A preceptory of the Knights' Templars was founded here before 1185, which afterwards belonged to the hospitallers, and had possessions, at the dissolution, valued at £184. 6. 8., per ann.

TEMPLE-HALL, an extra-parochial liberty, in the hundred of SPARKENHOE, county of LEICESTER, 2½ miles (W. by S.) from Market-Bosworth, containing, with Willsborough, 105 inhabitants.

TEMPLE-NEWSOM, a township in the parish of WHITEKIRK, lower division of the wapentake of SKYRACK, West riding of the county of YORK, 4 miles (E. by S.) from Leeds, containing 1166 inhabitants. It is within the peculiar jurisdiction of the manorial court of Temple-Newsom. The Knights Templars had a preceptory here, which, at the suppression of their order, was granted to Sir John D'Arcy.

TEMPLE-SOWERBY, county of WESTMORLAND.—See SOWERBY (TEMPLE).

TEMPLETON, a parish in the hundred of WITHERIDGE, county of DEVON, 5 miles (W. by N.) from Tiverton, containing 198 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £8. 15., and in the patronage of Sir W. T. Pole, Bart. The church is dedicated to St. Margaret. Mary Carwithen, in 1741, left a small sum for the education of poor children.

TEMPSFORD, a parish in the hundred of BIGGLESWADE, county of BEDFORD, 6½ miles (N. N. W.) from Biggleswade, containing 577 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Bedford, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £24, and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. The village is situated on the river Ivel, which is navigable through the parish, and falls into the Ouse as it passes along the western boundary. This is a place of great antiquity; it was occupied by the Danes before 921, when they were expelled by the Saxons, but they returned in 1010, and reduced it to ashes.

TENBURY, a parish in the upper division of the hundred of DODDINGTREE, county of WORCESTER, comprising the market town of Tenbury, and the hamlets of Berrington, Sutton, and Tenbury-Foreign, and containing 1668 inhabitants, of which number, 1008 are in the town of Tenbury, 22 miles (N. W. by W.) from Worcester, and 134 (N. W. by W.) from London. The town is situated on the southern bank of the river Teme, from which it derives its name, having been originally called Temebury. It consists chiefly of three streets, leading respectively to Worcester, Bromsgrove, and Cleobury-Mortimer, partially paved, and the houses in general but indifferently built. The surrounding country is rich, and very productive of hops and apples, and great quantities of cider and perry are made, forming a principal source of trade: there is also a considerable malting trade, and a tannery. A canal, commenced in 1794, originally intended to extend from Leominster to Stourport, but not completed the whole distance, passes within half a mile of the town. The river Teme, which here separates Worcestershire from Shropshire, is crossed, at the northern entrance into the town, by a bridge of six arches. The market, granted by Henry III. in 1249, is on Tuesday; the building for the corn market is an ancient structure, but the butter-cross is more recent. Fairs are on April 22nd, May 1st, July 18th, and September 26th. Petty sessions are held once in two months, and a court leet and court baron by the lord of the manor. The living is a vicarage, with the perpetual curacy of Rochford annexed, in the archdeaconry of Salop, and diocese of Hereford, rated in the king's books at £21, and in the patronage of the Rev. George Hall. The church, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, was rebuilt in 1777, the old building having been swept away by a flood, in November 1770: it is a spacious and neat edifice, having formerly had a chantry attached to it, which was valued, at the period of the suppression, at £5. 0. 6. per annum. There is a place of worship for Particular Baptists. The National school was founded in 1816, and is supported by voluntary contributions. The principal charity arises from some houses and lands given by Mr. Philip Baylis, which having been let by the feoffees in 1767, on lease for ninety-nine years, at a rental of £7. 10. per annum, little benefit is derived from them. Races are held, annually in July, on a good course about a mile south of the town.

TENBURY-FOREIGN, a hamlet in the parish of TENBURY, upper division of the hundred of DODDINGTREE, county of WORCESTER, containing 260 inhabitants.

TENDRING, a parish in the hundred of TENDRING, county of ESSEX, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S.S.E.) from Manningtree, containing 700 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Colchester, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £16, and in the patronage of the Master and Fellows of Balliol College, Oxford. The church is dedicated to St. Edmund. A school is supported by subscription.

TENTERDEN, a market town and parish within the cinque-port liberties, having separate jurisdiction, though locally in the hundred of Tenterden, lathe of Scray, county of KENT, 18 miles (S.E. by S.) from Maidstone, and 53 (S.E. by E.) from London, containing 3259 inhabitants. This place, of which the present name appears to be a corruption of Theinwarden, or the ward of Thanet, that is, the guard in the valley, was one of the first places in which the woollen manufacture was established, in the reign of Edward III. It became a scene of opposition to the Church of Rome at an early period, prior to the Reformation, when, in the time of Archbishop Warham, forty-eight inhabitants of the town and its vicinity were publicly accused of heresy, and five of them condemned to be burned. The town stands upon a pleasant eminence, surrounded by some fine plantations of hops: the houses are well built and of respectable appearance. The town-hall was built in 1792, the former having been destroyed by fire, and contains a commodious room occasionally used for public assemblies. The Royal Military canal passes within six miles of the town. The market, principally for corn, is held on Friday; and there is a fair for horses, cattle, and pedlary, on the first Monday in May. The inhabitants were incorporated, by the style of "The Bayliffe and Commonaltie of the Town and Hundred of Tenterden," and the town annexed as a member to the town and port of Rye, by Henry VI.; a new charter was granted in the 42nd of Elizabeth, changing the style to "Mayor, Jurats, and Commons," according to the provisions of which the town is governed by a mayor, twelve jurats, and admitted freemen (not limited as to number), who are the commons: the mayor, who is also coroner, annually elected on the 29th of August, and the jurats, are chosen by the commons, and the latter by the mayor and jurats: a town clerk, chamberlain, and two serjeants at mace, are appointed by the corporation: the mayor and jurats hold a court of quarter sessions, with power to try for all offences, except treason, and choose a high constable and six borsholders for the town and hundred. The mayor, and two or more jurats, also hold a court of record, every fifteen days, for the recovery of debts to any amount, and for trying all pleas, its jurisdiction extending over the hundred, which includes only this parish and part of Ebony.

The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Canterbury, rated in the king's books at £33. 12. 11., and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Canterbury. The church, which is dedicated to St. Mildred, is spacious and handsome, with a lofty tower at the west end, to which a beacon was formerly attached. There are places of worship for Baptists, Wesleyan Methodists, and Unitarians. At Smallhythe, in this parish, is a chapel, erected about 1509, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, and licensed by faculty from Archbishop Warham: it is repaired and maintained out of lands in this parish and that of Wittersham, vested in feoffees, and the chaplain is appointed by the inhabitants. It appears that, at the time of the erection of this chapel, the sea came up to Smallhythe, as power was then given to inter in the chapeyard the bodies of shipwrecked persons cast on shore. The free grammar school founded, at an early period, by an ancestor of the late Sir Peter Hayman, was endowed, in 1521, by William Marshall, with a rent-charge of £10, and, in 1702, by John Mantel, with the sum of £200, which was laid out in land: the present income is £58. 15. per annum, which sum is appropriated to the support of the National school, six scholars being always kept distinct, and taught the Latin tongue, on the original foundation: one hundred boys and eighty girls are instructed; and the vicar and the members of the corporation are governors; the remainder of the expense is defrayed by voluntary contributions. In 1660, Dame Jane Maynard bequeathed land for apprenticing children and the maintenance of poor widows. Hoole, the translator of Tasso, resided at this place. Tenterden confers the title of baron on the family of Abbot; Sir Charles Abbot, Lord Chief Justice of the Court of King's Bench, having been raised to the peerage by that title, on the 30th of April, 1827.

TENTERGATE, a joint township with Scriven, in that part of the parish of KNARESBOROUGH which is in the lower division of the wapentake of CLARO, West riding of the county of YORK. The population is returned with Scriven.

TERLING, a parish in the hundred of WITHAM, county of ESSEX, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (W.) from Witham, containing 781 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Colchester, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £10, and in the patronage of J. Strutt, Esq. The church is dedicated to All Saints. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. Benjamin Jocelyne, in 1775, bequeathed an annuity of £10 for teaching ten poor boys. In 1269, the Bishop of Norwich had a palace and park here, which was subsequently the residence of Henry VIII. Its chapel possessed the privilege of sanctuary, and as such afforded shelter to the celebrated Hubert de Burgh, when he had fallen under the indignation of Henry III. On making a new road through the grounds, in 1824, about three hundred gold and silver coins were turned up, and, upon further search, a jar was discovered, containing two large rings, and thirty small pieces of gold, with some silver coins of twelve Roman emperors, as bright as if just taken from the mint, and in regular succession, beginning with Constantius, and ending with Honorius. Terling is at no great distance from the ancient Roman stations at Colchester, Maldon, and Pleshy.

TERRINGTON, a parish partly within the liberty of ST. PETER of YORK, East riding, but chiefly in the wapentake of BULMER, North riding, of the county of YORK, comprising the townships of Ganthorpe, and Terrington with Wigginthorpe, and containing 723 inhabitants, of which number, 617 are in the township of Terrington with Wigginthorpe, 8 miles (W. by S.) from New Malton. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Cleveland, and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £23. 18. 6½., and in the patronage of the Rev. Dr. Waddilove. The church is dedicated to All Saints. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

TERRINGTON (ST. CLEMENT'S), a parish in the Marshland division of the hundred of FREEBRIDGE, county of NORFOLK, 5½ miles (W. by N.) from Lynn-Regis, containing 1408 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, with that of Terrington St. John's, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Norwich, rated jointly in the king's books at £23. 6. 8., and in the patronage of the Crown: the rectory is annexed to the Margaret Professorship in the University of Cambridge. The church is a handsome cruciform structure, in the later style of English architecture, having on the battlements of the south aisle many shields with different armorial bearings. Here was also a chapel, dedicated to St. James. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. Though not noticed in Domesday-book, Terrington was an extensive place, and had considerable salt-works in the time of the Saxons, as appears from a grant of Godric, brother to Ednoth, abbot of Ramsey, about 970.

TERRINGTON (ST. JOHN'S), a parish in the Marshland division of the hundred of FREEBRIDGE, county of NORFOLK, 6 miles (W. S. W.) from Lynn-Regis, containing 583 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, united to that of Terrington St. Clement's, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Norwich: the rectory is, with that of St. Clement's, annexed to the Margaret Professorship in the University of Cambridge. The church is a regular pile of building, having, at its south-west angle, a square tower crowned with pinnacles.

TESTERTON, a parish in the hundred of GALLOW, county of NORFOLK, 2¾ miles (S. E. by S.) from Fakenham, containing 31 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £5, and in the patronage of P. M. Case, Esq. The church, which was dedicated to St. Remigius, has been destroyed.

TESTON, a parish in the hundred of TWYFORD, lathe of AYLESFORD, county of KENT, 4 miles (W. by S.) from Maidstone, containing 259 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Rochester, rated in the king's books at £6. 10. Mrs. Bouverie was patroness in 1820. The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is a remarkably small structure. It stands on the banks of the Medway, over which there is a fine bridge of seven arches. A court leet is occasionally held here.

TETBURY, a market town and parish in the hundred of LONGTREE, county of GLOUCESTER, 20 miles (S. by E.) from Gloucester, and 99 (W. by N.) from London, containing 2734 inhabitants. The town is pleasantly situated on an eminence at the southern verge of the county, bordering on Wiltshire, and near the source of the river Avon, over which is a long bridge or causeway, leading into the main road to Malmesbury: it consists principally of a long street, crossed at right angles by two shorter ones, with a spacious market-house near one of the intersections. An act was obtained, in 1817, for paving and lighting the town, the expense of which was defrayed out of the funds in the hands of trustees appointed in 1814, under the act "for enclosing certain common fields and waste grounds within the parish:" £1000 was also appropriated from the same fund for the repair of the market house. The poor are chiefly employed by wool staplers, and the market was formerly noted for the sale of woollen yarn, but the introduction of machinery has put an end to the trade. The market is on Wednesday; and fairs are held on Ash-Wednesday, the Wednesday before and after the 5th of April, and July 22nd for corn, cheese, horses, and cattle. A bailiff and a constable are elected annually at the court leet of the feoffees of the manor. Petty sessions for the town and hundred are held here and at Horsley and Rodborough alternately.

The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Gloucester, rated in the king's books at £36. 13. 4., and in the patronage of the Trustees of Tetbury charity. The church, which is dedicated to St. Mary, was rebuilt in 1781, in the early style of English architecture, at an expense of £6000, exclusively of the old tower, which is surmounted by a fine modern spire, the ancient church having been undermined by a flood, in 1770: the nave is separated from the aisles by ornamented clustered pillars, which literally support nothing, as the principle on which the roof of the theatre at Oxford was constructed has been applied to this building. There are places of worship for Baptists and Independents. A grammar school was endowed by Sir William Romney, a native of this town, and alderman and sheriff of London, in the reign of James I., who bequeathed to certain trustees a lease for years of the weights of wool and yarn, tolls, and other profits within the town, with the proceeds of which lands have since been purchased, and out of the rents £40 per annum was paid to the master; but since the year 1800 no payments have been made, and the affairs of the institution are under investigation: there is a small bequest for books, which is withheld until the school shall be re-established. Fifteen boys are educated for a rent-charge of £30, devised for that purpose by Elizabeth Hodges, in 1723. The Sunday school, open to all the poor children of the parish, is supported by bequests of £100 each from Ann Wright, in 1788, Sarah Paul, in 1795, and Ann Gastrell, in 1797. An almshouse for eight poor persons was founded and endowed by the above-mentioned Sir W. Romney. In Maudlin meadow, which belongs to Magdalene College, Oxford, and is situated north of the town, is a petrifying spring, impregnated with calcareous earth. Races were formerly held annually on a common, about a mile eastward from the town, but they have been discontinued, and the lands enclosed. A castle is said to have been built here, long before the invasion of Britain by the Romans; and ancient British coins and fragments of weapons have been found within the area of a camp in the vicinity, of which all traces are now obliterated. Roman coins of the Lower Empire have also been discovered.

TETCHWORTH, a hamlet in the parish of LUDGERSHALL, hundred of ASHENDON, county of BUCKINGHAM, 10 miles (W. N. W.) from Aylesbury. The population is returned with the parish.

TETCOTT, a parish in the hundred of BLACK TORRINGTON, county of DEVON, 5 miles (S. by W.) from Holsworthy, containing 256 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Totness, and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £13. 16. 8., and in the patronage of Sir W. Molesworth, Bart. The church is dedicated to the Holy Cross.

TETFORD, a parish in the hundred of HILL, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 6 miles (N. E. by E.) from Horncastle, containing 531 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £5. 0. 10. Miss Harrison was patroness in 1820. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, has lately received an addition of one hundred and ten sittings, of which sixty are free, the Incorporated Society for the enlargement of churches and chapels having granted £40 towards defraying the expense. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

TETNEY, a parish in the wapentake of BRADLEY-HAVERSTOE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 10½ miles (N.) from Louth, containing 622 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £7. 18. 4., endowed with £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Bishop of Lincoln. The church is dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

TETSWORTH, a parish in the hundred of THAME, county of OXFORD, 11½ miles (E. S. E.) from Oxford, containing 495 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the vicarage of Thame, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Dean and Chapter of Lincoln. The church is dedicated to St. Giles. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

TETTENHALL-REGIS, a parish comprising the hamlets of Oaken, Pirton with Trescott, and Tettenhall-Clericum, in the northern, and the township of Pendeford, and the hamlet of Wrottesley, in the southern, division of the hundred of SEISDON, county of STAFFORD, 1¼ mile (N. W.) from Wolverhampton, and containing 2478 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the jurisdiction of the royal peculiar court of Tettenhall, endowed with £210 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of Sir J. Wrottesley, Bart. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is partly in the early, decorated, and later styles of English architecture. It was made collegiate before the Conquest for a dean and four prebendaries, and has lately received an addition of three hundred and seventy-two sittings, of which two hundred are free, the Incorporated Society for the enlargement of churches and chapels having granted £300 towards defraying the expense. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. The Worcestershire and Staffordshire canal passes through the parish, in which there is a considerable manufacture of locks.

TETTON, a township in the parish of WARMINGTON, hundred of NORTHWICH, county palatine of CHESTER, 3 miles (W. N. W.) from Sandbach, containing 170 inhabitants. The Grand Trunk canal passes the parish.

TETWORTH, a joint parish with Everton, in the hundred of TOSLAND, county of HUNTINGDON, 3 miles (N. by W.) from Potton, containing, exclusively of Everton, 180 inhabitants. See EVERTON.

TEVERSALL, a parish in the northern division of the hundred of Broxtow, county of NOTTINGHAM, 5¼ miles (W. by N.) from Mansfield, containing 414 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Nottingham, and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £9. 19. 2., and in the patronage of Miss Henrietta Howard Molyneux. The church, dedicated to St. Catherine, is principally in the Norman style, and contains several old monuments of the Grenhalghe, Molyneux, and Babington families. South of it are the extensive ruins of the ancient mansion-house built by Gilbert Grenhalghe, in the reign of Henry VII., and the remains of a hanging garden, on a very magnificent scale. Coal and limestone abound in the parish, but neither are now worked.

TEVERSHAM, a parish in the hundred of FLENDISH, county of CAMBRIDGE, 3½ miles (E.) from Cambridge, containing 155 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the Bishop of Ely, rated in the king's books at £19. 16. 0½. The church is dedicated to All Saints.

TEW (GREAT), a parish in the hundred of WOORTON, county of OXFORD, 3¼ miles (N. N. E.) from Neat-Enstone, containing, with the chapelry of Little Tew, 760 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, rated in the king's books at £6. 13. 4., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of G. F. Stratton, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, has lately received an addition of three hundred and nine sittings, of which two hundred and fifty-seven are free, the Incorporated Society for the enlargement of churches and chapels having granted £200 towards defraying the expense. Thomas Edwards Freeman, in 1781, gave an annuity of £12 for the education of ten children of each sex.

TEW (LITTLE), a chapelry in the parish of GREAT TEW, hundred of WOORTON, county of OXFORD, 2½ miles (N. by E.) from Neat-Enstone, containing 229 inhabitants.

TEWIN, a parish in the hundred and county of HERTFORD, 3 miles (E. S. E.) from Welwyn, containing 477 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Huntingdon, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £14, and in the patronage of the Master and Fellows of Jesus' College, Cambridge. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, has a square embattled tower, with a low spire. The Rev. Henry Yarborough, in 1783, bequeathed the rents and profits of four tenements, to be applied for teaching ten children, and increasing the parish clerk's income; and Lady Cathcart, in the same year, gave an annuity of £5 in further support of the school. There are sundry other bequests for the relief of the poor, and apprenticing children.

Seal and Arms.

TEWKESBURY, a borough, market town, and parish, having separate jurisdiction; locally in the lower division of the hundred of Tewkesbury, county of GLOUCESTER, 10 miles (N. N. E.) from Gloucester, and 103 (W. N. W.) from London, containing, according to the last census, 4962 inhabitants, which number has since considerably increased. This place, which is of great antiquity, is supposed to have derived its name from Theot, a Saxon recluse, who, during the latter period of the Octarchy, founded a hermitage here, where he lived in solitude and devotion, and from whom it was called Theotisberg, from which its present appellation is deduced. In 715, a monastery was founded here by the two brothers Odo and Dodo, Dukes of Mercia, and dedicated to the Blessed Virgin Mary, which, after having experienced great injury during the Danish wars, became a cell to the abbey of Cranborne in Dorsetshire. After the Conquest, Robert Fitz-Haimon, who attended William in his expedition to Britain, enlarged the buildings of this monastery, and so amply augmented its possessions, that the monks of Cranborne removed, in 1101, to Tewkesbury, which they made the principal seat of their establishment: it subsequently was raised into an abbey of Benedictine monks, and continued to flourish till the dissolution, at which time its revenue was estimated at £1598. 1. 3. The last decisive battle between the Yorkists and the Lancastrians took place within half a mile of this town, in 1471; on this memorable occasion, many of the principal nobility were slain on both sides, and not less than three thousand of the Lancastrian troops. Queen Margaret, who headed her own forces, was intrenched on the summit of an eminence, called the Home Ground, at the distance of a mile from the town, on the east side of the road to Gloucester; and the troops of Edward IV., who advanced against his opponents by way of Tredington, occupied the sloping ground to the south, called the Red Piece: the victory was decisive in favour of the Yorkists, the defeat of the Lancastrians having been ascribed to the treacherous inactivity of Lord Wenlock, one of their generals, whom the chief commander, the Duke of Somerset, struck dead on the field with his battle axe. After their defeat, the Duke of Somerset, with about twenty other distinguished persons, took shelter in the church, from which they were dragged with violence, and immediately beheaded. At the commencement of the great civil war in the reign of Charles I., Tewkesbury was occupied by the parliamentarians, who were afterwards driven out, and the town was taken by the royalists, by whom it was again lost and retaken, till, in 1644, it was surprised and captured by Col. Massie, governor of Gloucester, for the parliamentarians, in whose possession it remained till the conclusion of the war.

The town is pleasantly situated in the northern part of the luxuriant vale of Gloucester, and on the eastern bank of the river Avon, near its confluence with the Severn: it is nearly surrounded by the small rivers

VOL. IV.

Carron, over which is a new stone bridge, and Swilgate, which is crossed by two, both these streams falling into the Avon. It is handsome and well built, consisting of three principal streets, well paved, and is amply supplied with water: the houses are in general of brick, but occasionally interspersed with specimens of the ancient timber and brick buildings. Considerable improvements have taken place, under the provisions of an act obtained in 1786, among which may be noticed the ranges of building, erected in 1810, to the east of the High-street, on a tract of land called Oldbury, and the recent formation of a new street. An elegant cast-iron bridge has been lately constructed over the river Severn, near the hamlet of Mythe, within half a mile of the town, at an expense of £36,000, subscribed on shares of £100 each, opening a direct communication between London and Hereford: it consists of one noble arch, one hundred and seventy-two feet in span, with a light iron balustrade, and was opened to the public in 1826. Near the division of the Worcester and Pershore roads is an ancient bridge of several arches over the Avon, from which a level causeway has been raised, extending to the iron bridge. A subscription library, with a news-room, was established in 1828, and is well supported: it contains at present more than one thousand volumes. A small theatre has been recently fitted up, which is occasionally opened by the Cheltenham company. The races, established in 1825, take place annually on the Ham, a large meadow near the town; and assemblies are held at the town hall.

About the beginning of the fifteenth century this place seems to have carried on a considerable trade upon the Severn; and a petition was forwarded to the House of Peers, in the 8th of Henry VI., stating that the inhabitants had been accustomed "to ship all manner of merchandise down the Severn to Bristol," and complaining of the disorderly conduct of the people of the forest of Dean, who are reported "to have come with great riot and strength, in manner of war, as enemies of a strange country, to stop and plunder their ships as they passed by the coasts near the forest; and that the marauders sometimes not only despoiled them of their merchandise, but destroyed their vessels, and even cast overboard their crews, and drowned them." For the redress of these grievances an act was passed in the same year, and, in 1580, Queen Elizabeth made Tewkesbury an independent port, for the loading and discharging of ships with merchandise to and from the parts beyond the seas, which grant was afterwards revoked, on a petition from the inhabitants of Bristol. Tewkesbury formerly enjoyed a considerable trade in woollen cloth, and was celebrated for the manufacture of mustard of superior quality: the principal branch of trade at present is the stocking frame-work knitting, which was introduced about the commencement of the eighteenth century, and in which from seven to eight hundred frames are at work, employing about one thousand five hundred persons. The manufacture of cotton-thread lace, was established at Oldbury in 1825, and is in a flourishing state; a considerable trade is carried on in malt, and some in leather, and there is a large manufactory for nails: an extensive distillery and a rectifying establishment were opened in 1770; the former has been abandoned, but the latter is still conducted on an advantageous scale. A very considerable carrying trade centres here, in connexion with the Avon and the Severn, goods being conveyed by land and water to all parts of the kingdom: on the bank of the Avon are extensive corn-mills, formerly belonging to the abbey. The market days are Wednesday and Saturday; the former for corn, sheep, and pigs; the latter for poultry and provisions. The fairs are on the second Monday in March, the second Wednesday in April, May 14th, the first Wednesday after September 4th, and October 10th, for cattle, leather, and pedlary; fairs were also held in June and December, but they have been recently discontinued: statute fairs are held on the Wednesday before, and the Wednesday after, Old Michaelmas-day, and there are great cattle markets on the second Wednesday in June, August, and December. The market-house, erected by a company, to whom the corporation have mortgaged the tolls for ninety-nine years, is a handsome building, with Doric columns and pilasters, supporting a pediment in front.

Tewkesbury, though a borough by prescription, was first incorporated by Elizabeth, in 1574; whose charter was confirmed by James I., in the 3rd year of his reign, and when that monarch sold the manor to the corporation, in 1609, he granted a new charter, with extended privileges; which being lost, or destroyed, during the parliamentary war, an exemplification of it was obtained under the great seal in the reign of Charles II.: this was surrendered, in 1685, to James II., who, in the following year, incorporated the inhabitants, under the title of "Mayor, Aldermen, and Common Council-men;" but the functions of the municipal body having ceased in 1692, the town remained without a corporation till 1698, when William III. granted the present charter. The government, under this last charter, is vested in two bailiffs, a high steward, recorder, twenty-four principal burgesses, or common council-men, and twenty-four assistants, with a town clerk, who is also clerk of the peace, a coroner, chamberlain, serjeants at mace, and subordinate officers. The bailiffs, who are elected annually, and the high steward and recorder, who hold their offices for life, are appointed from among the principal burgesses, the latter, as vacancies occur, being chosen from the assistants. The bailiffs, with four principal burgesses, appointed annually on the second Thursday in October, are justices of the peace within the borough. There were formerly several trading companies incorporated under the charter, but the only one now in existence is that of Cordwainers. The freedom of the borough is acquired by birth, servitude to a resident freeman, and by gift of the corporation. The eldest son of a freeman, born after his father's admission, is entitled to the freedom on his father's decease, but if the son die first, the right does not devolve upon any other. The bailiffs and justices hold quarterly courts of session, for all offences within the borough not capital; the bailiffs and recorder hold a court of record, every Friday, for the recovery of debts not exceeding £50; and the corporation, as lords of the manor, hold a court leet, the jurisdiction of which extends over all the parishes in the hundred of Tewkesbury. The town hall, in which the courts are held, and the public business of the corporation is transacted, is a handsome building, erected in 1788, by Sir William Codrington, Bart., at an expense of £1200; the lower part is appropriated to the use of the courts, and the upper part contains a hall for the meetings of the corporation, and an assembly-room. The common gaol, house of correction, and penitentiary for the borough, was built in 1816, at the northern extremity of the High-street, at an expense of £3419. 11. 7½., raised by a rate on the inhabitants, and was subsequently considerably enlarged and improved: it contains four wards for the classification of prisoners, and is under the superintendence of the bailiffs and justices of the peace for the borough, and of two visiting magistrates. The county magistrates hold here a petty session for the division every alternate Wednesday. The borough first received the elective franchise in the 7th of James I., since which time it has continued to return two members to parliament: the right of election is vested in the freemen generally, and in all proprietors of freehold houses within the ancient limits of the borough, of whom the number is about six hundred: the bailiffs are the returning officers.

The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Gloucester, endowed with £400 private benefaction, and £600 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Crown. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, situated at the south-western part of the town, and formerly the collegiate church of the ancient monastery, is a spacious and venerable cruciform structure, principally in the Norman style of architecture, with a noble and richly-ornamented tower rising from the centre, and supported on four massive lofty piers with circular arches. The nave and choir, which latter was repaired in 1796, at an expense of £2000, are separated from the aisles by a noble range of cylindrical columns and circular arches, highly enriched with mouldings and other ornaments peculiar to the Norman style; the former is lighted by a range of clerestory windows in the later style, inserted in the Norman arches of the triforium, and the latter by an elegant range of windows in the decorated style, with rich tracery, and embellished with considerable portions of ancient stained glass; the windows of the aisles and transepts are of the decorated and the later styles, and the large west window of the later style is inserted in a very lofty Norman arch of great depth, with shafts and mouldings richly ornamented; the roof is finely groined, and embellished, at the intersections of the ribs, with figures of angels playing on musical instruments: the east end of the choir is hexagonal, and contains several beautiful chantry chapels, in the decorated style of English architecture: the Lady chapel and the cloisters have been destroyed, but the arches which led to them may be traced on the outside of the building, and on the north side are the remains of the chapter-house, now used for a school. The church contains a fine series of monuments, from the earliest period of the decorated, to the latest period of the later, style of English architecture, among which are several to the early patrons of the abbey, and to those who fell in the battle of Tewkesbury. In a light and elegant chapel on the north side of the choir, erected by Abbot Parker, in 1397, is the tomb of Robert Fitz-Haimon, the founder, who was killed at Falaise in Normandy, in 1107, and whose remains, after having been interred in the chapter-house, were removed into the church, in 1241: an altar-tomb, enclosed with arches surmounted by an embattled cornice, on which are the figures of a knight and his lady, is supposed to have been erected for Hugh le Despenser and his wife Elizabeth, daughter of William Montacute, Earl of Salisbury. Near this is a beautiful sepulchral chapel, built by Isabel, Countess of Warwick, for her first husband, Richard Beauchamp, Earl of Worcester, who was killed at the siege of Meaux, in 1421: it is profusely ornamented, and the roof, which is richly embellished with tracery, was supported on six pillars of blue marble, of which only two are remaining. Among the modern monuments is one, by Flaxman, to Anne, wife of Sir S. Clarke, Bart., of finely executed sculpture. Five hundred additional sittings, of which three hundred are free, have lately been made to the church, at an expense of £200, by grant of the Incorporated Society for the enlargement of churches and chapels. There are places of worship for Baptists, the Society of Friends, Independents, and Wesleyan Methodists, all which have Sunday schools annexed.

The free grammar school was founded in 1576, and endowed with £20 per annum, by Mr. Ferrers, payable out of the manor of Skillingthorpe, in the county of Lincoln, also with lands purchased with money left by Sir Dudley Digges, and with some chief rents; it is under the superintendence of the bailiffs, justices, chamberlain, and town clerk of the corporation, by whom the master is appointed: the room appropriated to it is supposed to have been the chapter-house of the abbey. The Blue-coat school is endowed with one-twelfth part of the rents of a farm in Kent, devised for charitable uses by Lady Capel, in 1721, and with £2. 10. per annum given by Mr. Thomas Merret, in 1724, being further supported by subscription: forty boys are clothed and instructed in it. The National school, under the superintendence of the same master, was established in 1813, and a building for its use, and also for that of the Blue-coat school, was erected adjoining the churchyard, in 1817, the two establishments having been incorporated, at an expense of £1345. 8. 3¼. A Lancasterian school was established in 1813, for which a building had been previously erected, at the cost of more than £600, raised by contribution; the ground was given by N. Hartland, a member of the Society of Friends: these schools are supported by subscription. In the churchyard are some unendowed almshouses for ten poor widows. A dispensary, established in 1815; a lying-in charity, in 1805; and a society for the distribution of blankets among the poor, in 1817, are supported by subscription; and there are various charitable bequests for distribution among the poor. Near the entrance into the town from Gloucester is the house of industry, a large brick building well adapted for the purpose. Of the monastic buildings, with the exception of the church, there are few remains: the principal is the gateway of the ancient monastery, which appears to have been erected in the fifteenth century; it is surmounted with an embattled parapet rising above the cornice, from which are projecting figures, and below it is a canopied niche between two square-headed windows. Roman coins have been frequently dug up in the vicinity, and, in 1828, several were found near the abbey church. At Walton, near the town, is a mineral spring, the water of which resembles that at Cheltenham. The hamlet of Mythe, remarkable for the beauty of its situation, is on the north-west side of the town, near the confluence of the Severn and the Avon. On the south-west side is a tumulus, from which the descent to the Severn is precipitous and abrupt. George III. visited this spot in 1788, since which time it has obtained the name of Royal Hill: in the immediate vicinity are some handsome seats. Southwick, another hamlet, situated, as its name implies, to the south of the town, is mentioned in the Norman survey, under the name Sudwick, as containing three hides of land. Alan of Tewkesbury, a monk of the abbey, the friend and biographer of Thomas à Becket; and Estcourt, the celebrated dramatist, who was contemporary with Steele and Addison, were natives of this town. Tewkesbury gave the title of baron to George I., previously to his accession to the throne, which at present is extinct.

TEY (GREAT), a parish in the Witham division of the hundred of LEXDEN, county of ESSEX, 4 miles (N.E. by E.) from Great Coggeshall, containing 625 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Colchester, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £7, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Rector. The rectory is a sinecure, rated at £18, and in the patronage of G. B. Tyndale, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. Barnabas, exhibits in the interior some columns of the Tuscan order, and has a large square tower rising from the centre.

TEY (LITTLE), a parish in the Witham division of the hundred of LEXDEN, county of ESSEX, 2½ miles (E. by N.) from Great Coggeshall, containing 49 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Colchester, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £4, and in the patronage of the Bishop of London. The church is dedicated to St. James.

TEY (MARKS), a parish in the Witham division of the hundred of LEXDEN, county of ESSEX, 4 miles (E. by N.) from Great Coggeshall, containing 351 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage not in charge, in the archdeaconry of Colchester, and diocese of London, and in the patronage of the Master and Fellows of Balliol College, Oxford. The church is dedicated to All Saints.

TEYNHAM, a parish in the hundred of TEYNHAM, lathe of SCRAY, county of KENT, 4¼ miles (E.) from Sittingbourne, containing 600 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Canterbury, rated in the king's books at £10, and in the patronage of the Archdeacon of Canterbury. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a handsome cruciform structure, principally in the early style of English architecture; it contains many brasses and other ancient memorials, and the windows exhibit fragments of old stained glass. An accession has lately been made to the parish by the embankment of the island of Fowley. Conyer creek, an inlet of the sea, is terminated by a quay, to which vessels of two hundred and fifty tons' burden come up and discharge their cargoes of coal, for the supply of the inhabitants, taking in the produce of the neighbourhood, for the London and other markets. The parish abounds with cherry orchards, and there are a few plantations of hops. Here are vestiges of a Roman encampment, and the ruins of a palace formerly belonging to the Archbishops of Canterbury.

Teynham confers the title of baron on the family of Curzon.

THAKEHAM, a parish in the hundred of EAST EASWRITH, rape of BRAMBER, county of SUSSEX, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.W.) from Steyning, containing, with the house of industry for six other parishes, 603 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chichester, rated in the king's books at £14. 9. $9\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Duke of Norfolk. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is partly in the early, and partly in the later, style of English architecture.

THAME, a market town and parish in the hundred of THAME, county of OXFORD, 13 miles (E.) from Oxford, and $44\frac{1}{2}$ (N.W. by W.) from London, comprising the townships of Old Thame, New Thame, and Priest-end (which constitute the town), and North Weston, Moreton, and Thame Park, containing 2479 inhabitants. This town is evidently of Roman origin, and is first mentioned, as a place of some importance, at the commencement of the tenth century, when Wulfhere, King of Mercia, granted a charter, dated "in the vill called Thames:" in the year 970, Osketyl, Archbishop of York, died here. It suffered much from the Danish invasions, particularly in 1010, during which period a fortification was erected. At the Conquest it belonged to the Bishop of Lincoln, and formed part of the extensive possessions of the succeeding prelates, in this county, till the reign of Edward VI.: among the many benefits conferred on the town by them was the diverting through it the road which passed on its side. In 1138, a monastery for Cistercian monks was founded at Thame Park, in honour of the Virgin Mary, the revenue of which at the dissolution was valued at £256. 13. 7.: the site is occupied by a modern mansion. About the reign of Edward IV., an hospital for destitute persons was founded and endowed with lands by Richard Quatermaine, a member of an ancient family of high repute. In the civil war of the sixteenth century, Thame was the centre of military operations, and experienced much consequent distress: during the late contest with France, it became one of the depôts for prisoners of war. The town is situated on a gentle declivity on the bank of the river Tame, whence its name is derived, and which empties itself into the Thames at Dorchester, in this county: it consists principally of one long and spacious street, with a commodious market-place in the centre, over which is the town hall, an indifferent building. A little lace is made, but the poor are chiefly employed in husbandry. The market, which is of great antiquity, is on Tuesday, and is well supplied with corn and cattle. Fairs are held on Easter-Tuesday, the Tuesday before Whit-Sunday, the first Tuesday in August, and a statute fair on the 11th of October.

The living, anciently a prebend in the Cathedral Church of Lincoln, valued in the king's books at £82. 12. $3\frac{1}{2}$., but impropriated and dissolved in 1547, is now a discharged vicarage, with the perpetual curacies of Sydenham, Tetsworth, and Towersey annexed, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Dean and Chapter of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £18, and in the patronage of Walter Long, Esq. The church, which is dedicated to St. Mary, is a large and handsome cruciform structure, in the early English style of architecture, with an embattled tower rising from the intersection, and supported on four massive pillars: the interior is divided by columns and pointed arches, and is entered by a stone porch with an elegant canopied niche, in which was formerly a statue of the tutelar saint: in the chancel is a tomb of white marble, with an effigy, to the memory of Lord Williams, who, in 1558, bequeathed estates for the foundation of a free grammar school, erected by his executors, in 1574, near the church, and the maintenance of a master and an usher: the Warden and Fellows of New College, Oxford, are trustees, and are empowered to nominate the master, who must be a clergyman and a graduate of one of the Universities, subject to the approbation of the Earl of Abingdon, as heir of the founder: the school is open to all boys of the parish. Dr. Fell; Justice Sir George Crook; Pocock, the learned orientalist; King, Bishop of Chichester; and Anthony à Wood, the antiquary, were educated in this school. A free school was established by bequests from the second Earl of Abingdon and others, the income amounting to £35 annually, in which twenty-five boys are instructed. There are several small annuities for apprenticing poor boys, and other benefactions, amounting to £100 per annum for the poor. An almshouse for five poor men and one woman was also founded and endowed by Lord Williams, upon the dissolved foundation of Richard Quatermaine. A little to the north of the church are the remains of the prebendal house, consisting of nearly three sides of a quadrangle: the refectory is still visible, among other rooms, and the chapel is also preserved; but, though evidently of considerable grandeur formerly, the whole now only serves as farm-buildings. George Hetheridge, an eminent Hebraist and Grecian in the reign of Elizabeth, and Regius Professor of Greek at Corpus Christi College, Oxford; and Lord Chief Justice Holt; were natives of this town.

THANINGTON, a parish in the hundred of WEST-GATE, lathe of ST. AUGUSTINE, county of KENT, $1\frac{3}{4}$ mile (S.W. by W.) from Canterbury, containing, with the hamlet of Milton, 374 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Canterbury, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury. The church is dedicated to St. Nicholas. The ancient road, called Stane-street, passes through the parish.

THARSTON, a parish in the hundred of DEPWADE, county of NORFOLK, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (N.W.) from St. Mary Stratton, containing 369 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £5. 1. 8., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Ely. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

THATCHAM, a parish partly in the hundred of FAIRCROSS, but chiefly in that of READING, county of BERKS, 3 miles (E.) from Newbury, containing, with the chapelries of Greenham and Midgham, 3677 inhabitants. This place, according to the Norman survey, appears to have been once a town of some importance; tradition has assigned to it the rank of a borough, but there is no proof that it ever sent representatives to parliament. A market, on Sunday, was confirmed, by charter of Henry II., to the abbot, or monks, of Reading, then possessors of Thatcham, which was subsequently changed to Thursday, in 1218, by Henry III.; but it has long been discontinued: the remains of the buttercross still exist. The town is pleasantly situated near the navigable river Kennet, on the Bath road: the inhabitants are well supplied with water. The Kennet and Avon canal passes a little to the southward. The chief source of employment is a manufactory for galloons and black ribands; and there is a paper-mill at Colthropt. A statute fair is held on the first Tuesday after October 12th.

The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Berks, and diocese of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £20, and in the patronage of William Hanbury, Esq. The church, which is dedicated to St. Luke, has some portions in the early, and some in the later, style of English architecture: at the south entrance is a fine Norman arch, and in the interior are, an altar-tomb to the memory of William Danvers, Chief Justice of the Court of Common Pleas; and a mural monument to Nicholas Fuller, Esq., barrister of Gray's Inn. There is a place of worship for Independents. A free school was founded, in 1707, by Lady Frances Winchcomb, who gave, by deed to trustees, a rent-charge of £53 per annum, for the education of thirty poor boys of the parishes of Thatcham, Bucklebury, and Little Shefford, and apprenticing some of them. It was opened about the year 1713, but continued only for a few years, in consequence of the attainder of Lord Bolingbroke, who was the owner of the estate charged, and also the only surviving trustee of the school, &c., the affairs of the charity subsequently came under the direction of the court of Chancery. In 1741, arrears were recovered sufficient to purchase £1406. 9. 7., old South Sea annuities, since which period the funds have continued to increase, the amount of stock being now upwards of £5000, exclusively of the rent-charge of £53, which is regularly received. The school was re-opened in June 1794, under the regulations of the decree of the court of Chancery, and forty boys are educated, upon the Madras system, and clothed, five or six of them being annually apprenticed, with a premium of £10: those who are not apprenticed receive a small gratuity, on leaving the school, to fit them for service. The school-house was originally a decayed chapel, purchased by Lady Winchcomb for the purpose. A National school, erected in 1826, in which fifty boys and ninety girls are instructed, and an infant school, are supported by subscription. There is an almshouse for nine widows, founded by means of bequests from the Rev. Mr. Herdsman and John Hunt, besides various minor charitable benefactions.

THAXTED, a parish in the hundred of DUNMOW, county of ESSEX, 19 miles (N. N. W.) from Chelmsford, containing 2045 inhabitants. This village, which is of considerable antiquity, is situated on the river Chelmar, on the main road from Chelmsford to Cambridge. Fairs are held on the Monday before Whit-Monday, and August 10th. The living is a vicarage, in the jurisdiction of the Commissary of Essex and Herts, concurrently with the Consistorial Court of the Bishop of London, rated in the king's books at £24, and in the patronage of Lord Viscount Maynard, whose ancestor gave £2000 in augmentation of the vicarage. The church, which is dedicated to St. Mary, is a spacious embattled structure, supported by buttresses terminating in canopied niches, in the later style of English architecture, and with a tower and crocketed spire one hundred and eighty-three feet high, the exact length of the church; the south porch is much enriched. There are places of worship for Baptists, the Society of Friends, and Independents. A free grammar school for the instruction of thirty boys was founded by Thomas Yardley. Some Roman coins, and a beautiful amphora, were discovered in this parish some years ago.

THEAKSTONE, a township in the parish of BURNESTON, wapentake of HALLIKELD, North riding of the county of YORK, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. E. by E.) from Be-dale, containing 87 inhabitants.

THEALE, a chapelry in the parish of TILEHURST, hundred of READING, county of BERKS, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (W. by S.) from Reading. The population is returned with the parish. The chapel is a beautiful structure, in the later style of English architecture, recently erected, at the expense of Mrs. Sophia Sheppard. The Rev. Thomas Sheppard, D.D., gave £20 a year for establishing a school on the Madras system.

THEARNE, a township in that part of the parish of ST. JOHN, BEVERLEY, which is within the liberties of the borough of BEVERLEY, East riding of the county of YORK, $3\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. E. by E.) from Beverley, containing 90 inhabitants.

THEBERTON, a parish in the hundred of BLYTHING, county of SUFFOLK, 4 miles (N. E. by E.) from Saxmundham, containing 557 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Suffolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £26. 13. 4., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. The parish is bounded on the east by the North Sea. There are the ruins of an ancient castle upon the coast.

THEDDINGWORTH, a parish partly in the hundred of ROTHWELL, county of NORTHAMPTON, but chiefly in the hundred of GARTREE, county of LEICESTER, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by S.) from Market-Harborough, containing, with the hamlet of Hothorpe, 264 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Leicester, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £8. 15. 7. John Cook, Esq. and others were patrons in 1810. The church is dedicated to All Saints. The Grand Union canal passes through the parish.

THEDDLETHORPE (ALL SAINTS'), a parish in the Marsh division of the hundred of CALCEWORTH, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $10\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. E.) from Alford, containing 211 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £7. 5. $2\frac{1}{2}$., endowed with £400 private benefaction, £800 royal bounty, and £600 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of Joseph Alcock, Esq.

THEDDLETHORPE (ST. HELEN'S), a parish in the Marsh division of the hundred of CALCEWORTH, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $9\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. by E.) from Alford, containing 239 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, with that of Mablethorpe St. Peter united, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £18. 10. $2\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of Lord Gwydyr. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists.

THELBRIDGE, a parish in the hundred of WITHERIDGE, county of DEVON, $7\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E. by S.)

from Chulmleigh, containing 168 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Barnstaple, and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £10. 6. 5½., and in the patronage of Mr. and Mrs. Daubney. The church is dedicated to St. David. Four children are educated for the interest of £40, bequeathed by Penelope Sydenham.

THELNETHAM, a parish in the hundred of BLACKBOURN, county of SUFFOLK, 3½ miles (N. W.) from Botesdale, containing 512 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Sudbury, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £16. 18. 4. Dover Colby, Esq. was patron in 1816. The church is dedicated to St. Nicholas.

THELVETON, a parish in the hundred of DISS, county of NORFOLK, 1¼ mile (N.) from Scole, containing 162 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £9, and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew.

THELWALL, a chapelry in the parish of RUNCORN, hundred of BUCKLOW, county palatine of CHESTER, 3½ miles (E. S. E.) from Warrington, containing 327 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chester, endowed with £400 private benefaction, £1000 royal bounty, and £300 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of T. A. Pickering, Esq. The chapel has lately received an addition of two hundred and forty sittings, of which one hundred and twenty are free, the Incorporated Society for the enlargement of churches and chapels having granted £120 towards defraying the expense. The Duke of Bridgewater's canal passes through the parish, and the river Mersey forms its northern boundary, on the south bank of which river are some gunpowder mills. Thelwall was formerly a considerable town, though now but an obscure village.

THEMELTHORPE, a parish in the hundred of EYNSFORD, county of NORFOLK, 1¾ mile (E. by S.) from Foulsham, containing 109 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, annexed to that of Bintree, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £4. 2. 8½. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew.

THENFORD, a parish in the hundred of KING'S SUTTON, county of NORTHAMPTON, 5½ miles (N. W. by W.) from Brackley, containing 234 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Northampton, and diocese of Peterborough, rated in the king's books at £10, and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. A court baron is occasionally held here. There is a mineral spring in the parish.

THERFIELD, a parish in the hundred of ODSEY, county of HERTFORD, 2½ miles (S. W. by S.) from Royston, containing 872 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Huntingdon, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £50, and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's, London. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

THETFORD, a chapelry in the parish of STRETHAM, southern division of the hundred of WITCHFORD, Isle of ELY, county of CAMBRIDGE, 2¼ miles (S. by W.) from Ely, containing 229 inhabitants. The chapel is dedicated to St. George.

THETFORD, a borough and market town, possessing exclusive jurisdiction, though locally in the hundred of Shropham, county of NORFOLK, but partly in the hundred of LACKFORD, county of SUFFOLK, 30 miles (S. W.) from Norwich, and 80 (N. N. E.) from London, containing, according to the last census, 2922 inhabitants, which number has since increased to 3500. This ancient place, called

Arms.

Theodford by the Saxons, evidently derives its name from the river Thet, which, having united its stream with the Lesser Ouse at this spot, the latter passes through the town, separates the two counties, and is navigable hence to Lynn. The majority of antiquaries consider it to be the site of the celebrated Sitomagus of the Romans, who possessed it in 435, and it is known to have been the metropolis of East Anglia; on which account, and from its proximity to the North Sea, it was frequently, during the Octarchy, desolated by the Danes, who, having retained possession of the town for fifty years, totally destroyed it by fire in the ninth century. In 1004, it sustained a similar calamity from their king, Sweyn, who had invaded East Anglia; and in 1010, it became for the third time the scene of plunder and conflagration by these marauders, into whose hands it again fell, after a signal victory which they had obtained over the Saxons. In the reign of Canute, Thetford began to recover from the effects of these repeated calamities, and, in that of Edward the Confessor, had nearly regained its former prosperity, containing not less than nine hundred and forty-seven burgesses, who enjoyed divers privileges. In the time of the Conqueror, the episcopal see of North Elmham was transferred hither, and hence to Norwich, by Herbert de Losinga, in the following reign; but Henry VIII. made it the seat of a bishop suffragan to Norwich, which it continued during his reign. From the time of Athelstan to that of John here was a mint, in which coins of Edmund and Canute were struck. The ancient extent and importance of this town may be gathered from the fact that, in the reign of Edward III., it comprised twenty-four principal streets, five market-places, twenty churches, six hospitals, eight monasteries, and other religious and charitable foundations, of all which there are comparatively but few remains. Thetford has been honoured with the presence and temporary residence of several British sovereigns, particularly Henry I., Henry II., and Elizabeth, who rebuilt the ancient mansion of the Earls of Warren, on its lapse to the crown, and occasionally resided in it, as did also James I., for the purpose of hunting; and it is still called the King's House.

The town, which has of late been much improved, comprises five principal streets, which are partly paved, and is connected with the few remaining houses on the Suffolk side by a handsome iron bridge over the Ouse, erected in 1829: the modern buildings are plain and neat, and the inhabitants are well supplied with water from wells and springs. Assemblies are occasionally held, a small theatre is open during the Lent assizes, and there is a subscription library. In addition to a very extensive paper-mill, there are, a large iron-foundry, an agricultural machine manufactory, three good breweries, and several malting establishments. The navigation of the river, in its course to Lynn, having been lately improved between this place and Brandon, a brisk business is carried on in corn, wool, coal, and other articles. The market is on Saturday; the market-house is a neat and commodious building, covered with cast-iron, with a portico and palisades in front. Fairs are held May 14th, August 2nd, and August 16th, for sheep; September 25th, for cattle; and there is a wool fair in July.

The charter of incorporation, granted by Elizabeth, in 1573, was surrendered to the crown in the 34th of Charles II., and a very imperfect one obtained in its stead, which, in 1692, was annulled, and the original charter restored, by a decree in Chancery: the municipal body consists of a mayor, recorder, ten aldermen, and twenty common councilmen, assisted by a town clerk, sword-bearer, serjeant at mace, and inferior officers. The mayor is clerk of the market, and, in the year after his mayoralty, acts as coroner; the mayor, coroner, and recorder, are justices of the peace, with exclusive jurisdiction, within the borough, and hold quarter sessions: there is also a court of requests for the recovery of debts to the amount of £50. The county assizes for the Norfolk circuit have been held here, in Lent, ever since the year 1234. The guildhall is a fine old building, erected at the expense of Sir Joseph Williamson, Knt., Secretary of State to Charles II., in which the assizes are held. The gaol is a plain edifice of flint and white brick, commodiously arranged, and capable of holding one hundred prisoners: on these buildings many thousand pounds have been expended by the inhabitants. This borough sends two members to parliament: the right of election is vested exclusively in the corporation; the mayor is the returning officer.

Thetford comprises the parishes of St. Cuthbert, St. Peter, and St. Mary the Less, all in the archdeaconry and diocese of Norwich, and in the patronage of the Duke of Norfolk. The living of St. Cuthbert's is a discharged rectory, with that of the Holy Trinity united, endowed with £200 royal bounty, and £1400 parliamentary grant: the church has a square embattled tower. The living of St. Peter's is a discharged rectory, with that of St. Nicholas' united, rated in the king's books at £5. 1. 5½., and endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty: the church is commonly called the black church, being constructed chiefly of flint; the tower and part of the body of the church were rebuilt in 1789. The living of the parish of St. Mary the Less is a perpetual curacy, rated in the king's books at £1. 13. 6½., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty: the church, which stands in the county of Suffolk, has a square tower. There were formerly many more parishes in this town, the churches of which have all been demolished. There are places of worship for the Society of Friends, Independents, Wesleyan Methodists, and Roman Catholics. A free grammar school, and an hospital for two poor men and two poor women, were founded, in the reign of James I., under the will of Sir Richard Fulmerston, who died in 1566, having bequeathed property for the erection of a free school, and other buildings, with adequate salaries for the master and usher, and remuneration to a clergyman for the performance of certain prescribed duties; it was therefore decreed, by act of parliament, that this should be a free grammar school and hospital for ever, and that the master, usher, and the four poor people, should be incorporated, under the title of "The Master and Fellows of the School and Hospital at Thetford." A National school, in which about one hundred and fifty children are educated, is supported by subscription. Almshouses for six poor men were erected, in 1680, at the expense of William Harbord, Esq., and endowed with £30 per annum for a limited term, which expired about twenty years since, after having been renewed; the inmates participate in the proceeds of a bequest of £30 per annum, left in 1679, by his father, Sir Charles Harbord, Knt., Surveyor-General to Charles I. A certain number of boys and girls, children of the inhabitants, are apprenticed from a fund of £2000, bequeathed by Sir J. Williamson: of this charity, the mayor and corporation appoint the trustees. In 1818, Mr. P. Sterne, of this place, bequeathed £1000 for the benefit of the poor: there are several minor charitable benefactions.

The relics of antiquity consist chiefly of fragments of the nunnery, founded in the reign of Canute, by Urius, the first abbot of Bury St. Edmund's; some of the walls, buttresses, and windows, with a fine arch and cell, are still visible, the conventual church having been converted into a barn, and a farm-house built with the other ruinous portions. Of the priory, or abbey, founded on the brink of the river, in 1104, by Roger Bigod, for Cluniac monks, which, at the dissolution, was valued at £418. 16. 3., the gateway, constructed with freestone and black flint, and parts of the church, alone remain. Of the monastery of St. Sepulchre, founded in 1109, by the Earl of Warren, and additionally endowed by Henry II., the church has been converted into a barn; and the site of St. Augustine's friary, founded in 1387, by John of Gaunt, for mendicants of that order, still bears the name of Friars' Close: of the rest, no certain traces can be distinguished. At the eastern extremity of the town are remains of an ancient Danish fortification, which consisted of a large keep and double rampart, erected on an artificial mount, called Castle Hill, of which the height is one hundred feet, and the circumference of the summit eighty-one feet, and of the base nine hundred and eighty-four; the remains of the ramparts are twenty feet high, and the surrounding fosse seventy feet wide: it is somewhat singular, that no trace of any steps, or path, by which military stores could be conveyed up the very steep ascent to the fortress, is visible. Among the various fossils found in the vicinity is a perfect nautilus, which has been deposited in the British Museum. A mineral spring, the properties of which are similar to those of Tonbridge, was discovered here, about eighty years ago, by Matthew Manning, Esq. M.D., and about that time much resorted to: it was afterwards shut up for many years, but in 1819 was re-opened, and the waters having been again analysed by the celebrated operative chemist, F. Accum, were found very effectual in strengthening the stomach and alimentary canal. A handsome pump-room was then erected, to which hot and cold baths are attached, the first stone having been laid by the Duke of Grafton: it is situated near the river side, and is approached by pleasant sheltered walks. Thomas Martin, F.A.S., and author of the "History of Thetford," was born here, in 1696, and educated at the free school, of which his father was master, and also rector of the parish of St. Mary. The notorious Thomas Paine, author of the "Age of Reason," "Rights of Man," &c., was also born at a house in White Hart-street, and educated at the school.

THICKLEY (EAST), a township in that part of the parish of ST. ANDREW AUCKLAND which is in the north-western division of DARLINGTON ward, county palatine of DURHAM, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. E.) from Bishop-Auckland, containing 11 inhabitants. The Stockton and Darlington railway passes in the vicinity.

THIMBLEBY, a parish in the soke of HORNCastle, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $1\frac{1}{4}$ mile (W. by N.) from Horncastle, containing 384 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £13.10.10., and in the patronage of John Hotchkin, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Margaret.

THIMBLEBY, a township in the parish of OSMOTHERLEY, wapentake of ALLERTONSHIRE, North riding of the county of YORK, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. N. E.) from North Allerton, containing 200 inhabitants, of whom many are employed in the manufacture of worsted. Four children are instructed for about £2 per annum, arising from the rent of certain land bequeathed by Elizabeth Bolton, in 1725.

THINGWELL, a township in the parish of WOODCHURCH, lower division of the hundred of WIRRAL, county palatine of CHESTER, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by W.) from Great Neston, containing 78 inhabitants.

THIRKLEBY, a township in the parish of KIRBYGRINDALYTH, wapentake of BUCKROSE, East riding of the county of YORK, 10 miles (E. by S.) from New Malton, containing 44 inhabitants.

THIRKLEBY, a parish in the wapentake of BIRDFORTH, North riding of the county of YORK, 4 miles (S. E. by E.) from Thirsk, containing 293 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Cleveland, and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £6, and in the patronage of the Archbishop of York. The church, dedicated to All Saints, was rebuilt, in 1722, by Sir Thomas Frankland, Bart.

THIRLBAY, a township in that part of the parish of FELIX-KIRK which is in the wapentake of BIRDFORTH, North riding of the county of YORK, 5 miles (E. N. E.) from Thirsk, containing 167 inhabitants.

THIRLWALL, a township in the parish of HALTWHISTLE, western division of TINDALE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, 4 miles (W. N. W.) from Haltwhistle, containing 293 inhabitants. The ancient mansion of Wardrew, situated on the eastern side of the river Irthing, has been handsomely fitted up, to accommodate visitors who resort to the adjacent spa of Gilsland. On the western bank of the Tippal bourn, which is here crossed by the great Roman wall, are the ruins of the once strong castle of Thirlwall, occupying the summit of a rocky precipice. The walls of this fortress were nine feet thick, vaulted within, and defended by an outer wall of great strength.

THIRN, a township in the parish of THORNTON-WATLASS, eastern division of the wapentake of HANG, North riding of the county of YORK, 4 miles (S. W. by W.) from Bedale, containing 126 inhabitants.

THIRNE, a parish in the western division of the hundred of FLEGG, county of NORFOLK, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by E.) from Acle, containing 133 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, annexed to that of Ashby and Oby, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £5.

THIRNTOLT, a township in the parish of AINDERBY-STEEPLE, eastern division of the wapentake of GILLING, North riding of the county of YORK, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by S.) from North Allerton, containing 165 inhabitants.

THIRSK, a parish partly within the liberty of ST. PETER of YORK, East riding, but chiefly in the wapentake of BIRDFORTH, North riding, of the county of YORK, comprising the borough and market town of Thirsk, and the chapelries of Carlton-Islebeck, or Miniot, Sand-Hutton, and Sowerby, and containing 3502 inhabitants, of which number, 2533 are in the borough of Thirsk, 23 miles (N. W. by N.) from York, and 223 (N. N. W.) from London. The conjectural derivation of the name of this place is from Tre Isk, two ancient British words, signifying a town and river, or brook. A strong and extensive castle was erected here, about 979, by the ancient family of Mowbray, on which Roger de Mowbray, in the time of Henry II., having become a confederate of the King of Scotland, erected his standard against his lawful sovereign: on the suppression of that revolt, this fortress, with many others, was entirely demolished, by order of the king. In the reign of Henry VII., during a popular commotion, Henry Percy, Earl of Northumberland, and lieutenant of this county, is said to have been put to death here, beneath a very ancient elm-tree, which formerly grew on Elm Green. The town is situated on the road from York to Edinburgh, nearly in the centre of the vale of Mowbray, a tract of country remarkable for the fertility of its soil, and the picturesque beauty and richness of its scenery: it consists of the Old and the New towns, which are separated by a small stream, called Cod-beck, over which are two substantial stone bridges. A neat gravel walk across the fields leads to the adjacent village of Sowerby; it commands a fine prospect of the surrounding country, terminated by the Hambleton hills, and is the favourite promenade of the inhabitants. At the south-western extremity of the town, the moat and rampart, together with some subterranean vaults, and the site of the court-yard of the castle, still exist. Within the precincts of this ancient fortress New Thirsk is situated, with its spacious and commodious market-place in the centre. The Old Town, which alone is included within the limits of the borough, is on the north-east side of the stream, and consists of a long range of cottages on each side of the turnpike road leading from York to Yarm and Stockton, and two squares surrounded by similar buildings, one called St. James' Green, where the cattle fairs are held, the other formerly comprising an ancient church, dedicated to St. James, of which there are no vestiges.

This place is called Elm Green, from the ancient elm that formerly grew there, beneath which the members of parliament for the borough were usually elected. A small quantity of coarse linen and sacking is manufactured. Coal, which is partly brought from the county of Durham, in small carts containing from eighteen to twenty-two bushels each, is sold at a very high price, although the supply has been somewhat increased by the extension of the Darlington railway to Croft Bridge, twenty-one miles distant. The market is on Monday, and is a large one for provisions, of which great quantities purchased here are carried for sale to Leeds and other places. Fairs are held on Shrove-Monday and April 4th and 5th, for cattle, sheep, leather, &c.; Easter-Monday and Whit-Monday, for woollen cloth, toys, &c.; and August 4th and 5th, October 28th and 29th, and the first Tuesday after December 11th, for cattle, sheep, and leather. The municipal regulations of the town are vested in a bailiff, chosen by the burghage-holders, and sworn in before the steward of the lord of the manor, who holds a court leet annually at Michaelmas, for that and other purposes. Old Thirsk is a borough by prescription, and first sent members to parliament in the 23rd of Edward I., but made no other return till the last parliament of Edward VI.: the elective franchise is vested in the burghage-holders, in number about fifty: the bailiff is the returning officer, and the influence of Sir Robert Frankland, Bart., is predominant.

The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Cleveland, and diocese of York, endowed with £1600 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of the Archbishop of York. The church, which is dedicated to St. Mary, and situated at the northern extremity of the New Town, is a spacious and handsome structure, in the later style of English architecture, with a lofty embattled tower at the west end, and is supposed to have been constructed from the ruins of the castle. There are places of worship for the Society of Friends, Independents, and Wesleyan Methodists. In 1769, Jane Day bequeathed £100 for the instruction of poor children. There is a school-house under the chancel of the church for instruction in English grammar, writing, and arithmetic. In the town is also a school of industry, for clothing and educating poor girls. A dispensary, supported by voluntary contributions, has recently been established.

THIRTLEBY, a township in that part of the parish of SWINE which is in the middle division of the wapentake of HOLDERNESS, East riding of the county of YORK, 6 miles (N. E.) from Kingston upon Hull, containing 61 inhabitants.

THISTLETON, a joint township with Greenhalgh, in the parish of KIRKHAM, hundred of AMOUNDERNESS, county palatine of LANCASTER, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. N. W.) from Kirkham. The population is returned with Greenhalgh.

THISTLETON, a parish in the hundred of ALSTOE, county of RUTLAND, 8 miles (N. N. E.) from Oakham, containing 181 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Northampton, and diocese of Peterborough, rated in the king's books at £3. 11. 0 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of G. Fludyer, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Nicholas. The Rev. Henry Foster, in 1692, bequeathed land, producing upwards of £10 per annum, in support of a school.

VOL. IV.

THIXENDALE, a township in the parish of WHAR-
RAM-PERCY, wapentake of BUCKROSE, East riding of the county of YORK, $8\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. S. E.) from New Malton, containing 184 inhabitants.

THOCKRINGTON, a parish in the north-eastern division of TINDALE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, comprising the townships of Little Bavington, Cary-Coats, Sweethope, and Thockrington, and containing 201 inhabitants, of which number, 48 are in the township of Thockrington, $11\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. by E.) from Hexham. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the Prebendary of Thockrington in the Cathedral Church of York, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £400 royal bounty.

THOLTHORP, a township in the parish of ALNE, partly within the liberty of St. PETER of YORK, East riding, and partly in the wapentake of BULMER, North riding, of the county of YORK, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W.) from Easingwold, containing 238 inhabitants.

THOMAS (ST.) the APOSTLE, a parish adjoining the borough of Launceston, in the northern division of the hundred of EAST, county of CORNWALL, containing, with the extra-parochial liberty of St. Thomas Street, 608 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Cornwall, and diocese of Exeter.

THOMAS (ST.) the APOSTLE, a parish in the hundred of WONFORD, county of DEVON, $\frac{1}{2}$ a mile (S. by W.) from Exeter, containing, with the chapelry of Oldridge, 3245 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £11. 2. 8 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of James Buller, Esq. The parish is bounded on the east by the river Exe, from which the Exeter canal passes to the southward. Twenty-four children are educated for an annuity of £10, bequeathed by William Gould, and four for £1. 10. a year, the gift of Robert Pate. A small priory of Black canons, a cell to that of Plympton, founded in the time of Henry III., in honour of the Blessed Virgin, stood partly in this parish, and partly in that of Alphington.

THOMAS (ST.) STREET, an extra-parochial liberty, locally in the parish of St. THOMAS the APOSTLE, northern division of the hundred of EAST, county of CORNWALL, containing 301 inhabitants.

The church is dedicated to St. Andrew.

THORESTHORPE, a hamlet in the parish of SALEBY, Wold division of the hundred of CALCEWORTH, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $\frac{3}{4}$ of a mile (N. N. E.) from Alford. The population is returned with the parish.

THORESWAY, a parish in the southern division of the wapentake of WALSHCROFT, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 5 miles (S. E.) from Caistor, containing 116 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £8. 10. 10., and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

THORGANBY, a parish in the southern division of the wapentake of WALSHCROFT, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $6\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E. S. E.) from Caistor, containing 102 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, held by sequestration, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £6. 0. 10., and endowed with £800 royal bounty. The church is dedicated to All Saints.

THORGANBY, a parish in the wapentake of OUZE and DERWENT, East riding of the county of YORK, $8\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E. by N.) from Selby, containing, with the township of West Cottingham, 381 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Cleveland, and diocese of York, endowed with £200 royal bounty, and £200 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of Mrs. Baldwin. The church is dedicated to St. Elen. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. Thomas Dunnington, in 1733, gave a school-house, with a residence for the master, and an annuity of £2 towards his support; which, with the annual sums of £2 by Robert Blythe, £2 by Thomas Bradford, and £10. 10. by Robert Jefferson, is paid for teaching twenty children.

THORINGTON, a parish in the hundred of BLYTHING, county of SUFFOLK, 4 miles (S. E.) from Halesworth, containing 158 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Suffolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £7, endowed with £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of H. B. Bence, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Peter.

THORLEY, a parish in the hundred of BRAUGHIN, county of HERTFORD, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. S. W.) from Bishop's Stortford, containing 386 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Middlesex, and diocese of London, rated in the king's books at £16. 13. 4., and in the patronage of the Bishop of London. The church, dedicated to St. James, has an embattled tower, surmounted by a lofty spire at the west end, and a Norman doorway on the south.

THORLEY, a parish in the liberty of WEST MEDINA, Isle of Wight division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 1 mile (E. S. E.) from Yarmouth, containing 132 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Winchester, rated in the king's books at £6. 18. 9. The Rev. Dr. Walker and Edward Roberts, Esq. were patrons in 1802. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, has a belfry over the porch, but no tower.

THORMANBY, a parish in the wapentake of BULMER, North riding of the county of YORK, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. W. by N.) from Easingwold, containing 118 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Cleveland, and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £8. 2. 11., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of Lord Viscount Downe. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

THORN (ST. MARGARET), a parish in the hundred of MILVERTON, county of SOMERSET, 3 miles (W.) from Wellington, containing 145 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry of Taunton, and diocese of Bath and Wells, endowed with £400 private benefaction, and £600 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Archdeacon of Taunton.

THORN-COFFIN, a parish in the hundred of TINTINHULL, county of SOMERSET, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by W.) from Yeovil, containing 97 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the archdeaconry of Wells, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £5. 5. 2½., endowed with £600 private benefaction, £200 royal bounty, and £600 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of J. Jolly, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew.

THORN-GUMBALD, a chapelry in the parish of PAUL, southern division of the wapentake of HOLDERNESSE, East riding of the county of YORK, 2 miles (S.E.) from Hedon, containing 259 inhabitants. There is a place of worship for Independents.

THORNABY, a chapelry in the parish of STAINTON, western division of the liberty of LANGBAURGH, North riding of the county of YORK, 1¾ mile (S.S.E.) from Stockton upon Tees, containing 197 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, united to the vicarage of Stainton, in the archdeaconry of Cleveland, and diocese of York.

THORNAGE, a parish in the hundred of HOLT, county of NORFOLK, 2¾ miles (S.W. by W.) from Holt, containing 264 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, with that of Brinton annexed, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £6. 18. 4., and in the patronage of Sir J. D. Astley, Bart.

THORNBOROUGH, a parish in the hundred and county of BUCKINGHAM, 3½ miles (E.) from Buckingham, containing 572 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Buckingham, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £8. 17., endowed with £200 royal bounty, and in the patronage of Sir H. Verney, Bart. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

THORNBOROUGH, a township in the parish of CORBRIDGE, eastern division of TINDALE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, 5¾ miles (E.) from Hexham, containing 74 inhabitants. Considerable quantities of limestone are quarried and burned in this township. A lead mine anciently wrought here was re-opened in 1801, but the speculation proving unsuccessful, it was soon after abandoned.

THORNBROUGH, a township in the parish of SOUTH KILVINGTON, wapentake of BIRDFORTH, North riding of the county of YORK, 2¾ miles (E.N.E.) from Thirsk, containing 27 inhabitants.

THORNBURY, a parish in the hundred of BLACK TORRINGTON, county of DEVON, 4½ miles (N.E. by E.) from Holsworthy, containing 517 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Totness, and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £11. 3. 11½., and in the patronage of William Morris Fry, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, has a Norman door, and contains a monument of an armed knight and his lady, with several monumental effigies of the Edgecumbe family.

THORNBURY, a market town and parish in the lower division of the hundred of THORNBURY, county of GLOUCESTER, 24 miles (S.W.) from Gloucester, and 124 (W. by N.) from London, containing, with the chapelries of Falfield, Oldbury upon Severn, and Range-worthy, and the tythings of Kington, and Moorton, 3760 inhabitants. This town, which is of considerable antiquity, is situated on the banks of a small rivulet, two miles westward of the Severn, in the vale of Berkeley, and consists of three principal streets. The chief object worthy of notice is the remains of an old castle at the end of the town, begun by Edward, Duke of Buckingham, in the year 1511, but left in an unfinished state; the outer wall is still in good preservation, and over the arched gateway, which formed the principal entrance, and is greatly admired, is an inscription in raised letters, recording the date of its erection: these ruins command a fine view of the river Severn, which flows on the western side of the parish, and the remote landscape of South Wales. Henry VIII. and Anne Boleyn were sumptuously entertained here, for ten days, in 1539. The clothing business formerly flourished, but has been long discontinued, and there is now no particular branch of trade. The market is on Saturday. Fairs are held on Easter-Monday, August 15th, and the Monday before December 21st, for cattle and pigs. The corporation, now merely nominal, consists of a mayor and twelve aldermen, with a serjeant at mace and two constables. A manorial court leet is held annually, and occasionally a court baron; also a manor court for the surrender of admission to copyholds. A court for the recovery of debts under 40s., for the hundred, is held once in three weeks, on Thursday; and a court of record, for pleas to any amount, for the honour of Gloucester, is also held every three weeks, on Tuesday.

The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Gloucester, rated in the king's books at £25. 15. 10., and in the patronage of the Dean and Canons of Christ Church, Oxford. The church, which is dedicated to St. Mary, is a spacious and handsome cruciform structure, in the later style of English architecture, with a lofty tower with open-worked battlements and eight pinnacles: the north and south doors are of much earlier date. There are places of worship for Baptists, the Society of Friends, Independents, and Wesleyan Methodists. A free grammar school was founded and endowed, in 1648, by William Edwards, its funds having been augmented by subsequent benefactors; the present income is £57. 3. 6., and twelve boys are instructed on the foundation. Another free school was founded, in 1729, by means of a bequest of £500 from John Atwells, and endowed with lands in 1789; the income is £70 per annum, and twenty-four boys and twelve girls are educated. Here are six almshouses for fifteen poor people, founded by Sir John Stafford, in the reign of James I.

THORNBURY, a parish in the hundred of BROXASH, county of HEREFORD, 4¼ miles (N.N.W.) from Bromyard, containing, with the township of Westwood, 183 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Hereford, rated in the king's books at £5. 6. 8., and in the patronage of Mrs. Pytts. Wall Hill camp, in this parish, has a triple intrenchment, almost perfect, and is supposed to be a work of the ancient Britons. At Netherwood, in this parish, Robert Devereux, Earl of Essex, who was beheaded in 1601, was born, in 1567.

THORNBURY, a parish in the hundred of GUILSBOROUGH, county of NORTHAMPTON, 10½ miles (N.N.W.) from Northampton, containing 176 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Northampton, and diocese of Peterborough, rated in the king's books at £13. The Rev. N. Cotton was patron in 1814. The church is dedicated to St. Helen.

THORNCOMBE, a parish (formerly a market town) forming a detached portion of the hundred of AXMINSTER, county of DEVON, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W. by W.) from Axminster, containing 1322 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Exeter, rated in the king's books at £15. 18. 9., and in the patronage of John Bragge, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. Here is a free school, founded by the Rev. Thomas Cooke, in 1734, with a small endowment for the instruction of eleven poor children. A fair is held on Easter-Tuesday. At Ford, in this parish, an abbey for Cistercian monks was founded, by Adelign, daughter of Baldwin de Brioniis, in 1140, the revenue of which was valued at £381. 10. 8 $\frac{1}{2}$.; the remains are considerable, consisting partly of the entrance tower, the old abbey walls, with various other parts being now used as a private mansion. The chapel has a groined roof in the early English style, and some arches of late Norman character: the hall and cloisters are in the later English. The possessor of this abbey holds a court at Holditch.

THORNCOTE, a hamlet in the parish of NORTHILL, hundred of WIXAMTREE, county of BEDFORD, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. W.) from Biggleswade, containing, with Brookend, Budnor, Hatch, and a part of Beeston, 241 inhabitants.

THORNDON (ALL SAINTS), a parish in the hundred of HARTISMERE, county of SUFFOLK, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. by W.) from Eye, containing 638 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Sudbury, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £24. 11. 10 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Rev. Thomas Howes.

THORNE, a market town and parish in the southern division of the wapentake of STRAFFORTH and TICKHILL, West riding of the county of YORK, 29 miles (S. by E.) from York, and 165 (N. by W.) from London, containing 3463 inhabitants. This place, in Leland's time only a small village with a castle near it, the foundations of which are still visible, has become a neat and flourishing town: it is situated on the verge of the moors, near Marshland, a fenny district supposed to have been once a forest, from the numerous fossil trees, &c., which have been discovered here; the streets are paved, and many of the houses well built. On the moor large quantities of peat are obtained, and conveyed, by means of a canal, to the town and other places, to be used as a substitute for coal. The inhabitants carry on a considerable trade in grain and other commodities with London; rope is made to some extent. At Hangman's hill, about a mile distant, is the quay, where all merchandise is shipped and landed. Vessels for the coasting trade are built here, and, being launched at spring tides, are conveyed down the river Don to Hull, to be rigged and otherwise completed. A canal from this river to the Trent passes westward of the town, by which its trade is greatly promoted. The market, originally granted by Richard Cromwell, and renewed by Charles II., is on Wednesday; and fairs, chiefly for horses, cattle, and pedlary, are held on the Monday and Tuesday next after June 11th and October 11th.

The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archdeaconry and diocese of York, endowed with £1200 parliamentary grant, and in the patronage of Lord Deerhurst. The church, which is dedicated to St. Nicholas, is principally in the later style of English architecture, with a square tower surmounted by pinnacles. There are places of worship for the Society of Friends, Independents, Primitive and Wesleyan Methodists, Unitarians, and the followers of Joanna Southcote. The free school was endowed with land by William Brook, in 1705, for the perpetual maintenance of a schoolmaster, and the instruction of ten of the poorest boys within the town: the annual income is £148. 19. 9. Another free school was founded and endowed with land, in 1706, by Henry Travis, the income of which is about £35. The Rev. Abraham de la Pryme, F.R.S., a celebrated antiquary and historian, was some time minister of Thorne, and died in 1704, at the early age of thirty-four. At Crowtrees, near this town, resided Sir Cornelius Vermuyden, who, having expended £400,000 in draining Hatfield Chase, and an additional sum in litigation, died in indigent circumstances.

THORNE-FALCON, a parish in the hundred of NORTH CURRY, county of SOMERSET, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by S.) from Taunton, containing 221 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Taunton, and diocese of Bath and Wells, rated in the king's books at £14. 10., and in the patronage of Richard Batters, Esq. The church is dedicated to the Holy Cross.

THORNER, a parish in the lower division of the wapentake of SKYRACK, West riding of the county of YORK, comprising the townships of Scarcroft, Shadwell, and Thorner, and containing 1010 inhabitants, of which number, 708 are in the township of Thorner, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. by W.) from Wetherby. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £8. 3. 4., endowed with £400 private benefaction, and £400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of the Crown. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. A school was erected by subscription in 1787, and endowed with twelve acres of land from the waste, the annual income arising from which, being £15. 10., is applied to the instruction of six children. There is a fine spring of water, called St. Sykes' Well, in the neighbourhood.

THORNES, a township in the parish of WAKEFIELD, lower division of the wapentake of AGBRIGG, West riding of the county of YORK, 1 mile (S. by W.) from Wakefield. The population is returned with the chapelry of Alverthorpe. A grant has recently been made towards erecting a chapel, by the commissioners appointed under the late act for promoting the building of additional churches, &c., of which the Vicar of Wakefield is to be the patron.

THORNEY, a market town and parish in the hundred of WISBEACH, Isle of ELY, county of CAMBRIDGE, 35 miles (N. W.) from Cambridge, and 86 (N.) from London, containing 1970 inhabitants. This place derived its original name of Ankeridge from a monastery for hermits, or anchorites, founded here, in 662, by Saxulphus, abbot of Peterborough, who became its first prior; the edifice having been destroyed by the Danes, the site lay waste until 972, when Ethelwold, Bishop of Winchester, founded upon it a Benedictine abbey, in honour of the Virgin, which became so opulent that, at the dissolution, its revenue was valued at £508. 12. 5.: of this abbey, which was a mitred one, the only remains are portions of the parish church, a gateway, and some fragments of the old walls. A Literary Society was established, in 1823, which possesses a good library. The market, granted in 1638, is on Thursday; and fairs are held on July 1st and September 21st, for horses and cattle, and on Whit-Monday is a pleasure fair. Upwards of three thousand sheep are sent annually from this district to the London market. The petty sessions are held here. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the Duke of Bedford. The church, which is dedicated to St. Botolph, and originally formed the nave of the conventual church, built about 1128, is partly in the Norman style of architecture, with portions in the later English: in the churchyard are several tombs of the French refugees, of whom a colony settled here about the middle of the sixth century, having been employed, by the Earl of Bedford, in draining the fens. A school-house was erected by a member of the illustrious house of Russell, and the present Duke of Bedford allows the master a salary of £20 per annum for the instruction of poor children: ten or twelve poor families also are supported in some almshouses by the munificence of his Grace.

THORNEY, a parish in the northern division of the wapentake of NEWARK, county of NOTTINGHAM, $8\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by N.) from Tuxford, containing, with the hamlets of Broadholme and Wiggesley, 264 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Nottingham, and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £4. 7. 6., endowed with £400 royal bounty, and in the patronage of Nevile George Nevile, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. Helen. The Fosse-Dyke canal borders on the parish.

THORNEY (WEST), a parish in the hundred of BOSHAM, rape of CHICHESTER, county of SUSSEX, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by S.) from Chichester, containing 111 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chichester, rated in the king's books at £10. 8. 4., and in the patronage of the Earl of Berkeley.

THORNEYBURN, a parish in the north-western division of TINDALE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, comprising the townships of West Taset and Thorneyburn, and containing 358 inhabitants, of which number, 189 are in the township of Thorneyburn, 5 miles (N. W. by W.) from Bellingham. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry of Northumberland, and diocese of Durham, rated in the king's books at £4. 5., and in the patronage of the Governors of Greenwich Hospital, who, in 1818, at the expense of £4000, erected the church, which is a neat structure, situated in a field formerly called Draper Croft. This is one of the five new parishes anciently forming part of the extensive parish of Simonburn: it is a wild and mountainous district, extending from the North Tyne river to Reedsdale, and is bounded on the east by the Taset bourn. Coal is obtained within the parish.

THORNFORD, a parish in the hundred of SHERBORNE, Sherborne division of the county of DORSET, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W.) from Sherborne, containing 329 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Dean of Salisbury, rated in the king's books at £6. 17. 3., and in the patronage of Mrs. Sampson. The church, dedicated to St. Mary Magdalene, was anciently a chapel dependent on Sherborne abbey.

THORNGRAFTON, a township in the parish of HALTWHISTLE, western division of TINDALE ward, county of NORTHUMBERLAND, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by N.) from Haltwhistle, containing 247 inhabitants. House Steads, in this township, was the site of the Roman station Borcovicus, adjacent to which passed the Roman wall. It stands on the brow of a rocky eminence, on the western declivity of which are several terraces, one above another. The area of this fort, on the north side, is level, but on the south it exhibits vast and confused heaps of ruins. In the neighbourhood are foundations of houses and traces of streets, squares, baths, &c., extending over several acres, and to the distance of two miles and a half; and on Chapel hill, a little to the south, are the remains of a temple of the Doric order, among which have been found altars, sepulchral inscriptions, and curiously carved figures in relief.

THORNHAM, a parish in the hundred of EYHORNE, lathe of AYLESFORD, county of KENT, 4 miles (N. E. by E.) from Maidstone, containing 523 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Canterbury, rated in the king's books at £8. 0. 10., and in the patronage of the Rev. John Hudson. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is principally in the decorated style of English architecture. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. Edward Godfrey gave a rent-charge of thirty shillings for the education of poor children. The ruins of Thurnham, or Godard's, castle, still exist on the brow of a hill, forming part of the great range of chalk hills; the walls, which are more than thirteen feet high, and three feet thick, enclose an area of a quarter of an acre, including the keep mount. Urns and other vestiges of a Roman station have been found here. A vein of white sand, known by the name of Maidstone sand, though discovered in this parish, is said to have caused the first improvement in the manufacture of glass in this country: it was first worked by experienced Italians, and soon became of infinite importance in the trade: the pits are remarkable for their vast subterranean caverns, which are curiously arched.

THORNHAM, a township in the parish of MIDDLETON, hundred of SALFORD, county palatine of LANCASTER, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S.) from Rochdale, containing 1374 inhabitants.

THORNHAM, a parish in the hundred of SMITHDON, county of NORFOLK, $6\frac{1}{4}$ miles (W. by N.) from Burnham-Westgate, containing 627 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, with that of Holme near the Sea annexed, in the archdeaconry of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £10. The church is dedicated to All Saints.

THORNHAM (MAGNA), a parish in the hundred of HARTISMERE, county of SUFFOLK, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (W. S. W.) from Eye, containing 342 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, with which that of Thornham Parva was consolidated in 1744; it is in the archdeaconry of Sudbury, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £7. 11. 3., and in the patronage of Lord Henniker. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

THORNHAM (PARVA), a parish in the hundred of HARTISMERE, county of SUFFOLK, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (W. by S.) from Eye, containing 139 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, with that of Thornham Magna, in the archdeaconry of Sudbury, and diocese of Norwich, rated in the king's books at £4. 14. $4\frac{1}{2}$.

THORNHAUGH, a parish in the liberty of PETERBOROUGH, county of NORTHAMPTON, $1\frac{1}{4}$ mile (N.) from Wansford, containing 266 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, with the perpetual curacy of Wansford annexed, in the archdeaconry of Northampton, and diocese of Peterborough, rated in the king's books at £17. 1. 3., and in the patronage of the Duke of Bedford. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, exhibits portions in the various styles of English architecture.

THORNHILL, a hamlet in the parish of HOPE, hundred of HIGH PEAK, county of DERBY, $6\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. E. by N.) from Tideswell, containing 139 inhabitants.

THORNHILL, a parish in the lower division of the wapentake of AGBRIGG, West riding of the county of YORK, comprising the chapelry of Flockton, and the townships of Shitlington, Thornhill, and Lower Whitley, and containing 5458 inhabitants, of which number, 1932 are in the township of Thornhill, 6 miles (W. by S.) from Wakefield. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of York, rated in the king's books at £40. 0. $7\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Hon. and Rev. J. Lumley Saville. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is principally in the early style of English architecture. There are places of worship for Baptists and Wesleyan Methodists. The river Calder runs through the parish, amid scenery the most beautiful and picturesque. In the extensive park sloping to the banks of the river, and ornamented with aged woods, stood the castellated mansion of the Thornhills, which was surrounded by a moat, and garrisoned by Sir George Saville, a descendant of that family, for Charles I., but was taken and destroyed by the parliamentarians. Thornhill, though now only a manufacturing village, was formerly a place of considerable importance, indications of which are still discernible. It had a market and a fair, granted by charter of Edward II., in 1320, now discontinued. The manufacture of woollen cloth, plaids, shawls, and thread, is carried on; there are also brass and iron works, at the latter of which bar and sheet iron, anchor-palms, piston-rods, boiler-plates, and various other articles, are made. The Rev. Charles Greenwood, in 1642, bequeathed £500 for erecting and endowing a free grammar school; the income is £20 a year, for which all children of the parish who apply receive an English education. There is also a free school, founded and endowed, about 1712, by Richard Walker, with a residence for the master, and an annual income of £47, which is applied to the instruction of eighty children of both sexes; and the Sunday school is aided by an annuity of £4. 10., the bequest of the same benefactor.

Sheppard, Bart. The church is dedicated to St. Michael. William Bredon, who died rector of this parish in 1638, was celebrated for his skill in calculating nativities, and had a share in composing Sir Christopher Haydon's Judicial Astrology.

THORNTON, a parish in the second division of the hundred of EDDISBURY, county palatine of CHESTER, comprising the townships of Dunham, Elton, Hapsford, Thornton in the Moors, and Wimbolds-Trafford, and containing 853 inhabitants, of which number, 162 are in the township of Thornton in the Moors, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. E.) from Chester. The living is a rectory, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chester, rated in the king's books at £24. 7. $8\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of Lord Berwick. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is partly in the later style of English architecture, with a handsome tower. The Gowey, a tributary stream to the Mersey, runs through the parish. A school is endowed with about £7. 10. per annum; the school-house was rebuilt about 1790.

THORNTON, a tything in the parish of MARNHULL, hundred of REDLANE, Sherborne division of the county of DORSET, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.N.E.) from Sturminster-Newton-Castle. It is now almost depopulated, though formerly a distinct parish, and was united to Marnhull at the Reformation, when the church, dedicated in 1464 to St. Martin, was desecrated, and is still used as a stable.

THORNTON, a township in the parish of NORHAM, otherwise Norhamshire, county palatine of DURHAM, though locally to the northward of the county of Northumberland, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S.W.) from Berwick upon Tweed, containing 232 inhabitants.

THORNTON, a township in the parish of POULTON, hundred of AMOUNDERNESS, county palatine of LANCASTER, $1\frac{3}{4}$ mile (N. by E.) from Poulton, containing 875 inhabitants. There is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. James Baines, in 1717, bequeathed land, now producing an annual income of £31. 10., for teaching poor children of both sexes. The school-room has been lately rebuilt by subscription, and there is a house for the master, who instructs from one hundred to one hundred and fifty children on the National system.

THORNTON, a township in the parish of SEPH-TON, hundred of WEST DERBY, county palatine of LANCASTER, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.) from Liverpool, containing 300 inhabitants.

THORNTON, a parish in the hundred of SPARKENHOE, county of LEICESTER, 6 miles (N.E.) from Market-Bosworth, containing, with the chapelries of Bagworth and Stanton under Bardon, the township of Horsepool, and the extra-parochial liberty of Bagworth Park, 1096 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry of Leicester, and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £6. 10. 2., and in the patronage of Lord Viscount Maynard. The church is dedicated to St. Peter.

THORNTON, a parish in the southern division of the wapentake of GARTREE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $1\frac{3}{4}$ mile (S.W.) from Horncastle, containing 153 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the archdeaconry and diocese of Lincoln, rated in the king's books at £5. 12. 1., and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Lichfield. The church is dedicated to St. Wilfrid.

THORNTON, a parish partly in the Wilton-Beacon, but chiefly in the Holme-Beacon, division of the wapentake of HARTHILL, East riding of the county of YORK, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S.W.) from Pocklington, containing, with the townships of Melbourn and Storwood, 751 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, annexed to the perpetual curacy of Allerthorpe, in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the Dean of York, rated in the king's books at £7. 5. 10.

THORNTON, a joint township with Baxly, in the parish of COXWOLD, wapentake of BIRDFORTH, North riding of the county of YORK, 3 miles (N. by E.) from Easingwold, containing, with Baxly, 70 inhabitants.
